Like that, with confusion plastered on the other party’s face, Abel continued with his sword in his hand.

Abel: “When others denigrate you as a coward, they are either pretending to see the results, or those are the rantings of a fool who cannot see the results. I made use of that nature to win.”

Zikr: “…”

Abel: “You abhor useless casualties. So, I decided that you, as the Coward and a military strategist, would not resist in this situation. —Are you going to disappoint me?”

Keeping his gaze sharp and the blade against his neck, Abel inquired that of Zikr.

To someone who was unaware Abel’s true identity, that would seem like a rant that would make one wonder what the hell he was talking about.

He had trusted his opponent’s cowardice and incorporated it into his plan to win.

There was no certainty that he would not upset his opponent by telling such things bluntly. Rather, it was as if he was deliberately attempting to provoke his opponent’s anger; it was really a statement that could make things worse.

Even when dressed as a woman, he was incapable of any kind of humility.

But, in front of Abel, Zikr Osman gasped.

What came to his eyes was a feeling that was hard to describe— if he dared to verbalize it, it would be a surprise that was close to excitement.

It seemed to be a fresh and new reaction, like a maiden receiving something from the person she loved.

Zikr: “—We’ll disarm ourselves. I’ll give strict orders to my subordinates to do so.”

Abel: “That is a wise decision.”

Abel quietly nodded in assent to Zikr’s quiet, head-down answer.

Even though he was dressed like a dancer, no one could resist his dignified nod of the head. As Zikr, their commander, surrendered, the Imperial Soldiers dropped their weapons one after another.

And—

Abel: “What, are you doing fooling around? Go up and burn the flag on the roof.”

Subaru: “Ueh? Wha, me?”

Abel: “Yes you. Only you. You are the sole one who has not performed a single deed since things started to proceed.”

Abel’s cold eyes pierced Subaru, who pointed at himself and blinked.

With those words, Subaru looked around the hall.

Kuna, who had blocked the enemy with a throwing knife, Taritta, who had shot the giant of a man, Flop, who had not allowed the giant of a man’s death and therefore had desperately defended the materialization of the Bloodless Siege, and Abel, who had disarmed the General.

Indeed, the only one who had not done anything was Subaru, who had fallen on his butt when that behemoth tried to assault them.

Abel: “Get a move on, I shall not even be able to disarm them without Mizelda and the others.”

Subaru: “Okay, I understand! Yeah, yeah, I’m sorry!”

Saying this, Subaru headed for the balcony, crawling carefully up to the rooftop. The rooftop of the City Hall, overlooking Guaral at night, was absolutely spectacular.

Then, while bathed in the cold breeze, Subaru retrieved a torch from the wall, ignited the flag of the empire on the roof of the City Hall—the flag of the Sword Wolf, and set it ablaze.

—That was proof that the fall of the Fortress City of Guaral had been achieved here.

3

The first person to notice something off was Jamal, who had been paying attention to the City Hall.

Jamal glanced around, being mindful of the people he had left behind in the building. Todd, who had grown tired of his naive attitude, continued the patrol of the city.

As a city with a certain amount of history, there was no end to the ways to get past the walls, which posed as a powerful barrier. Smuggling schemes, such as underground passages in private houses, or holes used by children to pass through, also existed. While accurately uncovering these, Todd had his guard up for any possible attacks.

Todd: “It’s not like they’re going to back off. If that’s the case, they’ll definitely try to bring down the city. They could use some secret path and take over the City Hall all at once, or set the city on fire… Hmm, are there other means?”

If it was simply to make the city fall, he could think of many ways to slaughter both soldiers and citizens indiscriminately.

For that matter, people would perish if they were buried in fire, water, or soil. If the means were in place, human beings could be as cruel as they wished.

What kind of brutal methods would the black-haired boy use?

That may seem not to be his forte at first glance, but the fact that he was so good at it made it all the more frightening.

No matter how hard he tried to crush them, there still seemed to be some undiscovered byways.

So even if he had a hole in his stomach, Todd would not have been able to sleep in his quarters.

Todd: “They’re all so rude and sketchy…”

Not all of them were of Jamal’s caliber, but many of them had an inability to pay attention to details.

Todd did not believe himself to be neither brilliant nor clever, but if he’s aware of his own stupidity and shortcomings, there were plenty of ways to fill in the gaps.

He could not understand how people could live their lives without questioning their stupidity.

Every single human being was an idiot, and so, they should do their utmost to compensate for it.

Jamal: “—Ah?”

While thinking about this, Todd was about to go into the next private house, when he suddenly stopped due to the surprised voice raised by Jamal behind him.

He stopped and looked at Jamal, who was looking at City Hall in the distance, with an expression of dumbfoundment on his face.

Todd frowned, wondering what was going on.

Jamal: “Oh, come on, is this some kinda joke?”

Todd: “What’s up, Jamal? What’s happening at the…”

“City Hall”, he almost said. Standing beside Jamal, Todd also looked in the same direction.

He was sure the City Hall was having a banquet at the moment, with the dancers they had invited providing entertainment and comfort to the Generals.

So it was not surprising that some of them would get a little carried away and make fools of themselves.

It would not be strange, but—

Todd: "—No way."

No matter what, burning the flag of the Empire on top of City Hall was unacceptable.

That barbaric act was so beyond the realm of rudeness that even Todd was taken aback. The flag, being scorched by flames while fluttering in the hot wind, swayed and burned, lighting up the night sky with the red glow of its blaze.

And right beside the flag set alight, he saw the figure of a woman he had already met in the City Hall.

A musician with rich black hair and sharp eyes. He believed her name was—

Todd: "—Natsumi Schwartz."

That was what she had stated upon having had her name inquired.

A weak woman, who had become small and frightened when Jamal had crowded her. However, he could clearly see that she was boldly burning the Imperial Flag with a torch in her hand.

There was no sign of the weakness he had encountered before in the City Hall.

Certainly, it could not be something charming like a drunken act of violence.

That was undoubtedly an intentional attack on the Empire. And if the flag of the base was burned, it meant that the place had fallen into the hands of the enemy.

Just as he was thinking about it, a possibility suddenly surfaced in Todd's mind.

Todd: "No way, is it you?"

With his eyes wide open, Todd studied the dark-haired woman with the torch in her hand, Natsumi Schwartz, and was struck by the minuscule possibility that had sprung up within him.

But the more he thought about it, the more it matched, and the more he looked at it, the more it diverged.

But that was why the effect was so extraordinary.

Who in the world would think of doing something like this?

Of such a method to break through the enemy's guard from the front, and take their base of operations?

Todd: "I thought it was impossible. I can't believe they tried to sneak through the front gate."

Who could possibly use such a life-threatening approach?

Of course, the possibility of hiding behind cargo or inside dragon carriages had been carefully considered, and the checkpoints had been reinforced. However, an intrusion on foot, in a way that would attract attention, had been unexpected.

Even so, the first infiltration had strengthened their vigilance. On top of that, it would be a natural response to opt for a more stealthy approach—.

Jamal: "You don't think that was just a setup, do you? Did they deliberately find us and instill in us the preconceived notion that a frontal breakthrough was impossible?"

And following that, he had managed to get into the city, was invited to the hall as a dancer, brought down the City Hall, and ignited the Imperial Flag—It had been just as Natsumi Schwartz had intended.

Todd: “…This is bad.”

What a meticulous plan, he thought, a chill running down his spine.

He thought he had done everything in his power to have the upper hand, but on the other side, the poster child of war had easily surpassed and ridiculed him.

Todd was surprised to find himself shuddering.

Jamal: “Shit! What the fuck’s going on here! Anyway, we gotta back to the City Hall…”

Todd: “Idiot, stop. You’re going to die, too.”

Jamal: “Huh?”

Unlike Todd, Jamal was unaware of the identity of the person who had set the Imperial Flag on fire.

Due to the distance, his eyes could not perceive any details on the roof of the City Hall. Todd could see it only because of his special eyes. And it was because he could see them, that he was holding Jamal back.

Now that the Imperial Flag at their base had been set ablaze, the fall of the city was decided.

By now, all the Generals who were participating in the feast, Zikr included, had already been murdered. Even if they were to go back in, they would probably end up being defeated themselves.

Jamal: “You’re freaking out, ain’t you? And you still think of yourself as an Imperial Soldier, huh?”

Todd: “You can’t win and stay alive by being proud. Besides, you know that City Hall’s been taken; the General Second-Class is dead. The Shudraqians will be in the city before long.”

Jamal: “…”

Todd: “If we don’t get out of here before that happens, we won’t have any other choice but to die too."

Jamal was not the kind of person to accept the humiliation of disarming himself quietly.

The alternative would be to jump into the enemy ranks weapon in hand, wielding bravery, and die while taking out about ten people.

It could be said that it would be exactly how a Sword Wolf would die, but from Todd's point of view, it was as good as a dog's death.

Life was akin to a finite hand of cards.

To use it for victory was justified, but it would be a waste to utilize it for a regretful defeat.

Jamal and Todd had known each other for a while. It would not be strange to think that they had enough of a relationship between them to advise each other on this. Probably.

Todd: "You see that hole in the wall that I just plugged? I'm going to run through it. What about you?"

Jamal: "Gu, gu… You wanna make me feel humiliated again?"

Todd: "If you're alive, you'll get a chance to rinse your shame off. But if you die, that's it. So, I'm going. I won't get into a fight I don't think I can win."

He really wished not to get into a fight with a low chance of winning, let alone one with a one-hundred percent chance of losing. But he did not have time to argue with Jamal about the details.

He quickly turned his back to him and started to run. Jamal hesitated for a moment before shouting a curse, a "Damn it!", then followed behind Todd.

It would be nice if everyone were as simple as him, but the world did not work that way.

In any case—

Todd: “I guess I’ll remember you as Natsumi for now. —You poster child of war.”

@TASTB_

4

As soon as they realized that the Imperial Flag had been set on fire and the City Hall had fallen, the Imperial Soldiers unexpectedly obeyed the call for surrender.

The same was true for the guards protecting the city, which was a great help to Subaru, whose goal was to seize the city without bloodshed, but this was also a surprising development.

Subaru: “I’ve always thought it strange that, when I watched battles of the Sengoku period in historical dramas, the battle would end when the head of the other side’s general is taken off…”

If the general were killed, the next person in charge would become the general and the battle would resume.

A layman would think that the battle would not end until one side was annihilated or in shambles, but this was not the case in this actual battle.

Because the Imperial Army, which should be overwhelmingly superior in strength, had agreed to disarm as soon as they found out that their commander, Zikr, had been apprehended.

Mizelda: “Well, that was quite a feat, Subaru… No, Natsumi.”

Subaru: “Mizelda-san.”

As Subaru patted his fake chest at the results of the battle and the success of the operation, he was approached by Mizelda, happily slurping down alcohol directly from a bottle.

The women, who had been hiding outside the city as a detachment, had entered the city too, upon realizing that the City Hall had fallen, signaled by the burning of the Imperial Flag. The guards, becoming aware that the Imperial Soldiers had been defeated, did not attempt to stop them from proudly marching into the city as well.

Thanks to Shudraq's cooperation, they had succeeded in capturing most of the Imperial Soldiers.

In the hall where the feast had been held, the drinks and food had been cleared away, and in their place, the bound Imperial Soldiers were lined up in a row.

It would have been a shame to throw everything away, Subaru thought. Mizelda and the others were sipping their drinks, but doing so made them look more like barbarians who were willing to loot.

Subaru: "But with this many people… It would've been tough to go head-to-head."

Mizelda: "No matter how many enemies we have, the pride of Shudraq won't falter. There's no such thing as too many enemies… And yes, simple numbers can be insurmountable. But you and Abel have defeated them."

Subaru: "…"

Mizelda: "I'm proud of you, Natsumi. You've shown courage through wisdom. We couldn't have done this."

With a vigorous pat on Subaru's shoulder, Mizelda left him with a handsome smile.

She then stood up and headed over to congratulate Taritta and Kuna for their contribution to the fall of the City Hall.

Even from a distance, the sight of Taritta's eyes shining from her sister's praise made Subaru smile. Kuna was hugged by Holly, having confirmed that she was safe, making her look like a rolled mackerel.

Subaru: "Keeping things up like this, it would be nice if Kuna's life wasn't snuffed out, given all the great deeds she's done…"

???: "…"

With a sense of relief, Subaru let out a small smile. Then, as he turned around, he nearly collided with the person standing right behind him.

That other person was—

Subaru: “R-Rem…”

Rem: “…Yes.”

Staring up at him from a close distance, Subaru could not help but step back.

Rem, holding her wooden cane, looked at Subaru from top to bottom with her pale blue eyes. Feeling uncomfortable under her gaze, Subaru cleared his throat and said,

Subaru: “What’s the matter? I’m fine, you know.”

Rem: “Yes, so I heard. But I had a feeling that even if you were injured somewhere, you’d hide it and say the same thing.”

Subaru: “You really don’t have any trust in me… But I’m not very good with pain either, so I’ll report even the slightest injury right away. Really, I mean it.”

Rem: “That sounds suspicious, too.”

Subaru: “Tch ha ha…”

Subaru’s shoulders slumped under Rem’s gaze devoid of trust.

But then he quickly turned his head in realization. “Huh?” Subaru uttered. She may have been a bit curt, but she was probably worried about whether Subaru was injured or not.

Subaru: “You’re worried about me, aren’t you?”

Rem: “Huh?”

Subaru: “Oh! I’m sorry! I got carried away! Of course you weren’t! It can’t be that Rem’s worried about me…”

Rem: “Yes, I was.”

Subaru: “Wha?”

Waving his hands in the air, Subaru hurriedly tried to correct his misunderstanding. But he was interrupted by none other than Rem’s words.

Rem’s expression did not change, but the color of her eyes wavered slightly.

Rem: “I said, I was worried. Of course I was. No matter how much of a joke the plan was, I was the one who made you do it. And yet how could I not be worried? How in the world do you think I could be such a heartless person?”

Subaru: “No, no, no, it’s not that, I don’t think Rem is heartless! I really don’t! Rem is affectionate, a bit presumptuous, and a bit reserved before she gets to know someone, but that difference is also very attractive…”

Rem: “…”

Subaru: “Rem, don’t tell me you’re impressed…?”

Rem: “No, I simply thought it was weird.”

And with just a simple statement, Subaru’s fake chest was pierced, prompting an “Ugh!” out of him.

Rem gave an annoyed sigh as Subaru backed away, holding his fake chest in pain. She then took a step toward Subaru,

Rem: “Just so you know, no matter what you said or did, you managed to do it. Really, you managed to bring this city down. And that’s without causing any deaths.”

Subaru: “… If only we kept the bloodless part, I hoped that no one would get hurt if possible. But I wonder if that was too much to ask.]

Rem: “I wonder about that. However, if it’s you and Abel-san, then you may be able to pull it off… Why are you looking at me like that?”

Subaru: "…It's nothing, nothing, nothing, okay?"

Rem raised an eyebrow at Subaru's sullen face.

In fact, she had a good point. Without Abel's help, this plan would not have been possible, and it was true that he was a man of terrifying wisdom.

Still, hearing words of praise for another man from Rem's mouth made his heart squirm.

Subaru: "Even with those fake breasts, there's still something to be impressed by, isn't there…?"

Rem: "I feel like you're talking about something stupid again…"

When Rem started staring at him, Subaru waved his hands and said, "No, no, no," to cover it up.

If he told Rem about his current jealousy, she would probably just feel weird about it. It was unavoidable, but it nevertheless hurt. One-sided affection was painful.

Subaru: "No, in this case, it's just a reflex…? Though they're passable compared to Emilia-tan's, nevertheless they still feel like the real deal, don't you think…"

Medium: "Oh! Natsumi-chan, you're here! I heard you guys did great, congratulations!"

Subaru: "Ah, Medium-san."

Medium ran into the room with a loud voice and sluggish footsteps. Subaru recoiled at the sudden approach of the taller woman, but his step back was meaningless as she filled the distance between them by leaning forward.

Medium had a big smile on her face, looking happily at the soldiers in the hall, as two girls rode her shoulders—Utakata and Louis.

Medium: "These people were all captured by Natsumi-chan and the others, weren't they? I'm so surprised! So, so, where's sis? Did she do her best?”

Subaru: “Sis? Ah, yes. Flora is…”

Flop: “—I’m here, dear sister!”

Medium: “Oh!”

Medium’s round eyes widened even more when she saw Flop appear in the hall, a beautiful man who had accompanied her and whom she had become accustomed to seeing for so long. He quickly asserted his presence with a single loud clap of his shoes.

Medium: “Big bro! Isn’t that big bro?! I knew it, big bro isn’t my sister, and the sister I thought was my sister’s big bro!”

Flop: “Hahaha, I have no idea what you’re talking about, dear sister! But no matter what, I’m still here. So whether I’m your brother or your sister, it doesn’t matter!”

Medium: “That’s true too! Then maybe I’m not a sister, but a brother! I’m so big after all!”

Flop: “Younger sister or younger brother, older brother or older sister, we’re still family!”

The conversation between the O’Connell siblings was peculiar, but it kept its unique tempo until its settlement.

The laughing Flop hugged Medium’s waist, and Medium, with the girls on both shoulders, started spinning around in circles as he did.

As a result, both of Flop’s legs floated up and a grand spin began, as the happy laughter of the siblings and children echoed in the hall.

Subaru: “Surreal, isn’t it…?”

Rem: “I’m sure Medium-san was worried about Flop-san too… So, how long are you going to stay dressed like that? The rest of your life?”

Subaru: “The rest of my life has to be an exaggeration?! No matter how cute I am, this is only a temporary appearance… And I'm destined to have to go back to normal eventually."

Rem: "Does that mean that for the time being you'll be dressed like that?"

Subaru: "I just happen to not have time to change right now!"

Subaru wasn't mentally tough enough to endure such suspicions, or to put it another way, to endure how Rem looked at him like he was a pervert.

In fact, the only reason he was still dressed in women's clothing was that he had been busy with minor tasks, such as burning the Imperial Flag, and welcoming the People of Shudraq who entered the city afterwards.

The situation simply had not permitted him to change into his 'Subaru' clothes. It was not that he intended to stay as Natsumi Schwartz.

Subaru: "Or isn't it?"

Rem: "Oh right. If you're searching for Abel-san, he's in the back room with the commander."

Subaru: "You're acting like you don't believe me!"

Pointing at Rem, who had given him a blank stare, Subaru turned and walked towards him.

He'd like to celebrate the success of the bloodless siege with Rem and the others, but he could not just sit there with his hands up in the air and be overjoyed.

After all, the fall of Guaral was only a checkpoint. They had to think about the future civil war that would rumble the Empire, and what kind of position Subaru would maintain.

To that end—

Subaru: "If you'll excuse me."

With that, Subaru pushed open the door to a separate room at the back of the hall.

It was originally supposed to be a private, office-like room for the city manager, the master of the City Hall, but now the master had been sent away, and the replacement for the ruler was sitting on the chair.

Originally, it had been Zikr, the General Second-Class, but now, it was a more pompous man.

Abel: "—You. You are still dressed like that."

So said Abel, resting his cheek on hand as he snorted, having already shed his dancer's costume and rolled up his sleeves into a more masculine attire.

In front of him was the disheveled head of a kneeling Zikr, with no one else in the room.

Subaru: "Please don't mention my outfit. What's more, you are alone with the General Second-Class without any guards? Do you want to throw your life away?"

Abel: "Of course, had he any intention of resisting, I would have put him to the sword. But he has no such intention. Am I not correct, Zikr Osman."

Zikr: "—Yes. That is correct, Your Excellency."

Jerking his chin, Zikr called out to Abel when prompted to respond.

The respectful manner in which he addressed His Excellency and his obvious superior, was a sign that he judged Abel to be more than just a crossdressing bandit.

In other words, Zikr understood Abel's true identity, and because of that he was kneeling there.

Subaru: "Did you tell him?"

Abel: "I needed not such a thing. Apparently, this guy figured it out during the dance. No, I should say that after the dance, he understood in his head the right thing to do.”

Subaru: “—?”

Subaru tilted his head, not comprehending the meaning of those words.

However, at Abel’s observation, Zikr sank his head more deeply, as if to show further respect.

The result was a valuable person who firmly recognized and expressed respect for the fact that Abel was the Emperor, a fact that had not been felt very much up to this point.

Abel: “But it is convenient that you guessed it without needing to disclose it. Zikr Osman, follow me. You will not be wronged.”

Zikr: “Yes! If it is for you, I, Zikr Osman, will risk my life!”

Subaru: “Wait, wait, wait, are you serious? You haven’t heard anything about this yet, have you?”

Zikr made an immediate dedication to Abel, who had requested vassalage toward him while sitting on the chair.

It was convenient, sure, but too good to be true. Zikr, however, shook his head in response to Subaru’s question.

Zikr: “His Excellency is right in front of me, and he needs my aid. If so, it is my duty as a General of the Empire to respond to his request. Above all, I swear to be even more loyal to you than before.”

Abel: “Oh, why? Were you so fascinated by my dance?”

Zikr: “It was very, very beautiful. But that is not all.”

Zikr’s heat was intense as Abel made a cold joke without even smiling. He pressed both fists to the floor, with strong and intense joy on his face.

Zikr: “I’m surprised that His Excellency remembered my two names… That I cursed as nothing but a disgrace, and that you believed it after all.”

Abel: “Of course. If one wishes to be the ruler of the Empire, they must understand the land. The same is true for the subjects that serve. I never know when I’m going to use you, a General, as my own hand and foot. Do you earnestly believe the Emperor’s steps shall be unimpeded without knowing their own hands and feet?”

Zikr: “Absolutely not! That is why I am truly honored!”

Zikr shuddered with indelible joy, and swore fervent loyalty to Abel.

Honestly speaking, solely regarding the events, it was a too-good-to-be-true turn of events, but Zikr’s profile was so uncanny that even Subaru could not find any room to doubt his inner feelings.

At the same time, Subaru was overwhelmed by the charisma of Abel’s words, as well as his strong pride and conviction as the Emperor that supported it.

He did not know how many Generals there were in the empire, but even if Zikr was outstanding among them, would he be able to remember enough of every one of them to be confident that he could bring down the city regardless?

Well, even if another General had been in charge of the city, Abel seemed sure that he would have pulled the same result.

The Emperor, an opponent transcending even the clouds above, knew him, knew his strengths and weaknesses, and upon that, built his strategy, wonderfully entangled him in his expectations and defeated him.

Perhaps it was similar to a high-school baseball pitcher getting his pitch hit for a home run by his favorite professional baseball player. But actual war is too disturbing to be compared to that. In any case…

Abel: “If Zikr Osman shall follow, then the Generals under him shall likewise follow. Together with the Fortress City, I can say that we have finally gathered a strong fighting force.”

Zikr: “However, if we stand against the rest of the country, we will inevitably lack strength. First of all, I think we should invite the reinforcements that are supposed to be sent from the Imperial Capital into the city, and call for their surrender.”

With the addition of allies familiar with the situation of the Empire, able to formulate strategies, the discussion quickly turned into a full-fledged military one.

Unlike Abel, who accepted it without hesitation, Subaru felt a great deal of resistance to the beginning of preparations for a full-scale war. Therefore, he would prefer to have a discussion with Abel before discussions on such matters could begin.

He wanted to discuss with Abel about what to do with himself and Rem after the Fortress City was seized.

However, unfortunately, the proposal that Subaru wished to bring up was not tackled.

Because—

Abel: “—Reinforcements from the Imperial Capital.”

Abel muttered in response to Zikr’s comment, and the air in the room trembled.

Subaru and the others widened their eyes at the sight of Abel as he stood up from his chair with great vigor and walked back to the hall.

And then—

Abel: “—Close the main gate of the city right now! Do not let anyone enter, messenger or not!”

Everyone in the hall was startled by Abel’s bellow.

Of course, much like Subaru and Zikr, who had been talking with him just before yet could not comprehend it, Mizelda and the others could not discern Abel's true intentions either.

However, Abel's urgent look was enough for them to know that this was no ordinary matter.

Mizelda: "Taritta, go tell them to close the main gate."

Taritta: "Oh, sister, what in the world is…?"

Mizelda: "—Go! Don't disgrace Shudraq's name!"

Mizelda's fierce voice struck the hesitating Taritta; the latter's eyes widened at the sound of her voice, which even sounded murderous, and she promptly rushed out of the hall. With that, Taritta would order the guards to close the main gate.

And so, Abel's instructions would be fulfilled, but—

Flop: "Village Chief-kun, what is going on? It's rare to see you change your expression."

Abel: "Now is not the time for your nonsense, merchant. Zikr Osman, persuade the Generals, Mizelda, you are…"

???: "Uuuuuuuh—Hk."

Abel quickly instructed the others, treating the worried Flop with disregard.

Abel ordered Zikr and Mizelda, the heads of their respective groups, to get their people together, but his instructions were cut off mid-sentence by a high-pitched child's tantrum.

Medium: "Whoa, whoa, whoa, what's happening?! Louis-chan, what happened?!"

Louis: "Uuh! Uuh! Aauh!"

Utakata: "Lou! Calm down! Uu's here!"

Medium's eyes turned in surprise as she was yanked by her highly decorated hair.

Being carried on her shoulders, Louis was screaming desperately as Utakata attempted to soothe her down.

However, the rampaging Louis did not calm down at all. On the contrary, Louis was shedding large tears, her expression tense as if she were afraid of something.

Rem: “Louis-chan, please calm down! What’s wrong? If there’s something wrong, I’ll listen to you, so don’t cry…”

Louis: “Uuh!”

Rem: “Huh? Over there, what’s going on?”

Unable to witness the sight of a sobbing Louis, Rem headed towards her. Upon noticing Rem’s approach, Louis pointed to a corner of the hall, tears streaming down her face.

Subaru and Abel also looked in that direction. But there was nothing. —There should have been nothing.

Abel: “Mizelda!”

Mizelda: “Oh, OHHHHH—!!”

Staring into the void, Abel was the first to call out Mizelda’s name.

As if in response, Mizelda quickly readied the bow on her back, seized four arrows in her right hand, attached them to the bow at once, and drew them.

Mizelda’s strong body unleashed a tremendous blow from the Shudraq chieftain.

Four arrows flew wildly, pushing into the empty space Louis was pointing to. Each one of the arrows was reminiscent of the blow of the Hunter who had killed Subaru in the jungle.

It was so powerful that it would have torn Subaru’s form to shreds had he been struck by those.

The floor and walls, which were supposed to be stronger than arrows, were shattered, and the crushing sent a cloud of smoke into the hall.

As the soldiers jumped for cover and gasped for air, Subaru and the others looked closely at the smoke to ascertain if there was indeed a cause for Louis to make such a commotion.

???: “Something like that isn’t going to kill me.”

From somewhere, a languid voice fell softly into the smoke-filled hall.

He recognized the voice as that of a woman. Subaru’s eardrums judged it to be a slow, carefree voice, lacking in emotion, and of modest volume.

It felt terribly out of place, in the momentary tension of the situation.

However, the result of that voice, was powerful.

Mizelda: “…”

—In the blink of an eye, Mizelda’s entire body was engulfed in tremendous flames, having been set alight.

5

Mizelda: “—Tchtch!!”

In the blink of an eye, Mizelda’s entire body was wrapped in a conflagration, causing her to let out an inaudible scream.

The sight of Mizelda, who had turned into a humanoid mass of flames, prevented everyone from taking any immediate action.

Kuna: “—Tch, Holly!!”

Holly: “U-understood~!!”

Immediately after Kuna called out, Holly hurriedly hastened to a container filled with a large amount of water. She lifted it with her monstrous strength, and threw it with all her might at the burning Mizelda.

The water overflowing from the broken container enveloped Mizelda her, and the immolated woman fell to the floor.

The flames had scorched her for nary a moment, but it was impossible to imagine the pain of one's entire body being incinerated.

Subaru was unable keep up with how quickly the situation had morphed, wondering what the hell had happened. However, he did notice an increase in the number of unfamiliar figures in the center of the chaotic hall.

Not only Subaru, but the rest of the group gradually took noticed of the new figure.

—The person standing there was a beautiful girl with most of her brown skin exposed.

She had silvery-white hair, an eyepatch covering her left eye, a lush furry tail growing out of her rear, and a branch in her hand that looked like it had been picked up in the middle of nowhere.

Her emotionless face gave a somewhat unbalanced impression, when compared to her frame of lush youthful, feminine proportions.

However, there was no doubt that this pretty girl had been the trigger for the previous occurrence.

What she had done, what she desired, who she was, everything was unknown—

???: "—It is you, Arakiya."

But while everyone was frozen in place, there was one person who knew the girl's name and so beckoned her.

The one who stood there with his well-shaped eyes sharpened— Staring at Arakiya, was the Emperor who had been ousted from the throne of the Sacred Vollachian Empire.

The intimidating person that Zikr had immediately sworn to obey, faced Arakiya face-to-face, but she waved the branch in her hand from side-to-side without nervousness,.

Arakiya: "Long time no see, Your Excellency."

Abel: "You too, appear to be still in good health—Chisha, too, is sparing no quarter."

Arakiya: "No, he's not? That'd be dangerous, after all."

It was not a tense conversation, from Arakiya's point of view.

Even if they were able to communicate, Abel's tense expression showed that she was not the kind of person with whom one could converse with.

In the first place, who was this woman who treated Abel so casually after recognizing him as the Emperor?

Zikr: "General First-Class, Arakiya…"

Subaru: "…What did you just say?"

With the two of them lined up, Subaru's cheeks tightened at the stifled words from Zikr.

He hoped he had misheard, but Zikr's eyes were serious, and Subaru realized that the possibility of having misheard his words had disappeared.

Then, as if to prove that it was not an illusion, Zikr piled on.

Zikr: "General First-Class Arakiya… One of the empire's strongest, one of the Nine Divine Generals!”

Abel: “She also ranks as Second among the Nine Divine Generals. That means she is the second strongest in the Empire.”

Subaru: “The second strongest in the Empire…?!”

Zikr’s cry was supplemented by Abel’s words, and Subaru exclaimed, unable to conceal his surprise.

At the center of the astonished gazes in the hall, having gathered attention, Arakiya raised a branch and—

Arakiya: “Indeed!”

She puffed out her chest proudly.

Subaru: “…”

Slowly, the Shudraq that were gathered in the hall began to form a circle around Arakiya. Mizelda had been felled in the first attack, and only seventeen Shudraqians remained, including the non-combatant Utakata, so it was hard to tell if they were strong enough.

Nevertheless—

Shudraqian: “We can’t let you interfere with victory finally within our grasp—!”

One spat out a curse, and picked up one of the swords that Subaru had seized.

Driving her away, or knocking her down and capturing her. If they could achieve one of the two, they would ensure their victory in the fall of Guaral.

Arakiya: “Try as you might, it’s no use.”

The next moment, a tremendous wind blew, jumbling the entirety of the hall. Subaru, the Shudraqians, and the bound Imperial Soldiers were all moved together.

Arakiya: "…"

The heavens and earth were turned upside down, Subaru could not see up, down, left, right, in front of him, or behind him, and his entire body slammed into the floor, the wall, and the ceiling, nearly knocking him unconscious from the intense pain.

Subaru: "Kah!"

His whole body was thrown on the ground, and as he looked at the broken ceiling, his brain slowly analyzed and understood what had come to pass. —Perhaps, a tornado.

In an instant, a tornado of tremendous size had erupted in the room, swallowing Subaru—or rather, Subaru and everyone else, and threw them around wildly.

Arakiya's tornado overran the room, making no distinction between people or objects, friend or foe.

Even so, Subaru barely managed to stay conscious—

Zikr: "I am not going to let you… hurt her any more than you already have…"

Zikr, holding Subaru, grunted and threw his arms out sluggishly.

The moment the tornado had spouted, Zikr had quickly pulled Subaru's body nearer to his own, in an attempt to protect him from the impact of the destruction. Its effect was limited, but it had cushioned Subaru's body, and kept him from losing consciousness.

However—

Subaru: "It's a joke, right…?"

Looking around the hall, Subaru spat that out in despair.

In the midst of the mess of people and things, the Shudraq, who had raised their will to fight just before had all fallen to the ground, unable to fight.

In fact, those who had displayed hostile intentions had been the ones to suffer the most damage.

He wondered if Arakiya's tornado had even chosen which people to attack while wrecking so much destruction.

Subaru: "—Re… m."

Enduring the pain in his whole body, Subaru searched for Rem in the hall.

She, like the Shudraq and the others, might have lost consciousness from the attack. Were she to be hit in the wrong place, the worst would be a possibility.

Then, Subaru gazed around the room and spotted someone.

Not Rem, however. Not Rem, but despite that, they had caught Subaru's attention.

Because even after being overrun by that tornado, they had gotten to their feet and fled to the half-destroyed balcony, leaning their back against the railing, gazing at Arakiya.

Subaru: "Abel…"

He did not know how in the world Abel had been able to protect himself in that tornado. Abel's injuries were very minimal—yet it was still painful to see him bleeding from his forehead and with one arm slumped down.

However, Abel was looking straight at Arakiya with eyes that had not lost their supremacy.

Abel: "The obedient puppet, engaging in such grandiose conduct. Have you forgotten as to why you have joined my ranks?"

Arakiya: "…Your Excellency, you lied. You deceived me. That's why, I'll never forgive you."

Abel: "—Did Chisha also put that idea in your head?"

Abel exhaled a heavy, bloodied breath, his eyes slightly downcast.

Arakiya's face was lacking in emotion, but she still held a recognizable anger in her eyes. She slowly stepped on the rough ground, and walked towards Abel on the balcony. The thought of Abel running out to the balcony to look good never crossed Subaru's mind, but he did not think he, injured and not holding anything, had an ace up his sleeve.

The steps Arakiya took while shrinking the distance between them sounded like a countdown to Abel's very life.

One step, two steps, Arakiya approached Abel, and then—

???: "Uh, AAAAAAAAAAAAA—HK!!"

A high-pitched voice rang out, and immediately afterwards, a pillar came crashing down on the spot where Arakiya was about to pass.

There was a roar of stone shattering and cracking, and a primitive weapon that must have weighed no less than several hundred kilograms struck Arakiya.

It was Rem, who had been hiding behind a pillar, watching for the right moment to strike.

Rem, who had remained conscious and hidden behind a pillar despite having been swallowed by the tornado, was probably visible from Abel's position. Hiding her presence, she had timed her attack with Abel's gaze as Arakiya advanced, and then pushed down the pillar.

It was the last attack he could come up with in this situation, utilizing Rem's strength.

It was well-aimed, and so it crushed Arakiya's slender body—

Arakiya: "Hmm?"

Rem: "—No way."

The floor beneath Arakiya's feet, which she had not even looked at, deformed like amezaiku, and stretched upwards as to support the fallen column.

It was as if they had witnessed the completion of avant-garde art from the beginning to the end.

Rem's full power did not reach Arakiya, nor did it even distract her.

Then, as Rem kneeled at the base of the broken pillar, Arakiya regarded her back. After taking a look at Rem, her eyes suddenly widened.

Arakiya: "Oh, an oni. That's unusual."

Rem: "You're…"

Arakiya: "…Don't get in my way. I don't want my people to get hurt."

Rem: "Your people…?"

Rem's face reddened with anger, wondering what she was talking about.

But sadly, because of the existence of a large discrepancy in power between her self and her opponent, anger was merely an emotion, and the will to resist was useless.

Rem reached for rubble, and this time tried to show her intent to attack by throwing stones.

However, Arakiya swung the branch in her hand, conjuring a wind that blew the debris around Rem away.

Literally, they had been swept away. Not only the debris on the floor were blown away, but the walls and ceiling behind Rem, the upper levels of the building, one after another, were as well.

Arakiya: "I'm not good at controlling my strength. You, too, will fly away, at this rate."

Rem: "If that's the case, then why don't you do it? After all you've done, what's there to hesitate about now? It's not like that…"

Arakiya: "…Disappointing."

Rem's clenched-teeth answer made Arakiya's shoulders slump in dejection.

But despite the cute gesture, Arakiya's actions were caustic and simple. Slowly the branch was lifted, and a phenomenon of a different dimension would shatter Rem's existence.

—There was no way Natsuki Subaru could tolerate such a thing.

Subaru: "AH, AHHHHH—Hk!"

With a yell, Subaru's body leapt into action, chasing away the pain in his entire body.

Only at this moment, cowering fear, unpredictable anxiety, and everything else were in the way.

Abandoning his fears, he moved forward as his instincts told him to, and intervened in front of Rem and Arakiya.

He hoped to at least protect Rem from the destruction that was about to befall her.

He was willing to die, if it meant protecting Rem.

He really did not want to die, and everything would be ruined if Natsuki Subaru died here, but he did not mind dying here.

Dressed as a woman, with fake breasts, makeup on his face, a wig on his head, and even an ingenious way to make his skin look white, in such a ridiculous appearance that sought beauty, Natsuki Subaru stood up for the girl he had to protect, with the thought of spitting blood.

Rem: "—Hk."

Protecting Rem against his back, he spread his hands.

He could notice that Rem had gasped upon dawning on her that Subaru had intervened in front of her.

But what she thought or felt about Subaru's action, he would never know. That opportunity would never come again.

It was snatched away in a flash before the destruction named Arakiya—

???: "—What a comical sight. But it is not so bad."

That was the voice that reached Subaru's ears as he prepared to have everything taken away, and nothing to be left.

As he closed his eyes in an attempt to accept the coming end, he gasped when he registered that no heat, loss, pain, suffering, thirst, or any of the other factors that lead to "death" had befallen his body.

Then slowly opening his eyes, he saw it.

Before that Subaru, spreading out his upper limbs, shielding Rem to his back—there was someone else's back.

It was not Arakiya. Arakiya was standing on the other side of that back. He could see her standing there, stunned, astonishment plastered on her face.

The being that had brought that stupefaction to Arakiya turned around, cutting down all the destruction that was supposed to come, while holding up a glowing red sword in their right hand.

Pompous, arrogant, crimson eyes convinced that everything in this world would kneel at their feet. The one who hugged their arms as they bounced their ample breasts, with scornful looks that were the embodiment of cruel beauty, a person who he was not supposed to see here.

Subaru: "—Ah."

Subaru simply gasped at the appearance of an existence that was not supposed to be there.

Looking at him, the owner of the beautiful face, the manifestation of the word “crimson”, snorted.

And then—

???: “No need to say your name, fool. I shall, however, permit you to say my name.”

As she said this, she—Priscilla Barielle, had a blood-colored smile on her face.

Bonus Short Stories

The Land of Wolves:
Death unto the Weak, No Mercy II

1

A slash slides through, giant scales are torn off, pitch black blood splatters out.

“—Hahhah!”

While bathing in the blood from head-to-toe, while baring his teeth, that man—Jamal—laughed.

Laughing, his demeanor while he slips past the gigantic snake witchbeast’s repeated attacks, is certainly what distinguishes him from the strength of a run-of-the-mill soldier.

That he still remains in the position of first class private, despite the ability he presented, was a vivid clue as to the number of attitude problems he has during his daily duties.

“The hell are ya doing! I ain’t got cover, cover!”

“Alright, I get it, I get it”

While parring the witchbeast’s fangs with twin blades, Jamal, in a solo battle against their enemy, yells out. The recipient, Todd who stood at his rear, was coordinating his comrades, and encircling the witchbeast.

And then… “Release!”

Signaled by Todd’s order, attacks start flying from all sides. Arrows and throwing knives, so-called plinking-type attacks, because of the situation. Without any consideration for Jamal’s presence, all come pouring down like rain.

Of course, as the target is the witchbeast, and nobody is trying to hit Jamal—

"We're not going to go out of our way to avoid you. Dodge them yourself."

"You motherfucking…!"

The uncountable number of attacks flying in, Jamal deals with the witchbeast with his left sword, while easily parrying them with his free sword to protect himself.

Meanwhile, the witchbeast screeches while being showered in attacks, bending back. It was done for.

"A snake that's all about size, don't think that you can win against imperial soldiers!"

The leaping Jamal's twin swords swing from left and right, and bisect the snake's thick neck.

With a hefty sound, the head falls down to the ground, and as it spurts fountains of blood, the witchbeast's giant body slowly topples, the quake causing the trees of the jungle to shake.

The fight ended safely.

"How many casualties?"

"No casualties. Thanks to you working so hard on your own, my man."

"That's good and all… But, why was I alone? Ain't it weird?"

Wiping the blood from his twin blades, Jamal sheaths them back in their scabbard and cracks his neck. But, there really is not anything particularly weird about it. It's not so much that the other soldiers are lacking in strength, but rather that Jamal's strength is outstanding.

Matching his pace would be impossible for those around him, and him matching his pace with those around him would be even more of a no-go. Thus, Todd had not set out with him from the start.

In actuality, everything had gone well, so there shouldn't be any problem…

“Oi, why is it? Don’t shut up and answer me.”

“Aah, that’s it. Everyone here hadn’t come across a witchbeast before, so they hesitated on how to handle it. On that front, you didn’t hesitate at all my guy, as expected.”

“Tch, each and every one of you… What would you do if I wasn’t here?”

Jamal clicks his tongue, but even should he not be around, they would make do without him. It was just that in such circumstances, there’s no proof that they would’ve been able to keep the sacrifices down to zero.

In any case—

“That brat escaped?”

Thus, as Jamal mutters so in annoyance, Todd presents no reply.

He simply shrugs in place, as a wordless affirmation.

2

Todd Fang, an Imperial Soldier of Vollachia, holds his head, with a “They got us.”

Currently, Todd, as well as his comrades, are in the heart of the Buddheim Jungle, in the eastern side of the Empire. They had been attacked by a witchbeast some distance away from the place of their encampment, and there was where they had fought.

In all honesty, their encounter with the witchbeast had been a complete surprise attack.

From the beginning, the number of witchbeasts inhabiting the Empire of Vollachia is low, to the point the number of Imperial Citizens who would go their entire lives without seeing one was not small.

In Todd’s case, the number of witchbeast encounters are such that he can count them with the fingers of only one hand, so that his colleagues had gotten cold feet at the appearance of a witchbeast was no surprise.

However, if said appearance of a witchbeast had been somebody’s intention, then things are different.

“—Who’d think, that he would sic that witchbeast on us.”

Pulling out an axe stuck in a tree, Todd reminisces about the prey that he had failed to put down.

A boy with a nasty glare and black hair—He had been one of the prisoners Jamal had collected at the riverside, but he had revealed himself to be a part of the People of Shudraq living within the jungle, and invited Todd’s group into the woods.

Of course, it’s not like everything he had done and stated had been believed, nor had caution been absent in the case he showed any suspicious behavior. However, even that had not been enough.

By some means, the boy had beckoned a witchbeast, in an attempt to have it attack Todd’s group while he escaped. And just like that, he had gotten away, abandoning Todd and the others in the jungle.

“Fucking shit… Anyway, I’m gonna go look for that brat who got away. That’ll take me to the People of Shudraq, and I’ll exterminate all of them.”

“Hey hey, don’t lose sight of the objective. ‘Course, I’m also livid at that guy. But, if you give chase right now, you’ll just look pitiful when you get caught in a trap again.”

“You what now??”

Turning around with an angry expression, Jamal draws closer to Todd. Reining back Jamal’s momentum with a hand, Todd tells him “Now, calm down.”

“For now, you better do something about your appearance my guy. Smells like there’s water over there, so go wash that blood off.”

“What’s the big deal about some splatter? We’re Imperial Soldiers…”

“It’s some unknown witchbeast’s blood, yeah? We don’t know what kind of effects it could have. Not being afraid of poison isn’t bravery, it’s just foolishness.”

In the first place, Todd himself had thought it stupid upon seeing that Jamal had covered himself from head-to-toe in witchbeast blood.

Seemingly not having realized that risk previously, a sense of crisis now starts showing up on Jamal’s face once Todd pointed it out.

“…Where’d you say the water was?”

“Over there. It’s probably not that far off. Hurry and wash that blood off, then come back. We’ll decide our course of action in the meantime.”

Waving his hand nonchalantly, Todd drives Jamal off towards the water. While reluctant, it seemed that Jamal would also hate to fall to poison, and so he promptly disappears into the bushes.

Seeing off his back, Todd crouches down beside the fallen witchbeast, and by touching its fangs, horn and even scales, he confirms its state.

“Todd! It’s not time to fiddle with that witchbeast’s corpse! What’ll we do next?”

“I understand your panic, but there’s some meaning in investigating them. Think about it. If, by chance, that guy from before is able to call over more witchbeasts, what would we do? If it’s Jamal, sure he can just go and take them down, but we need to know if even we are able to easily kill them.”

“…That he was controlling the witchbeast, do you seriously believe that?”

“So, the moment a witchbeast just happened to attack us, the boy that was with us just happened to take off and run away like he was waiting for it to happen. Do you seriously believe that??”

With Todd posing that question, the soldiers accompanying him hold their tongue and sink into silence.

That many coincidences, they shouldn’t add up together like that. Disregarding whether the witchbeast was being controlled, they should think that the boy had concocted a plan to escape, factoring in the assumption that the witchbeast would appear.

Which means… “It’s highly likely that if we brazenly go chasing after that kid, we could get the tables flipped on us. It’s not just one witchbeast in this jungle. There could be a pack of them.”

“Ugh… Then, do we just return to camp empty-handed?”

“Doesn’t have to be empty-handed. At the very least, we’ve learned that the kid and the People of Shudraq are hostile to us. In that case, we have many things in our hands.”

Hitting the shoulders of the soldier who seemed frustrated, Todd clarified another point of view.

It’s true that, just looking at the situation, that boy had bested them through-and-through. However, in both fighting and strategic power, the side that had more options at hand was clearly this one.

To regard the defeat of the first battle, as the defeat of all consequent battles, is too wild a conclusion.

In the first place… “None of us got killed. If we win in the end, it’s our victory.”

“…Understood.”

Saying that, Todd gives a dry laugh at the soldier whose expression, while reluctant, calms down.

After that, those who had put away their weapons, begin to wrack their brains on how to proceed from now. Because they had heard Todd’s opinion, they are discussing whether to retreat or give chase.

Naturally, Todd's opinion being that giving chase is absurd, the other soldiers' opinion too, seems to be solidifying in a direction similar to Todd's.

"For now, let's go back to the camp and make a report. After that, hunt the mountains with the camp's forces? Not very appealing when you consider the size of the forest…"

"It'd be better to consult with Second Commander Zikr at Guaral. But don't think that you'll get that Womanizer out of the town."

At the words of that last Soldier, the other soldiers laughed with a "Not wrong."

While hearing his fellows' conversations, Todd instructs everyone to drink water in preparation for their departure, as he passes around a leather bag filled with water, then once again returns to face the witchbeast's remains.

"By the way, it seems like you can use a witchbeasts' horns and bones for medicine and weapons and the like. They're rumored to go for pretty high prices, anyone interested?"

"You talking about money? Well, it's not like I'm not interested, but right now's not the time for that. We gotta hurry back, and report to our all-ies…s."

"…"

The soldier, while answering back to Todd's remark as the latter looks down to the witchbeast's corpse, has his voice suddenly start shaking midway. Then, becoming numb, he was made unable to continue.

The soldier, bewildered as to what was happening, falls to his knees right where he stood. And he is not the only one to do so. All other soldiers as well, one after another, became unable to stand.

"Wh-at is…"

"It's the water, the water. You didn't think it tasted kind of bitter?"

“—Ah?”

In front of the astonished soldier, picking up the water’s leather bag, Todd shrugs his shoulders. Cutting up the bag with a knife he took out, Todd shows him something tinted red; the water that drips out.

That is… “The snake’s venom. Generally speaking, it seems like the pouch structure that holds a snake’s venom at the root of the fangs is unchanged. Good thing I found it right away.”

“wh- wh- wh-…”

Why, did you do that, the numb soldier, unable to move, desperately asks.

Apparently, it seems the witchbeast’s toxicity had lost some strength, and so, they would not die just from that. While it would take a little more elbow grease, it is something that can’t be avoided.

“Well, I’m sure you have tons of questions. But, I’m not going to go out of my way to answer them, it’s going to be a problem once Jamal comes back. Which is why,”

Saying that, Todd places his axe on his shoulder, and goes to his paralyzed comrade’s side. Then, at arm’s length of one of them, he apathetically raises the axe,

“—Feel free to check your answers.”

3

Finding a small waterfall after emerging from the bushes, Todd takes a small breath.

This is because he had caught sight of Jamal, at the bottom of a small waterfall, in a small puddle-like water source, desperately attempting to wash the blood off.

“My guy, you seem to be having quite a bit of trouble.”

“Ah! You dick, where’s the water. This is some puddle, you little… Because of that, no matter how long I take, the blood won’t wash off, will it now?!”

His eyes bulging at the sight of the returned Todd, Jamal directs his anger at him.

Picking at his ears at that attitude, Todd responds “My bad, my bad” to that,

“For the time being you’re fine like that, so listen. We’ll get out of this jungle, and go back to Guaral. Then, we’ll report the operation failed.”

“—Huuh?! Why would we do that?! After this, we’re going to go after that kid, find those Shudraq and”

“Massacre them? Your enthusiasm’s admirable, but think for a second.”

Jamal bites back at the future plans presented. Raising his finger in front of him, Todd begins his explanation to his partner, someone whose head was lacking in use, with “You listening?”

“That kid used the witchbeast to escape from us. It’s very likely that he could set another one on us, if we give chase.”

“In that case, we just gotta kill’em all”

“If all our soldiers were you, my guy, then sure, but that’s not the case here. And, there’s another problem… There might be, a surprise attack from the Shudraq on the camp.”

“What?”

“It’s obvious, isn’t it? I mean, that kid will let his allies know that we’re enemies. Then in that case, for the Shudraq to get the early worm, it’d be convenient for them to launch a surprise attack on the camp to secure victory. And, the group at the encampment doesn’t expect that. Their surprise attack would more-or-less succeed.”

And with that, they would annihilate them without giving them the opportunity to regroup after having broken up their formation.

It would be a losing battle. You could say it was an unavoidable conclusion, from the moment that Todd's group was baited out.

"In that case, we just gotta hurry back and tell 'em."

"How would we? That kid had us walk quite a bit, and he kept us quite far away from the camp while we were fighting the witchbeast. At this point, we won't make it in time even if we go back."

"…So, that's why you're shamelessly packing your bags and leaving?"

"That's right. We'll reorganize, and squash those cunning bastards. It's our best shot."

With a vein popping on his forehead, Jamal stands in place grinding his molars.

Befitting an Imperial Soldier, "Never retreat, Never cower, Never Concede" is Jamal's motto. To him, Todd's plan was nothing more than humiliating.

However… "—I'm right. You understand that too, don't you? Your right eye should've been the cost of that lesson."

"…Fucking dammit! Alright, I'll hear you out. In these times, your thought process hasn't been wrong… What about the others?"

"No, well, you get it, right? Unlike you, my guy, they're not as flexible. I told them the same, but not a single one of them lent me an ear."

While scratching his head, Todd points towards the bushes and drops the tone of his voice. Hearing that, Jamal's mood improved and with a snort, "Hah," he continued, "So that's it. So then, they gave up on you? That's a bummer."

"Don't say that. I'm the one saying this, but I'd like to say I was the one who gave up on them. —I thought it'd be pointless even if I talked to them, so I cut it short early.”

Perhaps believing Todd’s words to be those of a sore loser, Jamal’s sneer showed no trace of disappearing.

He thought that was more convenient, so he doesn’t think there’s any particular reason to make excuses. It’d become a back-and-forth between them anyway, they’d dispute over him being a coward and whatever else as much as possible.

He just quickly dealt with the problems he had a grasp on. —In the end, it would be the same.

“Right then, let’s get out of the forest before we’re found by the Shudraq. If we can’t make it back to Guaral, that’d also disgrace the Imperial Soldiers.”

“Let’s go with that, then! If you can’t keep up then I’ll leave you behind, Todd.”

“Ok, ok.”

With rough breaths, Jamal started leading the way out of the forest. He followed behind, seemingly annoyed.

Plainly put, Jamal was determined not to lose next time, but Todd felt the same on that front.

—Because he believed that the run-away black-haired boy, was a troublesome enemy that he definitely ought to kill.

END

Provisional Rem's Paranoia: An Oni's Ailment

1

Once his earth-smeared cheeks regained their red lush, the young boy's feeble gasps finally turned into normal breathing.

Relieved and reassured, Rem gently released him from her arms and sighed.

Rem: "First things first…"

She had ascertained that his life was no longer at risk, so her mind switched to what she should do with him. At a loss, she turned him over and laid his head on her lap to rest.

A part of her would have felt guilty for allowing someone with such injuries to lie down on grounds with grass this sparse.

Yes, that's all this is. Nothing more.

Rem: "Why, just why am I making excuses…"

Rui: "Mmuh—?"

As Rem muttered to herself, her face twisting into a bitter scowl, the little blonde-haired girl turned to her and tilted her head, puzzled.

Perhaps the little girl felt anxious, perhaps she felt worried, but Rem regardless gave a shake of her head to quell her own thoughts, then turned her attention to her shoulder.

She pressed her hand on her own shoulder softly and felt a steady flow of warmth. With this warmth, she had saved the boy's life which had been hanging by a thread.

It was a strange feeling. This was not something unique to her, she felt, but rather something she had channeled from within. The little girl's palm was nothing more than a conduit, a catalyst.

Vincent: "—To think that you are capable of using healing magic… He truly does have the devil's luck."

Just as it seemed she had let her guard down, a voice called out from nearby.

Her eyes shot to where it had come from and saw that man, the man with black hair and prudish face, standing with a glare in his eyes—He had propped the boy up long enough to survive, and had advised her to save him.

Rem had felt the need to express her gratitude, as she had been able to save the boy thanks to him, strange and vexing to her as it were.

And yet, in his presence, the thought had evaporated from her mind. His gaze was haughty, his tone even more so. To her, it seemed as though he were sizing them up like a product for sale.

Immediately she pulled the little girl behind her, and used her body to hide her from his eyes.

Vincent: "Fret not. Had I any malicious intentions, I would not have brought that man here. My desire was simple, to see that his efforts received just rewards."

Rem: "Efforts…? Just rewards…? What are…"

Vincent: "That would be you."

He cut through Rem's wary questioning and asserted himself.

As he observed Rem shrinking, he closed one eye, fearless, and asserted once more.

Vincent: "It is only natural. That man's aim was one and forever true. It truly requires no repeating. From the very beginning and to the end, he only desired for your safety and your peace of mind, and naught else. He had steeled himself even for death to achieve that."

Rem: “—And why is that? Do you know? Is that why you… For me… And even went as far as to attack those people.”

Vincent: “I know not.”

His short, unfulfilling words cut her inquiries off.

The man seemed to have no time to display any consideration, among other things. A boy she had trouble trusting, vulgar soldiers, and this man in front of her, all of them added to the image Amnesiac Rem had of the male gender; indeed, while this sample of hers was far too small, she could not help but come to the conclusion that men equaled trouble.

Yet without sparing so much as a thought for her, the man looked down at the boy lying on Rem’s lap.

Vincent: “I have no interest in the origin of his desires. I moved in accordance with my own intent. That is why I burned that soldier camp to the ground. And while I was doing so, I thought of rewarding this clown. Thus, all came to be in orderly fashion. That is the truth of things.”

Rem: “…”

Vincent: “I have no interest in how you interpret my words, however.”

He shrugged, his eyes disinterested in anything Rem might have to say, as if the results of this particular tirade mattered little to him. He had done what he wanted, and any actions taken outside of his pursuits were born of his whimsy. However, Rem’s heart had yet to dry or harden so much as to be unable to appreciate his roundabout kindness.

As they spoke, the overwhelming retch of miasma wafted out of the boy as he lay on her lap, keeping her on edge. Her instincts screamed at her to be wary of him, regardless of his appearance or behavior.

Even if that behavior included risking his life to save her from that military encampment.

Rem: “I don’t… I don’t understand you.”

She continued mumbling towards him, having failed to obtain a straight answer from anyone.

Vincent: “—Mizelda, I am going back to the village. Destroy the camp until nothing is left, and take whatever you can make use of.”

Mizelda: “Understood. Don’t you have to hide your face anymore?”

Vincent: “Indeed, there are disadvantages to having my face be witnessed. There should be a mask or two on display at our rally. I will take one of those.”

Mizelda: “Unfortunate but unavoidable…”

Ignoring Rem’s mumbling, the man struck up a conversation with the red-haired woman. And while doing so, he turned his back and began walking away, but for only a moment, he broke his stride and looked back.

Vicent: “You. What shall you do now? Accompany me to the Shudraqian settlement with that fool in tow? Or stay here and die? Choose.”

Rem: “…Don’t you have time to put that in a better way?”

Vincent: “I do not. My time is precious and limited, and has far more important uses.”

As he whispered, Rem grew an intense dislike for this man. However, she held her tongue, and rather than return fire with fire, she only nodded in consent.

With that, she calmed herself. —This was not the time to be stubborn. Even if trusting these people around her was a hard pill to swallow.

Rem: “No one else can protect this girl, other than me.”

Around her were the red, burning remains of a battlefield. There was no one else but her for this little girl, so she decided to do what she could, with or without her memories, as she fastened her grip on the little girl.

Albeit it was still perplexing, that she needed this man's guidance to come to her realizations.

And this boy—

Rem: "And you, sleeping so peacefully like this… I hate you."

Annoyed, she pinched his nose.

2

The tanned women—the Shudraqians took Rem to their village. The scenery there was marvelously strange. There were women everywhere, as far as her eyes could see.

Of course, Rem's previous experience with a large population had been limited to the army campsite from before, which had been full of men. Now, there were no males in sight. The idea that mixed gender environments are rare had begun to take hold in her mind.

Rem: "Are the men of your tribe fighting elsewhere?"

Taritta: "Heeh? No, this is merely circumstances… More women are born to Shudraq, while it just so happens that the Sacred Army has more male soldiers… Ah, Sister!"

Mizelda: "Taritta? Do not annoy me for every little thing. You are my sister, the chieftain's sister. Behave like it."

The Chieftain sisters of the Shudraq—Taritta responded to Rem's question, then called for Mizelda.

Mizelda rebuked Taritta, who had her hair dyed blue. While she did feel bad about having possibly done something bad to Taritta, she decided to keep her inquiry's rejection in mind.

At present, everything around her looked new and fresh, as if a treasure chest lay open in front of her.

She had learned firsthand during her time at the military encampment that not all were willing to humor her questions. In that sense, the women of this village were comparatively kinder, though to be fair, the eye-patch man from the military camp was crueler than expected, so the comparison may have not been truly warranted.

Regardless, Rem had finally found a place to lay low for the time being.

The Shudraq thankfully seemed to have no intention of restricting her in any way, and even went so far as to provide her with a hut to rest. There, she laid the young boy on the bed to rest, and for the time being, Rem decided to calmly mull over her situation.

She had to think about her position in all of this, what to do afterwards, decide on what to do with the young boy and the little girl, and, and—

Rui: “Aah—uuh aah—?”

Rem: “—ah.”

As she rubbed her eyebrows, deep in thought, she felt a small hand tug at her sleeves.

Ever since they had arrived at the village, the little girl had been tagging along behind her quietly. While she had become more attached to Rem compared to the time they had been running around in the great jungle earlier on, the fact that she showed concern for her took Rem aback.

Vincent: “—It seems even that little girl understands that even if you try to piece everything by yourself at random, you shall hit a dead-end.”

Rem: “You again…”

As the little girl tugged on her sleeve, she heard his voice. Taking no effort to hide the displeasure on her face, she turned around. Standing at the entrance of the hut was that man with black hair—Though his current appearance left her dumbfounded.

He was wearing an atrocious mask, one with streaks of red and white, something that made him stand out like a sore thumb.

Regardless, along with his clothes also being a dead giveaway, it failed to mask his particular presence, that made him, him.

Rui: "Uuu—! Uuu—!"

Rem: "What is that mask? It's scaring her."

Vincent: "I am in quite a precarious situation, you see. Regardless, for the sake of the Shudraq, as well as my own, I deemed it best to keep my face hidden."

He spoke as he placed his hand on the mask twisted in anger, then proceeded to nonchalantly enter the hut. Rem attempted to convey that he was not welcome, but alas, he was not of the sorts to heed her.

So Rem decided to drop all pretenses and be straightforward.

Rem: "What exactly are you and him planning to do?"

Vincent: "Strictly speaking, that man and I are not working together. Our interests happened to align this one time, so we joined hands. There is no guarantee that that shall hold true in the future."

Rem: "…"

Vincent: "He shall plan to avoid the conflict ahead of us. He shall attempt to flee from it. Of course, he shall plan to take you with him."

Pulling in her chin, Rem remained silent despite being insulted.

While the keywords 'conflict' and 'flee' piqued her interest, she was more interested in the latter part of what he said—That that boy, Natsuki Subaru, would attempt to take her with him. It worried her.

Truth was, the thick miasma that radiated out of him kept Rem's senses sharp and on-guard against him. That said, her initial hostility towards him had begun fading.

There remained the fear that she would come to regret feeling that way once Subaru woke up, but regardless.

Rem: “Will you keep fighting alongside the women here?”

Vincent: “That is my whole intent. I intend to fight till I breathe my last. And, the fight shall not end so long as I have breath.”

Rem: “…I have to get away from that and hide.”

Vincent: “I am War itself. Where do you intend to hide from me? What land is there that shall keep you hidden from me?”

It was obvious that he alone believed that, but this man had the charisma, the presence to force others to conceive his notions and perceptions to be fact. That was part and parcel of who he was.

He was War itself. Thus, it meant all in his presence would be charred, drowned in waves of the fires of war, leaving naught but ash.

Rem: “And if I don’t like that, I should take that boy and go…?”

Vincent: “—Nay. That is no longer an option. He escaped from the clutches of the Sacred Empire Army camp and came to me with the desire to save you, and from the moment I decided to see that desire be fulfilled, you have lost your chance to escape this conflict.”

Rem: “Eh…”

Vincent: “No matter where you are, no matter how far you flee, the flames of war shall surely find you. They shall once more embroil you, engulf you. Your desire or detestation for it matters not.”

Rem: “But that…! That means that… There’s nothing I can do.”

He keeps saying that my choices are all dead-ends, but keeps leaving the choice itself to me. Is he just enjoying this? That can’t be right. What on earth is his angle?

I can’t keep fighting, and there’s no way out of this fight either—

Rui: “—uuu—!”

Just when Rem kept sinking further and further into the hole of thoughts she had been digging herself into, a small shadow leapt at the man.

Her blonde hair fluttering in the air, the little girl grabbed the man’s arm and groaned as she knocked her fists on it. Her attacks did not hurt, but her displeasure for the man was made plenty apparent.

Seeing that, the man raised his arm, with the little girl still attached to it and,

Vincent: “A child mimics their company. If Cecilus were present, you would have regretted your bold and rash actions.”

Rem: “…You won’t get mad at her?”

Vincent: “You imply that a child’s tantrum would anger me. I may put those who disrespect me in their place, but to expect a mere child to understand the intricacies of honor? That is foolish. However…”

As his voice trailed off, his gaze shifted to Rem and Subaru. Rem immediately covered her body with her arms and narrowed her eyes at him, as if asking ‘What are you aiming for?’

Rem: “What are you planning…?”

Vincent: “Schemes, hidden agendas, plans, do not take these in a bad light. Not everyone is a protagonist, nor is anyone stage decoration, but the truth of the matter is that those who do not take action quickly lose their heads. If you do not wish to lose yours, I suggest you keep wracking your brains.”

Rem: “…”

Vincent: “As I explained before, once that man awakens, he shall surely attempt to run from this conflict of mine, and take you with him. However, the Empire has already become aware of your existence. You no longer possess the means to traverse through proper channels."

His words drove a cold blade deep into her chest.

There was a fierce animosity within them. They clouded her eyes, almost, but they were concrete words. Rem had no way to refute them.

—Even she could not forget that hellish landscape.

Many lives had been lost in that camp. The Empire would surely retaliate. They would surely bare their fangs at Rem and her company, the cause of that tragedy.

There was only one reason for that—

Vincent: "Surely I do not need to point out the reason for that."

Rem: "…The way you put it is as good as pointing it out to my face."

She bit back, but even if she was incapable of seeing the face behind that mask, she knew her words had fallen flat.

The little girl returned, having had enough of the man's arm, and snuggled under Rem. Her upturned eyes looked at her with worry, a gaze that she returned with a slight smile on her face and the gentle exhale of a sigh.

Then she looked straight at the man and spoke,

Rem: "Tell me what I should… What we should do. Please."

Vincent: "So you ask for advice with sincerity. Keep in mind that my aim is only to win. Each move I make is solely to press onward to my victory. Thus, you and your ilk may not end up where you desire."

Rem: "I understand that fully. However, we lack the means to discern between good and bad at the moment. My phrasing may be discourteous, but you are currently my litmus test for that.”

Vincent: “Oh?”

She spoke as she carefully laid down the little girl beside Subaru, when the man laughed in response.

His expression lay hidden behind that mask, so Rem knew not what intentions his voice carried, but even so, she chose to press onward with her own game. Were he intolerant of this display and fell to anger, her aim would be to start fresh.

However, on the off-chance he were more open-minded and showed magnanimity, things would be different—

Vincent: “—Very well. I shall take you up on your bet.”

Rem: “…Thank you very much.”

Vincent: “From the beginning, you, I, and even Natsuki Subaru, who lays asleep behind you, even if we play our hands to the best of our abilities, we must win our bets if we want to move forward. Now is not the time to be frugal.”

Rem sighed, her victory sweet from a man who refused to offer even the simplest of compliments.

Had it been Subaru the first one to gamble to reclaim his person, then he, Rem, the little girl and the masked man must all continue this series of bets.

She balled her fist in secret, noting that the outset was good—

Vincent: “First things first. That man shall attempt to take you and run from this war of mine. However, he shall fail on his first attempt while in the city. Let him. He must learn and face reality. Otherwise, he shall be unable to stand back up. And for that reason…”

As Rem steeled her resolve, the man began speaking of his plans, of his guiding principles.

What Rem ought to do once Subaru awakened. What he would want from her, what her aim should be—Though she had no intention of being a doll who would only nod and affirm. Yet perhaps that man already had taken that into consideration.

Rem: “I cannot let things end without ever finding anything out either.”

And so, to rise up and battle against the many mysteries around her, with the little girl who had no other but her, and the young boy who reeked of evil in her arms, Rem began to wrack her brains.

END

The Dragon Kingdom: Missing Child Search Chronicle II

1

“This request is reaaaaaaaally, reaaaaaaally important, so please listen closely. If you see anyone trying to cross the desert or approaching this tower, I need you to drive them away!” Emilia exclaimed.

“—Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth onto the first floor, almighty petitioner.”

“Ah! And when I say, ‘drive them away’, I mean that you mustn’t hurt them. You have to be reaaally careful to be gentle when you’re driving them away. Can you do that for me?”

“—I, am Volcanica. In accordance with the ancient covenant, the will of thee who hath reached the top shall be questioned,” the Divine Dragon replied majestically, in complete contrast to Emilia, who was trying her best to get him to listen. His answer was a bit vague, and she wasn’t sure if her intentions had even gotten through to him or not.

Having been left behind at the Pleiades Watchtower, Emilia and the others had decided on a course of action, but in order to go through with it, the guardian of the tower’s—Volcanica’s—actions would be essential.

Finishing the tower’s Trials had resulted in the opening up of the Pleiades Watchtower and the Augria Sand Dunes. Each of them had served as a form of defense for the purpose of guarding the Witch’s shrine in the eastern end of the world map, so there was no way she could ignore the harmful effects that would result from those things losing their function.

For one, she suspected that the Witch Cult might race towards the shrine, aiming to revive the Witch of Envy. However, she couldn’t hesitate to act just because she was afraid of that.

The people she held dear had disappeared—so she needed to go search for Subaru and Rem.

“That’s why I wanted to ask Volcanica to do that…”

But Volcanica was spouting out the same words over and over again like he usually did.

Emilia, who had obtained the qualifications to become an overseer of the tower by completing all of the Trials, had a worried expression on her face, for the Divine Dragon had a habit of going back and forth between being normal and weird.

However… “Huh?”

“—Thou, who hath reached the top of the tower. Step forth onto the first floor, almighty petitioner.”

While Emilia still seemed worried about what to do, Volcanica, who was right before her, moved slowly. The Divine Dragon’s azure form bent down and then he gently held out his right forefoot to her.

Emilia became wide-eyed due to that movement, and then a sharp talon on Volcanica’s forefoot began to shake, followed by a crack. A fragment of it then split off and flew into the air, which she instantly snatched away.

“…”

The talon fragment was beautiful; it was pure black.

And so, the reason why Volcanica did that was…

2

“So, I think this is Volcanica’s way of proving that a promise was made.”

“…”

After Emilia gave that answer, sticking out her chest and holding up the black talon for all to see, everyone looked at each other. She finally felt fulfilled now that she thought she had established a bond with Volcanica.

Anastasia stared intently at the fragment of the dragon's talon in Emilia's hand, let out a "Haaaah," and then continued, "In other words, ya could call this somethin' like a promissory note from Volcanica that he ain't gonna attack anyone."

"W-Well… I guess you could say that. Right, Beatrice?" Emilia asked.

"Are you asking Betty, I wonder? Hm, well, I'm not entirely sure, but I think you could interpret it that way, in fact. Otherwise, I haven't the faintest clue as to why he would do that, I suppose."

Taking on Emilia's question, Beatrice replied like so, her arms crossed. She gazed at the talon with her big, round eyes with their characteristic patterns showing, then lightly narrowed them. "As one would expect of the Divine Dragon, Volcanica, even a mere fragment of a talon is made up of an enormous quantity of mana, in fact. With this, the eyes of the dragon will perhaps even be able to distinguish it from a distance, I suppose."

"O-Oh, I see! Then Volcanica understands everything, just as I thought."

Emilia sighed in relief at Beatrice's positive-ish point of view, lightly patting her chest. However, having heard what Beatrice had just said, Julius raised his hand and said, "Please wait a moment."

With a small amount of astonishment showing on his handsome face, he continued, "I cannot help but ask you about this, Miss Beatrice, but did you say that the Divine Dragon's talons are made up of mana? So it's not that they possess mana, but on the contrary…"

"Jeez… Explaining the origins of dragons to the people of this day and age would be a bit of a pain to do, in fact. To make a long story short, you can think of dragons as living beings that are like enormous masses of mana, I suppose."

"'To make a long story short', huh… That's easier said than done."

Lips curled, Julius's eyes widened at Beatrice's explanation, and Ram muttered something as she closed one of her eyes. While she was stroking the scales of the ground dragon, Patrasche, who was next to her, she said, "For Ram, ground dragons…including Patrasche here, do not at all seem like masses of mana, however."

"There's a difference between a dragon (竜) and a Dragon (龍), in fact. We can go through the nitty-gritty details while we are crossing over the desert later, I suppose. Anyhow, what's important is the fact that Volcanica's talon functions like a right of passage of sorts."

"Well… I have no objections to that. Fortunately, if we can get Volcanica to cooperate with us, we should be able to resolve many of the problems we are facing as well," Echidna replied.

They all had mountains of questions for the tiny, yet knowledgeable Beatrice.

Though Beatrice really enjoyed teaching others to the point of being annoyingly helpful sometimes, and though Emilia found it rather charming how everyone was currently surrounding her, Beatrice had made a valid point.

What was truly important now was that Volcanica was going to guard the tower. And the proof that he would take on that duty was the talon fragment he had given to Emilia.

"And with the Divine Dragon's talon, as well as Meili, gettin' through the Augria Sand Dunes should be possible. So I guess we'll be able ta convince the kingdom no matter what," Anastasia added.

"You'll help us with this as well, right, Ms. Anastasia?"

"I've already stuck with y'all up 'til this point, and I guess I was able to wake up without any issues thanks to Meili's help, right? So I'm definitely gonna pay y'all back for that, or I would feel ill at ease," Anastasia obliged with a graceful smile. Emilia nodded in response to her answer, then turned in the direction of Meili, whose eyes had turned red.

Before they had obtained Volcanica's talon, they'd had a serious discussion about how Meili would be treated and how she would atone for what she'd done in the past, and it looked like the proposal they'd made for that purpose would finally be put into practice.

"That's just wonderful, Meili."

"I-I wasn't really expecting much. That's why I wouldn't feel down even if it didn't go so well. Actually, good for you, Miss."

"Yes, it really is. I'm just reaaally glad everything worked out."

Even if Meili might have not felt an ounce of anxiety, Emilia had been quite worried about whether her proposal would work out or not.

She had said quite a few things in a heroic fashion, so she didn't want to disappoint her if it didn't work out.

For one reason or another, when Meili heard Emilia's reply, she let out a groan. "Ugh…"

"It would be quite a blunder to think such an expression would get across to Emilia, I suppose. You've been rather careless, so it's about time you learned how to get along with her, in fact."

"Right, I completely agree. Otherwise, you'll be swayed by her until the end of your days!" Ram added.

"…I got it, alright! Really, dealing with her is such a pain in the butt though, isn't it?"

"Um, are you guys perhaps talking about me?" Emilia asked.

Beatrice, Ram, and Meili were all having a little chat with each other while taking glances at Emilia, but she had no clue what they were talking about.

Anyhow… "Now that our anxieties about the future have been alleviated, let us focus on resolving the issue we are now facing… Which would be searching for Subaru and Miss Rem, who both went missing, don't you think?"

"For sure. My amazing knight ain't the only one on pins n' needles about this, so we gotta do something about it." Anastasia began the process of bringing the discussion to an end, clapping her hands in front of her chest. As far as what she had said, there were no disagreements from Emilia and the others.

If the Divine Dragon would guard the Pleiades Watchtower and the Augria Sand Dunes for them, then they could leave them in his capable hands, and Emilia and company could focus on searching for Subaru and Rem.

Therefore… "The first thing we need to do is go back to the mansion and talk with Roswaal and the others."

3

"—Ohhh myyy, now whoooo might youuu beee?"

After traveling for a long, long time, Emilia and company finally made it back to the familiar-looking mansion.

However, what they received upon exiting the dragon-drawn carriage was an unexpected greeting from a man sporting clownish clothing and white makeup applied to his face.

Emilia gasped upon hearing the words of the man—Roswaal—who had scrunched up his finely-shaped eyebrows and craned his neck.

"Huh! Roswaal… It can't be, you don't remember me…"

"…"

"What should I do? I was sooo sure that everything was fine since everyone could remember me, but…"

Emilia went into a state of panic when Roswaal scrunched up his eyebrows and looked like he was at a loss. She had already been forgotten by everyone once when her Name was snatched away by Gluttony.

Though it had only been for a short while, a powerful feeling of anxiousness overcame her when she felt like she had been forgotten by the world again.

On the other hand, Emilia thought about how amazing Julius was for not crying, seeing as he was suffering from that very thing, and imagined how dreadful it was to be stuck in that state for an indefinite amount of time.

First of all, if Roswaal really has forgotten who I am, then I won't be able to borrow his help for the sake of saving Subaru and Rem to begin with…

"…Juuust kiiiidding."

"…Eh?"

In front of Emilia, who was in a deep state of pandemonium, Roswaal suddenly spread his arms and uttered that.

Emilia still didn't seem to be able to follow what was going on, so Roswaal repeated the words again, "Becaaause," and continued, "I was just kidding, it was a joke. I didn't forget about you or any such thing, Lady Emilia; indeeeed I did not. It was just a bit of a practical joke… Oopsies!"

"That 'joke' wasn't funny at all, I suppose!" Roared Beatrice at the joking Roswaal as she stood up. As she yelled at him, she gathered up her luggage on the dragon-drawn carriage and threw it at him.

Roswaal casually caught it and turned his neck. "Ohhh myyy, there's no neeed to beee so aaaangry. I already received the letter you sent from Mirula, you seeee. So I understand your situation."

"I-I-I-In that case, then you must really be out of your damn mind, in fact…! How do you think Betty and everyone else feels after dealing with the tower and the desert…!"

"I thought it'd be good to eaaaase your hearts a little with that because I knew just how difficult your journey was, you seeee.

Nooo, it was my mistake, my mistake."

Beatrice had protested with her face turning crimson, but Roswaal remained unperturbed.

Emilia, however, was just glad that Roswaal hadn't forgotten who she was. Of course, I'm still angry at him because of his joke, though.

"—Master Roswaal," said Ram to Roswaal from behind Emilia and everyone else. Roswaal closed one of his eyes as she stepped forward, gazing in her direction with his blue eye.

There were clearly complex emotions silently coming out from Roswaal's eye.

"It looks like you've done something raaaather reckless, Ram."

"I only did what I needed to do. It's simply that I wanted to help Lady Emilia and Miss Beatrice no matter…"

"It seems that your body took on quite a heavy burden. I see. I'll have a look at you later."

"Yes, and kindly make it just the two of us."

"…Caaan we at least let Frederica come along?"

"Kindly make it just the two of us."

Ram asserted her dominance over Roswaal, winning him over with her forceful appeal. "I understand, I understand," Roswaal relented. As one would expect, Ram was strong against Roswaal, and Petra was a rather powerful ally in that regard as well.

Realizing that fact once more, Emilia called out to him, "Roswaal," and continued, "I'll have Petra and Ram give you a good scolding later for the bad joke from before, but you read the letter, right?"

"Indeeeed, I have read it. I was increeedibly astonished to hear that the Divine Dragon, Volcanica, is at the Pleiades Watchtower."

“Yeah. He was reaaaally big, too.”

“The most surprisin’ thing there probably wasn’t that, though…”

Emilia and Roswaal nodded at one another, and Anastasia couldn’t help but smile wryly after listening to their conversation.

Anastasia, Julius, and Echidna had all come along on the dragon-drawn carriage to Roswaal’s mansion.

I guess they want to join up with their ally, the Iron Fang, then.

“Don’t ya worry ‘bout that. We’ll reunite with my little ones soon. I sent a letter out just like Miss Emilia here, so they should be comin’ ta pick us up after a while.”

“Ummm, so what you mean is that they’re going to come here, right?” Emilia asked.

“As long as that’s not a problem for ya, of course.”

“Oh, definitely not, it’s not a problem at all.”

Emilia couldn’t help but press her hands together in front of her chest when she heard the proposal of Anastasia, who had closed one of her eyes.

Originally, whether Anastasia and her group would work with them to search for Subaru and Rem or not depended entirely on how they felt about it.

When they made it through the desert safely, Emilia wouldn’t have been surprised if they had decided to withdraw when they had the option to return home, so when they said they would continue to work with them, she was really happy about that.

“Though I am lacking, please allow me to proffer my assistance to you. After all, if I cannot confirm the safety of Subaru and Miss Rem after everything that has happened, I would remain unsettled,” Julius said.

“And I am of the same opinion. However, that’s what we decided on our own without confirming it with the lord of the manor," Echidna added.

"No need to worry about that. We won't allow Roswaal to say no, I suppose. He isn't qualified enough to say something like that, in fact."

After Julius and Echidna offered their assistance, Beatrice consented to it. Having been completely ignored in the decision-making process, Roswaal could only smile wryly, but his silence was probably his way of showing that he had no objections.

Not being able to go hard on Beatrice was one of Roswaal's weaknesses, after all. In any case, Roswaal assenting to it and Anastasia and co. promising to work with them were both great news.

"Now all that's left is to make sure Subaru and Rem are safe… Roswaal, about them…"

"—Yes, I have been paaaaying close attention to it. Now, it is very likely that they were transported to the south of the Vollaaachian Empire."

"I see… Do you know of a way to get there, Roswaal?"

"As a matter of fact, the Vollachian Empire is very difficult to get into, even for me, you seee." Smoothing down his indigo-colored hair, Roswaal gently shrugged his shoulders.

Emilia responded to him with a "Is that so?" with widened eyes.

"There are sky dragons over there… That is to say that they have quite a lot of aerial firepower, you seee. Therefore, if I were to fly into the country, it's very likely that they would confront me."

"Then, while the sky dragons are chasing after Roswaal, Betty and the others can waltz on in without a care in the world, I suppose."

"Oh myyy, now that wouuuld be a good idea, but I'll end up dying, you seeee."

Roswaal smiled bitterly and put his hand on Beatrice's head, rejecting her idea. Emilia gave Beatrice, who had shaken off his hand, a sidelong glance, thinking that that strategy was no good.

She couldn't just sacrifice someone for the sake of saving Subaru. If she did so, she thought that Subaru would feel extremely bothered, and she herself wouldn't be able to rejoice. I can't just sacrifice someone for the sake of saving Subaru. If I did that, Subaru would probably be bothered by it, and I wouldn't be able to rejoice, either.

"It'll be no good if I can't greet Subaru and Rem properly with a smile. And to do that, I'd like to ask for your help."

"Don'tcha worry yourself about that. That's why I'm here! As the president of the Hoshin Company, I'll do my very best ta help ya."

"Wow, thank you so much!"

Anastasia smiled in response to Emilia's resolute words. The others also looked as if they were facing the same problem with that same feeling.

As far as the rest were concerned… "Otto and the others will come back from Priestella soon. Let's borrow their wisdom to come up with a plaaan to bring Subaru aaaand Rem back."

The fire of determination to work together for the purpose of saving Subaru, who had been lost in a distant foreign land, was burning within them.

END

Ex 5:
The Tale of the Scarlet Princess

The Land of Wolves:
Death unto the Weak, No Mercy Zero: Arakiya

1

Panting, her small body bounced like a bouncing ball. The target was small, and her coiled body flew through the air like a ball drawing a large parabola, heading straight toward them with the intent to kill. Like an arrow shot from a bow, she went for their vital spots without hesitation…

"…Unfortunately for you, however, I can see right through it."

The spinning ball's attack was meant to be a surprise attack at the enemy's rear. But what was meant to be a strike against the back of the blue-haired boy's head disappeared like a puff of smoke, as he had cleanly nullified it. Realizing that she had failed, she immediately twisted her body in midair. She looked around, searching for her target that had disappeared before she touched the ground…but even her fastest was too slow.

"Shatzbot."

"…"

"Oh? Don't you know? It's what you say in Shatranj to declare victory over your opponent," said the boy provokingly with a frivolous air about him, rolling his droopy eyes as he spoke.

He was around eleven or twelve and was dressed in clothing known as a kimono, which was made by sewing cloth into an unusual shape. His face showed no tension or seriousness—in fact, she had never once seen him tighten his expression, not even slightly.

And so, even during a practice match with their lives on the line, the boy didn't even bat an eyelid while pointing the blade at her throat.

"That's enough," someone said. "Keep going, and gone shall her head be.”

…I’m no match. Anger bubbled up at the realization, but before it could be unleashed, a voice came from her side. It belonged to a tall, thin man dressed in white from head to toe. A man with a penetrating gaze, at odds with the casual tone of his voice—he couldn’t keep up with their battle but could still follow each and every one of their moves with his eyes.

Listening to the man, who was probably weaker than him, the boy frankly said, “Alright,” and drew back his weapon—a katana—renouncing his right to decide her fate. No, he didn’t renounce it at all.

“That’s right, lil’ doggie. If I wanted to, I could kill you anytime, but that applies to everyone, really. I’m more of a simple, straightforward actor, you see.”

“…I have no idea what you’re trying to say.”

“In other words, a lead actor loved by everybody mustn’t be an impossible-to-understand monster. Being loved requires amiability and generosity.”

She frowned, and the boy who had unsheathed his sword looked down at her and placed a finger on his cheek. How that gesture related to amiability and magnanimity was unclear. But amiability was a word she had heard many times before.

From her precious, precious princess, whom she couldn’t be beside…

“Cecilus, that’s enough. It’s not very gentlemanly to harass a lady.”

“Eh! I’m not harassing her. She didn’t look like she understood, so I explained it to her! See how gracious I am?”

“Unfortunately, I have never seen your graciousness. And I worry for your future since it might never come to pass.”

“Your words might be distinctive and original, Chesha, but they’re hard to understand!”

The boy and the man, Cecilus and Chesha, continued with their argument. It was a peculiar argument, where you couldn't tell whether they were friends or not.

In any case, Arakiya wasn't in a position to point that out nor join them. Paying little heed to their conversation, she slowly moved to leave the area…

"…"

"Woah, careful. Do you not have any strength left, lil' doggie?" Seeing her body lose its strength and almost collapse, Cecilus moved quickly to support her. That action, as well as his words, brought forth further humiliation for her, and she felt her lips trembling. Upon seeing that, he tilted his head without any trace of malice on his face. "I'm helping you, and this is how you repay me? Pretty cruel, don't you think, Anya?"

"…Arakiya!" she reflexively responded, quickly regretting it. But it was too late; it was clear from the smirk on her opponent's face that she had fallen into his trap.

"Go to hell." The girl… Arakiya… swung the twig in her hand in an attempt to knock the smirk off Cecilus's face. But her attack was also easily deflected by his lightning-fast sword draw.

2

Rolling around on the grass of the parade grounds, Arakiya listened to the pulsing of the earth. As she became one with nature, she could feel her body being part of the massive power of the world. When she did this, spirits, a mystical existence, stopped thinking of her as an enemy and accepted her as a part of nature. And they would allow her to catch them with her slim fingers and swallow them with her small mouth.

"Agu." The lesser spirit that gently crossed paths with Arakiya was silently swallowed by her, and its earth power became hers. Lesser spirits might not be very sentient, but eating them was still consuming life. She let the power of the lesser spirit permeate throughout her body. And as she was healing her injuries…

“Man, that Spirit Eating is really something, Feels weird no matter how many times I see it.”

As the sound of the Japanese sandals and the clapping became louder, Arakiya, still lying down, turned her head and made a sour face. It was someone she didn’t want to see. At the very least, it was the face she hated most in the Empire.

“Cecilus, I hate you.”

“You are so upfront about it! But the reason you don’t like me is because you couldn’t beat me, right? How is that my fault?”

“…Die.”

“Huh?! Even more hate?!”

He was like a demon—a being that didn’t understand the human mind.

Even amongst Arakiya’s tribe, there were tales of Demons. According to them, they were beings that smiled and pretended to be your friend as they trampled over your feelings.

In that case, Cecilus, the being in front of her, was definitely one of them.

“Demon…”

“That’s a terrible thing to be called. Though as an intimidating title it’s not bad, it’s not good enough for a lead actor that’s loved by everyone. On the other hand, “Blue Lightning” is a very cool name, don’t you think?”

“Blue Lightning…?”

“The flash of lightning. The emperor’s soldiers spread that after seeing my prowess in battle. Wait, could that have been a reward from the Emperor?!” Cecilus’s eyes sparkled as he babbled about something that could be either true or false.

Arakiya had no patience to listen to someone she despised. She had none, but she still felt a pang in her heart when he mentioned the emperor.

She had no interest in Cecilus's loyalty or the feelings he had for his master. But hearing him talk about them so casually brought forth strong feelings of envy.

"Oh, such a gloomy face. Stay like that and the reaper will catch you."

"I…don't understand. That has…nothing to do with my face."

"Of course it does. Sad faces bring unlucky circumstances. You and I, Anya, are just foot soldiers, so unlucky means a cruel death for us."

"I'm not…not afraid of…"

"Really? Even if you aren't able to reach your goal because of that?" Cecilus's eyes narrowed as he struck Arakiya where it hurt her most.

She wasn't afraid of dying. It was considered a great honor to die on the battlefield for those who were born warriors. However, if you asked her to accept the fate of dying without achieving her goal, without fulfilling her wish, then…

"That would be impossible. There we go." Saying that, Cecilus casually sat down next to Arakiya.

Such a thing would be considered improper, but Arakiya couldn't say anything since she was prostrating on the ground as well. And so the two of them stayed side-by-side in an empty parade ground without even looking at each other.

It was uncomfortable. Arakiya didn't even know why Cecilus was there in the first place.

To begin with, Arakiya wasn't good at inferring things. The only reason it never caused a problem before was because the smart princess by her side understood her unspoken thoughts and feelings.

Even if Arakiya couldn't understand the words, she could believe in her princess.

And in this empire without her, there was no such trust or bond to be found.

Perhaps that's why I always feel irritated and lonely all the time.

"By the way, Arakiya, are spirits tasty? You keep eating them."

…No. I'm starting to think that the reason why I'm irritated is because of this idiot boy.

He had casually asked that question as if he had completely forgotten their previous conversation. If he doesn't have anything else to do, then I really wish he wouldn't bother me.

"Ah! You're trying to get rid of me by remaining quiet, aren't you? Unfortunately for you, I won't allow that. I used to believe nobody could keep up with my talking speed, but the Emperor told me that wasn't the case. Everyone was ignoring me!"

"…"

"Now that I understand that, my attitude has completely changed. Now, if I want an answer, I'll keep talking until I get one. I mean, they might shrug me off, saying they'll tell me next time, and then in the blink of an eye their heads could be rolling down the floor."

It was a twisted conversation, but Cecilus did have a point. Human life was a fleeting and fragile thing, and it would be no surprise if it were lost in the blink of an eye. Both Arakiya and Cecilus had the power to do that, after all.

"So, if they don't talk, you kill them?"

"That sounds threatening. But if I kill them, then I can't get my answer, so that would be the same as cutting them down in anger. I won't do it, sounds too petty."

"I see… Then I won't answer."

Even after Arakiya had left the princess's command and joined the Emperor, she kept getting beaten up by him whenever they met, and she hadn't been able to beat him even once. Even if it was for something so trivial, she wanted to feel at least some superiority.

"Eh! Don't be so heartless! Ah, let's do it this way then. I'll fight and beat you one hundred—no, one thousand times, Anya. Then can you tell me?"

"…Are you…picking a fight?"

"What? A fight? No! Just practice. I don't like picking on weak people, it's not my thing… Wait, huh?!"

Cecilus was smiling unconcernedly when a kick infused with the power of the earth came flying towards his head. But Cecilus quickly ducked under the kick and jumped away in an instant.

"You run away like lightning…"

"Ah! Wait a sec, I can't overlook that! You call this running away?! Running might be necessary for victory sometimes, but this isn't it!"

Arakiya crouched on all fours and glared, and Cecilus stood at a distance with his hand on his katana. The energy between them formed a maelstrom and raised the soil of the parade ground up into the air.

Despite both of them looking like children, there was nothing childish about the fighting energy the two were releasing. Without betraying that impression, there was nothing cute to be found in their clash.

Using the power of the spirit she had consumed, Arakiya stepped forward, her foot looking as if it had sunk into the ground. To easily counter that, Cecilus drew his blade as he flashed his white teeth.

Both of them had been forged on the battlefield; both of them could only live on the battlefield. Their weapons clashed like their very souls were screaming out, and the two warriors howled voicelessly.

As her best strike got deflected, Arakiya ground her teeth as she stared at the lightning.

“Really? Even if you aren’t able to reach your goal because of that?”

He was a truly vexing boy. Flighty and irresponsible, he believed that the world was for him to take, control, and play with. And yet, despite all that, he was able to see right through her.

To not achieve her goal. That was the most terrifying thing to Arakiya.

The most important thing to Arakiya—what she would give her life for—was just a single person. And for this reason, she betrayed her. She betrayed her trust, and was unable to stay by her side because of that. But she willingly gave it up, so that her princess could live.

“A-Aaah!!” Screaming, the lone warrior Arakiya twisted her thin body and threw all her anger against the master swordsman and his deadly blade, in hopes she wouldn’t perish as a lone warrior.

She’d made her promise. That one day, one day, once she fulfilled her value…

“Princess…!”

She would be reunited with the one she had been separated from.

3

From a distance, an old man with long white eyebrows cleared his throat as he watched the scene in the parade grounds. Though his laughter sounded like the breathing of a sick man on his deathbed, he was far from it, and in that small spindly body lay plenty of vitality. Chesha closed one eye at the sight of the elderly man, over ninety years old, but still in high spirits. I wonder how this man sees the two at the parade ground.

“Oh-ho, what monsters! You seeing what I’m seeing, Chesshy?”

“It’s Chesha, Olbart. Indeed, I can see them with my own two eyes. Both of them could be either 11 or 12; without a doubt a result of the Empire’s ideals.”

“Ku-ka-ka-ka! Truly, truly. Monsters keep appearing amongst the youngin’s. It makes me laugh now that I am Three at last. I can’t see myself going up any further.”

Standing next to the guffawing old man, Olbart Dunkelkenn, who he had heard voice his own assumption, Chesha watched Cecilus and Arakiya’s practice battle, which looked more like a battle to the death.

Cecilus didn’t know restraint. But as long as Arakiya didn’t die, the promise she had made with Chesha’s master might be fulfilled. However…

“I was relieved that the Imperial Selection Ceremony was finally over, but now there are signs of uprising in various parts of the Empire. There’s no time to rest and I want to lament that this was not what I was promised.”

“Well, this is the Vollachia Empire. You’re too naive, Chis.”

Chesha’s eyes clouded over at the numerous issues before him, in complete contrast to the old man, who was laughing and slapping his back. His life motto was to complete only the work given to him and live a quiet life. So why is that plan falling apart before my very eyes like this? he thought. “To be captivated by someone is such a troublesome thing.”

The girl howled desperately at Cecilus while being danced around. And with a strange feeling of sympathy towards her tumultuous life, Chesha turned his white face towards the sky and sighed a deep, deep sigh.

END

The Land of Wolves:
Death unto the Weak, No Mercy ZERO: Vincent

1

Gaoran Peixit, High Count from the Empire of Vollachia, was known by the name of 'Lord of the Cumulus.'

People would talk about how he gave off the impression that he traveled on a white cloud whenever he rode 'Feyron,' the sky dragon that he also had a rather good command of, hence said alias was given to him.

In the Empire of Vollachia, upon which snow never fell, the beauty of Feyron's white scales and eyes was a miracle, and some believed that catching sight of it could bring good luck.

Its majestic mien was sometimes even put on display during the events that took place in their territory to raise the people and soldiers' morale, and it could also be seen in the imperial capital when they presented themselves at the emperor's request.

The whole empire knew how fortunate Gaoran was to be the owner of such a beautiful and gallant miracle of a sky dragon, earning the 'Lord of the Cumulus' a reputation as one of the luckiest men to have ever lived.

And yet…

"…"

High up in the blue sky, the dragon opened its mouth and issued a thunderous roar.

The dragon flew with its wings spread to their full length, as its body, the notable 'Cumulus' that had given its master his alias, was caparisoned by a huge quantity of arrows and blood and its speed slowly decreased.

It had risen to the highest possible altitude, almost piercing the clouds, in order to escape from the incessant rain of arrows, probably out of instinct.

Or maybe, after realizing that it would be unable to go any faster, the dragon had done so in a desperate attempt to protect the master that was on its back.

However, no matter which was true, nothing would stop the soldiers from firing their arrows again. And therefore, nothing would stop the beautiful white dragon from meeting its end.

“Ready! Fire!!”

As he stared at the dragon’s silhouette, which began to look increasingly smaller, somebody moved his lifted arm and gave the order.

Even this man, being a ‘general,’ felt some uneasiness at the thought of murdering the nationwide famous ‘Cumulus,’ Feyron. Nevertheless, he knew that uneasiness could never be allowed to limit his actions.

The slight man was in charge of guarding a sanctuary, one that he could not afford to jeopardize due to sentimentality.

If they were in a beauty competition, that place would not easily lose, even to the ‘Cumulus,’ and it was also just as renowned… Such was the ‘Crystal Palace,’ built out of magic crystal, located in the imperial capital of Vollachia, residence to the emperor.

That was the sanctuary that Third-Class General Zikr Osman had been tasked with protecting.

“Why, High Count Peixit…?!”

As he conducted the imperial capital’s bloody defense against the white dragon, Zikr gritted his teeth.

Causing unnecessary harm to a sky dragon, engaging in an unnecessary fight with somebody, and going against the emperor that he was supposed to protect… Gaoran Peixit’s foolish acts of savagery were too many to count.

Just a few months ago, order in the empire had been in shambles.

The former emperor, elderly at the moment, had burned to death on the throne, thus beginning the ‘Imperial Selection Ceremony’ to choose the next ruler. That gory ceremony was basically a slaughter involving the siblings from the imperial family, an enormous civil war that made a battlefield of the whole country. In accordance with the rules of the empire, where only the strongest were respected, a massive bloodshed and a huge loss of lives had occurred.

Eventually, the ‘Imperial Selection Ceremony’ had concluded, thereby birthing a new emperor. And then, something else had started…

High Count Gaoran Peixit had gathered his soldiers and launched an attack on the imperial capital, Rupgana.

As a result, a lot of soldiers and generals, led by Zikr, had been recruited to fight in its defense, and forced into a battle with the soldiers that Gaoran commanded.

Zikr was one of the empire’s ‘generals,’ and he was not actually opposed to fighting.

As a member of the Osman house, proving the imperial troops’ honor and his own worth on the battlefield was quite splendid to him… However, he simply could not find this one battle so gratifying.

Arrows flew against Gaoran’s dragon, bringing it even closer to death, and blows from several swords sliced his soldiers down. Gaoran, while on top of the dragon that was mid-flight, was probably searching for a chance of victory amidst.

But he was not going to find anything of the sort here.

“Why, High Count Peixit…? You know you won’t win, so why…?!”

Zikr yelled as he watched Gaoran’s soldiers, unable to flee, be surrounded and annihilated. The soldiers originally meant to take the capital were all attacked from both the left and right, then crushed mercilessly.

That was not due to any special technique, nor to a big strength difference between his allies and foes. It was thanks to a superior aspect… a difference in strategy.

Gaoran's strategy was to invade the capital and immediately seize the Crystal Palace through a surprise attack.

However, said strategy proved to be very predictable, causing the soldiers commanded by Gaoran to thoroughly fall into a trap. Perhaps, if they had retired earlier, they could have kept the bloodshed to a minimum, but…

"Ready! Fire!!"

Aware that the battle would only keep dragging on, Zikr shouted and gave the order for the next attack.

No matter how much he pitied the enemy soldiers, he could not risk his own life. Still, he decided to make this end by doing just enough damage to dampen their morale and extinguish the flames of war in their hearts.

If they did not continue this fight to the point of eradication, surely somebody would survive.

"If they survive this battle, they'll have a chance to make up for it next time…!"

All he wanted was for the losing side's commander to put and end to this fight… no, to this massacre, soon.

As Zikr wished in vain, the others fired their arrows, swung their swords, spilled their foes's blood, killed.

They fired their arrows, swung their swords, each time fertilizing the land of the Sword Wolf with more blood and corpses…

Gaoran Peixit grabbed his spear and got down from his exhausted dragon's back.

Several arrow injuries were on the shoulders and back of his burly figure, from the battle that he had engaged in alone a while ago. The number of lodged arrows was, surprisingly, quite low when compared to the total of fired arrows.

And if those arrows had not reached Gaoran, it was because, instead, they had pierced his dragon, Feyron.

"Forgive me, Feyron…!"

This was the same white dragon who had once, with the supreme beauty of its white scales, gained the locals' appreciation and praise. The poor creature had spent its final moments plunging to the ground, its body covered in arrows and blood.

The one to blame for this was Gaoran himself, for having brought Feyron into that battle.

He regretted it, but he had actually never imagined that it would turn out this way.

The imperial capital Rupgana's defenses were weakened, and the first-class generals… the strongest monsters in the empire, who were in charge of guarding the emperor, were all far away from their master, creating a perfect, once-in-a-lifetime chance to strike.

The idea itself was actually not wrong.

Nobody had reported the appearance of any first-class general in this battlefield, and Gaoran himself had not witnessed any of those monsters here with his own eyes, at all. He truly believed that his plan would succeed.

However…

"What is the matter, Gaoran Peixit?"

"…"

When Gaoran raised his head to look at the one who spoke to him, his eyes widened in shock.

Gaoran had just sent the soldiers that served him to their deaths, and condemned his devoted dragon to a tragic demise. It had cost him many sacrifices to arrive here, at the Crystal Palace, and encounter the young man who stood in front of him.

On top of the almost hundred-step stairs, the black-haired youth stared at him, arms crossed and face poised.

There was only one man who possessed slit eyes that gleamed with sagacity and brutality, a handsome face that could very well have been crafted by the gods, and a bearing exuding authority of extraordinary levels.

Such was the seventy-seventh emperor of the Empire of Vollachia, Vincent Vollachia himself.

And at the same time, he was the one at the top of the empire, whom Gaoran had fought with his life at stake to reach.

“Is this the time to be so befuddled? You have finally come to encounter myself. Therefore…”

“The Emperor, Vincent…”

“Therefore, for the subjects that obeyed you and your dragon alike, you had better fight until your last drop of blood is shed!”

A glare filled with ardor and a voice filled with might were cast upon Gaoran, both ardor and might making the entirety of his blood seethe and his strength to fight return.

Gaoran gripped his spear strongly and, with his mouth open, rushed ahead.

By having that beautiful white dragon at his command, Gaoran had achieved acclaim as the luckiest man in the empire.

However, mere luck was nowhere near enough to achieve one’s rise in the Empire of Vollachia, nor to preserve one’s position in it.

After all, only a true warrior would be able to handle the halberds that were passed down every new generation in the House of Peixit.

“Oooooooh!!”

Gaoran’s large frame rose into the air, as if it had grown wings, ready to literally plunge onto the one who stood on top of the stairs, the emperor Vincent.

A single hit from his halberd would have little to no issue destroying the emperor’s slender figure. If he accomplished that, the goal that Gaoran sought by raiding the imperial capital would be fulfilled. And if he fulfilled that goal, all deaths would have served a purpose.

Surely, now the deaths of his dragon and army would not remain in vain…

“Your spirit is commendable, yet lacking. Perhaps you should’ve gotten a shade less sober before trying this.”

When those sudden words hit Gaoran’s eardrums, his narrow eyes opened wide.

Before the halberd had the chance to pierce Vincent’s chest, a powerful silver flash, shaped like an arc, gracefully knocked the tip far away from its target.

Maybe if he had not jumped so carelessly before, the large man could have been able to react in time when the second flash came.

“Those who can’t get drunk on neither blood or alcohol are destined to die first. Oh, the uncertainty.”

Then came a slash that glided from Gaoran’s left shoulder to his right flank, slicing his body. Gaoran did not even feel the blade pierce him while that deft sword cut him into two pieces.

Once his life left that sliced body, it would never come back.

“I, with my very own eyes, have been witness to your spirit. You may muse on that honor as you perish.”

On the verge of silent extinction, Gaoran managed to discern those words.

His ability to understand who said them and what they meant was dying out too, but…

“Hah.”

Apparently, the intuition to distinguish insults from praise was still alive within him.

With one last breath, perhaps of pleasure, Gaoran’s life reached extinction.

And so, the rebellion that High Count Gaoran Peixit had started met its end.

3

“You performed well. You may have my praise.”

“Oh, please, quit that, Your Excellency the Emperor. I actually did nothing more than to get drunk over here.”

“Fool. Would a man under the effects of alcohol be able to swing a sword in that manner?”

That dismissive answer was not a sign of humility, but a simple lack of earnestness.

Seeing such behavior directed towards the emperor made one feel inclined to take back the previous appraisal of his job. The receiver would not feel hurt by this in the slightest, though.

After all, the man before his eyes was not one to seek appraisals of himself, but of his ‘results.’

“You are a shrewd man, Rowan Segmunt. Were you to attempt it, you could even rise to fame through your swordsmanship.”

“Come on, don’t give me that. I know veeery well what my skill amounts to.”

Despite having, in a sheath of his, the blade that had easily slain the enemy ringleader without even staining itself with blood, the man… Rowan Segmunt dared shook his head in response.

He was characterized by his blue hair and reddened face, plus his attire, which was unusual in the empire yet common in Kararagi.

This man was a nonconformer, and remained one even before Vincent; but his skill with the sword, despite his humility, was splendid.

Otherwise, Gaoran Peixit, both the ringleader of the latest rebellion and a warrior known for his impressing halberd technique, would have looked purely pitiful losing against him.

That aside…

"Gaoran Peixit has died, thus ending the rebellion. Victory is ours."

"Woah, good to hear that. So, is that swordsman I raised serving you well?"

"He can be a nuisance at times, but yes. Currently, I am trying to determine the most appropriate way to use him."

"Hahah, I see… My condolences, then."

With a big smile on his reddened face, Rowan put his hands together and bowed before Vincent.

His attitude was not very pleasant, but he was too valuable to be executed merely on the grounds of disrespect. Although his own skill was first-class, his observations and teachings could create beings far above that level.

One of the 'monsters' that had been strategically allocated outside the imperial capital was, in fact, a discovery of his.

"Your Excellency, I have successfully delivered the orders to the soldiers outside."

Vincent, escorted by Rowan, was approached by somebody else.

That report came from an old, white-haired man, who bowed his head reverently. The man had a mustache and wrinkles, and his countenance looked as if every emotion had been emptied from it.

“I see,” Vincent replied briefly. “The suggestion you gave for this occasion was accurate. You truly have proved yourself useful, Berstetz.”

“I am unworthy of such praise, Your Excellency. I am solely striving to repay your kindness in saving me from dying on that battlefield.”

“You feel indebted to myself, who wreaked Lamia’s death?”

“… Yes, and I believe that Lamia-sama, too, would have wished for this.”

The old man, Berstetz Fondalfon, who reacted unconcernedly and without changing his expression to those taunts, had previously served somebody different from Vincent.

Berstetz’s former master was Lamia Godwin, younger sister of Vincent, who had opposed him during the ‘Imperial Selection Ceremony’ and died, and thus Vincent could be considered her enemy. Even so, in this empire, it was an everyday occurrence to hear people questioning who was a foe to whom.

When a master died, their servants would naturally find another master to serve. Repressing personal grudges and following them, even if they were the person who killed their previous master, was the norm in Vollachia.

Therefore, Berstetz did not have any problem with serving Vincent.

To keep competent people only, to adopt useful input only, to use effective methods only.

Those were necessary ideals in Vincent’s Vollachia new reign.

“Now that their ringleader, High Count Peixit, has been defeated, his subordinates will probably surrender, too. Your Excellency, how are we to handle their…?”

“Execute every single one of them, of course. Let that become a lesson for any fool that might be intending to bother myself, or important people, with the realization of a plan so ludicrous.”

That plan was foolish, very foolish indeed.

From its scale to the tasks, funds, and personnel that had been needed to carry it out, every single aspect of the plan was poorly prepared.

The first thing to be done was to start several, simultaneous rebellions and insurrections in each major city of the empire, thus causing specialists from the imperial capital to be sent away in order to solve them… And thanks to their absence, the capital would fall victim to the surprise attack.

The damage had then spread over north, south, east, and west of the empire concurrently, forcing Vincent to dispatch, to each zone, nine first-class soldiers… the ‘Nine Divine Generals.’

However, Vincent had already seen through the enemy’s plan, rendering the coordination among the zones pointless. As a result, inescapable ruination had befallen Gaoran Peixit’s plot.

But there was still more to the story…

“My, my, Your Excellency! Let me congratulate you for this wonderful victory!”

“There you are, ‘Stargazer.’”

Vincent felt jaded when he saw one more acquaintance arrive with the purpose of confirming his victory and ascertaining the situation.

In addition to Rowan and Berstetz, appeared, with a merry look, a slender man clad in a big, blue robe. Although he acted rather giddily, his words were nothing silly.

It was due to his ‘prophecy’ that they had been able to foretell, with total certainty, how and when Gaoran’s recent rebellion would occur, earning an even firmer advantage.

“That was no prophecy, I simply noticed it was going to happen. Though, of course, if that was of use to you, Your Excellency, then I’m deeply satisfied.”

“How audacious. Still, you have, indeed, served myself well. I shall let you stay in the palace for a while.”

“Woah, thank you! I’m so, so glad. I can’t believe I’ll be entering the palace itself!”

Vincent glanced at the rejoicing, grateful ‘Stargazer,’ then breathed a sigh, looked once again at Gaoran’s corpse, and took his leave.

The ‘generals’ and Berstetz would handle the cleanup. Rowan would probably cease his tasteless jests about the body after he ran out of alcohol. As for the ‘Stargazer’…

“Your Excellency, there’s no need to get upset. Even if I sense a rebellion incoming, I’d prefer to have it their way and let it break out first, then mow the seedling down before it grows further. And that’s because I agree with your thoughts.”

Next to him, Vincent heard the ‘Stargazer’ speak as if he had read his mind, but he did not reply.

To merely sit on the emperor’s throne would not make everything shift in the direction that he desired. Therefore, Vincent Vollachia never ceased to strive for what he needed, for one purpose:

This world is absurd… And because it is so, I must destroy it, by my own hand.

END

The Land of Wolves:
Death unto the Weak, No Mercy Zero: Priscilla

1

“Hey, Miles my brother. Is she really out here in a place like this?” pointed out a young man by the name of Balleroy Temeglyph while rubbing his chin without a care in the world.

He was a dashing young man, carrying a spear with a long shaft on his shoulder. His red and black armor was proof of his status as a soldier of the Vollachia Empire, and his insignia marked him as a private. His carefree attitude wasn’t evidence of his recklessness but proof of his prestigious skill with the spear. His stance with his beloved spear might appear defenseless, but anyone coming at him with ill will would find themselves cut down in a flash. He knew Balleroy better than anyone, so he forgave his easy-going demeanor. Although, one could say that he had given up trying to change his friend.

“Yo, brother. Are ya listenin’?” asked Balleroy. “Is it actually on the outskirts like…?”

“Ooh, shut up!” cried Miles. “Ya think I have any clue as to why we’re here?! I’m just goin’ by what the rumors said! Shut the fuck up and follow me!”

“Ya don’t have ta yell like that…”

When pestered constantly like that, even a steeled heart would snap in anger. But since Balleroy would never reflect on his actions, Miles just sighed deeply.

The two of them were out in the middle of a forest, searching for a very troublesome target. Normally, Winged Dragon Riders like themselves should be in the sky, but since their target was walking along the ground, it couldn’t be helped.

Miles felt his head ache at the missing person—and at his brother-in-arms who lacked solemnity.

Miles had a rather long relationship with this foolish brother-in-arms. It started back when they were still wandering orphans. He had always been skilled but lacking common sense. But when he became an imperial soldier, he followed him and became one as well. Whether he was following someone he knew, or he just didn't know any better, Miles didn't know. He believed the latter was very possible, so he had stayed with him since. A good example of this would be how this mission of finding a missing person was assigned.

"I feel like the High Countess is just messin' with us for fun…" Miles remarked.

Flaming auburn hair and good looks marked by a white scar… Someone you could lay your eyes on once and never forget—the cunning matriarch, Serena Dracroy. She was beautiful and capable, and Miles felt indebted to her since she hired him. But he still didn't like being used by a woman in whatever way she wanted. He hoped to one day turn the tables.

"Miles, Miles," pestered Balleroy.

"What is it, ya damn idiot?" replied Miles with irritation. "Have somethin' else to complain about?"

"Nah, not that. But isn't that what we're looking for?" Drawing back his shoulders, Balleroy pointed his spearhead diagonally. Following it, Miles carefully observed the path that had been hidden by the trees.

There were two things necessary to become a Winged Dragon Rider; one was being compatible with a Winged Dragon of course, and the other was having excellent eyesight. Thanks to this, Miles and Balleroy were able to lock in on their target's location. Which was…

"…Good lad," praised Miles. "There's no mistakin' it. That's the rumored bandit fort."

"Excellent. So, what's the plan?" asked Balleroy.

Seeing his fellow soldier return his spear to his side, Miles closed his eyes. It was obvious what they had to do. “Kill every bandit in the fort. The High Countess told us ta bring her back, even as a corpse.”

2

“…Gah.” His throat pierced with a spear, the large bandit’s eyes rolled back into his head as he fell to the ground. His body twitched and a steady flow of blood came out of his mouth instead of air. He hadn’t even managed to grab the large sword propped up against the wall. What a pitiful death.

“I’m done here, brother,” said Balleroy.

“Right,” replied Miles. “Good work.”

Balleroy skillfully spun his spear in the low-ceiling room, clearing it of blood. Stepping over the bodies at his feet, Miles checked around the room, which was scattered with junk.

It was a bandit base. He wasn’t expecting it to be neat and tidy, but being so far removed from even the general notion of order and structure made his head hurt.

“Man… I figured this guy had to be the boss based on the layout,” commented Miles.

“You thought she would be in the boss’s room?” questioned Balleroy.

“Yeah, I mean, she’s nobility, practically a princess. If she was caught by bandits, then the boss would be the one ta force himself on ‘er.”

But since they couldn’t find hide nor hair of said girl, his guess was off. Either that or the boss got rough while having his way with the young girl and killed her.

In that case, trying to find where they hid her body would be a huge headache, but…

“In any case, it can’t be helped if she ain’t here,” mentioned Balleroy. “Let’s see if there’re any other survivors…”

“…Oh, so it was you two.”

“Huh…?!” Miles exclaimed in surprise.

As they were thinking of finding someone to interrogate, a voice suddenly called out to them from behind. Miles quickly turned to face them, while Balleroy moved to protect him. But once they saw the figure that approached them, the two quickly stopped.

After all, the person standing there was Miles’s target, the person they were looking for.

“You’re…” started Balleroy. “Lady Priscilla, you’re safe.”

Balleroy’s surprise turned to relief as he lowered his spear. The girl, Priscilla, snorted with her pretty nose, posed haughtily, and replied, “Why wouldn’t mineself be?”

Despite being in her early teens, her haughty attitude suited her well. Blessed with fine features, she would without a doubt become a world-class beauty when she grew up. Hence why Miles had the sadistic desire to watch her cry, but leaving that aside…

“It’s good to see you alive and well, Lady Priscilla,” said Miles. “We were terrified when we heard that you’d gone missing after escaping Pendleton Manor.”

“And Miles here heard rumors that bandits around here had captured a similar-looking girl,” added Balleroy. “It was quite the achievement.”

While Miles was bowing deeply, Balleroy proudly explained his friend’s achievement. In all honesty, Miles wanted to punch Balleroy to get him to bow down but held back due to Priscilla’s presence.

After hearing their report, Priscilla just shrugged her thin shoulders. “I see,” she began. “Mineself thought you were just an ugly man, but you seem quite sharp.”

"…Nice to see you haven't changed either, Lady Priscilla," replied Miles. "This is a bandit base. I was panicked thinking that you might have been violated."

"Hmm. Well, it is obvious that gazing upon the beauty of mineself would drive many a man to vulgar fantasies." The suggestive exchange between them brought a cold smile to the young crimson beauty's lips. "But…" said the girl before glancing around the room and stopping at the corpse at their feet. "But such a thing shall forever remain in the realm of fantasy. The reason why mineself was with them was because I was leading this group of fools."

"Ha-Ha-ha, that's a good one… That's a joke, right?" Balleroy laughed at the sudden confession, but Priscilla made no indication that she had been joking. Looking towards the body, the reason she was safe started to become evident.

These bandits were taken in by Priscilla's overwhelming presence, and they accepted her as their own without being able to use her in any way. But that state of peace had been broken by the entrance of the intruders: Miles and Balleroy.

"Well then, shall we go? You two were coming to retrieve me."

After one glance at the corpse, she felt no need to say anything. There was no emotion or thought left, and even Miles felt pity for the bandit.

That's why he was only slightly relieved at safely retrieving Priscilla.

"Right, understood. The High Countess will surely be pleased. After all, Count Pendleton was executed for treason, which really took its toll on her."

Priscilla's gaze hardened at Miles's unnecessary utterance. But he did not apologize nor go further. Knowing when to stop was the whole reason he had survived this long.

"That was kinda mean, bro," said Balleroy.

"Shut it," Miles snapped back, still tutting at his longtime partner for seeing through it.

3

“First, let me say it’s good to see you safe, since I have yet to repay my debt.” High Countess Serena Dracroy welcomed the young girl, who had changed her dress, and reiterated her joy at her safety and their reunion.

Opposite Serena in the parlor was Priscilla sitting on a sofa, all cleaned up after her bath. Despite having stayed in the desolate conditions of the bandit base, her appearance had regained every ounce of its allure, showcasing her beautiful hair and skin. Even Miles was astonished.

“Miles, Balleroy. Good work on completing your duties.”

“You’re too generous with your gratitude,” gushed Balleroy. “But I did next to nothing to find the lady. That was all my brother, Miles.”

“Yes, indeed…or so I would like to say,” began Miles, “but clearing out the bandit base was all Balleroy. This achievement was only seventy percent mine.”

Balleroy tried to casually pass over the achievement, but Miles passed some of it back with a bitter look.

Balleroy didn’t care for societal approval or acknowledgment of his achievements. If left alone, there was the risk of all of his deeds being passed onto someone else. Miles, on the other hand, knew that if he kept claiming praise, he’d eventually be tasked with something that he couldn’t fulfill and get into trouble.

Announcing your deeds honestly—with just a little embellishment—was best.

“I see,” Serena replied, full of pride at their report. Her face was gallant and unreadable as she turned back to Priscilla. “I’ll say it again, but it’s good to see you safe. After what happened to the Mid-Count…at Pendleton Manor, with your whereabouts unknown, I was quite shaken up.”

“Such concern towards another house is so philanthropic of you, very unlike a Vollachian noble. Perhaps you had some illicit feelings towards mine husband?”

“Even if that were true, that would not be a sign of poor taste… Jorah Pendleton’s last moments would honor any imperial noble’s name,” Serena declared, lowering her eyes that were adorned with long lashes.

Jorah Pendleton had been accused of treason and lost his life when he fought one-on-one against Goz Ralfon of the Nine Divine Generals, who had besieged his mansion.

At first, when Miles heard of his fierce death, he thought it was some kind of a joke. In all honesty, he didn’t think that highly of Jorah. Mainly because kindness was looked down upon in the Empire, which was why Jorah had been exploited many times and often drew the short end of the stick as well.

That same Jorah had been accused of treason by the Empire, but instead of pleading for his life, he drew his sword and fought in a one-on-one duel against one of the Nine Divine Generals…

“…The power of love, or so they say,” muttered Balleroy.

Miles elbowed Balleroy, who was thinking of the same thing, for letting his inner thoughts about the situation slip out.

As if something that picture-perfect could ever happen in reality. Whatever relationship Jorah and Priscilla had was unfortunately beyond Miles’s understanding.

But whatever he was willing to give his life over, it was definitely not love.

“…”

“Wh-What is it, milady? Did I…?”

Miles noticed that Priscilla was looking at his face out of the corner of her eyes when he gritted his teeth. His body shivered at the sudden eye contact as Priscilla shook her head. “No, it is nothing important. It is just that mineself thought that you'd probably end up destroying yourself because of your narrow-minded views. Keep it in mind."

"…I don't get what you're saying, but understood." Miles simply nodded at the riddle-like advice, since he couldn't just brush it off.

The haughty girl looked at him like she knew exactly how the world worked. In her crimson eyes was a perception unbefitting one her age. And that know-it-all manner of speaking closed off any attempts at rebuttal or comeback.

In any case…

"We had been requested in advance by the Mid-Count to look after you if anything ever happened to him," Miles explained. "It seems that he was aware that would happen beforehand."

"That sounds likely," replied Priscilla. "He didn't panic when separated from me. It was quite unlike him."

"I see," added Serena. "I wasn't there at the time, but if you say so, then it must be true." Serena had a deep friendship with Jorah, so hearing that directly from Priscilla made her visibly relieved.

Goz Ralfon was a superior warrior, so there was the possibility that Jorah's final moments had been fabricated to preserve his honor. But that possibility had been eliminated by Priscilla.

Priscilla was not one to hide or embellish the truth, even if it was about her husband.

"Then, now more than ever," said Serena, "I would like to fulfill his wishes."

"Hmm, what are you planning?" questioned Priscilla.

"I've called on some favors with a company that I'm on good terms with to arrange for you to leave the Empire."

Priscilla's shapely eyebrows twitched at Serena's declaration to help her escape.

Whether it was anger at being told to run, or a reaction to thinking that her proposal was worth considering, Miles felt as if the temperature of the room had increased and cleared his throat.

However, this was a dangerous proposal. To be caught assisting in the escape of the traitor Jorah's wife, Serena and any associates would be marked as traitors themselves. They would be executed for treason.

"Why would you go that far? To repay your debt? Or did you truly have feelings for mine husband?"

"…Right after I killed my father, when I was struggling to hold House Dracroy, the Mid-Count…Jorah…helped me out a lot."

"…"

"He was a man who went against the Empire's idea of strength. Even so, there are times when you'll befriend someone who wants to do everything they can for the sake of others, regardless of profit or loss."

That's why Serena was willing to put her house in danger to help Priscilla—no, for the sake of her friend Jorah's request to help save his beloved wife.

"Brings a tear to your eyes, doesn't it, brother?"

"You shut up, ya damn fool." Miles berated Balleroy for getting overcome by emotion, but he didn't complain about what he had said.

Serena Dracroy was a High Countess of the Empire. She could give into emotions once, but it wouldn't happen twice. If this was her one selfish desire, then it would be their duty as her subordinates to let her do as she pleased.

"Even if you stop being Priscilla Pendleton," began Serena, "the fact that you were my friend's wife will not change."

"What an admirable thought… How long will mineself be treated as a child? It seems my husband never treated me as a woman, even to his very end.” Slipping that out with a sigh, Priscilla closed her crimson eyes.

Behind her closed eyes, the memories of times gone by with Jorah swam around in her mind. They were both a sentimentality that others wouldn’t understand and a time far too brief.

“So, your arrangements?” As Priscilla opened her eyes, she showed that she had accepted Serena’s proposal.

Her attitude was completely uncharming, but Serena began to explain at her request. The two ladies seemed wise and dignified, and showed no weakness. Watching them, Miles sighed.

“Hey, Miles my brother. The two of them look pretty good together, don’tcha think?”

And he felt just a bit envious of his brother-in-arms’s carefree attitude.

END

Volume 28

Chapters 25-39

Chapter 25:
A Reunion Akin to Scorching Blood

—There was a girl of “crimson”, like a vivid, scorching flame, richly scented in blood.

Amidst the sudden battlefield, upon the upper levels of City Hall, this violent beauty dominated the desolate scene while holding a radiant treasured sword.

With her dazzling orange hair, a luxurious blood-colored dress, and feminine figure, the person grasping that sword was one whose back exuded strength.

Subaru: “…”

Staring at her in exasperation, Subaru’s thoughts were stirred into confusion as stood with arms open wide.

Momentarily forgetting the pain that coursed through his entire body and the need to breathe, a single word bounced chaotically in his empty head, “Why”.

Why, was she here.

Why, had she saved Subaru.

Why, was she able to face Arakiya with such calm.

Why, why, why, why, why, why, why, why, why, he could not stop wondering why.

Overwhelmed by endless questions, Subaru felt like time itself had halted. Then, as if to ridicule the motionless Subaru, the woman of “crimson” gave a snort and—

Priscilla: “What an idiotic visage. Have your eyes been scorched by my nobility?”

Subaru: “—What, do you have eyes in the back of your head?”

Priscilla: “Nonsense. Does it appear like I have such a deformity? I can tell a foolish commoner’s expression just by their respiration.”

Still with nary even a glance back, came a proud retort of the woman—of Priscilla Barielle.

Whilst gazing at the woman who should not be present, Subaru did not have any words to refute the preposterous notion that she would be capable of knowing his expression just by his breathing.

The situation slowly progressed in front of Subaru, who could only be stunned and dumbfounded.

Priscilla: “Well.”

After taking a short breath, Priscilla looked around as she continued to firmly wield the ornate crimson sword.

She recognized that the City Hall had been completely transformed by the sudden intruder’s rampage.

Even accounting for the injured People of Shudraq and the comatose Zikr, the only ones who could move, albeit barely, were Subaru, Rem right behind him, and Abel, atop the balcony.

And the one who was the cause of all this—

Priscilla: “—Arakiya.”

Arakiya: “…”

Narrowing her crimson eyes, Priscilla focused on the other girl quietly.

The one who maintained her silence under such circumstances was the brown-skinned, silver-haired demi-human—The Imperial General First-Class, ranked Second, Arakiya.

She had been said to be the second strongest person in the Vollachia Empire. Her abilities had showcased this well. She met Priscilla’s gaze, brimming with strong will, head-on, with her red right eye that remained uncovered by her eyepatch—Nay, actually, she did not.

Arakiya: “Prin… cess…?”

Until now, Arakiya had given the impression of an otherworldly presence, imposing a solid world of her own. However, under Priscilla’s stare, that world collapsed in a single beat.

Instead, what emerged was intense agitation and equally great joy.

Arakiya: “Princess, Princess, Princess… Hk.”

The dangerous atmosphere fizzled out, while Arakiya uttered those words over and over again, as if to confirm it.

Almost as if she were a lost child reunited with their parents, or a small brother and sister trying to regain their bond; one could see the obsession of the weak trying to cling onto the strong.

—The relationship between Priscilla and Arakiya was unknown to the others.

Odd as the sight was, Subaru could not figure out the reason why Priscilla would need to come to this place, and could only guess that there was an unusual past between the two.

It could be this past relationship had broken Arakiya’s fighting spirit, who was by far the most dangerous being in this place.

Arakiya: “—Hk.”

Lowering the thin tree branch in her grip, Arakiya, overcome by emotion, tried to step forward. It seemed as if she were about to jump straight into Priscilla’s chest.

Perhaps she desired to follow the passion welling up in her heart, and embrace Priscilla.

However—

Arakiya: “Princ—”

Priscilla: “Silence.”

But that did not come to pass.

A short, fierce command was accompanied by a flash. As Arakiya was about to take a step forward, a red glow swept across, just mere centimetres from the toes of her bare feet, and glaring flames flared up to prevent her from advancing further.

Arakiya: “…”

At best, the flames contained the power of a bonfire, which went up to her shins.

They were not great enough to hamper Arakiya’s long legs from stepping over them. She easily could—yet despite that, she was unable to move, almost as if she faced an insurmountable wall.

As they stood, Priscilla continued to stare coldly at Arakiya, whose eyes widened at the unexpected action.

Priscilla: “Arakiya, why do you wish to come to me now?”

Arakiya: “Wha…?”

Priscilla: “Did you believe that I would be so excited to reunite with you as to welcome you into my arms? If such is the case, I cannot help but be amazed at your optimism.”

Priscilla’s words were tinged with contempt and disgust, completely blocking Arakiya from approaching.

Arakiya must have understood that there was distance between them. Her eye trembled in astonishment, as she desperately attempted to find the best answer to Priscilla’s words.

But—

Arakiya: “P-Prisca-sama…”

Priscilla: “Prisca is dead. —Have you not changed after all this time, even after obtaining your newfound position?”

Arakiya: “—Hk.”

Priscilla: “How dull. It has been a long time since I have last gazed at the soil of my homeland, but it is difficult to feel anything when it has grown so emaciated.”

Priscilla was unable to dismiss the fact that she was deeply disappointed.

To be honest, he lacked enough understanding of her position in this situation to even begin to guess what Priscilla was thinking. Even so, Subaru knew that her heartless words had shaken Arakiya to the core, insofar as making her shed blood.

It was a deep wound. One of being disrespected by a person with whom she had formed an important bond.

Arakiya’s eye wavered upon being labeled a disappointment. She could have cowered at the verbal wound; however, instead of faltering, she instead reflected a fierce look from her exposed red eye.

Not anger, but a glimmer of determination and resolve.

Arakiya: “…I don’t care what the Princess thinks of me. Even though it’s painful. But I’ve made up my mind.”

Priscilla: “—. Ho, so you have made up your mind? Can you regain my interest then? Try telling me what you have decided.”

In response to Arakiya’s quiet appeal, Priscilla threw out a provocative statement, whether she intended to or not. In turn, Arakiya looked up and yelled, “I will!”

As she howled, Arakiya flexed her slender knees,

Arakiya: “I will regain the Princess’s rightful place! In the Empire! And to do that…”

The aim of Arakiya’s outburst was not directed at Priscilla, who was only half listening.

The gaze of her one eye strayed from Priscilla, heading toward Abel, still perched on the balcony as these events unfolded. He became the target of her shifting emotions.

Arakiya: “You’re a liar, Your Excellency, and for that, I shall—Tch!”

Her eye blazing with passionate fury, Arakiya’s slender body leapt high in the air. Ignoring the barrier of fire between her and Priscilla, she vaulted forward, her destination being Abel on the balcony.

Her leaping prowess was extraordinary. However, it was not that surprising, considering she held the title of the second strongest in the Empire.

The main problem was that, aside from Priscilla, there was nobody who had the means to stop her.

Subaru: “Shit, Abel’s going to…! Priscilla!”

Priscilla: “Do not raise such a fuss. Why are you acting so familiar, you foolish commoner? With whose permission did you call me by my name?”

Subaru: “This isn’t the time to…”

Priscilla: “—I said, do not raise a fuss.”

With her ornate sword lowered in one hand, Priscilla ignored Subaru’s pleas.

After this threat, which made Priscilla’s next actions unreadable, Arakiya’s form surged like an arrow, approaching Abel in the breathless Subaru’s vision.

Abel: “…”

Abel was leaning onto the railing of the half-destroyed balcony, blood pouring from his forehead.

He had not displayed any signs of dismay at Priscilla’s sudden intrusion, and was still standing firm, regarding Arakiya with his intense black eyes.

It was a known fact that he was not a particularly skilled fighter. His lone uninjured arm, of course, was not strong enough to take on one of the strongest in the Empire. Therefore, Subaru did not know why he refused to fall into despair.

Without knowing—

Subaru: “Abel—!!”

He knew it was pointless, yet nevertheless he tried to dash toward him. But his legs lost their strength at the first step. Having fallen on his knees, Subaru could only reach out as Arakiya approached Abel.

—The very next moment, a chain of events beyond Subaru’s comprehension occurred.

Abel: “…”

Abel stomped hard on the balcony floor, keeping his eyes on the enclosing Arakiya. Immediately after doing so, cracks spread further across the half-destroyed balcony, and the place he took as his foothold collapsed instantaneously.

Naturally, Abel, being on top of it, fell helplessly—so he thought, but that was not what happened.

Abel’s body instead remained suspended in midair. His outstretched right hand had grasped the curtain, which hung from the top floor.

Abel had hidden a lifeline beneath his hand, that he had up against the railing, and then he had intentionally collapsed the place he was standing on.

Perhaps, had the enemy been small fry, the strategy could have been to have them swallowed by the collapse and consequently fall downstairs all at once.

However, the opponent was one of the Nine Divine Generals. Furthermore, she was also ranked Second among them.

Arakiya: “What fun…!”

Swinging like a pendulum, Abel held on for dear life to the curtain, as Arakiya bared her fangs.

Although she had lost the foothold necessary to land after her leap, Arakiya’s strength came not only from her enhanced physical abilities, but also from her superhuman powers.

Her legs flickered like glowing embers, and from her knees down, her body transformed into flames, her posture flexed in midair like that of a missile with jets blowing from her legs.

The flames that had immolated Mizelda, the fierce tornado that had blown away the common soldiers, the crude craftwork that had supported a collapsing pillar, the gale that had disarmed Rem, and finally the transformation of a part of her own body into flames.

From all these past events, they had become painfully aware of the endless versatility of Arakiya’s abilities.

Arakiya: “Your Excellency, die—!”

At this rate, a branch with unknown power was going to strike Abel. Hanging from the drape, Abel was unable to maintain his position and spun around.

It was unclear if the branch was going to stab him, if it was going to release magic, or if it was going to create some sort of other supernatural effect. —It was unknown, yet regardless of what it would do, Abel was going to be shattered into pieces.

That certainty alone made the pupils of Subaru’s dark eyes narrow with impatience and urgency.

And yet—

???: “—Oh damn, bro. I didn’t even know that it was you ‘til I heard your voice just now.”

Instantly, a figure intervened between the demonic Arakiya and the suspended Abel.

From beside Rem, who was knocked down, a figure ran over the pillar that Arakiya had caught, and threw an attack from the side, aiming for the branch that she held. The strike of the broad Blue Dragon Sword was blocked by the branch, its swing produced by a flick of Arakiya's wrist, but the resulting momentum sent her flying.

After the person's surprise attack was parried without any difficulty, they let out a “Daaah!”, and angrily stomped the ground.

???: “Shit, my arm hurts! Don't effortlessly parry a strike someone put their all into, it's gonna make them depressed.”

His whine and waving of his aching arm concluded the chaotic series of events. That person was, once again, outside the scope of Subaru's imagination.

It was a man who sported a jet-black helmet, dressed in a bandit-like fashion from the waist down. The man, who looked like a brigand or a thief, was characterized by his missing left arm, while his thick right arm held the Blue Dragon Sword.

It was a man he knew. In fact, this was the first person he should have thought of, if Priscilla was here.

He was—

Subaru: "—Al?"

Al: "Hey, bro! Didn't think I'd run into you on the other side of the border. I'd like to share my thoughts on your attire and this strange reunion…"

Priscilla's knight—or rather, servant, Al, tilted his head and raised his voice in an out-of-place greeting.

He responded to Subaru in the same aloof tone as usual, while prohibiting Arakiya's advance, still floating in the air with her legs morphed into flame.

In this case, Subaru did not know if he should be more impressed by Al's ability to block Arakiya's attack with just one strike, or by the durability of the tree branch which had clashed straight-on with the Blue Dragon Sword and came out unscathed.

Al: "You can be surprised, man. After all, it wasn't like this was something done in one shot."

Arakiya: "Get out of the way! I can't kill His Excellency like this!"

Al: "I've come all this way to interfere, how can I get out of the way now? I can't just stand here and let my head fall off my body. But…"

Arakiya howled in anger, and Al looked at her from the front without hesitation.

Arakiya’s outfit was overly revealing, but Al did not look at her with lewd intentions. His gaze only contained feelings of nostalgia and deep emotion.

In fact, Al let out an admiring sigh.

Al: “Haa~. You’ve really grown up. I always knew you’d be beautiful.”

Arakiya: “…Who are you?”

Al: “You saying that, it really hurts! Even though we’re friends who trusted each other with their lives!”

When Al called out to her as if she was a familiar face, she raised her eyebrows in suspicion. In order to keep her at a distance, Al kicked up a piece of the broken floor at her slender body.

Looking over Al’s work, Priscilla called out to him.

Priscilla: “Al. You know what I desire, I brought you here, not Schult. Do your job.”

Al: “I’m doing it! Do I look like I’m having fun with this cutie? If I’m not careful, I’ll be ripped to shreds in ten seconds, okay?”

Priscilla: “Taking a look at the situation, you certainly have not accomplished much.”

Al: “It’s better than being ripped to shreds, isn’t it? Whoa!”

Al, whose concentration was disturbed by the impatient remarks of his master, was nearly killed by Arakiya’s blow.

Flying in the air, Arakiya circled more freely than a bird, and Al desperately parried the attacks from her branch being launched one after another.

Arakiya: “You’re in the way…!”

Al: “It really hurts an old man’s heart to hear a girl your age say that.”

Abel continued to hang, and Al continued to protect him.

Glaring down at both of them, Arakiya's eyes became angrier, and every inch of her body was filled with fighting spirit. Still, the reason she would not unleash the fearsome ranged attack she had initially showed was—

Subaru: "Priscilla…"

Princess, that was what Arakiya had called Priscilla.

Priscilla's attitude was nothing but cold and disconnected, but not towards Arakiya. That was the only reason as to why she had not created even more destruction.

Therefore, if anyone could alter this stalemate, that person would be Priscilla, who kept the floating Arakiya in check.

Subaru: "…"

Priscilla: "Do not regard me with those clingy eyes, foolish commoner. I may praise you for your feigned good looks, but wishing to utilize them to make me stir would be irreverent."

Subaru: "Guh… Hk!"

Subaru, on his knees, turned around, but Priscilla was far too arrogant to take him seriously.

Instead, it was Rem, who had been sheltered by Subaru's back till now, who moved. She pursed her lips, stepping in front of Priscilla with a perilous gait.

And then—

Rem: "Please, I beg you. Please, lend us your strength."

Priscilla: "—. Hmm, what an auspicious thing to say. I would state you to be more polite than this foolish commoner."

Rem: "Then…!"

Priscilla: “Do not get too carried away. And just, observe. Already, the provisions to shift the state of affairs are underway.”

Rem’s plea, and the possibility of Priscilla’s disapproval, sent a chill down Subaru’s spine.

However, Priscilla did not lose her temper; instead, she indicated to the battlefield with a slight turn of her head.

Rem followed her gaze with a surprised “Eh?”, and Subaru followed suit.

In that battlefield atop the balcony, were it left unchecked, Abel and Al could be slaughtered by Arakiya in seconds. And in fact, the risk of such a thing increased with every passing second.

Al: “Da! Ga! Ao! Guah! Ubaa!”

Arakiya danced in the sky with her legs ablaze, and Al managed to block her attacks, though his movements were terribly clumsy and unrefined, resulting in him being repeatedly pushed back with one blow after another.

But the succession of miracles would not be everlasting. The damage from the accumulated strikes began to show on Al’s body, and as soon as his reaction began to be visibly delayed, his upper body was shaken by a huge blow.

With that, Al lost his stance and was defenseless against the next attack, and at that moment—

Arakiya: “—Hk?!”

Arakiya tried to kick the air, yet her body unnaturally swayed, causing her to lose some control.

Even to the run-of-the-mill layman, this was no ordinary sort of offensive motion, as demonstrated by the eyes wide in astoundment and choked out cry of distress.

Arakiya: “…”

All of them had been startled by the change that had afflicted Arakiya.

The two people who had not been caught off-guard were Priscilla, who was looking at the situation leisurely, and the one who had instigated it, who was supposed to be in the middle of a fierce battle—

???: "—Attack!"

The order slammed into the air with a mixture of a burning and dusty smell.

It had come from Abel, suspended in midair, whose voice was more stern than angry, more ostentatious than arrogant. The man, still hanging from the curtain, shouted at the opportunity that arose in the battle overhead.

It was as if he had known this moment would come.

Al: "You can tell me what happened later!!"

In response to Abel's command, Al flew.

In an awkward leap and twist, the Blue Dragon Sword drew a parabolic line and mercilessly slammed into the slender body of Arakiya bereft of mercy—no, there was mercy.

The wrist holding the Blue Dragon Sword twisted, and the blunt side, not the blade, headed for Arakiya.

Priscilla: "Fool."

Perceiving that non-lethal trick, Priscilla curtly remarked.

Her eyes, boundlessly arrogant, had correctly foreseen the situation.

Arakiya: "Stay back…!"

At the moment of collision, there was a dull sound that made Subaru want to turn his eyes away.

Al's powerful blow flew into Arakiya just as he had intended, and she took it head-on with her raised left arm. Her elbow snapped in the opposite direction, broken bones pierced her brown skin, and blood sprayed.

It was a painful blow, but not a fatal one.

Behind his jet-black helmet, there was a low growl from Al, and an indication that his cheeks were surprisingly tense.

A moment later, Arakiya's thin foot struck him in the neck from the side, sending him crashing to the floor with a fierce impact. His bouncing body was blown away, and went straight out of the collapsed balcony.

Al: "Dohhh, AHHHHH—HK?!"

An ugly scream tailed off, and so, Al's figure disappeared from sight.

He was safe, of course, but now the obstacle between Abel and Arakiya had vanished.

Arakiya extinguished the flames from her legs and planted her feet on the floor. This time, she was going to pluck the life out of Abel's body.

—Suddenly, a black shadow leaped furiously at Arakiya's back.

???: "GRAAAAAAAAAAH…!!"

A shadow blew away the rubble and rushed at Arakiya with a fierce yell. It was a being that grasped a large knife in a backhand grip, and launched an offensive wielding its hunting instinct.

For a moment, the sheer spirit of the shadow's surprise attack almost overwhelmed Subaru's understanding of its true identity.

Her tall, well-built body, wounded and burnt black, her black hair dyed red, and the white pattern on her skin indicating her as one of the People of Shudraq—Subaru then shouted.

Subaru: “Mizelda-san!!”

Mizelda: “TCHAAAAAAAH!!”

Without answering Subaru’s call, Mizelda continued to roar as if she was spitting up blood.

Mizelda had been the victim of the first strike from Arakiya’s intrusion. And with her whole body still in a pitiful state due to the burns it had sustained, she continued to attack as if burning away her very own life.

The relentless blade she wielded was aimed at Arakiya’s vitals.

Unlike Al, Mizelda had no mercy or compassion to give to her prey at the last minute. Seeing the way she fought, Subaru belatedly realized that she was the target of Abel’s order from before.

Abel had foreseen Arakiya’s slump, and inspired the dying Mizelda to fight harder.

Subaru could not imagine how much thought had gone into performing this divine calculation, under such sudden and seemingly unrecoverable circumstances.

But still, this extra step was not enough.

Mizelda: “…”

Despite Mizelda’s struggle, she still remained in bad shape, and Arakiya’s expert ability would easily be able to deal with her.

Frowning in annoyance, Arakiya easily blocked many of Mizelda’s attacks with some rough swings of her branch, while the latter burnt through the dying drops of her life.

No longer was there any point in mentioning the strength of that branch.

The impact of the cleaving branch drove Mizelda’s knife out of her hand, and a moment later, the branch was thrust into Mizelda’s unarmored torso.

Her well-developed abs of steel were pierced with a sickening sound, without much resistance.

It bored through Mizelda’s body, shredding vital internal organs and forcing the mighty amazoness’s body nearer towards death—

Arakiya: “Now, finally…”

Mizelda: “—Where are you looking?”

It happened the moment when Arakiya’s attention shifted from the interloper she thought she had eliminated.

Mizelda’s eyes glistened as she froze in place, blood bubbling at the corners of her mouth. She gave a fierce smile, red blood staining her white teeth, and grabbed Arakiya’s right hand that held the branch with both of hers.

She gripped it more and more tightly, then made herself immobile.

Mizelda: “…”

The moment of stagnation that was created was, or was to be, the final opportunity.

But there was no one on their side, including Subaru, who could take advantage of the moment created by Abel’s wisdom and Mizelda’s dedication.

The People of Shudraq, led by the struggling chieftain, had yet to recover from that last raging storm, and neither had Subaru, who could barely stay conscious.

Even Rem, who had broken off a pillar, was unable to reach the two due to her weak legs.

Without everyone working as one, the once-in-a-lifetime opportunity was lost.

However—

Priscilla: “—You may hold your head aloft, oni girl. It was your plea that brought about this swing of mine.”

However, even though Subaru’s allies was incapable to reach out, that was not the same for the third force on the battlefield.

Priscilla: “…”

Priscilla, who had a bird’s eye view of the battle, closed the distance with a single step and aimed for Arakiya’s unprotected back.

For a moment, Arakiya was aware of the presence behind her and moved to engage it. She wanted to throw Mizelda’s tall body, which was grabbing her arm, and slam it into the enemy behind her.

But she could not do that. —She could not do it, because she could see who that presence belonged to.

Arakiya: “Prin—”

Arakiya, who had been unable to break her obsession with Priscilla from beginning to end, was struck by a flash of the crimson sword.

With a bang, her gushing blood was incinerated by the flames, and Arakiya’s body shook terribly.

Priscilla: “I did tell you, Arakiya. —That you should have prepared your resolve for the time you met me next.”

A promise made in the past, the true meaning of which no one else had the right to intrude on.

The only thing they knew, was that Priscilla’s merciless blow was the answer to that promise, and also the answer to Arakiya’s unbreakable longing.

Arakiya: “…”

Arakiya’s body collapsed on the floor as the treasured crimson sword collided with her back.

Mizelda, who had grabbed her arm and was blocking her movement, was also caught up in it. The two of them fell in a tangle, throwing their arms and legs out like sluggish ragdolls.

Mizelda: “…”

The situation, which had been moving at a dizzying pace, as the air that seemed to be stirred endlessly with swords and flames, was suddenly engulfed in silence. Subaru felt as if time had stood still.

It was as if the mere movement of one breath or one step would ruin everything, and it would all fall apart like a dream.

Rem: “—Mizelda-san!”

It was Rem’s tense voice that shattered the stillness of that moment.

With faltering arms, she crawled across the floor and hurried to Mizelda, who was lying folded up against Arakiya.

Mizelda’s whole body had been scorched all over, blown away by a gale of wind, and even pierced through the stomach.

Rem, kneeling beside her, gasped, and with a desperate expression, placed her hands on Mizelda’s body and tried to hold her together with a pale light of healing magic.

Abel: “Is this really the situation to be gawking? Give me a hand.”

Subaru: “—Ah.”

Abel’s voice reached Subaru’s ears, stunned immobile after seeing Rem in action.

Abel was still unable to climb up from his suspended position. Shaking his head, Subaru hurried towards the former balcony and looked down at the empty space below them.

Abel, hanging by his right arm with a curtain wrapped around him, pierced Subaru with his eyes.

Abel: “You survived. You really have the luck of the devil, do you not?”

Subaru: "…Looks like you've got plenty of bark left in that hateful mouth of yours."

Subaru's cheeks twisted at Abel's inability to stop talking, then he grabbed the curtain and pulled him up.

To be honest, if Subaru was a mess, then so was Abel, being drawn up. The former wished to stretch his limbs out and let go of his consciousness right now, but he could not do that.

Subaru: "It's not just Mizelda-san…"

A large number of injured people had fallen victim to Arakiya's rampage.

In an environment where those who could use healing magic were rare, non-magical first aid was necessary. There was no time to pass out.

To fall here would be to allow oneself to be lost.

That should not be allowed to happen.

For that reason—

Subaru: "Hurry up and get up here…"

Clenching his molars, he pulled the curtain and grabbed Abel's hand once he came within reach. Relying on the feeling of Abel's tight grip, he managed to pull the man who was taller than him up.

Abel, upon his return to solid ground, gasped slightly before Subaru fell on his ass.

Abel: "That was a great deed. I commend you."

Subaru: "Shut up…"

Rejecting the praise that did not show a shred of sincerity, Subaru clucked his tongue softly.

As it was, he was about to get up to start carrying out the other wounded—

Priscilla: “—Do not move on your own, foolish commoner. Who do you take as ruler of this place?”

Subaru: “…”

Subaru, who was on his buttocks, and Abel, who was on his knees, closed their mouths in unison.

What intimidated them without a word, with her arms crossed as to emphasize her voluptuous chest, were those crimson beauty’s—Priscilla’s, eyes and voice.

They were acquaintances, not strangers.

But if one asked him if they had a good relationship, he would hesitate to nod in assent. This was not only because they belonged to opposing camps in the Royal Selection, but also because of Priscilla’s temperament.

Pompous and uncompromising, Priscilla could be a powerful ally were she willing to cooperate, and an unpredictable bomb if she was not.

In the battle of the Watergate City of Pristella, she had been a reliable ally. On the other hand, what about this time?

Was it okay to consider her as an ally after she lent a hand fighting off Arakiya?

In any case—

Abel: “While I resent it, you are the one in control of this situation, Prisca Benedict.”

In place of Subaru, rendered immobile and mute, it was Abel who opened his mouth in place of Subaru.

With one knee on the floor, Abel called Priscilla by a different name, and it sounded like the one Arakiya had said before collapsing.

Priscilla gave a tiny snort at being called that,

Priscilla: “Unfortunately, Prisca Benedict was defeated in battle and died in vain. How could one who is beneath the grave speak like this?”

Abel: “…I see. Then who are you, and what do you call yourself?”

Priscilla: “Priscilla Barielle. That is mine name. You shall do well to remember it, Vincent Abellux.”

Priscilla’s and Abel’s gazes met as she answered his question in a dignified manner.

A storm of pressured glances, like either fire or lightning, passed between them. Subaru, standing beside them, was caught in the middle and had to turn his head slightly to avoid being blown away.

Priscilla, who knew Abel’s name, and Abel, who called Priscilla by a different name.

Subaru gulped quietly, foreseeing the alarming relationship between the two.

Such a brutal atmosphere—

Al: “—Hey, can anyone help me out here? I’m almost at the end of my rope.”

The only sound in the air was Al’s pathetic plea for help, as he hung from a crystal light fixture below the balcony’s edge.

Chapter 26:
A Dancing Roundtable Conference

1

Al: "—Oi, wait? Is anyone listening? I'm in serious trouble here!"

The tension in the air was shaken by a foolish voice, but that did not relieve the situation of its tension.

If anything, the pressure between Abel and Priscilla kept escalating, and even Subaru, standing on the fringes, was unable to make a move.

Subaru: "…"

If he made the wrong move, he would risk the wrath of Priscilla, the one in charge of the now half-destroyed hall.

Out of fear, he was hesitant to point out that Al was on the verge of falling to his death. The only way to break this situation was for Abel or Priscilla to speak—

???: "—Don't move."

However, neither of them were the one to change the predicament.

The unexpected voice came from the staircase that connected the hall to the lower floor. He glanced over to see a new figure looking at Priscilla, an arrow notched in their bow, aimed straight at her.

It was Taritta, whose strong eyes were filled with intense hostility.

Under Abel and Mizelda's direction, she had left the City Hall before Arakiya's assault, but had now returned.

Naturally, seeing the upper floors of the City Hall in pieces, Taritta would have inferred that there had been an enemy attack. The problem was that she had no idea what that specifically entailed.

With the heavy atmosphere, and Priscilla looking down at Subaru and Abel, there was no doubt in her mind that Priscilla was the source of all this destruction that had rained down upon the City Hall.

Taritta: “Move, and I’ll shoot you in the head.”

Priscilla: “Oh, my head? It is already bad enough that you could not even get to your ally in time.”

Taritta: “—Hk.”

Taritta’s cheeks tightened at the unnecessary provocation, and Priscilla turned to her with composure.

With an overwhelmingly dignified attitude, Priscilla dismissed the threat of being shot. In fact, Priscilla made a point of walking straight up to Taritta.

???: “That is enough.”

However, Abel halted Priscilla from taking any further steps.

Quietly, Priscilla’s crimson gaze turned to Abel again. Abel, down on one knee, met her gaze firmly.

Abel: “Taritta can be more resourceful than you think. Do not take her lightly.”

Priscilla: “If you say so, but do you think I shall turn a blind eye to her disrespect?”

Abel: “I am sure you cannot. But Priscilla… how many times have you pulled out the Yang Sword?”

Setting aside the unexpected evaluation of Taritta, Abel’s question struck Priscilla.

Subaru, however, could not understand the question’s intent. She was holding the Yang Sword—a treasured sword of dazzling crimson, that held an indisputable amount of power.

But now that she had defeated Arakiya, she had it sheathed, with the sky as its scabbard. Certainly, she would once again pull it out if required—

Abel: “Taritta, put the arrow down. She is not your enemy.”

Without waiting for Priscilla’s response, Abel continued to tell Taritta to drop her weapon. However, she was not convinced.

With the arrow still drawn, Taritta persisted, prefacing with “And yet… Hk”.

Taritta: “That woman is clearly dangerous.”

Abel: “I am aware of that which you are saying. But she is not the one you ought to be paying attention to, currently.”

Taritta: “—?”

Abel’s gaze shifted to the side as he conveyed that to Taritta, who had yet to lower her guard.

That gesture guided her gaze, and, while keeping Priscilla in sight on the corner of her vision, she turned her attention in that direction, and gasped.

Taritta: “S-Sister…?!”

As her eyes were ushered, Taritta saw Mizelda undergoing treatment from Rem.

With half of her body having been scorched by flames, and her abdomen pierced by a branch, Mizelda was gravely injured. Although Rem was doing her best to treat her, the pain was unbearable.

Rem: “Taritta-san, please call out to her. Call out…!”

Taritta: “Sister, Sister… Hk!!”

Instantly, the atmosphere from before fizzled out and Taritta rushed over to Mizelda. She grabbed her sister’s hand and began to call out “Sister” over and over again, just as Rem had requested.

So once again, there was nothing that could keep Priscilla in check.

Abel: “…”

The standoff between Abel and Priscilla resumed. —Or so it seemed.

Priscilla: “—Foolish commoner. Pull him up, you. He shall spoil the fun with all his noise.”

Subaru: “Eh…”

And with that, Priscilla pointed her chin towards the broken balcony.

She had ordered Subaru to rescue Al, who was doing his best to hold on for dear life. Subaru gasped as she gave the order without a care in the world.

Of course, he could not say anything except yes to her request, unless he wanted to take the risk of ruining Priscilla’s mood. Above all—

Priscilla: “I shall see to that man myself. What, I am not going to let him die. Do not fret too much.”

Pointing to Abel, Priscilla’s mention of Subaru’s concerns also gave some encouragement.

It was not because he had enough of a trusting relationship with Priscilla to believe her outright on that statement, but because he knew that she would not back down from what she had declared.

Abel: “Staring at each other is not going to get us anywhere. For the time being, you should do what she says.”

Subaru: “…Alright. I’m not your subordinate, though.”

Abel added that as Subaru pondered over Priscilla’s words.

He did not like the fact that he was being directed by Abel to do something. Leaving that thought for another time, Subaru immediately went to rescue Al, who was stuck hanging off a light fixture at the edge of the building.

Subaru: "…"

His mind was a jumble of different factors as he did so: the safety of Mizelda and the People of Shudraq, the future of Guaral, and the relationship between Abel and Priscilla.

Subaru clenched his teeth and put those thoughts aside for the moment, concentrating on what was in front of him.

Just as Rem was desperately trying to save the life in front of her, Subaru too, was trying to get as close as possible to the Bloodless Siege that he had envisioned.

2

Al, who had been bathing in the exterior light of the City Hall, was much harder to rescue than expected.

To begin with, Al only had one arm, the other having been lost in his time in this other world. As his lone arm was currently occupied, busy hanging by a thread, his options were limited.

Al: "So this is what it means to have a hand full… No, it's more like I'm busy as hell at this point. Which one do you think it is, bro?"

Subaru: "Shut up! If you want to be saved, don't demotivate me!"

Replying to the out-of-place tease, Subaru ripped the curtain Abel had been hanging from before, made a loop at the end, and guided it towards Al.

The loop was then threaded around Al's torso to secure him in place, and he was ready to be pulled up. Then he tugged at the curtain to pull the dangling and swaying middle-aged man out from his predicament,

Al: "…And up, up I go. Whew, barely escaped death there. You saved me.”

There had been a few close calls, but Subaru finally succeeded in pulling Al back up.

After crawling the rest of the way up with Subaru’s help, Al patted his chest and sat on the floor of the wrecked hall. Looking over at him, Subaru wiped the sweat from his forehead, having completed his task.

He then turned to the person who had helped him rescue Al—Medium.

Subaru: “Thanks, Medium-san, that would’ve been pretty tough on my own.”

Medium: “It’s ok, it’s ok! Also, I’m sorry for collapsing at such a critical moment earlier!”

Laughing cheerfully despite her battered appearance, Medium apologized for what happened in the prior battle.

She apologized for not being able to help during the fight with Arakiya, but her apology was far from necessary. In the first place, both Medium and Flop were not in a position in which they needed to be involved in this battle.

Medium: “Both big bro and I haven’t been diligent enough! I’m sorry, I’m sorry!”

Subaru: “No, it’s not your fault, Medium-san! You couldn’t move because you were protecting Flop, Utakata and… Louis.”

Stumbling over his words somewhat, Subaru praised Medium’s achievement.

At the time the tornado that was Arakiya had blown through the hall, Medium had protected Flop, who had been right beside her, as well as Utakata and Louis, who she had been carrying on both shoulders.

As a result, she hit her head and was too stunned to move. But thanks to her efforts, the three of them were safe, and Medium was spared from further damage.

Medium: “Hmm, it makes me happy that you say so, Natsumi-chan. But it’s no good. I’m big bro’s bodyguard, so I gotta do my job properly!”

Subaru: “Medium-san…”

Medium: “Next time! Next time, I won’t be so pathetic! Look forward to seeing that from me and big bro tomorrow, Natsumi-chan!”

Subaru: “—. Yes. It’s reassuring to hear you say that. But I don’t think the two of you should…”

Subaru tried to continue, saying that they were not required to go along with him.

However, the slurring of his words was easily drowned out by how bright as the sun she was when she exclaimed “Ah!”, rounding her eyes in amazement.

Medium: “I’ll go over there and help big bro! It’ll be hard for big bro, with how fragile he is, to carry the injured!”

Subaru: “Yeah, right…”

Medium: “Okay, Natsumi-chan, I’ll see you later! I’m glad that the masked person didn’t fall!”

With a big wave of her hand, Medium ran off restlessly.

She began to help Flop, among others, with the injured, and to carry and treat the injured People of Shudraq and Imperial Soldiers alike.

The O’Connell siblings did not even receive a word of appreciation, and Subaru felt more and more indebted to them.

He wondered if one day he would be able to repay the favor he had been given.

Al: “That was a big, cute young girl. As expected of bro, you’re living it up across the border, ain’t you?”

Subaru: “I shudder because I don’t have any idea what do you mean with “living it up”, though I agree, Medium-san’s a big, cute person. More importantly…”

Al: “Hmm? What’s up, bro?”

Subaru glared at Al, who casually cracked his neck and returned the glance with his usual lighthearted demeanor. Subaru then suppressed his anger towards Priscilla, forcing it back down like a rising hunger.

It was only natural. Subaru’s suspicions and questions had been on the back burner for a while now.

Al: “Don’t look so angry. You’re ruining your makeup and wig.”

Subaru: “I’m sorry, but my makeup and wig have already been trashed due to a last minute firestorm. Don’t get it wrong, the real Natsumi Schwartz’s much prettier.”

Al: “Natsumi Schwartz, was it?”

When Al heard Subaru’s horrible fake name, he cleared his throat with a rumble and gave a laugh pregnant of meaning.

With Subaru skeptical of his attitude, he shook his head,

Al: “No, no. I’m just impressed with your pseudonym. I didn’t know you had crossdressing as a hobby, bro.”

Subaru: “Don’t be silly, I’ll fill you in on the correct information about Natsumi next time. But more importantly, answer me. —Why are you and Priscilla here?”

Al: “…”

Subaru: “It was a big help to us, but there’s something I really don’t understand. It’s not just the reason as to why you’re in Guaral. It’s about why you’re in the Empire at all.”

In response to Subaru's serious question, Al closed his mouth softly and fell silent.

It was an inexplicable intervention, no matter how much he thought about it.

It just did not make sense for Priscilla and Al both to be in the Empire with complete impunity. Of course, from their point of view, the same could be said for Subaru, and others too—

Subaru: "Let's put that aside for now. The sooner I learn, the better, though."

Al: "That's a novel idea, but that's not what you really wanna hear, bro."

Subaru: "What?"

Al: "It doesn't matter why me and the Princess are in the Empire. Bro, what you really wanna know, is the way back… from this scary and dangerous country, to the home you know. Ain't that right?"

Subaru fell silent this time. The question the other party posed had hit a sore spot.

The way to return from the Empire to the Kingdom; that was the information Subaru was seeking the most right now—Towards that, Subaru possessed zero words of denial.

He had his doubts. There were other questions, as well as a nagging sense that he was being treated unreasonably. But wasn't it more important to solve the largest problem right now—

Subaru: "Then you have the answer to that question…? A way to get back to the Kingdom of Lugunica, and cross the border of the Empire…?"

Al: "Nah, I'm sorry. I dunno. I was just trying to get your hopes up."

Subaru: "YOU…!"

Al: "Wait, wait, don't be mad! To be precise, I'm talking about how difficult it is to get out of the Empire right now. It's hard enough to get in, let alone trying to escape."

Subaru was frustrated by the way his emotions were being played with in the palm of Al's hand.

As usual, Al refused to show his true feelings. —Did Subaru also look like that, from other people's perspectives? If that's the case, then it would be something for Subaru to reflect on.

In any case—

Subaru: "You can get in, but you can't get out… And the reason for that is…"

Al: "Oh, come on, I don't gotta tell you that. It means that there are people who don't want a situation where a certain someone could easily leave the country."

Subaru: "—. Does that mean you know Abel's true identity too?"

In response to Al's comment, Subaru naturally arrived at that conclusion.

He'd heard before that the Vollachian Empire had strict border control, but if the emigration ban was being strengthened under the conditions that Al mentioned, then the reason for that was none other than the existence of Abel—no, the existence of the Emperor of Vollachia, Vincent Vollachia.

In order to prevent Abel, who had been ousted from the Emperor's seat and was now on the run, from escaping to another country, border security was being tightened.

All that meant was that in order for Subaru and the others to return to the Kingdom of Lugunica, they would need to overcome some major obstacles.

Subaru: "Al, if you have more information than we do…"

Al: "Oops, I'll have to keep my mouth shut about this. I don't want the Princess to get mad at me for blabbering about unnecessary things. If there’s something you wanna talk about, talk to the Princess. However…”

He put his right hand on the metal clasp of his helmet, and a moment later, it made a gentle click.

He then continued,

Al: “I can’t guarantee that the Princess’ll be honest about it, though, can I?”

3

Al: “Princess, I’m back. How’s the discussion going over there?”

Priscilla: “How is it going, you ask? We are not getting anywhere. I have been listening to everyone that has woken up, one-by-one.”

Al, who waved his hand in an easy-going manner, had only been asking about the progress. Meanwhile, Priscilla replied back to him by resting her chin in her hands.

The upper part of the building had been destroyed during Arakiya’s attack, but the foundation remained strong, and fortunately, the contents of the City Hall were still intact.

Thanks to this, they were able to use the conference hall for important discussions with no relocation necessary.

Abel and Pricilla sat on opposite sides of a large roundtable. In addition, Zikr and his Imperial Soldiers, as well as Kuna and the People of Shudraq, were present.

All of them possessed relatively mild injuries, and if Priscilla’s words were true, they had probably already been questioned.

Kuna: “Yo, you okay, Natsumi?”

Subaru: “Kuna, I’m glad you’re awake. Are you hurt?”

Kuna: “Holly’s big frame came in handy. To be honest, I don’t feel comfortable in this place, so I want to get the hell out…”

Subaru noticed Kuna's pained face as he joined them at the roundtable.

Directing his eyes towards the rest of the Shudraq, Subaru could guess the reason for Kuna's bitter face. In a nutshell, she was the one representing all Shudraqians in the current moment.

Kuna: "Taritta can't leave the Chieftain's side and there's no point in letting Holly do the talking. But why put me in this role…"

Subaru: "No, you're attentive and keep a level head, so I think you're the right person for this job. So, how are the discussions going?"

Kuna: "Well, I think we've got a pretty good idea of what's going on. I believe we're about to start the so-called discussion."

Kuna answered while shrugging her shoulders, and Subaru nodded saying "I see".

Soon after, he was at a loss as to where he should be in the room. In the first place, Subaru's position in this group wasn't very clear.

Although he had been the one to plan the operation for the fall of Guaral, because of Arakiya and Priscilla's intrusion it would be difficult for him to say he had been successful.

???: "Miss Natsumi, if you are in trouble, how about you sit next to me?"

And so, Zikr stood quickly and pulled a chair out in front of Subaru, who had been lost in thought.

Small and stocky, Zikr looked at Subaru and smiled like a gentleman. At his grin, Subaru pointed to himself,

Subaru: "Um, I'm sure you've noticed this already, but you know I'm just crossdressing, right?"

Zikr: "If you are posing as a woman, then I am also posing as a man. My idea of a man is to behave like a gentleman with a woman, regardless of who is posing as what."

Subaru: “So this is the Womanizer…!”

Instead of using “womanizer” as a derogatory term, “womanizer” was used as a term of respect that had a different idea behind it.

Subaru was embarrassed to be dressed in women’s clothing, but he took Zikr’s advice and proceeded to sit down in the chair that had been pulled out for him.

Complementing that, Subaru gave Zikr a “Pardon me,” as he took his seat.

Subaru: “Also, thank you for protecting me upstairs, I would’ve been in danger if Zikr-san hadn’t protected me.”

Zikr: “No, it was just a matter of my body moving in the spur of the moment. I do not know if I could repeat that feat next time. I am the Coward, after all.”

Upon hearing Subaru’s thank you, Zikr proudly referred to himself as the Coward.

This was because the Imperial General Second-Class, Zikr, had been remembered this way by the Emperor to whom he had sworn allegiance.

And Abel, the aforementioned Emperor who was held in such high esteem by the worthy Zikr—

Abel: “—The Fortress City of Guaral has fallen, and the commander of the garrisoned troops, General Second-Class Zikr Osman, has shifted to our side, complementing the forces of the People of Shudraq of Buddheim Jungle.”

Priscilla: “That is surely not enough. While I have heard of the bravery of the People of Shudraq, we are still far too weak to take the Empire on.”

Abel: “No doubt. Priscilla, where are your men?”

Priscilla: “I do not have my private army in the Empire. Aside from that, the only people I could call my army include that clown in the iron helmet, a drunken swordsman, and a pipsqueak whose only qualification is his cute face.”

Abel: “…”

While Subaru was in the room talking with Kuna, Abel and Priscilla were having their own discussion.

The two of them looked at each other thoughtfully as they gauged the other’s strength and circumstances, but Subaru intervened with a “Wait a minute”.

He had been pushed around completely and wished to not be left behind again.

Priscilla: “What is the matter, foolish commoner? You are still present?”

Subaru: “I’m here, and I can’t believe I’m saying this, but it’s a hell of a thing that you can look at me without being impressed. The last time she saw me like this, Beako had nightmares for a good while.”

Priscilla: “I believe I had already given you a compliment concerning your attire. Surely you do not believe you shall receive a reward for pulling Al up with a dirty cloth?”

Subaru: “I’m not expecting anything! No, I kind of am. I’m hoping that you’ll at least listen to me a little bit.”

Priscilla’s eyes narrowed at Subaru, who was leaning forward with his hands on the roundtable.

She looked as if she was trying to judge him, but Subaru was not afraid. Unlike before, Kuna and Zikr were here as well. That said, though, he felt like he made for a pathetic bulwark.

Subaru: “Anyway, why’re you even here? I can’t get anywhere asking Al. Let’s hear it clearly from your mouth.”

Priscilla: “That is an annoying question. …I am here to speak with that guy, Vincent Abellux.”

Subaru: "…"

Jutting her chin in his direction, Priscilla replied as if this were something obvious. In response, Abel, who sat comfortably with crossed arms, closed one of his sable eyes, while the other swirled with complicated emotions.

It was a bewildering look that could be of joy, anger, sorrow, pleasure, or something else, something inexplicable that unaffiliated to any of those feelings.

Subaru: "Talk to Abel…? But how did you know where Abel was?"

Priscilla: "The throne of the Emperor, in the Imperial Capital of Lupugana, has a device that allows them to teleport elsewhere. Should they sense any potential political change, they may escape to the east through it. —To the tomb where Emperors have been buried for generations."

Subaru: "The Emperors' Graveyard?"

Priscilla: "That is where that mechanism would take him. I believe I am correct, Vincent… No, it is more convenient to call you Abel, presently."

Priscilla's eyes blazed red as she turned the conversation away from Subaru to Abel.

Exhaling under her burning gaze, Abel nodded,

Abel: "Yes, call me Abel, right now. At least, I am not qualified to call myself Emperor now that the throne has been taken from me."

Priscilla: "Exceptional, law-abiding, and foolishly honest… In any case, you think too softly. It appears that during your time sitting on the Emperor's throne, you have forgotten how to stand up."

Abel: "Gaze upon me, and tell me I have forgotten how to stand up."

Priscilla's unrelenting taunting did not deter Abel's swarthiness.

At that moment, their gazes clashed feverishly, and the air in the conference room even smelled of rising heat. As it was, it seemed inevitable that the discussion would break down and fire would rage—

???: “Well, well, calm down, both of you. There’s nothing to be gained by getting into trouble, right?”

However, there was a man who had the audacity needed to poke at a powder keg on the verge of explosion while puffing on a cigarette.

It was Al who easily stepped into the uncomfortable atmosphere with what must have been a wry smile. Instead of sitting down, he remained standing, under the combined smoldering glares of both Abel and Priscilla.

Al: “Even though the Princess acts like this, she’s got her cute sides too. As soon as she found out that she had to rush extra-fast to Guaral, she spurred her flying dragon at full speed, almost enough to exhaust him. That’s how much she was looking forward to seeing you… Guah?!”

Priscilla: “Such foolishness.”

Al went behind Priscilla as he spoke and tried to defend her humanity, but his master did not take his thoughts to heart and slammed her fan into his stomach with fierce force.

Al yelped and fell to one knee on the spot, his body bent into a crooked shape.

Priscilla: “To presume to speak for what I feel is of hubris to the extreme. When did you become so full of yourself? Know your place, clown.”

Al: “The fact that you’re running out of patience’s proof enough… But you’re really here to help, ain’t you?”

Priscilla: “…”

Priscilla’s crimson eyes narrowed as she revealed her displeasure at Al’s words.

But the fact that she did not explicitly deny it in words, was a sign that Al's words had been right on the mark.

Subaru: "Priscilla came to help Abel…?"

It seemed so unreal that Subaru was unable to shake the feeling of discomfort. Of course, looking at the results alone, there could not be any doubt that Priscilla had already helped Abel, Subaru and the others. However, her nature, as Subaru knew it, prevented him from being convinced.

Was fighting to protect someone, even if it had the benefit of defeating an enemy not of her liking, really logic that applied for the person known as Priscilla Barielle?

Priscilla: "You have a gleam in your eyes that suggests unpleasant thoughts. Do you wish them to be gouged, foolish commoner?"

Subaru: "Don't look people in the eye and tell them something so scary. To be honest, I'm not sure how much I believe you…"

Priscilla: "—In any case, Abel, I understand that you reached the east using the mechanism on the throne. If that is the case, were you expecting me to join up with the People of Shudraq and come to the Fortress City?"

Subaru: "Expecting to be here…?"

While Priscilla was admittedly exceptionally perceptive, Subaru found it difficult to fathom the circumstances that Abel had so readily accepted.

Certainly, the given conditions seemed to satisfy the speculation though.

Al: "Don't get it wrong, bro. The smart guys here are convinced. If we keep it together here, we can avoid trouble we don't wanna deal with."

Subaru: "And you're okay with that…?"

Al: "Good or bad, we'll just have to suck it up. Even if you try to fight, you'll lose. —Because me and the Princess are gonna win anyway."

Subaru: "Oh…"

Al, still on his knees, slid up to Subaru and declared so with a whisper.

To be honest, it was surprising for Subaru to hear Al assure him that they would win. Originally, Al had a tendency to draw an arbitrary line in regards to what was around him, rather than being humble.

In fact, the other knights of Royal Candidates were all renowned and talented—and neither Subaru nor Al were special enough to be overconfident among them.

This was why Subaru felt a certain amount of sympathy for Al.

That was why his assertion here was so surprising to Subaru.

Even though he seemed to be unchanging and unconcerned, change was coming. This was because of his master-servant relationship with Priscilla and the accompanying battle of the Royal Selection.

Al: "But I can only speak highly of those who have a chance of winning, even if it's only by a hundred millionth of a percent. In that respect, this Arakiya girl was in a class of her own. I couldn't see any way to win."

Subaru: "…I see, the Nine Divine Generals are the strongest members of the Empire. You could say they're kinda like Reinhardt and Julius in the Kingdom of Lugunica."

If one were to select the strongest members within the Kingdom of Lugunica, they would probably find that most of them would be knights. Reinhardt and Julius dispensed being mentioned, Marcos, the captain of the Royal Guard, and Roswaal, the Head Magician of the Court, could likewise be included.

Subaru would also like to add Wilhelm and Garfiel to the list, and have an all-star lineup to face the Nine Divine Generals.

Subaru: “No, that’s not important, no matter how many times you speak of the Nine Divine Generals, it’s hard to believe that someone would be able to match Reinhardt…”

Abel: “—I am afraid that is not so.”

Subaru: “What?”

When Subaru tried to gauge the strength of the Nine Divine Generals as the most important opponent to be wary of, Abel said something that made him doubt his ears.

What did he just say? —That there’s a being that can rival Reinhardt?

Subaru: “Are you saying that there are other bug characters like Reinhardt?”

Zikr: “I’m not familiar with this vocabulary, but if you mean comparable, I will have to agree. The Nine Divine Generals have a First, above Arakiya.”

Subaru: “The First of the Nine Divine Generals is…?”

Zikr: “—Cecilus Segmunt.”

Next to Subaru, who opened his mouth with a gulp, Zikr quietly said those two words.

Subaru understood that it was a person’s name, and that it was the name of the First Rank in question. The person with that name was the strongest of the Empire, the pride of Vollachia, an overpowered character.

Abel: “The Blue Lightning of Vollachia, as he is called, is a swordsman of the highest class, ranked alongside the Sword Saint of Lugunica, the Admirer of Kararagi, and the Mad Prince of Gusteko.”

Subaru: “Umm… I remember hearing that nickname before… So you’re serious?”

Abel: “If you were to antagonize him, you would lose your head in the blink of an eye. That is the kind of man he is."

Abel, who had his arms crossed, nodded in response to Subaru's question, as his cheeks tightened.

In this situation, there was no reason for Abel or Zikr to tell a lie or a joke. In other words, what they had spoken must be the simple truth.

Cecilus Segmunt, the strongest man in the Empire, who was as skilled as Reinhardt.

Subaru felt a chill run down his spine as he wondered just how dangerous and fierce this superclass swordsman was.

It was a battle of vast differences in strength. Being both outnumbered and outclassed in quality, how could they possibly hope to win?

Al: "…However, if you think about it that way, there's still some hope. The fact that I could beat Lil' Miss Arakiya, ranked Second, here, was a big win for us."

Subaru: "Al…"

Despite the heavy mood of Subaru and the others, Al said this with a cheerful voice.

It was a very optimistic opinion, however it was also a reality that the others could not get on board as easily. However, taking in Al's spirit, Subaru exhaled, "That's right".

If they only considered the negative side of things, they would not be able to make any progress. In fact, Subaru and his team had been able to conquer the Fortress City with minimal damage. They had even managed to add Priscilla and Al as reinforcements, although it was hard to state whether they were friend or foe.

He was sure Rem would do her best to heal the injured Shudraqians, and Mizelda would return to the front lines. They could expect to see more of her relaxed, stoic demeanor, and all-around combat ability.

Henceforth—

Subaru: “Al’s right… It’s great that we were able to defeat one of the Nine Divine Generals… and a pretty highly-ranked one at that. I’m sure she’s got some information, considering her position.”

Al: “Yeah, you could say that! That’s brilliant, bro. Information’s more valuable than gold during a war. Since she was left alive, let’s hear what she has to say.”

Subaru: “Right. She might have a lead…”

Subaru forced himself to get in the mood, and Al matched him. At that rate, the subject of the conversation changed toward the acquisition of information from Arakiya, who had been successfully captured alive.

???: “Wait, Subaru and Iron-Mask. I’m going to have to disagree with you on that.”

But then Kuna, who was participating as the representative of Shudraq, intervened.

As Subaru and Al turned around, Kuna stroked her own green-dyed hair, and said—

Kuna: “That woman is dangerous. You never know what she’ll do if she sees an opening. It’s definitely better to kill her as soon as possible.”

Subaru: “I understand that, but that’s too short-sighted. Killing her is not…”

Kuna: “The Chieftain ended up badly hurt already. I don’t care what Subaru says, we and the others need to execute her.”

Kuna mentioned Arakiya’s execution upfront, and glared at Subaru with stubborn insistence.

When she pointed out Mizelda’s condition, Subaru had no choice but to keep his mouth shut. Her safety had been left to Rem, but even if her wounds healed, the fact that she had been injured would not disappear.

If the Shudraqians found that unforgivable, then Arakiya would have to pay the price.

Subaru: "…"

While searching for a response to Kuna, Subaru glanced at Priscilla.

He wanted to see what kind of reaction Priscilla would have to Kuna's insistence on executing Arakiya, as she seemed to have an unusual relationship with her.

However—

Priscilla: "I have already decided on my attitude towards Arakiya. First and foremost, it was me who slashed down the back of that thing. Are those black eyes on your face merely decoration?"

Subaru: "Guh…"

Priscilla: "I possess no intention to say anything for the sake of Arakiya. If her fate ends here, it will be part of Arakiya's own path. —Although it would be a shame."

Subaru: "…I don't understand you at all."

Subaru shook his head at Priscilla, who spoke simply as she weighed the value of Arakiya's life.

At the end of the day, their relationship seemed to be sour, but judging by Arakiya's attitude, it could have been intimate. Yet, Priscilla's attitude was terribly disconnected.

As an outsider, Subaru had no idea what their relationship was like.

Subaru: "But if you die, it's all over. Life doesn't come back."

Priscilla: "You dare to teach the value of life to me? Do you believe that I can misjudge the value of another's life?"

Subaru: "—. You're not omnipotent. Even you can make mistakes."

Directly facing Priscilla, Subaru answered without a pause.

As soon as he said that, the air in the room became tense.

Kuna and Zikr gasped, while Al could be seen putting his hand on the forehead of helmet. Subaru, too, was aware that he had said something foolish in a spur-of-the-moment manner.

Only after speaking those words, did he realize that it was a pattern that would likely end up with him losing his life by incurring Priscilla's displeasure with those words.

The next moment, he might be beheaded by that shining crimson sword.

But even so—

Subaru: "I'm not wrong. Even you can be wrong."

Again and again, Subaru repeated the statement that could cost him his life.

A moment later, in front of Subaru. Priscilla's eyes narrowed with a cold glare. And then, the scorching "death" that would make Subaru pay for his indiscretion—

Priscilla: "Even I can err, yes? It is a spiteful thing, really."

Never came.

Subaru: "Eh…"

Subaru's eyes widened in surprise, and he exhaled his clenched lungs.

Taking one look at Subaru, Priscilla opened her fan noisily and directed her gaze past Subaru, its aim Kuna.

Priscilla: "Before we cut off that thing's head, it would be best to find a use for it."

Kuna: "—What, are you trying to tell us what to do? You're an outsider.”

Priscilla: “If you wish to ignore my advice, do it.”

Withdrawing her opinion, Priscilla’s gaze stroked over Kuna’s slender body as if it were attempting to burn her.

Hugging herself involuntarily, Kuna ended up naturally demonstrating the pressure that could be felt from that gaze. Unfortunately, Priscilla and Kuna were at different levels.

Al: “Honestly, I was a bit anxious. But now we’re all on the same page!”

As if to break the tense atmosphere, Al struck the roundtable with his hand with force.

Having thus attracted everyone’s attention, he looked at Subaru through his steel helmet and,

Al: “It’s good news that you didn’t die, bro, but it’s also good news that the world didn’t lose that ero-kawaii girl. That said, when she wakes up, we’ll talk—”

???: “—Big problem～!”

Al was just about to summarize their opinions of what to do with Arakiya, when he heard the sound of hurried and panicked footsteps.

It was Holly, her large body twisting around the entrance of the room, as she burst inside the conference hall with a flurry of footsteps and a panicked voice.

Her body and breath bounced as she drew everyone’s attention, and there were words.

Those were—

Holly: “A couple of Imperial Soldiers got in, and the Divine General we captured has escaped～!”

Chapter 27:
The Haves and the Have-Nots

1

???: “If you’re alive, you’ll get a chance to clean off your disgrace. But if you die, that’s the end. So, I’m going. I won’t get into a fight I don’t think I can win.”

There was no lie in those words.

Throwing oneself into a fight with little chance of winning was a folly only an unbelievable fool would commit to.

He did not believe himself wise, not in the slightest, but for that reason he knew he should approach his decisions carefully. While a wise person might reach a conclusion in an instant, a fool would take an eternity to reach it.

Todd knew that this was how those who were untalented waged battle.

He did not get into fights he could not win.

However, paradoxically speaking—

Todd: “—There’s absolutely nothing wrong with getting into a fight you have a chance of winning.”

He brought his clenched fist in front of his right eye, and looked longingly into the distance through the small pinhole he had created.

A primitive means of seeing farther, achieved by narrowing one’s field of vision. If he squinted, Todd’s eyes would be able to see quite far, but he would not be able to make out what was going on inside the chaotic City Hall, let alone past the burning flags.

And that applied even if the situation had the winds in his favour.

Jamal: “Oy, the roof of the City Hall’s gone! What’s going on?”

Right next to him, Todd’s ferocious companion was overwhelmed by his own growing sense of urgency, creating a ruckus.

His concentration was disturbed by the noise, so he flicked his hand towards the man to instruct him to shut up. As for what was going on, he was earnestly evaluating the situation.

Todd: “Pretty sure one of the Nine Divine Generals has joined.”

If not, there was no point in staying in the citadel which had fallen into enemy hands.

As mentioned before, Todd had considered abandoning the city and fleeing once the City Hall had fallen due to the enemy’s plan. He had no intention of politely complying with any disarmament order and surrendering.

In the first place, as long as the shots were being called by the poster child of war—the man who called himself Natsumi Schwartz, dangerous people like Todd and Jamal would be the first to be dealt with.

Even in Vollachia, executions of surrendered prisoners of war were frowned upon, but that man would certainly make up a good reason to excuse such travesties.

At least, that was what Todd would do. It was a natural consideration for survival.

Hence why he had chosen to abandon the city without hesitation. In spite of this, his curiosity got the better of him, so he hid just close enough to confirm the existence of reinforcements heading for the city.

Jamal: “There ain’t any doubt about it. That’s the woman I saw two years ago, when I served during the defeat of the barbarians. —General First-Class Arakiya, ranked Second.”

As he peered at the scantily-clad woman who had leisurely entered the city by jumping over the closed main gate, Jamal declared those words with a hint of excitement in his snorts.

He was the kind of man who walked around with his wild instincts on his sleeve. Both in terms of his strength as a living creature, and in his male disposition to be able to gauge females, he wasn't the sort who would forget anyone who tugged at his heartstrings.

In other words, one of the strongest among the Empire's Nine Divine Generals had made their appearance to suppress the rebellion. —So this must be the "chance" that Todd had previously judged to be missing.

Even so—

Todd: "To act or not to act, it's more than worth the trouble."

Although Natsumi's tricky tactics were brilliant, he had no direct combat power, at least, not within a third of a soldiers' own power. The People of Shudraq who followed him were known for their toughness, but that was only relative to ordinary people.

Those who were truly strong, such as the Nine Divine Generals, were not constrained to such criteria.

Even Jamal, whose only claim to fame was his tremendous swordsmanship and fighting prowess, was only about as good as a dozen regular Imperial soldiers. That was the measure of how well one could gauge an ordinary person. Members of the Nine Divine Generals were prime examples of ones who would "take care" of Jamal. —The City Hall that had fallen into enemy hands would be reclaimed.

Todd: "Then it's wise to back the winning ground dragon."

There was no need to work with a member of the Nine Divine Generals.

All they had to do, was to be more useful to the General than the Soldiers who had been captured and rendered unable to do their job. If they could detain the enemy, interrogate them, and deliver some proper payback, then the General First-Class would remember their actions well.

If they did that, they would be promoted to a higher position, and may be able to find their way back to the Imperial Capital sooner rather than later.

Todd: “Alright, we’re heading back, Jamal. We’re going to help her retake the City Hall.”

Jamal: “Oh? Oh, yeah! Haha, that’s good. I’m glad to hear that! I’ve been itching all over for a while, since running away ain’t my style. I ain’t gonna let the General First-Class hog all the credit!”

Todd: “Don’t be silly. We’re going to gain the favor of the General.”

Todd sighed at Jamal, whose fists hardened in anticipation for a return to battle in response to the change of plans. Setting out for the City Hall, they located a position with an optimal view for monitoring the situation, instead of directly entering the building.

Following his own beliefs to the last, he was careful and cautious, and—

Todd: “—Kill him, Arakiya.”

The top floor of the City Hall was blown away by gale-force wind, the barely-visible General First-Class on a rampage.

From a distance, the Second Ranked silver-haired, brown-skinned woman wielded a tree branch that looked like an improvised weapon, and rampaged about as if she were the highest law of the world.

Between all the bodies indiscriminately strewn around the hall, there was no distinction between Shudraq and Imperial Soldiers.

Under these circumstances, the one who stood in front of Arakiya with a blue-haired girl behind his back was none other than Natsumi Schwartz.

Todd: “…”

As soon as he saw him, the thoughts that came to Todd’s mind were not dismissive like, “How could he be stupid enough to stand in front of a General First-Class?" or "How is he still alive?".

Rather, with utmost vigilance, Todd shouted out loud in his heart.

—Kill that man here, for sure, Arakiya!

Above all else, for better or worse, he did not care what he got credit for. He did not care if the time he spent thinking about his decision to stick around ended up being meaningless.

He did not care about anything else, as long as he could make sure that the life of Natsumi Schwartz, the poster child of war, had been terminated.

It would be—

Todd: "…Oi oi, you've got to be kidding me."

In the instant Arakiya was going to kill Natsumi, Todd's sincere hope was shattered just as something flashed above his tunneled vision, while he was focusing on letting that decisive moment go unmissed.

A flash of red light separated Natsumi and Arakiya.

It both majestically challenged Arakiya and sheltered Natsumi behind her back, as though it seemed to be the absolute strongest thing in the world. The moment he saw this, the balance in Todd's mind tipped significantly.

Jamal: "What was that thing that just fell from the sky?! A flying dragon?! Where's the flying dragon?!"

Todd: "…"

Jamal: "Are you listening to me, Todd! What about us? Shouldn't we be backing General First-Class Arakiya! Hey! Listen to me…"

Todd: "—Shut up, Jamal."

Jamal, whose voice roughened at the change in the situation, gasped at Todd's words.

Without acknowledging Jamal any further, Todd kept his gaze on the scene in the City Hall. The woman in the crimson dress who had suddenly appeared was facing Arakiya head-on.

He knew at a glance. —That woman also belonged to the side of the "haves", far removed from normal people.

Natsumi, having managed to survive what seemed to be a desperate situation, made Todd keenly aware of the fact that he also had something to offer. Something he "had", that was different from combat power or luck.

Todd: "…"

Before the red woman intervened, Arakiya alone would have been enough to make up the difference.

However, the situation had changed, and no resolution was in sight. Would the weight of Todd and Jamal be enough to tip the scales back in their direction?

Jamal: "Todd…!"

Todd: "Don't move, Jamal. —There's nothing you can do right now."

The odds were against them, and the longer Todd watched, the worse it got.

Todd knew Jamal's anger was getting the better of him, but it would be a waste of time to act now.

After all—

Todd: "Because, General First-Class Arakiya's been defeated just now."

The red woman's blade had struck her in the back, and Arakiya had fallen helplessly to the ground.

The balance was broken, and it would never tilt the other way again.

2

Todd: “…”

Arakiya collapsed, and the situation in the City Hall came to its terminus.

This time, the Fortress City of Guaral had completely fallen into the hands of the enemy. There was no way to recover from this.

The Second Ranked of the Nine Divine Generals had just been defeated, and there was no way that other reinforcements would come rushing in.

The Nine Divine Generals were mighty warriors, the pinnacle of the Vollachian Empire’s military might.

The strength of each of the Nine Divine Generals was equivalent to a sizable army. There was no chance that the Empire would dispatch two or three actual large armies to deal with a single situation. This was the end.

The balance had been tipped. The only thing left to do was to find a way to deal with the withdrawal that would come next.

Todd: “What to do next?”

In the shadows of the building from which he had watched the developments at the City Hall, Todd pondered quietly.

In all honesty, he was seething with a mixture of anger and frustration, but letting it out would not solve anything.

Now that the reason for his return was gone, the smart thing to do would be to get the hell out of there.

However—

Jamal: “Oi, Todd… you bastard, you’re not planning to run away, are you?”

The search for any words with which Jamal would be persuaded had been fruitless, the latter with a blue vein popping from his forehead.

Initially, convincing Jamal had been painstaking, even right after the fall, as of the moment the flag of the City Hall had been burned.

And yet, back then, it had been easy to guide Jamal's emotions still.. Reluctant as he was, Todd had still managed to make him obey, and he had reluctantly put away his half-drawn swords.

However, this was not the case this time, where things had repeated themselves, where now he'd let Jamal draw his sheathed blades once again. Even if Todd told him to put away his blades and turn around quietly again, he would not listen.

In fact, depending on what was said next, he might turn the point of the blade he pulled out against Todd.

If that happened, there would be no reason to not kill Jamal. —His future brother-in-law. Killing him would be the least favored path.

If he were not brought back safely as well, keeping the promise that had been made would not be possible.

Todd: "Let's go with that."

Jamal: "Aah?"

Todd: "…I understand how you feel. But you need to calm down. Now that General First-Class Arakiya's been defeated, there's no chance for us to win even if we go in. Do you want to make your sister sad by dying in vain?"

Jamal: "…"

An attempt to persuade him using the love of family as a shield.

As soon as he stared at his opponent, hoping that this would work, an arm quietly stretched out and grabbed him by the scruff of his shirt. Then, with a grunt, the one-eyed Jamal bared his fangs as he drew Todd toward his face.

Jamal: “Hey, if you think I’m gonna back off anytime you mention Katya, you’re definitely wrong.”

Todd: “I see… Too bad.”

Shaking his head loosely, Todd announced his disappointment rather sincerely.

If it made Jamal feel any better to get a couple of hits in on him, Todd would allow it, but it seemed Jamal possessed no intention of doing that, as he instead clicked his tongue and pushed Todd away.

There didn’t seem to be any need for him to be so direct with things, but there was no way to stop him.

As it was, Todd turned to face Jamal, and thought about climbing over the wall of the citadel on his own.

Fortunately, he had already grasped the geography of the city back when they were trying to find any secret paths. Though Arakiya had not achieved her goal, she too had managed to create some confusion. In fact, it would be easier to escape than before Arakiya’s arrival.

Apparently, Jamal would be making one more rampage to get himself noticed.

Todd: “Jamal, I’m sorry, but I’m leaving. I’ll say it again, but you probably won’t listen: you’ll die a dog’s death. Even if you go in there, you won’t be able to kill them all…”

Jamal: “You dumbass! I’m not gonna do something so worthless! I’m going to rescue General First-Class Arakiya.”

Todd: “…What?”

He had expected meaningless sentimentality, however, the other had blurted out some unexpected words instead.

Todd stopped in his tracks and stared at Jamal’s face, from whom slurred out a “What?”, Jamal: “Did you really think I was gonna charge in with the resolve to die?”

Todd: “Yes, I did. I thought you wanted to die like a dog.”

Jamal: “Cut the crap! I’m taking advantage of your clever thinking, but I’ve got a brain to think for myself too! I can tell the difference between what I can and can’t do.”

Jamal seriously surprised Todd with his unexpected statement.

There were some accomplishments to be seen in his wartime experience, but other than that, he was so direct and unsophisticated that Todd thought him to be a man unknowing of what thinking was supposed to be.

Jamal: “It can’t be helped if you’re a coward, I guess Katya wasn’t a good judge of character. I’m gonna rescue the General First-Class. She’s got a nice ass.”

Todd: “—Wait, I’m coming with you.”

Jamal: “Oh?! Don’t tell me, you’re not satisfied with Katya’s ass…?”

Todd: “I had no intention of going along with your suicidal mission, but if it isn’t one, then it becomes a different story.”

Not dealing with the disgraceful allegations, Todd sealed Jamal’s mouth with his palm. Forcing him to shut up, Todd assembled a schedule of actions that followed the change of plans in his mind.

It was not in Todd’s nature to do things in the spur of the moment in the first place. Sadly, however, the more time he spent with Jamal, the more experience he gained in the field of improvisation.

If Jamal was going to die an honourable death on his own to retake the City Hall, he would have left him alone. But if his goal was to retake Arakiya, that was a different story.

Todd: “…”

The situation in City Hall was slowly clearing up.

The only things to watch out for were Natsumi and the red woman. It would be suicide to take action in their presence. However, it did not mean that their enemy had been able to resolve the situation unscathed either.

If they forgot to maintain vigilance, there would be an opportunity to take advantage of.

Jamal: “I’m gonna go in and make a scene. If we take advantage of that opportunity and rescue the General First-Class…”

Todd: “I was impressed earlier, but that’s all gone now… There are two people we need to be wary of. You must avoid doing anything around them. What, there’s no need to worry.”

Todd’s lips loosened as he looked at Jamal from the gap between his fingers, as he chided him for this barbaric distraction. He poked his white canine tooth with the tip of his tongue and smirked.

Out of the corner of his eye, he saw Arakiya being taken, even though she was dying.

If she was not dead, there was a way to get her out.

3

—It was easy to sneak into the City Hall.

After all, it was where they had been headquartered, even if it had been for a short time.

Todd usually had a habit of grasping the geography and layout of any place he stopped by even once. He did not feel safe unless he had an idea of where to run or hide.

That was why, after the camp in the Buddheim Jungle had been burnt down and he entered Guaral, he visited every part of the city, including City Hall, and constructed a mental map.

He knew where to kill unnoticed, and where to hide to avoid detection.

No matter where and what kind of threats they would encounter, he always had a way to murder, and a way to escape.

Todd: “Five.”

As he snuck inside the City Hall, he crushed a few watchmen here and there.

Standing guard were not the Imperial Soldiers nor the People of Shudraq, rather, that task went to guards of the local government that had been conducting the security of the city. They had been called in as soldiers by the disturbing elements who had caused the city to fall—Though no longer could the fence-sitters they’d used be called a fine “Rebel Army”.

Jamal: “I ain’t gonna show you any mercy at all.”

Jamal spat in annoyance as he snapped a sentinel’s neck backward in a two-handed grip.

Jamal was prouder of being an Imperial Soldier than of being Imperial Nobility. His anger towards the guards cooperating with the rebels that were fighting against the Empire was immeasurable.

They had been cooperating with the Imperial Soldiers before the fall of the city, so it was understandable that he would be angry at how quickly they had changed their tune.

Todd: “Well, that’s not a way of thinking I have.”

He only killed them because he had to, and if it were not required, he would not have done so.

They could not be blamed for switching sides so quickly if they were just following the stronger side to survive. Of course, they had to pay for their wrong decision with their life.

So, the pair made up of Jamal and himself proceeded to their destination while eliminating the guards in their path.

There was a prison in the basement of the City Hall, and it was customary for criminals awaiting trial by the City Mayor to be placed there. It was highly likely that Arakiya, having been taken prisoner, would likewise be held captive there.

Naturally, an iron cell was no better than a cage made of sugar against someone from the Nine Divine Generals, but even so, they could not just be giving all the hospitality of a guest room.

Todd might have done the same as well—

Jamal: "—There she is, the General First-Class."

In the underground space downstairs, several cells were placed on both sides of the hall. The lesser criminals were placed in order from the front, while the most dangerous ones were securely at the far end.

Naturally, the cell at the far end, where Arakiya was kept, was heavily guarded.

Unlike before, the person standing in front of it was not a guard, but a Shudraqian woman. She was a large woman with yellow-dyed hair, and he could tell with just a glance that she was very skilled.

In addition, due to the layout, it was impossible to reach Arakiya's cell without being detected by the woman.

In other words—

Jamal: "I guess that's the end of our little sneaking around."

Todd: "…You, why do you look so happy?"

It was hard to understand Jamal's happy attitude when an inevitable battle was imminent.

Todd's desire was to avoid killing, and he did not want to fight if he could help it. If both were inevitable, he would choose the easier and less dangerous way.

Yet Jamal looked as if he enjoyed jumping into danger.

He was probably thinking that the more dangerous it was, the more blood he would shed, and the more loyalty he would show to the Empire.

Jamal: “It’s obvious, ain’t it? Fight like an Imperial Soldier and win the war! Only then can I be proud to say that I’m an Imperial Soldier.”

Todd: “…”

Jamal: “Oi, what are you surprised about?”

Todd: “No, it was almost exactly what I thought it’d be.”

It was rare to find a person whose words and deeds were so consistent.

Jamal looked uncomfortable at Todd’s answer, but quickly shook his head. Then he traced his fingers through his stubble and snorted.

Jamal: “Ah. Well then, you’re the one who’s having second thoughts, ain’t you?”

Todd: “I can’t go along with a suicide mission. If it’s not that, I’ll think about it. So I’m not having second thoughts.”

Jamal: “You were trying to escape, but you didn’t.”

Todd: “I decided to bring back a souvenir while on the run. The plan hasn’t changed.”

Jamal: “You say this, and you say that… Hk.”

Jamal gritted his teeth angrily, his eye bloodshot.

With that look on his face, Todd detached his attention from him and focused on the target at hand.

The woman standing guard was thick, and her limbs were protected by a reasonable amount of flesh. Given a Shudraqian’s athletic ability, even Todd’s axe might not be able to dice even one of her limbs.

Inevitably, then, the sweet spot would be from the neck up.

There were options of smashing her head, decapitating her, or splitting her face, but—

Jamal: “—This is where I come in, ain’t it?”

With that, Jamal foolishly stepped forward.

Todd wondered for a moment if he should call him off, but in the end he said nothing. In fact, the best move would be to push Jamal into action, get her attention, and then proceed from there.

It would save a lot of time and trouble, and if he was willing to do it, there was no need to discourage him.

Holly: “Mmmm, who are you~?!”

Jamal: “Do I gotta answer that? You people have defiled the Sword Wolf of the Vollachian Empire. Don’t you dare think you’ve won in a battlefield I wasn’t in!”

Holly: “A strange guy’s here~!”

Looking at Jamal, who had advanced into the hall, the Shudraqian woman held a large spear at her side. On the other hand, Jamal, who was facing her, drew his twin swords and danced with a maniacal smile on his face.

Jamal’d had his fair share of problems, but his abilities were renowned. At the very least, as long as his opponent was a single member of the Shudraq, he would not fall short.

Jamal: “Take this! And this! And this!”

Holly: “…Hk! You’re a strong guy~!”

The raging twin swords slashed toward the Shudraqian woman countless times while Jamal barked in a loud voice. The woman sidestepped them with her spear-handling, but she was on the defensive.

She must be someone with a certain level of skill, to keep an eye on Arakiya. However, it seemed she had not expected anyone to show up to retake their prisoner as soon as she was placed in confinement.

Additionally, the lack of reliable troops was also a critical flaw for the rebels.

Todd: “Nevertheless, they’re not useful assets at the moment.”

Moistening his lips with his tongue, Todd leapt out from behind Jamal and jumped straight toward the cell, passing by the two of them as they fiercely clashed weapons, sparks flying.

Holly: “Ah! His comrade… Kya!”

Jamal: “Do you have time to look around? Ah!”

With the assistance of an unusually witty Jamal, Todd slammed his axe into the lock of the cell with all his might.

There was no time to look for the key. He could not destroy the cell, but he could at least break the lock.

There was a dull sound and a stiff response, as the tip of the axe cracked loudly. But instead, the lock of the cell broke with a flourish, and Todd jumped in past the creaking door.

Todd: “General First-Class Arakiya!”

Inside the cell, a girl lay face down upon a simple bed.

Even if they belonged to the same Imperial Army, a mere Soldier would not have many opportunities to meet a General. Even a General Third-Class was a commander of an army. A General Second-Class, let alone a General First-Class, would be something from above the clouds.

Therefore, this was the first time that Todd had seen one of the Generals First-Class, one of the Nine Divine Generals, up close.

Arakiya: “…”

The reason why the unconscious Arakiya was lying on her face, was because of the slash she had sustained on her back, covered with a painful scar which had been scorched shut on top of that.

The wound had been cauterized at the same time it had been received, becoming a horrible scar. —If she had not been injured by a scorching blade, she would not have gotten this kind of wound.

Todd: “That red woman, what’d she…?”

That woman was no ordinary person, and the power of that ornate sword she held was also extraordinary.

There were no further details, and Arakiya did not answer when called. So Todd had no choice but to pick up Arakiya’s body, then running straight out of the cell.

Todd: “I got her! Jamal, let’s go!”

Holly: “I’m not going to let you… Ouch!”

Jamal: “That’s why! Looking away again! Don’t you dare! Neeeee—Hk!”

The Shudraqian woman’s mind was momentarily distracted as Arakiya was taken away.

In a moment, Jamal jumped at the woman like a flash with his twin swords. She immediately held her large spear vertically to prevent it, but the impact ripped the spear from the woman’s grasp, and Jamal’s backward kick pierced her unguarded torso as he sprung up.

The woman let out a small scream as her body slammed into the wall of the prison; her head hit the ground with force, and she fell motionlessly limp.

Looking over at her, Todd was about to order Jamal to finish her, but—

Todd: “—Hey, there’s a commotion upstairs. Did they find the body of the guard?”

Jamal: “Tch, we can’t stay around. The General First-Class is…”

Todd: “She’s unconscious, but not dead. That should be enough.”

Answering Jamal’s question in a straightforward manner, Todd ran out of the dungeon. Jamal, who was ahead of him, was in charge of clearing the way for Todd, who easily overtook him.

???: “Who in the world… Guah!”

Jamal: “Outta the way, you dimwitted bastards!”

The guard who looked into the basement was blown away by a slash, and Todd ran through the City Hall behind Jamal as they became increasingly alert.

Unfortunately, he did not have the leisure of caring for Arakiya’s body as he carried her. If she was one of the Nine Divine Generals, her body would probably be strong enough. He just had to trust his endurance and run.

Jamal: “We’re outside! Where are we going?”

Todd: “Main gate’s closed. —Follow me.”

Stitching their way through the dark and tumultuous night of the city, Todd jumped into the back alleys with Jamal. He made full use of the narrow streets and side roads to mislead the enemies tracking their whereabouts.

The battle had just ended, the chaos was still raging, and there were at least three-hundred identically-dressed Imperial Soldiers in the city. It would be difficult to tell them apart.

All that was left was—

Todd: “—Hk!”

The moment he heard the sound of wind, a blade swung right behind Todd.

He turned around, and there stuck just right below his feet was a single, thick, large arrow. Someone had cut it down. It had been aimed at Todd, carrying insane momentum, and Jamal had been the one to swiftly deal with it.

That had been a precise shot, aimed at the two who were running and hiding in the city.

It was, beyond the shadow of doubt, the same archer who had shot Todd in the torso a few days prior.

—They were being observed.

If that were the case, they could not move carelessly.

If they left the alley, that would make them an easy target, and Todd, with Arakiya in tow, would have difficulty moving with agility. Even if they tried to kill the archer, the enemy was located at the City Hall—and there would be no option but to return there for the third time.

So, should they abandon Arakiya and flee? That would be the way most likely to save themselves, but if that was the case, they would not know what they were risking their lives for to begin with.

In light of the current situation, he searched for an optimal way to take action, and the one that would yield the most results was—

Todd: "—Jamal, you know we're being targeted."

Jamal: "Yeah, they're a pain in the ass. They're too far away for me to kill them, but if we don't, they'll just shoot at us one way or another. What should we do?"

Todd: "…Then, there's only one way."

Jamal narrowed his single eye at Todd's words.

To Jamal's gaze that sought a solution, Todd exhaled deeply and closed one eye,

Todd: "As soon as we jump out, the enemy's going to shoot at us. I'll have you get ahead of me and cut off their arrows just like before. Not just one shot, but two or three will follow. I'll run as fast as I can so I don't shake the General First-Class off."

Jamal: "Huh, that doesn't sound like you. That's really your move? Smells of desperation, no?"

Todd: "Ultimately, that's what happens when you run out of cards. But I'm still lucky, aren't I?"

Jamal: "Huh? What do you mean?"

Todd: "You got a pretty strong hand left, you know."

The strategy he presented was almost entirely based on Jamal's swordsmanship.

If Jamal were incapable of cutting off the flying arrows, they would both perish. It was insane, given Todd's beliefs, to risk his life in such a reckless manner.

However, that was his suggestion. With Jamal's swordsmanship, the odds were not null.

Jamal: "…I knew Katya wasn't a good judge of character. I thought you were smarter than that."

Todd: "Don't talk bad about my fiancée, onii-sama."

Todd replied to Jamal scratching his head, his cheeks twisted. Hearing this, Jamal let out a short "Haa", and then gripped the hilts of his twin swords once again.

Then, turning his imposing back to Todd.

Jamal: "Aight, I'm in. Sometimes a stupid bet ain't so bad."

Todd: "If I wasn't here, you'd probably be making all those types of bets."

Jamal: "Shut the hell up. —Shut up and stay behind my back."

Jamal's spirits quietly rose as they exchanged hateful words.

Watching his back, Todd tightened his hold on Arakiya's body.

Todd: "Jamal, when you get out of the alley, run straight. After that, when you get to the end, take the right road. That should give you enough time to catch your breath."

Hearing these instructions, Jamal pondered on them in his head, slowly closed his eye, then re-opened it as he stepped forward.

Jamal: "—Hk."

As soon as he stepped out of the alley, a single arrows, clad in a gale, pierced toward Jamal.

Jamal responded to it with amazing reflexes, and cut it off with a clash of his twin swords. The impact bounced onto Jamal's wrist, and his clenched teeth chattered as he laughed like a rabid dog.

The sensation of blood burning, heart leaping, and life boiling, overtook Jamal.

His extreme concentration made the world retard, and he felt as if he could feel every drop of sweat that ran down his skin, every grain of sand that flew around, and even the existence of air that should have been invisible.

Jamal: "—Hahaa!"

One after another, a storm of arrows poured down like a deluge.

Stepping on the ground, swinging his sword as if dancing, slicing the arrows and striking them down.

What ensued was a sword dance, the sword dance of Jamal Aurélie.

If things had gone well, they would have been able to enjoy the dance of the dancer who had been invited to the City Hall, the following day.

Jamal laughed at the thought that it had been ruined, and that he was the one dancing instead. But it was a dance with all his heart, a dance with all his body, a sword fight with all his energy.

Todd likewise marveled at Jamal's efforts as he furiously handled the attack.

Todd followed without raising his voice, as a storm of lethal arrows rained down on him. This was a sign that he knew that if Jamal were distracted, it would directly lead to his death.

So Todd pushed Jamal away from his consciousness and focused all his energy on avoiding the impending "death".

Straight ahead, evade, strike off, step in, jump, dispel, and cut open.

Jamal: "End of the corr—Hk."

Miraculously, they had finished the straight path of death and hit the end of the indicated path.

The passage of time was vague, and the sword dance must have only lasted several seconds, even if it felt like it had persisted for hours. However, they had only broken through the first barrier. Refusing to relax, Jamal did as he was told and turned right at the end of the road, where——At the end of the broken path, there stood a group of Shudraqians, their spears trained on them.

Jamal: "—Fuck."

It would be difficult to handle that many Shudraqians with that archer aiming at them. One could say it was impossible.

He was prepared to fight hard until he ran out of steam, but even if he did, he could not set any of it in reserve. He had no idea that he would be so perfectly anticipated, and it seemed that luck had completely abandoned him.

Jamal: "Even if you strut around being all sorts of a smartass, in the end, luck'll run out on you, huh… Heh, it's in vain. But, it wasn't all that bad."

Checking the feel of the twin swords in his bloodied hands, Jamal spilled this out to Todd behind him.

It wasn’t bad at all, he had said, and he meant it.

In many ways, Todd’s thoughts and actions had been overwhelming and frustrating.

In the end, however, he chose to exert himself like an Imperial Soldier.

Jamal: “I’m sorry about Katya, but it can’t be helped. She’s part of Imperial Nobility as well. I’m sure she was prepared for this to happen to you and me.”

Thinking of the sister he had left behind in the Imperial Capital, Jamal felt a faint tingle in his chest. However, it was soon drowned out by the will to fight the enemy in front of him, and the smell of blood that coated everything.

He was relieved for that. —He was, to the bone, a Sword Wolf of the Vollachian Empire.

Jamal: “Let’s do this, Todd. Let’s at least show them what we’re made of, for one last time.”

Leaning forward, Jamal licked the blood flowing from his eyepatch-covered right eye.

Then, fiercely, he jumped headlong into the enemy, as to display his final prestige as an Imperial Soldier.

Deadly attacks rained down on him like a storm, but he no longer held any regrets.

The fact that he had been able to be himself till the very end, had been the greatest prize for Jamal.

4

???: “…You were an idiot until the very end, weren’t you?”

Hearing Jamal’s fierce roar in the distance, Todd muttered so as he dove through the wall.

The hole he had passed through was collapsed immediately afterwards, and he carefully erased all traces of his presence, so that he could not be pursued. They in the city would probably be occupied with Jamal for a while, so there should be time to escape.

It was just like Jamal had stated.

Todd would never entrust his life to a desperate plan, even if he were dead. —No, he would never do such a thing, precisely to avoid dying.

Todd: "If I let them chase you out of the alley, they'll be distracted. Well, I feel sorry for Katya…"

The promise to bring back his brother-in-law would go unfulfilled, and his fiancée would be terribly heartbroken.

In order to comfort her, he wished to return to the Imperial Capital as soon as possible.

Fortunately, in return for losing Jamal, he had been able to find another way to return to the Imperial Capital.

It was a wildcard that could lead to a much bigger foothold than Jamal's current one, which was that he had been on the verge of promotion to General Third-Class.

Arakiya: "…Princess."

Todd: "Oh dear, you look so innocent. Even so, if you're one of the Nine Divine Generals, then the number of people you've killed would be more than a hundred or two."

In Todd's arms, Arakiya's tears flowed from her closed eye. As he watched the tears roll down her cheeks, the vague thought that his current companion was wearing an eye patch, just like his previous one, passed Todd's mind.

After thinking about it, Todd suddenly inclined his head.

And—

Todd: “On which side did Jamal have that eyepatch…?”

Chapter 28:
Victory Conditions

—The news that the captured Arakiya had been taken sent a tremor through the conference hall.

Kuna: “What a disgrace. Even Holly’s bow couldn’t catch up to him, they got away.”

Holly: “Right~”

The two people who hung their heads and apologized were Holly, who held a bow in her hand, and Kuna.

With Holly, the bearer of bad news, alongside her, Kuna had immediately gone up to the top floor to chase after the runaway, Arakiya. Then, using a combination of Holly’s arm strength and Kuna’s eyesight, they had fired at the fugitives, just as they had done with Todd when Subaru and the others had originally escaped Guaral.

However, the fugitives had been able to deal with the two-man long-range snipe, and successfully outmaneuvered the both of them, taking Arakiya away.

Kuna: “One of them stayed behind as a decoy, and the other one took the Divine General. We can’t let it end like this, we have to go after them…”

??? and ???: “—It is pointless.”

The frustrated Kuna, her nose wrinkled in regret, had her words interrupted by two voices.

The same exact words were uttered simultaneously by both Abel and Priscilla, sitting motionlessly at the roundtable. The two glanced at each other, and Priscilla closed her eyes.

It was a sign that she wanted to hand it over to Abel.

Abel: "…It was a way to get behind our lines with a small number of people, achieve a singular goal, and escape. The two had their roles clearly defined in case they got split up. Their courage in deciding to do it, and the judgment to escape, are worthy of appraisal. They shall not be caught even if someone is sent to chase them."

Kuna: "—Hk, but even so…"

Abel: "In less than half a day, Arakiya shall wake up. If that happens, any pursuers we send her way will not pose a chance. And if they change their mind and return to the city, it shall also be futile. Let me tell you, we shall not have the same luck twice. At the very least, I would state that it would be quite reckless, to make a stand with our current forces."

Kuna: "Guh… Hk."

Holly: "Kuna… What Abel's saying is right~."

By rattling off a string of words, Abel tried to discourage Kuna's insistence. Holly, standing beside her, gently patted Kuna on the shoulder as if to offer some consolation.

Being a representative of the chieftain at the roundtable, and confident in her archery skills, Kuna must have felt bitterly disappointed. However, despite his harsh way of putting it, Subaru nodded in agreement with Abel's argument.

The Imperial Soldiers who had invaded the prison would not have dared to challenge them without a chance of winning. They had set an objective that was achievable under their circumstances, found a way to beat the odds, and executed it.

Naturally, they would not do anything half-hearted like a one-way trip, so they must have had an appropriate plan for escape.

Priscilla: "No matter how you spin it, that thing's fate did not end here. With that as the case, I am sure it has a role to play still."

Subaru: "Priscilla…"

Priscilla casually threw those words into the air upon the fall of silence.

For Subaru, who had been discussing the treatment of Arakiya just before, his feelings about her not being executed and having been taken away without being able to talk to her were complex.

But what did Priscilla, who had taken the stance of staying out of Arakiya's life and death, think of her being taken? That could not be read from her crimson eyes.

Al: "So, in the end, what are we gonna do about that girl, Arakiya? Have you decided to leave her be?"

Subaru: "…If she's been taken away, there's nothing else we can do."

With a pained look on his face, Subaru responded to Al's words, who was incapable of reading the mood.

Having managed to deal with Kuna's and Holly's sniping, they could not expect anyone with only half-decent skill to take pursuit of the fugitives. In that case, this limited who they could choose for the pursuit, and all of those with good skills could not be permitted to be absent from Guaral at the moment.

Despite all his efforts to come up with a solution, Subaru's strength lay in surprise attacks, which made him particularly ill-suited to occasions in which his opponent took the initiative. And this state of affairs made that clear.

Subaru: "By the way, I don't think it's likely, but what if they're still hiding in the city, pretending to have escaped?"

Zikr: "I do not think so. Although the city is claimed to be solidly fortified, there are other secret paths besides the two large gates, but all of them have been meticulously closed off in the past few days."

Subaru: "Meticulously…"

Zikr: "Yes. We were expecting you to use the secret passages to infiltrate the city. We certainly did not believe that you would attempt a reckless plan to break through from the front.”

He had been caught flat-footed, but Zikr responded calmly without a trace of displeasure.

As the commander-in-chief of the Fortress City, it was a matter of course to be wary of any secret pathways. However, the defensive stance taken under Zikr’s leadership lent a tailwind to the soldiers who had taken Arakiya and fled.

Zikr: “Perhaps the soldiers who took the General First-Class were part of the search party for the secret paths. As Abel-dono said, they are not amongst those who would take up a challenge without a prospect of victory. That being the case, I wonder if they were able to do it because they knew there was a way out.”

Subaru: “Isn’t it possible to find the location of the paths you eliminated on a map?”

Zikr: “—. It would be possible to make a map, but not right now. The city has fallen and the soldiers are very shaken. This chaos will not settle any time soon.”

Subaru: “… If only this were a game, it’d be that easy.”

Were this an act in a video game, once one got the commander of the defeated enemy to join their side, and the subordinate units would likewise ally themselves. However, reality was not a game. In a game, soldiers were represented by numbers, but each of them had a life of their own here.

After mulling it over for a while—

Subaru: “Holly-san, are you injured?”

Holly: “Hm? Are you worried about me~? Natsumi is so kind~.”

At Subaru’s inquiry, Holly threw her arms up while smiling broadly. She showed her large biceps to emphasize that she was alive and well.

Holly: “I’m a little banged up, but I’m not badly hurt, so I’ll be fine in no time~.”

Subaru: “I see. I’m glad to hear that… But.”

When Subaru fumbled his words and dropped his gaze, Holly put a puzzled look on her face. Noticing Subaru’s inner thoughts, Kuna scratched her head with an “Ah.”

Then—

Kuna: “Some of the guards we had standing inside the building have been killed. They were all dead, so we couldn’t do anything.”

Subaru: “…Some? Tell me how many?”

Kuna: “…Seven men.”

When asked the exact number of casualties, Kuna, even though hesitant, answered.

Seven. The number of casualties stabbed deeply into Subaru’s heart. —On the top floor, Rem had been making a great deal of continuous effort to treat the Imperial Soldiers and Shudraqians who had gotten injured in Arakiya’s attack, and they had not received any reports of deaths. They had not received those, but—

Subaru: “…How’s this a bloodless siege?”

Brushing up his long black wig, Subaru let out a heartbreaking breath.

The bloodless siege, which he had undertaken with such vigor, and which he had said he would accomplish, was supposed to succeed in bringing about the fall of Guaral without loss of life. Yet instead, it had resulted in many deaths.

His promise had been broken; even if he were accused of being a liar, he would not be able to retort. Even if no one accused Subaru of lying, Subaru would condemn himself as one despite that.

Because he was the biggest liar here—

???: “—A bloodless siege?”

Overhearing Subaru’s mutterings, a voice repeated to themselves as if reflecting on those words.

It was Priscilla, leaning on the round table, resting her cheek on her hand. In an unusual expression, she had slightly raised her well-shaped eyebrow and studied Subaru.

With that expression on her face, Priscilla prefaced her statement with a single word, “You”.

Priscilla: “I thought I heard a very foolish thing. Did you really believe that you could bring down an entire city without shedding blood? In the middle of this war, without an overwhelming military force?”

Subaru: “…Yeah, that’s right, my bad. No, it was really my fault, wasn’t it? After all, at the end of the day, it was my mistake…”

Priscilla: “It was merely a stupid idea, that is what amazed me. I am astonished that you would even attempt to put that pipedream into practice. —Abel, are you insane?”

Abel: “—. The plan itself was sheer madness to begin with.”

The question was directed at Abel, who crossed his arms and replied quietly.

Subaru’s proposed plan was pure madness. In fact, anyone that heard the outline would probably agree. And yet, Abel had gone along with it.

Priscilla, who was apparently acquainted with him, did not seem to understand it.

Priscilla: “Looking at the Empire from the throne made you that much more lax. There is no war without sacrifice. There is no pride without bloodshed. That is the way of the Empire, is it not?”

Abel: “I have no intention of disobeying the code of the Sword Wolf. I said it was madness, but the odds were in my favor. In fact, if it weren't for Arakiya's presence, the siege would have been bloodless."

Priscilla: "…"

Abel: "It was not the plan that went wrong. It was my judgment. Priscilla, I shall not allow even you to make a fool of my military strategist's offering. It was my decision. The blame lies with me."

Subaru: "Oh…"

Abel confronted Priscilla head-on with a statement that had been far too unexpected.

Abel's words and actions were clearly in defense of Subaru, even though he had been appointed to the unheard-of role of military strategist. He could not interject between the dangerous standoff of the two.

Al: "What's the matter, bro? He likes you an awful lot, looks like you're getting a big promotion."

Subaru: "…My position as Emilia-tan's knight and Beako's guardian's good enough for me. I don't want to be given any more positions I'm not familiar with."

Subaru pushed Al away from him, and also pushed away the responsibility that was pressing down on him.

However, thanks to Abel's protection, Priscilla's attention seemed to have turned in that direction. In spite of that, this did not heal the wound to Subaru's internals.

The responsibility for the lives lost should be placed on Subaru, the one who had come up with and implemented the plan.

Al: "You can't save them all, bro."

Al muttered, fiddling with the metal fittings on his helmet, as he looked at Subaru's profile. When Subaru glanced at him, he turned his gaze up towards the ceiling, and said, Al: “You can’t save all the people you get involved with. No one’s stopping you from saving them, but your heart’s gonna be broken while doing so. I don’t recommend it.”

Subaru: “Al…”

Al: “We all live and die as we please. Like you said bro, it ain’t a game. It’s up to them to take care of their own lives.”

This was the cynical attitude that Al sometimes displayed.

On one hand he was giving a sermon to Subaru, on how tragic events happened and that he should accept them as-is, although there seemed to be good advice and counsel there. On the other hand, it also felt like the admonishment of an obstinate child.

It was a sound argument, to some degree.

In fact, Al’s words were right. Saving everyone and anything was not possible, and there would be no end to it if he did decide to save them all. That was why Subaru had never been able to save every last thing till this point.

The sheer scale of war was different. —Could he really say that his choice was correct?

The number of lives that could be saved by a single action taken by Subaru did not even reach ten, much less a hundred.

Priscilla: “This is even worse than farcical, you know.”

While Subaru and Al were talking, Priscilla and Abel continued their standoff.

To Abel who took the blame, Priscilla pulled out a fan from her cleavage and pointed the tip of it at the conference hall—No, at the entire city.

Priscilla: “Even in a situation in which you managed to successfully bring down the city with the help of your military strategist, you shall not be able to repeat the miracle of driving Arakiya away a second time. Will that method ever work again?”

Abel: “Indeed, there shall not be a second time.”

Abel nodded without hesitation in response to Priscilla’s question.

With the mention of the method that had driven away Arakiya, a thought also occurred to the frowning Subaru. —There had been a moment during Al and Arakiya’s bout in which her behavior had become strange.

Subaru: “That wasn’t something that Al did…”

Al: “What? Yeah, it wasn’t me. In the first place, if it were me, I would’ve done it a little smarter. You know, I was the one who got bounced and thrown off.”

Subaru: “That’s right.”

Now that he mentioned it, it had not gone down very well, even with Al’s skills.

The conversation between the two drew the attention of the conference hall to Abel. Only he could tell what somehow happened, and so he sniffed, being annoyed with the gathering attention.

Abel: “Arakiya is the Spirit Eater. She feeds on the spirits in the air and absorbs their power.”

Subaru: “Spirit, Eater…?”

Subaru had no recollection of hearing it before, but the unsettling title made his eyes widen.

He had already guessed that the Vollachian Empire had different rules and a different environment compared to Kingdom of Lugunica, but the idea of a Spirit Eater was quite the novelty.

Subaru himself was a Spiritual Arts User who borrowed the power of spirits, but this sounded distinctly different, and to put it simply —

Subaru: “I definitely don’t want to bring Beako into this… Is being a Spirit Eater a common thing?”

Priscilla: “No, it’s not. Spirit Eating was originally one of the secrets of the tribes that lived on the borderlands of Vollachia. But it was so powerful that the technique was banished, and the method to possess it lost.”

Abel: “At least, as far as I know, there are no known Spirit Eaters outside of Arakiya. If there had been, I would have politely protected them. That was the Observers’… No, it matters not, now.”

Not wanting the conversation to get off-topic, Abel shook his head, as he encouraged them to get back to the topic at hand with “Returning to the main topic”.

Subaru, who was relieved to hear that Spirit Eating was not a common practice, and that Beatrice was no longer in danger of being munched on, asked,

Subaru: “So how did you confuse the Spirit Eater, Arakiya?”

Abel: “I did not confound her. —I just gave her Mana poisoning.”

Al: “Mana poisoning… Haha, I see. That’s a very clever thing to do.”

Abel’s answer made sense, and Al nodded admiringly as he stroked his chin.

Subaru had heard of the term “Mana poisoning” before, and then it clicked.

Subaru: “As I recall, it was something like, people who are hypersensitive to Mana tend to get sick when they go to places where the concentration of Mana is really high.”

Priscilla: “Arakiya is susceptible to that kind of influence, due to her Spirit Eater characteristic. It is a prerequisite to have a reasonable level of resistance to spirits, in order to take them in. However, if you go beyond that principle and try to make Arakiya sick off Mana, you shall end up with…”

Abel: “Yes, she made me utilize one of my treasures. Including that which he has already used before, I hold nothing else on hand.”

Whilst saying “that”, Abel nodded towards and indicated Subaru. That made Subaru go “Treasure?”, and he tilted his head to the side whilst raising his eyebrows.

Even though Abel had stated that Subaru had used one of his treasures, he honestly had no clue at all as to what he meant.

Subaru: “What treasure are you talking about? When did I get your…?”

Abel: “During the Lifeblood Ritual, you broke the ring to cleave the Witchbeast’s horn off. That’s the one.”

Subaru: “Ah…”

He’d lost track of it, but it brought back memories of a ring he had borrowed, which allowed him to cast magic.

In the throes of battle, he had no choice but to hit the Elgina’s horn with said ring, shattering it and snapping the Witchbeast’s horn, leaving Subaru’s arm and the ring in shambles.

And something else that was mentioned in the same breath, was what Abel had made use of in the fight with Arakiya?

Abel: “As I dropped from the balcony, I shattered the ring I had hidden. It took a while for the Mana it contained to flood the area around it, but…”

Al: “So that Arakiya girl was like that because she got Mana poisoning. Oh come on, I got my ass kicked by that girl.”

Subaru: “Did you pull that little trick at that moment…?”

Even though they were all in a battered and wounded state, Subaru tipped his hat off to Abel’s unwillingness to give up. That he was still searching for a way to win even though he was being cornered by the second-strongest ranking General in the Empire was admirable.

Subaru's resilience was quite good, but his intelligence was so far removed from Abel's that he could not get over the difference between a bad move and a desperate counterattack.

In any case—

Subaru: "Isn't this an original plan prepared specifically for Arakiya? It's very bold of you to prepare such a plan when you didn't know she would be going against you."

Abel: "The more people one keeps close, the more one must prepare for the time of their betrayal… Arakiya in particular, I never knew when Arakiya would turn against me."

Priscilla: "—However, you only get one chance to use your wiles. It is not easy to procure enough Magic Stones to give a person Mana poisoning. It shall be essential to secure a decent fighting force before the next time around. But."

Having declared that much, Priscilla cut off her words meaningfully.

Covering her mouth with her fan, Priscilla narrowed her crimson eyes at Abel. With a somewhat probing, testing look in her eyes, she let out a small breath and,

Priscilla: "Adding the People of Shudraq to your ranks was expected… However, it is difficult to see how you could be foolish enough to adopt a naive military strategist's plan for a bloodless siege of the Fortress City."

Abel: "…"

Priscilla: "At this rate, I shall never be able to advise my collaborators to support you."

Subaru: "Collaborators?!"

Subaru was astonished by Priscilla, who had said it in a matter-of-fact and natural way. It was not just Subaru who was surprised, but everyone in the conference hall except Abel and Al.

Aside from Priscilla's companion, Al, it seemed unreasonable that Abel was also not surprised, but Subaru opted to not mention it.

Subaru: "Wait, wait, wait, this is going all over the place! Collaborators… In the first place, I don't understand your position. I heard that you came to help Abel, but…"

Priscilla: "I am not here to lend aid. Do not listen seriously to the ramblings of my clown."

Subaru: "I get it! I don't care if you've come to help Abel or not. That's not the point. What I want to hear, is your ultimate goal."

As they heard, the immediate subgoal was to have some dialogue with Abel.

However, what Subaru desired to know was why Priscilla—why her, Al, and possibly the other collaborators they had brought alongside them, were in the Vollachian Empire to begin with.

On top of that, it would be best if he knew whether they were willing to side with Abel or not.

Subaru: "Answer me. Honestly, I and everyone else here aren't sure what to think of you."

Priscilla: "That is hubris at its finest. I do not care what you plebeians think of me. I shall do what I wish to do. After all…"

Subaru: "—The world is made to suit you, isn't it?"

Priscilla gave a snort at Subaru's tracing of her philosophy, which was familiar to his ears.

Then, noticing the increased number and sharpness of the glances directed at her, Priscilla shut one eye.

Priscilla: "Mine aim, is to restore the Emperor to the throne he was ousted from. If I do not, I shall be receiving a constant stream of annoying visitors."

Abel: "It goes without mentioning that those assassins were not dispatched by me.”

Priscilla: “I did not even suspect it. Henceforth, I took the trouble to arrive here. Or, it would be more accurate to say that I had my wings carry me.”

With one eye closed, Priscilla answered Abel and turned her gaze upward. Without the ceiling present, what could be observed was the night sky beyond.

More to the point, it was not just the sky, but an existence that made the sky its own—

Subaru: “No way, did you and Al just fly in from the sky?”

Al: “Oh, it’s like a flying dragon express service. To be honest, I thought it’d be the end of the world when the Princess jumped off by herself. I certainly couldn’t follow, so I couldn’t get down until it lowered itself a bit.”

Subaru: “A flying dragon… The water dragons in Pristella scared the hell out of me.”

In addition to the water dragon, which was a fantasy creature aside than the ground dragon, the existence of flying dragons surfaced.

From what he had heard, flying dragons were extremely ferocious and required specialized skills to be tamed. Since there tamers capable of that were not numerous, being able to ride a flying dragon in the first place was a rare thing.

Subaru: “In other words, the person who can provide a flying dragon express delivery is a collaborator of Priscilla’s?”

Priscilla: “Do not perform lowly deeds such as picking apart people’s words. In your case, your lowliness outweighs your cleverness. Polish up your pretty face. You are still capable of looking good if you fix your makeup.”

Subaru: “If I fix my makeup now I’d definitely be a crazy person, right…?”

Now that she mentioned it, the fact that he had not been able to shed his womanly attire thus far might be regarded as a problem, but the people present here could read the atmosphere, so they did not touch the issue.

Anyway, he was getting way off track again, however—

Subaru: “If the goal is to get Abel back on the throne, does that mean we can cooperate with each other?”

Priscilla: “In truth, I cannot give you a straightforward assent. —I have not forgotten my earlier words. If he does not possess the qualities of an Emperor, there will be no point in bringing him back.”

Abel: “…”

Abel glared at Priscilla, his gaze sharpened as he was questioned about his own qualities as an Emperor to his face.

What Priscilla saw as a concern, was the Bloodless Siege proposed by Subaru and approved by Abel—not so much the failure to carry it out, but rather the problem of the idea to begin with.

As per the way of Vollachia, naïveté could be fatal. In fact, lives had been lost because Subaru’s endgame had been naive. Her disapproval was irrefutable.

However—

Abel: “I shall reclaim the throne. No matter what anyone says, that much is certain. —Priscilla, no matter what you may state, that much remains indisputable.”

With Subaru having fallen silent, Abel took his place and made a strong declaration.

It was the same, or perhaps an even more passionate declaration than the one he had made upon revealing his true identity and divulging that he would take back this country in front of Subaru.

Priscilla: “…”

Hearing Abel's resolve, the expressions on the faces of those in the conference hall shifted.

Kuna and Holly had the will to continue fighting as the People of Shudraq, while Zikr bowed his head as if he were in the presence of something divine. Al turned to Priscilla to see her reaction, while Priscilla's eyes narrowed as she continued to assert herself, undaunted.

Priscilla: "Your spirit is undiminished, but reality is not. In fact, you have been forced to abandon your throne."

Abel: "…"

Priscilla: "The circumstances are already apparent. The question is, who set it in motion? Whose plan was it?"

Abel: "—I am certain it was Prime Minister Berstetz who brought it all to fruition."

Abel answered Priscilla's question with a hint of hostility in his dark eyes.

The Prime Minister's position was at the top of the state government, as it was closely associated with the Emperor. If the pinnacle of the armed forces were a general or the head of a knightly order, then the Prime Minister may be said to be the pinnacle of civil services.

In any case, it could be said that being second-in-command made it easy to carry out betrayal.

Priscilla: "That old tree. How dare he waste what he got from Lamia?"

Abel: "Of course, I had foreseen his rebellious intentions and prepared accordingly. But…"

Abel broke off there and exhaled quietly.

It was a reaction that was very much unlike him, the first time he had displayed anything close to fragility. As Emperor, he had never wavered, even when forced to leave his position, but this was the first time he had shown a faint weakness.

The cause of this weakness was not the Prime Minister's betrayal—

Abel: "With Chisha Gold watching over me… I was unable to see through the rebellious intentions of the Nine Divine Generals' Fourth Rank."

Zikr: "—Ridiculous, General First-Class Chisha?!"

As Abel spat out his ashamed thoughts, Zikr was incapable of containing himself and raised his voice.

Zikr, as a General Second-Class of the Empire, must have been familiar with the name of this particular member of the Nine Divine Generals, a name that Subaru was not.

Attracting the gaze of those at the roundtable, Zikr stroked his ample hair and spoke—

Zikr: "General First-Class Chisha is unique among the Nine Divine Generals, in terms of his capability. The General First-Class himself is more famous for his wisdom than his military prowess, and he was the one who supported His Excellency Vincent the most during the Imperial Selection Ceremony…"

Subaru: "Does that mean he was his right-hand man? You mean this guy was betrayed not only by his political right-hand man, the Prime Minister, but his long-time right-hand man, the General, too?"

Abel: "Do not utter those words again. My right arm is still attached to my right shoulder."

Subaru: "When you say that now, it just sounds like you're just trying to be tough…"

Listening to Zikr's explanation, Subaru was surprised by Abel's popularity, which was unexpectedly lacking.

However, keeping the Vollachian Empire's radical ideology in mind, an Emperor who was deemed insufficiently powerful would immediately be rebelled against, so perhaps these situations were not all that rare.

Subaru: “Is it common for Emperors to run for cover in this country?”

Abel: “Since I have been on the throne, there have only been two times in which I was pursued, at least formally.”

Subaru: “But you’ve got a record!”

Abel: “Nonsense. It was the Kingdom’s Royal Guard who dragged me around in that previous venture. If you want to complain, you can take it up with them.”

He gave Subaru a seriously disappointed look, he took the hint and held his tongue.

He thought that Julius had once mentioned that he had gone to the Empire as an emissary, but he had not thought it had anything to do with that. If so, the world was too small.

Al: “Ah, so His Excellency the Emperor was chased from the throne by his confidants and aides, and Lil’ Miss Arakiya’s become an enemy as well… Doesn’t that sound dangerous? Don’t you have an ally or something?”

Abel: “Another one of the Nine Divine Generals, Goz Ralfon… He was instrumental in my escape. Were it not for him stalling for time, I would not have been able to activate the transfer mechanism.”

Zikr: “Oh, as expected of General First-Class Goz…!”

Abel: “However, if the Nine Divine Generals, other than Chisha and Arakiya, have too turned against me, I do not know how Goz alone could have survived. It is far more likely that he was killed.”

The existence of any Divine General who had risked their lives to protect Abel was a hope, albeit a very fleeting one. However, Zikr with a “No” shook his head, Zikr: “If I may be so bold, I have not received any news of the death of General First-Class Goz. Whether he perished in battle or from illness, the death of a man of General First-Class Goz’s status cannot be hidden for long.”

Abel: “Then there remains the possibility that he is being held captive.”

Zikr: “Perhaps. No, surely! For a warrior of the calibre of General First-Class Goz, that is likely the case!”

At Abel’s words, Zikr bowed reverently.

If he had earned this kind of respect from Zikr, then this Goz must be a very reliable man. Or maybe a woman, contrary to the stern name.

Priscilla: “—With the Prime Minister and the Nine Divine Generals as foes, the Empire is very much a place of certain death.”

Priscilla, who had finished listening to the conversation before interjecting uselessly, muttered that. In agreement with her words, Subaru raised his hand, and,

Subaru: “Hey. I know it’s a tad late, but what if Abel comes forward as the Emperor? That way, the people who’re quietly running the government in the Imperial Capital can be branded as rebels and traitors…”

Al: “Unfortunately, it’s impossible to expect an angry populace and soldiers to kill the administration’s coup-d’état before the battle even starts, bro.”

Subaru: “I wasn’t thinking something that crazy, but why not?”

Abel: “—Because this is the Vollachian Empire, where the powerful are respected.”

Subaru’s suggestion was rejected, and Al’s words were supplemented by Abel’s.

The Emperor, removed from his throne, folded his arms, his shapely eyebrows slightly furrowed.

Abel: “If I come forward and announce my intention to reclaim the Imperial Capital myself, I would be welcomed. But that does signify that they shall support me. What was taken from you, you must take back yourself. That is how it is.”

Subaru: “Not only goods and lands, but also the Emperor’s throne…”

Abel: “There are no exceptions… Therefore, I know what must be done.”

Subaru, who was attempting to wrap his head around the situation, was surprised by Abel’s words.

Just when he thought he was at a loss, Abel’s answer was rather the opposite. He stood up and slowly put his hands on the roundtable.

And—

Abel: “General Second-Class Zikr, the map.”

Zikr: “Yes! Right away!”

When told to do so, Zikr sent instructions to the Imperial Soldiers waiting in the corner of the room.

They immediately peeled off the map hanging on the wall of the conference hall, and moved to spread it out atop the roundtable.

It was a world map showing, well, the entire world, including Vollachia.

Abel: “Here we are, in the east, at the Fortress City of Guaral. And the Imperial Capital of Lupugana, which must be reclaimed, is roughly in the center of the Empire.”

Subaru: “…Vollachia’s pretty big.”

The map showed Subaru the size of the country, which he had not been aware of till now. The Vollachian Empire, which occupied the southern portion of the world map, was the largest when compared to the other countries.

The Buddheim Jungle, which had posed so much trouble for Subaru and the others to get through, was merely a small geographic area from the perspective of the whole of Vollachia.

Abel: “Each city in the Empire is controlled by its own Mayor or Lord. As is the case with Guaral, each of these cities possesses its own autonomous military force and shall not hesitate to fight in case of an emergency. —We shall add these to our forces and secure the strength required to retake the Imperial Capital.”

Subaru: “…I get this is a pattern of kingship in a conquering simulation.”

Abel: “You seem to be displeased.”

Subaru: “Of course. It was an enormous undertaking just for Guaral. I don’t think it’s going to keep working out this way.”

Pointing to the map, Subaru had managed to keep up with Abel as he explained. He could manage to keep up with him, but this was a matter of logic, not emotion.

As stated earlier, this was not a game. There was no way that a method that held water when it came to simulation RPGs and things of the sort would be easily applied in actual reality.

Abel’s opinion seemed to be quite optimistic.

Nevertheless—

Abel: “There is a way to dispel your concerns. Rather, there are essential conditions that must be met in order to do what I must.”

Subaru: “Essential conditions…”

Abel: “—By securing Divine Generals.”

Upon hearing that reply, Subaru’s eyes went wide.

That was natural. After all, Abel had just told them that he had been expelled from throne because of the Nine Divine Generals' treachery.

Those of the Nine Divine Generals that favored him were unaccounted for, and the two members of the Nine Divine Generals they were aware of, were already enemies.

As for the others—

Subaru: "What about the other Divine Generals…?"

Abel: "There."

Abel pointed a finger at the sudden question and nodded at Subaru's agitation. Then, he surveyed the faces of everyone except Subaru,

Abel: "The people of the Empire must be strong. The Nine Divine Generals are the incarnation of this rule. In other words, if one wishes to be the supreme ruler of the Vollachian Empire, you must unite the Nine Divine Generals."

Subaru: "So, in other words…"

After Abel's words, Subaru's eyes widened as he realized what was to follow. Abel's cheeks twisted at Subaru's reaction, as he smiled belligerently.

And then—

Abel: "—The Blue Lightning, Cecilus Segmunt. The Spirit Eater, Arakiya. The Vicious Old Man, Olbart Dunkelkenn. The White Spider, Chisha Gold. The Lion Knight, Goz Ralfon. The Master of Enchanted Items, Groovy Gumlet. The Flamboyant, Yorna Mishigure. The Steelman, Moguro Hagane. The Flying Dragon General, Madelyn Eschart."

Subaru: "…"

Abel: "The winner of this battle shall be the one who recruits the most Divine Generals. That is the path toward triumph, and that is the absolute condition I must fulfill.”

Chapter 29:
To Each Their Stance

1

—Securing the Nine Divine Generals; that was the victory condition for reclaiming the Imperial throne.

With the condition for victory presented, along with the names and titles of those necessary, the Nine Divine Generals, Subaru could tell from experience that the air in the room had become tense.

Of course, the names of the Nine Divine Generals, which would be familiar to people in the Empire, were all novel to Subaru.

Subaru: "…If this were a manga or an anime, it would have been an exciting development to see all the names of the Generals revealed at once."

However, as this was something that was actually happening to him, the development was one he could not be openly pleased about.

As Abel mentioned the name and corresponding title of each of the Nine Divine Generals, Subaru could imagine how troublesome each one of them would be, with each of them sounding effective in how they were talked up.

As Arakiya's nickname, Spirit Eater, corresponded with a special trait of hers, Subaru could imagine that the others' aliases were somewhat related to their abilities or fighting methods.

Subaru: "The only ones whose names give me a clear image of their abilities would be the Master of Enchanted Items and the Flying Dragon General?"

The two names he pointed out were probably both derived from the way they fought and the tools they used.

The other nicknames were probably inspired by their appearance or anecdotes of their exploits. In China's Romance of the Three Kingdoms and the Water Margin both, characters would often take on aliases for such reasons.

Come to think of it, one could say that those stories were also about taking a country. Unfortunately, Subaru was not very familiar with them, having only a cursory knowledge of their contents.

Subaru: "This is no time to be spacing out. Well, I've heard that securing the Nine Divine Generals is the condition for victory, but there are some things I want to ask you."

Abel: "What. Is there any room for doubt?"

Abel raised one eyebrow and placed his hand on top of the map on the table as Subaru recovered from his initial shock.

If he thought that he had explained everything with that, he would be the ultimate example of a clever man short of words. Compared to the other people here—Zikr and the others, not to mention the People of Shudraq, Subaru had far less information about the Vollachian Empire.

Subaru: "So there's clearly room for me to doubt. If you keep skipping explanations because you yourself know what you're talking about, the people around you won't know what you're thinking about exactly."

Abel: "I shall take that as advice and ignore it. State your question."

Subaru: "Keep that "ignoring" bit to yourself…"

Subaru sighed as Abel crossed his arms and responded arrogantly. Then, having resigned himself to the attention gathering around him, he said, "Ready?", as he held up four fingers on one hand and five fingers on the other.

Subaru: "There are Nine Divine Generals, but thankfully that's an odd number, so it's easy to understand that it comes down to a battle of numbers. But the ones who favor us are unaccounted for, and, right now, Arakiya and this Chisha guy are most definitely enemies. We're already way outnumbered."

They supposedly needed to secure no less than five, but their enemy already held two of the Nine Divine Generals under them.

In addition, it was unclear whether the person who had aided Abel, Goz, was alive or dead. So there was a high chance that one of the cards they could play had been permanently removed from play.

Subaru: "The situation becomes bleaker by the minute. It's good that the victory conditions clear, but is it actually realistic to persuade five of the Nine Divine Generals?"

Al: "Hey hey, bro, I think you're still underestimating the Emperor too much. I said it earlier, but he's already won the Imperial Selection Ceremony. They can't just flat out refuse his request to talk. As long as they don't turn him away at the front door…"

Priscilla: "—Then we shall get the opportunity to behead those who oppose us at the same time."

Subaru: "We need to get them on our side!"

Al's remarks, posing as an attempt to dissolve Subaru's doubts, were incinerated by the extreme comment of his mistress, of all people. They were talking about how to get the Nine Divine Generals on their side, but devising a way to kill the Nine Divine Generals who would not be on their side would be putting carriage before the ground dragon.

Abel: "But the clown in the iron helmet there is correct. In fact, if I state I want to meet them, there would be no General who would refuse. The problem is what happens after we meet."

Al: "Is the clown in the iron helmet me?"

Subaru: "There's no one else with an iron helmet. If you have a problem with him treating you like a clown, you can start with a petition to Priscilla."

After silencing Al's teasing, Subaru returned to the topic at hand.

Subaru: “In the first place, I don’t understand the system of the Nine Divine Generals. I’ve always imagined them as nine Generals who report directly to the Emperor, but doesn’t that mean they’re all in the Imperial Capital?”

Priscilla: “Generals of the First-Class are the cornerstone of this nation. Consider how uselessly vast the Empire is. Even though the Imperial Capital lies in the center of the country, how can they move quickly in an emergency if they all sojourn in the Imperial Capital?”

Zikr: “Yes. Although it has been dramatically reduced during His Excellency’s reign, there is still no end to the fires of civil unrest that smolder in the Empire. Having a firm foothold in the Imperial Capital is not enough to guarantee the safeguarding of the Empire.”

Subaru: “…In other words, the Nine Divine Generals in question are scattered all over, outside the Imperial Capital?”

As Priscilla and Zikr supplemented information, Subaru put his hand on his chin in understanding.

Following a familiar example, Roswaal had also been bestowed with the grandiose title of Margrave of the Western Lands in the Kingdom of Lugunica, and was obligated to act quickly in the Kingdom’s time of need.

Of course, he had the permission to set up a private army in his territory for that purpose. —However, in Roswaal’s case, it seemed that his individual strength was greater than that a poorly-organized army.

Just by raining down fireballs while flying in the sky, he would be able to completely defeat most opponents.

Subaru: “When you think about it, that guy is also quite the cheat unit… I’m a little curious to see where he stands compared to the Nine Divine Generals.”

Kuna: “I don’t know, but I think we’re getting off track here, Natsumi.”

Subaru: “My bad. Anyway, I know now that the Nine Divine Generals are scattered across the country. If that’s the case, am I correct in understanding that not all of them were involved in the coup d’état in the Imperial Capital?”

Abel: “From what I have seen, and from a practical standpoint, I would say so.”

Abel nodded his head to Subaru in confirmation.

To be honest, Subaru was unsure about Abel’s assessment, as he had just been found to be quite unpopular, but the fact that no one around him had pointed it out suggested that it was something that could be accepted for the time being.

Anyway, the good news was, that not all the Nine Divine Generals had become enemies.

The victory condition that the more Nine Divine Generals they secured, the more likely they were to win this battle, made sense. Other than that, if there was one thing that Subaru had doubts about, it was—

Subaru: “Sorry for asking so many questions, but I got an additional question. If the Nine Divine Generals are simply ordered by strength, then priority should be given to the ones of the highest rank, correct?”

Abel: “Yes, that perception is correct.”

Subaru: “Then the one strong enough to be on par with Reinhardt, is Cecilus, right? It’s common sense that we go for that person… wouldn’t he be enough?”

One among the four strongest human beings, those who had made a name for themselves in the Four Great Countries.

If Cecilus, who had been mentioned to be amongst these four, was a person considered to be on par with Reinhardt, then it would be very much as if the outcome of the battle would be decided by that person alone.

In fact, that Reinhardt could win even if he fought everyone in the Kingdom, was an extraordinary expectation and view that had sprouted in Subaru.

So, naturally, he held such sort of presupposition for Cecilus, who was Reinhardt's equal.

However—

Abel: "…It is true that if we secure that person, all the problems of our strength shall be solved in one move."

Subaru: "If that's the case, why do you look so bitter?"

Frowning, Abel's expression was poor as he answered Subaru's question.

While Subaru's expectations did not appear seem to be far off, there was no improvement on his gloomy expression. Abel revealed the reason for this with a small exhale.

Abel: "The reason why securing the Nine Divine Generals is a condition for victory, is because Generals and Soldiers alike shall follow their military orders. The more Nine Divine Generals one possesses under their banner, the more troops shall join your forces. Do you understand?"

Subaru: "—? Yes, I understand. That's why I'm saying we should aim to have the strongest guy on our side. Or is it that him being called the Empire's strongest is not true?"

Abel: "No, there is no question that he is the strongest in the Empire. However, there is a problem."

Subaru: "A problem?"

Abel: "—He is not very popular."

Subaru stopped thinking for a while, due to the words that had been uttered in pent-up frustration.

The words he was told slowly penetrated his brain, as he wondered what the problem was. “Lack of popularity”, that information was digested correctly.

Subaru: “Should you be saying that?”

Abel: “It is factual. His rank is that of the First, amongst the Generals of the First-Class of the Empire, but he holds no authority. Even if I were to give him the power, he would be incapable of doing anything with it. The only thing he can do, is to cut people down.”

Subaru: “You can’t put someone like that in the position of army general!”

Al: “Easy, easy, calm down, bro! That’s just the way of the Empire, you know!”

With that criticism of Cecilus being spoken by Abel, Subaru was held back by Al. With his one arm around Subaru, Al tilted his head to look at Abel, and said,

Al: “Actually, you’ve given him nothing but the title of First. Maybe you should’ve tried giving him the authority he deserves for his position. Maybe he’s been taken advantage of by someone who was sweet-talking him, you know?”

Abel: “Of course, that person being utilised by anyone other than me is not within my wishes. If there were such a danger, I would have disposed of him earlier.”

Subaru: “But you were in the forest, alone and helpless…!”

Even if he said that he was holding the reins, if the actual circumstances differed, then he was just bragging.

In the first place, could the idea that the person labelled as the strongest in the Empire was unable to gather popularity in the Vollachian Empire, dedicated to this strength as it was, be taken seriously?

Subaru: “What about that part, Zikr-san!”

Zikr: “Me, huh?”

Subaru: “Eh, yeah. As a General of the Empire, I’d like to hear your honest opinion. What do you think of General First-Class Cecilus?”

Being probed for information, Zikr spoken “Right then,” and crossed his arms briefly in thought.

Then, nodding several times at the expectant gaze in Subaru’s eyes.

Zikr: “First of all, there is no doubt that Cecilus-dono is the cornerstone of our national defense and the symbol of the strength of the Vollachian Empire. “The people of the empire must be strong”, he is the embodiment of that way of life.”

Subaru: “Oh, that sounds good? So, what is it, then?”

Zikr: “As a person he is carefree, friendly, and has a sunny and pleasant demeanor towards anyone. Overall…”

Subaru: “Overall…?”

Zikr: “Many of the troops fear Cecilus-dono to be an incomprehensible monster and impossible to communicate with on a deeper level. I believe His Excellency is correct in his assessment.”

Subaru: “Your assessment has taken a sharp turn, hasn’t it?!”

Zikr, who had only painted the picture of a good person up to this point, chose his words quite carefully in his evaluation.

Some people would think that he was just trying to be considerate of Abel, the Emperor, but the wrinkles between his eyebrows showed that he was putting in a lot of effort, so he probably told the truth.

In other words—

Priscilla: “It would be unacceptably reckless to even attempt to suppress the First of the Nine Divine Generals with the intent to tip the scales in a single swoop. I cannot comprehend how you would come up with a suitable idea, even if your head was not filled with foolish ruminations."

Subaru: "Shut up! Don't blame me for his lack of popularity! If the Emperor and the Generals aren't popular, it's no wonder a coup d'etat was called!"

Abel: "How many times are you going to repeat this? Do not think that your disrespect shall be overlooked forever."

Receiving sharp glares from Priscilla and Abel respectively, Subaru stuck out his tongue at them.

However, it was true that his plan had been shattered with ease. If securing the Nine Divine Generals was equivalent to securing battle numbers, then securing those who were not popular possessed no merit whatsoever.

Subaru: "In fact, if they're not popular can we leave them alone…?"

Abel: "That is also a problem. That person has the ability to change the course of the war all by his lonesome, depending on the situation. Even if we are capable of securing all of the remaining Divine Generals, there is a good chance that he alone could take my head."

Subaru: "That's a hard guy to handle! He's an absurd hindrance, isn't he?!"

Rushing to secure him was not warranted, but he was too dangerous of a bomb to leave unattended.

It was only now, in a foreign land far away from home, that Subaru realized how much of a good asset Reinhardt was, whose ability and humanity were guaranteed.

Perhaps if he were called out loud enough, he would rush to the neighboring country?

Priscilla: "Let me tell you something, foolish commoner. If you are contemplating summoning the Sword Saint, he cannot cross borders because of the non-aggression-pact. It would be wise not to get your hopes up."

Subaru: “Don’t read people’s minds. I’m not considering it for real… Relying on them only when I’m in trouble isn’t the proper way to treat a friend.”

If used for convenience, just because he could call upon him and have him rush to his side, it would not really be something he could call a friendship.

If the situation were to become really, really bad, he would not be able to say the same. However, till that moment arrived, Subaru was resolved to keep his morals intact.

Priscilla: “So? Foolish commoner being treated as Abel’s military strategist, have you run out of inquiries?”

Subaru: “I haven’t run out of questions yet, and first of all I’m not a military strategist…”

Subaru replied, frowning as Priscilla took a dig at his position.

Then, just as he was about to move on to the next topic of the meeting—

???: “—Miss Natsumi and Village Chief-kun! Excuse me!”

At the same time a cheerful voice resounded, the door was opened, and a new person appeared in the conference hall with vigor.

The one who had arrived was Flop, a beautiful man clad in blue, his long golden hair swaying briskly.

Flop was supposed to be tending to the injured on the upper floor where the damage of Arakiya’s rampage remained. While becoming the focus of all eyes in the room, he looked at Subaru and Abel, and nodded, saying “There you are”.

Flop’s figure was stained all over with blood, accentuating the horror of the makeshift field hospital.

But the fact that he showed up here meant that—

Subaru: “Flop-san, how’s everyone’s treatment?”

Flop: “We just wrapped things up for now! …Hmm? From the looks of it, you’re in the mood for Husband-kun instead of Miss Natsumi? If so, I’ll revert to calling you Husband-kun.”

Subaru: “Well, either is fine. But, yeah, things are getting wrapped up…”

While receiving Flop’s rather oblique words of consideration, Subaru reflected with simultaneous relief and anxiety, upon hearing that the healing process had come to a close.

The relief was simply because of the fact that the aid of the injured had finished. The anxiety was more for the fact that he would hear of the results from the healing mission.

The goal of the “bloodless siege” had already failed.

Seven guards had fallen victim in Arakiya’s extraction. The only question now, was whether any of the wounded would join them.

Flop: “There have been no deaths, Husband-kun.”

Subaru: “Eh…”

Flop: “It was a tough situation for all of us, though. But I think it was thanks to the efforts of Wife-san and Niece-chan. The promptness of Miss Taritta and Miss Utakata as well. Of course, my sister and I had to work hard, too!”

Having read his inner feelings from Subaru’s complexion, Flop gave him the answer first.

Flop boasted about his contributions while pointing at himself, looking rather manly. The answer he had given was concise, so Subaru needed only the time of a heartbeat to digest the information.

However, after his understanding deepened a heartbeat later, a great big sigh escaped him.

Subaru: “No deaths… Hk.”

Flop: “Yeah, it’s a sign that everyone did their best to stay alive. As for me, if it weren’t for my sister protecting me, I would’ve hit my head and died! Hahaha, I’m no match for my sister!”

Subaru: “Yeah, yeah, that’s true. I’m no match for Medium-san either…”

Flop laughed vivaciously while in front of him, whereas Subaru cast his eyes downward and shook his shoulders.

Without exaggeration, without jesting, he was completely of the same opinion. If Medium—or anyone else for that matter, were not present there, this report would never have been heard.

There were lives that had been lost. But there were also lives that had not been lost.

The emotions that brought to his heart were great—

Abel: “—Merchant, what happened to that practitioner of the healing arts?”

Despite Subaru’s excitement, Abel forced himself into the conversation with an indifferent tone..

“Practitioner of the healing arts”, Subaru raised an eyebrow at the unfamiliar sound, and Flop put his finger to his lips. “Practitioner…”, he murmured as he gave it some consideration.

Flop: “Is that… You’re talking about Husband-kun’s Wife-san?”

Abel: “Who else is there? Did you believe there was anyone else in that place who could cast healing magic besides that girl?”

Flop: “No, I can’t think of anyone else! Just…”

Abel: “Just?”

Flop: “I think you should try to say things in a way that makes people like you better, Village Chief-kun. Even when you call out to them, things’ll go much more smoothly if you’re conscious of being friendly!”

Abel raised one eyebrow in response to the incredibly direct cheerful protest in front of him.

The statement that Flop had made was a dignified one, but it was quite a harrowing statement to listen to from the bylines in frankness.

Naturally, to have Rem referred to in a way that reduced her to just her capabilities did not sit well with Subaru.

Al: “That impression does not sound very convincing after those disrespectful words from just now, bro.”

Subaru: “Considering how far we’ve come, I got the right to say that much… Flop-san does too, then, right?”

Al: “Dunno, but I’m dying to hear about your adventures bro.”

It was too turbulent a story to tell, but that was a topic to be delved into some other time.

Regardless of how Abel had put it, Rem’s safety was Subaru’s top priority. Of course, he had confirmed with his own eyes that she held no noticeable trauma.

Subaru: “Did she do anything like work too hard and collapse?”

Flop: “Don’t worry about that, Husband-kun. Of course, all that hard work’s taken its toll on her, but it’s nothing that can’t be remedied with some rest. It’s really wonderful that you have the hardworking Wife-san by your side.”

Subaru: “I see…Well, that’s good.”

Stroking his chest in relief, Subaru was glad to hear Flop’s guarantee.

The situation was what it was. Even though he had to rely on Rem, he was frankly afraid that she would try too hard. What Subaru said mattered not; were it within her capabilities, Rem would not listen to him.

Al: "—Wife-san?"

Al muttered quietly beside Subaru, who had patted his chest in relief.

He put a hand to the chin of his steel helmet, and cocked his head, puzzled,

Al: "I don't think I saw her up above, but did the girl from bro's group come here too?"

Subaru: "The girl from my group… you mean Emilia-tan? No, she didn't come here. How reassuring it would be to have her here… on the other hand, I don't think I would want her to be here."

Emilia's gentle nature and the Vollachian Empire's way of being were probably like water and oil.

Although there was also a chance that Emilia, who tended to be someone who acted before thinking, would find the Imperial approach more comfortable, the cruelty of the Empire itself went much further than that. —Emilia was not suited for the Empire.

Al: "—A wife other than your girl, huh?"

Subaru: "…Just to tell you, we're passing it off as a matter of convenience. To tell you the truth, she's a girl I've decided to treat with that much care. I'll bring her home, no matter what."

Al: "…"

Subaru explained to Al, who mumbled in a low tone with his hand on his chin.

As long as they were also in the Empire, it was impossible for strange rumors to spread from Al's mouth, but he did not want Al to get the wrong idea. He did not want his resolve to get rained on.

Priscilla: "That delicate-looking man, the one they call merchant… Are you one of Abel's subordinates?"

Flop: "No, I'm not his subordinate. My sister and I are in a position of cooperating with Husband-kun and Village Chief-kun. Well, I guess it's appropriate to call him my newest friend!"

Priscilla: "Oh, a friend, huh?"

Priscilla, exchanging words with Flop, loosened her lips at his answer. Hiding her loosened lips with her fan, Priscilla sent a meaningful look in Abel's direction.

Priscilla: "I did not know you were hard at work making friends. It seems the throne of the Emperor of Vollachia has become such that it can easily be vacated."

Abel: "Cease the sarcasm. I do not recall being friends with that man."

Flop: "What are you talking about, Village Chief-kun? We've gone through the verge of death together in women's clothing!"

Abel: "If you give death the slip alongside someone, you become friends immediately? If that is the case, then every single Imperial Soldier is my friend. And the one who has been on the verge of death closest to me, is my enemy."

The perfect rebuttal making use of his own position made Flop hold his tongue upon receiving it.

However, it was a double-edged sword that did not leave Abel unscathed either.

Subaru: "Anyway, Flop-san brought us some good news. I'd like to talk about some more good news as well…"

Abel: "—Wait."

Subaru: "…What is it?"

It was an optimistic subject in a not-so-positive meeting. Interrupting Subaru's attempt to spur him on, Abel cocked his chin at Flop.

Subaru's gaze was guided by that movement, and he also looked over at Flop.

Subaru: “Flop-san?”

Indeed, the reason why Abel pointed at him was because he had noticed the change in Flop’s facial expression.

Flop had not lost his bright, cheerful expression, yet in his eyes, which had always carried a cheerfulness as dazzling as the sun, there was a faint hint of hesitation and melancholy.

Abel: “If you are a merchant, you should be careful about how you talk about things. In that respect, I do not believe you are cut out to be a merchant.”

Flop: “I’ve received quite a few of those opinions, so I have some thoughts on that matter, but I’ll leave it at that for now… Husband-kun, there was something I forgot to mention earlier.”

Subaru: “…”

Giving a sidelong glance towards Abel and his remark, Flop fluttered his eyelashes in melancholy, then directing his eyes at Subaru.

His well-groomed face, and the wistfulness in it, made Subaru’s heart tighten. He could not help but think that he did not want to hear what Flop had to say, but he had no choice but to listen.

In that sense, Flop had a natural talent for making others listen to what he had to say. Were it not for this situation, Subaru would have praised him for his talent as a merchant.

Despite that, however—

Flop: “It’s not unrelated to Village Chief-kun, either. I want Miss Kuna and Miss Holly to come with us as well.”

Now that he was unable to stop Flop from telling him, he hated it, as if it were a cursed talent.

???: “…Abel and Natsumi have come too, huh.”

After being called by Flop, Subaru and the others left the conference hall and went to the upper floor of the City Hall.

In the space that looked like a field hospital, where the wounded had been gathered, the one who greeted Subaru and the others was Mizelda, who had cut off her scorched black hair.

The party that had stormed Guaral had been caught unprepared by Arakiya’s surprise attack, yet Mizelda had been the one to receive the most grievous injuries, having been overwhelmed by the flames in the first instance, and then by the blows exchanged with Arakiya at the end.

After having had her whole body scorched and then swallowed by the tornado, Arakiya’s blow clawed deep into her insides afterwards.

No matter how tough her body was, it was unmistakably a situation that tested Mizelda’s vitality, as if to see how far she could go with Rem’s healing arts, which could not be said to be at their best.

Mizelda: “I’m sorry to call you here. I just thought I needed to tell you as soon as possible.”

Subaru: “Mizelda-san…”

Mizelda smiled thinly as she said this, having taken a seat on an object near the wall.

As one of the most powerful amazonesses, Mizelda’s smile was devoid of the wild demeanor that she had displayed towards Subaru and the others on numerous occasions.

However, the willpower in her eyes was yet to be lost. It was unbalanced.

Mizelda: “First of all, thank you. Thanks to Rem, I’m alive. It’s a miracle.”

Subaru: “…”

Mizelda: “You took the city as well. As Shudraq’s Chieftain, I’m impressed with your work. In addition, I must make a declaration for the future of this war.”

Praising Rem’s dedication and Subaru’s contribution, Mizelda straightened her posture.

And then—

Mizelda: “The position of Chieftain of the Shudraq will be given to my sister, Taritta. I can’t fulfill my duties anymore.”

She patted her right leg, which was missing from the knee down, and announced that her sister would take over the role.

Chapter 30:
Self-Proclaimed Hero Natsuki Subaru

1

Mizelda’s expression was resolute as she declared that she would give up her position as Chieftain.

The dominance of her wild, strong-eyed beauty had not diminished, and she was still exactly the same as when they had first seen her. Through thick and thin, the impression of her being a strong woman remained the same.

And with that notion still present, having lost her right leg, Mizelda had decided to step down from her position as Chieftain.

Everyone: “…”

The ones surrounding Mizelda, were the ones who harbored a deep sense of regret.

The People of Shudraq, those who had witnessed Mizelda’s, their Chieftain’s, strength from up close, would not be able to discard their bitterness and sense of loss that easily.

Kuna’s lack of expression was intensified by her usual coldness, next to Holly, whose usual relaxed state was replaced with a somber expression. A teary-eyed Utakata bit her lip and cast her head down, while all the remaining Shudraqians too, displayed gloomy expressions on their faces.

However, the one most shaken up amidst them all—

Taritta: “Oh, sister, it’s impossible. There’s no way someone like me could be a good Chieftain…”

Mizelda: “—Taritta.”

Taritta: “It’s because it’s you, sister, that you were able to do it! I don’t have the ability to do something like that…”

Shaking her head in disagreement, Taritta frantically pleaded.

That she, Mizelda's younger sister, who had personally been nominated to be the next Chieftain, respected and practically worshipped her elder sister was easy to imagine, based off of every single one her daily words and actions.

For that reason precisely, Taritta was in denial, unable to accept the fact that Mizelda had lost her leg. She appeared even more upset than Mizelda herself was.

Rem: "…It's because of my inadequacy."

Taritta's grief-stricken plea was met by a weak, self-condemning voice.

It came from the other end of the room littered with injured bodies, from Rem, who was in a state of exhaustion, making use of her cane to stand.

She was the sole existence at this place able to use healing magic. Making herself useful, Rem bustled left and right, going from person-to-person endeavoring to save many of the injured. One could only guess from her blood-stained clothes, disheveled hair, and fatigued expression how draining it had been.

Nevertheless, the person in question did not care, and even the appreciative words of Subaru at the beginning had been met with a simple "I'm fine" of dismissal.

Even so, no one had the right to condemn Rem for her lack of strength.

Without her, they would not have been able to attain a result devoid of fatalities from Arakiya's attack. Everyone understood that much.

Therefore—

Mizelda: "Rem, there's no need for you to be worried. I was lucky to get out of the battle with the Imperial General having only lost one of my legs… No, it's because I had your help."

Rem: “Mizelda-san… that may be true, but—”

Mizelda: “I’m grateful to you. I have nothing more to say.”

Rem was blocked from speaking any further, as Mizelda repeated her gratitude.

Louis, her long blonde hair in disarray, snuggled up beside the silent Rem. As the former gently picked at the hem of the latter’s dress, Rem quietly lowered her gaze, placing her hand on Louis’s shoulder.

The remorse and helplessness that Rem was feeling was painfully obvious to Subaru. But the dark-haired handsome man stepped forward faster than Subaru could say anything.

Abel: “Mizelda, you have no intention to change your mind, do you?”

Abel’s question as he stepped forward was met with a nod from Mizelda, who sat on an object.

As she felt the surface of her amputated, bandaged leg with her fingers, she said,

Mizelda: “Ah, I have no intention to. The pact between the Shudraq and Emperor of Vollachia will be kept. From here on out though, you should ask Taritta… or rather, the Chieftain.”

Abel: “—. I understand. Mizelda, you have done a great service.”

Mizelda: “Mh.”

Mizelda had hardened her resolve to resign and Abel showed his understanding to her answer while folding his arms. With that, Mizelda let out a small breath and showed a wide grin.

With a faint smile, she glanced upward at Abel.

Mizelda: “If it’s going to be that way, show me your smile. It’s the duty of a good-looking man.”

Abel: “—. Hmm.”

Mizelda: “Good enough.”

Despite losing her leg only recently, Mizelda was still much too fierce.

Even Abel, arrogant as he was, did not criticize her for her disrespect, and even smiled at her attitude.

Above all, this was proof that the Emperor, whose throne had been usurped, displayed his respect towards the female warrior who lived in the jungle.

And then—

Mizelda: “—Listen up, my brethren!”

Mizelda’s smiling face hardened, as she raised her head to speak in a loud voice.

Hearing the fierce sound of her voice, the Shudraq all straightened their posture as to listen carefully.

Mizelda: “As I told you earlier, I am fulfilling my duty as Chieftain! I now hand over the role of Chieftain to my sister, Taritta! Everyone, obey Taritta from now on!”

Shudraqians: "…"

Mizelda: "This is my last command as Chieftain. —Thank you for your ancestral vows and ancestral pride."

Shudraqians: "—Thank you!"

Mizelda concluded, and the Shudraqians seemed to be reciting something.

He knew not of their customs or longstanding practices. But even Subaru, an outsider and a layman, could sense that it was a ritual of succession.

It was short, informal, and a combination of practical and conceptual inheritance.

In this place, the position of Chieftain of the People of Shudraq had been inherited, going from Mizelda to Taritta.

Taritta: "Sister…"

Mizelda: "Don't lower your head, Chieftain. Your hesitation is our hesitation. Your faltering is our faltering. Your death leads to our death."

Taritta: "…"

Approaching her, Mizelda encouraged the new Chieftain, Taritta, the latter's expression was murky.

That would not make Taritta feel any better at once. However, Taritta must have realized that clinging onto her would not change the situation.

After a few moments of silence, Taritta nodded timidly, and silently.

Mizelda: "…"

The complex emotions that flitted in Mizelda's eyes as she saw this, were something that went unnoticed by Taritta as she lowered her head. —And it was something that no one but her would mention.

2

Subaru: “…To be honest, that was unexpected.”

With the Chieftain’s succession spiel and the damage report concluded, Subaru called out to Abel.

Abel furrowed his brow at being stopped without receiving a concrete subject. Showing displeasure, he then inquired about Subaru’s true intention with a “What was?”,

Abel: “I have much to ponder. You, of all people, should not be bothering me.”

Subaru: “You sure are harsh like always… It’s just that I was surprised. You accepted Mizelda-san leaving the frontlines so readily.”

Abel: “…”

Subaru: “I thought you’d say that all she lost was one leg for sure. I thought you were going to tell her to work herself to death for you.”

Even though he thought it far too extreme, Subaru declared his honest feelings to Abel.

This was the Emperor who had appended the People of Shudraq to his troops for the sake of reclaiming the throne, and someone who had considered polluting the Fortress City of Guaral with poison, if worst came to worst.

Abel—no, Vincent Vollachia, was very much willing to do such things.

Abel: “Nonsense. What in the world would be the meaning of being so forceful?”

However, Abel’s response to Subaru, who had been prepared to hurl words of abuse and his true opinion, was calm and sober.

In front of the disappointed Subaru, Abel looked at the Shudraqians conversing in the distance.

Abel: “Well, I do not wish that my subordinates do any more than they are capable of. Even if I order them to do their utmost, it would be delusional to expect them to go any further than their limits.”

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “If they overperform in comparison to what they had been evaluated as being capable of, the plan shall be thrown into disarray. I simply request nothing more and nothing less than what I demand from my men. And Mizelda has fulfilled her duty. In that case, the only thing I can present her with, is a reward.”

With words, motivate them. With rewards, get them to exceed their abilities. With praise, make them promise to improve next time.

Subaru had always thought, with absolute certainty, that this was how powerful people subjugated their subordinates. Therefore, Abel’s reply was in direct contradiction to what Subaru had in mind.

He would not request labors beyond the capabilities of his subordinates.

It seemed like a good environment for subordinates to work in, albeit simultaneously a lonely one as well.

Abel: “Goes without saying that endeavoring less than what is expected shall be met with punishment. Definite punishment or reward, you do comprehend what it signifies, right?”

Subaru: “…Then, does that mean I’m going to be punished?”

Abel: “If you were my subordinate, that would be correct. But are you my subordinate?”

Staring straight ahead, Subaru’s eyes widened at Abel’s words.

Of course, Subaru did not recall ever becoming Abel’s subordinate.

In his discussion with Priscilla, Abel had treated Subaru as a military strategist, but he did not have any intention of formally becoming one.

Subaru: “It’s not that I’m not attracted to the title of military strategist, but I don’t wish to be something like your subordinate.”

Abel: “And so that is how it is. You are not my subordinate, and therefore, you do not fall under the category of receiving definite punishment or reward.”

Subaru: “Thinking about it, just what are you to me…?”

Because of their situation, they were forced to accompany each other. They did not have the relationship of a master and a servant in the first place, nor any kind of personal one.

They were two people caught in a flow of obstacles, and once these obstacles were cleared, their paths would separate. That was the type of relationship they had.

Calling them friends, or allies, or comrades, would just be untrue. If there was something they could be classified as, it would be crossdressing companions.

Abel: “Some have taken the liberty of calling me a friend, but you have not.”

Subaru: “Ah. I’m a shy guy, so I can’t become your friend that easily.”

Given the current situation, the person who may have been able to call him a friend here would either be a very good person or a fraud, and Flop would be the former.

Anyhow—

Abel: “I shall resume my conversation with Priscilla. Go do whatever else you need to do.”

Subaru: “What I need to do…”

Abel: “It should not be required of me to tell you that.”

Being diced by those almond-shaped eyes, Subaru’s gaze left Abel and headed towards the corner of the room.

There, he found the figure of Rem sitting on the floor. He could not make out her downcast expression from a distance, but there was no doubt that leaving her alone would not do.

He was somewhat annoyed that Abel had told him to do it first, though.

Subaru: “I don’t want you to get in trouble with Priscilla and start another fight. Just be careful with how you talk to her.”

Abel: “I am certain many would advise that you, not I, should be the one to receive those words.”

Hateful words were riposted with further hateful words, and Subaru parted ways with Abel, who returned to the conference hall.

Mizelda’s leg would change the situation of the People of Shudraq, so it would be necessary to take that into account when engaging in discussions with Priscilla.

However, there was little room for Subaru in the conversation between the celestial beings, Abel and Priscilla.

The priority for Subaru was to speak to the only person he could.

Subaru: “—Rem, is now a good time?”

He lightly took a deep breath and calmed himself down, before heading over, towards Rem.

Sitting with her knees folded and her back against the wall, Rem slightly stirred at Subaru’s words, his figure faintly reflected on her pale-blue eyes.

Rem: “…Is that you? When are you going to change your clothes?”

Subaru: “Rem has priority over changing clothes. As soon as this conversation ends, I will change my clothes.”

Rem: “Is that so? Well then, this conversation has ended. Please go change your clothes.”

Subaru: “That’s so crude!”

Subaru was left helpless and raised his voice after Rem’s blunt retort. At Subaru’s voice, Rem’s eyes sharpened and she said, “Please be quiet”.

Then she jerked her chin toward the girl leaning on her left shoulder.

Rem: “At this rate, you’ll wake up the sleeping Louis-chan. Please consider her.”

Subaru: “Well, I…”

Rem: “Or is it just that you do not want to put that much consideration into this girl?”

Subaru: “Don’t say it like that. My bad…”

Taking tiny breaths while sleeping, Louis cuddled closer with Rem.

Louis had been helping Rem to treat the wounded; her white clothes were stained with blood here and there. From what he had learned from Rem’s attitude and from Utakata, she had done exactly as she had been told, albeit poorly.

Naturally, Subaru’s inner thoughts were mixed, though.

Rem: “It throws me off when you make a grim face in that appearance.”

Subaru: “Oh, yeah, my bad. My makeup’s messed up, it’s rather unsightly.”

Rem: “It looked unsightly even when you had it on properly.”

Subaru: “Tohoho…”

Subaru's shoulders slumped in depression at Rem's remark, which was as harsh as ever. Subaru then slowly sat side-by-side with Rem, at her right, opposite of Louis.

He peeked at Rem's protesting gaze, but consciously ignored it.

Subaru: "Rem, you did great. Everyone survived thanks to you."

Rem: "…I'm keenly aware of my lack of power. To tell you the truth, I'm useless."

Subaru: "Rem…"

In response to the words of gratitude, Rem looked down at her hands in frustration. As she regarded those pale fingers, Rem was biting her lip weakly.

Subaru: "You're definitely not useless. Even though your memories are fuzzy, you were able to use your healing magic splendidly and saved a lot of people. But…"

Rem: "I know. If I were whole, this magic wouldn't have been like this."

Subaru: "Like this?"

Rem: "My healing magic. The magic I'm using right now is by intuition, in other words, self-taught. Though with Louis-chan's assistance, I've managed to get it into shape. Even then…"

Rem's words did not continue beyond that point.

The reason why she did not continue after that, was because it was something that went without saying. She knew that, if she put it into words, it would become a blade that she would hurt herself with, and that the pain would console her, albeit slightly.

Complaints, when spoken, would hurt oneself and others. In compensation however, it would lighten one's heart merely a little bit. And Rem disliked the idea of lightening her heart.

It was proof that she truly blamed herself for her inability to save others, because of her lack of power.

Subaru: "…"

Once again, Subaru painfully understood Rem's feelings.

To rue that one could have done more, was more painful than an unreachable wall. It would be even worse when it regarded someone else's future, someone other than one's own.

—The loss of Mizelda's leg had left something weighty in the recesses of Subaru's heart.

It was not a life. But it was not hard to imagine the magnitude of losing one of your four limbs.

The closest example was certainly Al, a one-armed man who had lost his left arm. Additionally, there was the Watergate City of Pristella; during that battle, Ricardo had lost one of his arms in a confrontation against Gluttony.

It had been an extremely shocking event, but it was not a tragedy so remote that it could not happen. In fact, for those who put themselves in harm's way, it may be more appropriate to call it a familiar tragedy.

Still—

Subaru: "That's harsh."

Rem: "…Yes."

Subaru's parched murmur was met with a small nod from Rem right beside him.

This was the first time he had ever gotten a straightforward nod without repercussions, yet he was unfortunately not in the right frame of mind to appreciate it. Rem glanced at Subaru, the latter holding a lump deep in his chest.

Rem: "The previous… If it was the previous me, I wonder how it would've gone…"

Subaru: "…If it was the you when you still had memories?"

Rem: "Yes. If it was the past me's healing magic, Mizelda-san's leg could've been…"

"Could've been saved", Subaru closed his eyes at the words that would have followed.

It was not that he could not comprehend what Rem was thinking. But it was difficult for Subaru, being on the outside, to judge the extent to which the presence or absence of memory had affected Rem's healing magic.

Even if it were possible to quantify the healing power, it would be difficult for Subaru to assess it.

However—

Rem: "…"

Rem, her pale-blue eyes filled with earnest emotion, were directed at Subaru.

If the answer she was looking for was something that Subaru could provide he did not know, but there were only two choices in front of him: "The previous Rem could" or "The previous Rem couldn't".

Which of the two would turn out to be the salvation for Rem?

—Or rather, which of the two would save Rem from being hurt even more?

Subaru: "…Even with your memories, I think it would be helpless."

Rem: "…"

Subaru: "Even healing magic isn't all-powerful. In that case, Rem would have done the best she could."

He replied after a few seconds of agonizing thought, which felt much longer in Subaru's mind.

Even if Rem had her memories, even if her healing magic had been in perfect condition, she would not have been able to save Mizelda's leg.

The truth was that it was not about "ifs".

If they started talking about "ifs", there would be no end to it. It was true that Rem had not been able to salvage Mizelda's leg. But beyond Mizelda, she had saved the lives of many other injured people.

She should be praised for her achievements, and there was no reason for her to blame herself.

In fact, if someone should be blamed, it should be—

Subaru: "I wasn't strong enough."

Rem: "Eh…"

Subaru: "I didn't think enough. I should've examined things more seriously."

Upon hearing this answer spat out by Subaru, Rem's round eyes went wide.

In front of Rem, Subaru clenched his molars with force, and covered his face with both of his hands.

If anyone were to curse the lack of strength, the blame should fall on Subaru.

Subaru: "All of it. It's my fault."

Despite the pompous claims of a "bloodless siege", reality was far from such results.

Arakiya's intrusion had caused many injuries, and her recovery had brought death to multiple guards. There had been no casualties within their own ranks, but taking into account Mizelda's missing leg, how could it be called "bloodless"?

He had failed. It was a pile of failures, and the chance for recovery had been lost.

All he wanted was the best possible happy ending, and what Subaru had obtained was either a so-so happy ending or what should be called a so-so bad ending.

To paraphrase Abel's words from earlier, definite punishment or reward—castigation ought to follow.

Had Subaru been one of Abel's men, it would not be strange for him to have his head chopped off.

—Worst-case scenario, he would have to Return by Death.

Thoughts like these crossed his mind.

In that case, he would most likely go back to the most recent point of return, to the time of the bloody battle against Todd in Guaral. —The fear caused by the recollection of that time made his entire body tremble.

Still, even if he returned to that moment of terror, if he could recover what they had lost—

Rem: "…Why?"

Suddenly, that word struck the brooding Subaru's eardrums.

Raising his face immediately, he was met head-on by Rem's eyes staring right toward him.

Rem's eyes, which had been moist with remorse until just before, were now staring straight at Subaru, holding even stronger remorse within.

Rem: "Why did it turn into your fault?"

Agitated by Rem's gaze, more words were piled up upon Subaru, rendered unable to move.

She extended her hand, her eyes damp, and while indicating the devastated City Hall she said,

Rem: “So Mizelda-san’s leg, Louis-chan’s and Utakata-chan’s injuries, Medium-san’s and Flop-san’s wounds, all of it is your fault?”

Subaru: “They are, yes. It wouldn’t have turned out like this if I’d been more careful about my preparations.”

Rem: “You thought of a plan, and your seemingly reckless plan had a proper pay off. You were able to hold the General Second-Class in place, and get them into the city without letting anyone fight. Just like we planned.”

Subaru: “But then after that…”

Rem: “—Who cares about what happened after?!”

At Subaru’s persistence, Rem raised her eyebrows and made her voice louder. Rem quickly turned her face, and because of this, Louis, who was leaning against her, fell into her lap.

Louis jerked slightly and groaned softly, without waking up. While supporting Louis’s shoulder, Rem puffed slightly and looked at Subaru again.

Rem: “No one could’ve foreseen what would happen after that. The appearance of that half-naked woman and her rampage were all unpredictable. So…”

Subaru: “…”

Rem: “So why are you responsible for all of that?”

Subaru gulped as the question of “why” was once again asked toward him.

If you asked him why, he would think it was the responsibility of one that had power.

In the same way that Rem lamented the lack of power in her own healing magic, Subaru sometimes regretted and lamented the fact that his own Authority could not make up for it. The scope of Return by Death was greater.

The future could improve or worsen, depending on whether Subaru exercised his power.

However—

Subaru: “It’s…”

—It was a truth that could not be told to another, even if the person was Rem.

It was not restricted to merely Rem.

The authority Subaru wielded, this alone he could not propagate to anyone, no matter how open-minded the other party was. —No, he was unable to speak of it even to someone he had established an emotional bond with.

If he told them, there was no way he could disclose the truth without possibly causing the death of that person.

He was afraid of pain. The pain brought about from trying to tell someone about Return by Death was terrifying.

Who could get used to that intense pain that gripped one’s heart no matter how many times they experienced it?

But what was truly frightening was not the pain, but the loss.

Was there anything in this world that was more terrifying than loss?

Was it not because of this extreme fear precisely, that this Authority had been granted to Natsuki Subaru?

Rem: “…Why did you protect me?”

Subaru: “Huh…?”

Rem continued to speak as if she had given up on Subaru, the latter silent and unable to answer.

For a moment, Subaru blinked, unsure of what she was talking about.

Rem: "When that half-naked woman attacked me. I knocked down a pillar, and when that didn't work… That woman came at me, and you stood in front of me."

In a selfless attempt to save her from being attacked by Arakiya, Subaru had stood in front of Rem.

His hands outstretched, he had been desperate to keep any threat away from Rem. At that moment, Subaru did not care if Arakiya were to take his life.

He wanted Rem to outlive him, for even a second longer.

That was—

Rem: "The result of your bloodless siege, the fact that you covered for me at that moment, and even the fact that Mizelda-san lost her leg, you're trying to take on everything on your own…"

Subaru: "…"

Rem: "You're not strong enough to do all those things… At first, I was wary of you because of that horrible smell."

That was where Rem broke off her words, and once she did, she looked down at Louis on her lap.

Gently stroking her golden hair, Rem choked and calmly turned her gaze back to Subaru, saying

Rem: "I, Louis-chan, Abel-san, Mizelda-san and the others, Medium-san and Flop-san are all human beings with a will, and you don't have to get worked up to protect them."

Subaru: "Oh…"

Rem: "Please don't try to do anything like that all by yourself. You don't have to take responsibility for our actions."

Subaru’s mouth opened and closed repeatedly, overwhelmed by the shower of words.

His brain refused to comprehend what was being said, in a prompt fashion. However, an unidentified sense of urgency scorched Subaru’s heart, forcing him to listen no further.

With earnest emotion, directed at a Subaru cursing his own lack of power, Rem bit back.

He had to stop her from saying anything beyond that—

Rem: “You aren’t a special person—”

He knew he should not have allowed her to say it.

Rem: “—Because, you’re not a hero.”

3

Staggering, Subaru walked through the City Hall as if wandering.

He had no destination in mind. It was not even clear when he had started walking, to begin with. When he had come to, he was walking, and if anything, his consciousness still remained in a state of vagueness.

Subaru: “—Hk.”

Suddenly, he was hit head-on by a hard impact.

Taking a look at it, it seemed that he had hit a wall. He was walking while only staring at his feet, that was the reason. Slamming his forehead against the bare wall, Subaru held his aching forehead and exhaled.

Then, without thinking, he slammed his forehead against the solid wall again.

A firm impact and a dull sound, and Subaru felt a stinging pain in his brain.

As he shook his brain from the outside, he felt as if the stagnation that permeated his whole body was slowly receding.

In the same manner, Subaru slammed his forehead against the wall again and again.

Slam, slam, slam—

???: “Hey, hey, stop that, bro.”

As he pulled back to strike again, his shoulder was grabbed from behind. He had been called out.

What came into view when Subaru turned around, was a gaze that met his own from behind a steel helmet directed his way. Still grasping Subaru by the shoulder, the other party cracked the bones in his own neck and spoke,

Al: “I understand the feeling of wanting to die. But no matter how many times you do that, there’s gonna be no end to that sorta thing.”

Chapter 31:
A Talk Between Compatriots

1

Subaru’s eyes widened as a strong arm grabbed him by the shoulders, making him turn around.

The iron helmet staring his way—Or rather, Al’s attitude, was rather unexpected.

Subaru: “…”

Ignoring the force of the arm that had seized his shoulder was somewhat difficult. His intent to halt Subaru from banging his head against the wall and harming himself could be keenly felt.

Al: “You should stop that.”

Subaru: “…Ah.”

Their gazes met, and a breath escaped as the words of restraint were repeated.

Immediately, Subaru felt a pang of shame well up from the bottom of his stomach, as if he had been blamed for his eccentric behavior. It was as if he were a character in a game being made to run against a wall.

Looked like it was exactly like that, including the part where he had not thought anything about it.

Al: “Don’t come crying to me if you end up an idiot after doing that. No, rather, it’s because I couldn’t leave you like that, that I came to stop you.”

Subaru: “…Sorry for the inconvenience.”

Al: “Why so formal? Also, your voice is so raspy it’s scaring me.”

With Al pointing out that Subaru's voice was surprisingly hoarse, he once again ridiculed himself.

The one who had suffered from a complete mental breakdown and the one whose shameful behavior had forced him into this broken state of mind, was none other than himself.

It was natural. After all, it was none other than Rem who had told Subaru—

Al: "—Was it so painful for you to hear what that girl said?"

Subaru: "—Hk."

Al: "Oh, scary! Don't look at me like that. I'm gonna get nervous if you keep staring at me looking like that."

Subaru looked up as if he had been hit by a bullet, meanwhile Al shrugged his shoulders as if jesting.

His glare had caused Al to step back, but Subaru closed the distance between them, and directly tackled Al's earlier statement.

Subaru: "You, were you listening…!"

Al: "I wasn't trying to eavesdrop, you know. You just happened to be in the middle of an important conversation when I went to call you, bro. I just thought it'd be wrong to interrupt."

Subaru: "…"

Al: "Even if you look at me with those distrustful eyes, I ain't lying. Well, after that, bro, you started walking like it was the end of the world, so I got worried and followed you. And sure enough…"

As he said this, Al pointed to the front part of his helmet.

And as he had expected, his fears were right on the mark. It was not like Al was paying particularly close attention, but it was more that Subaru's desperation was clear as day.

The pain from his forehead, which he had been hitting right at the spot Al had pointed at, came back, causing Subaru to cast his eyes downward awkwardly.

Subaru: "…Rem."

Al: "Hmm?"

Subaru: "That's right, what happened with Rem? I mean, after she talked to me…"

Al: "Whoa, whoa, don't tell me the shock you got because of what that girl said made you lose your memories? Please gimme a break. If you get amnesia, bro, I'll lose my only buddy."

Al answered Subaru's question while fiddling with the metal clasp of his helmet with his hand around his head.

Unfortunately, what Al had feared would happen had already come to pass. That said, for Subaru it was something equally grave compared to amnesia, so it was inevitable that his mental balance would be disturbed.

Perhaps seeing Subaru's anxiety in his expression, Al prefaced with "Don't worry about it",

Al: "Even after you turned pale, you were still giving decent answers, bro. So I think the girl didn't suspect anything, yeah?"

Subaru: "Ah, I see…"

After receiving Al's guarantee, Subaru felt the faintest of the faintest senses of relief.

Apparently, Subaru's disgraceful behavior had started only after he had left Rem's presence. If he managed to keep up appearances around Rem, he would not have worried her.

In any case—

Subaru: "Al, about what you just said… What did you mean?"

Al: "Just said?"

Subaru: "…About understanding my feeling of wanting to die, or something."

With his hand on his aching forehead, Subaru asked the truth behind Al's words.

Al: "I understand the feeling of wanting to die. But no matter how many times you do that, there's gonna be no end to that sorta thing."

The statement that he understood the feeling of wanting to die, and that there was no end to it, no matter what one did.

To be honest, he thought that it was not an expression that would bother him much. But at the same time, it was an expression too meaningful to be telling Subaru in this situation.

Rather, that statement seemed as if Al also wished to make Subaru believe that he perhaps knew about Subaru's peculiarity, his Authority.

Al: "—. Oh, that."

Subaru: "Yeah, that. It was… It was a very meaningful thing to say. You…"

—You know something about it, right?

Subaru sent Al a gaze shrouded with suspicion. Even if he strained his eyes, he was unable to peer into the eyes and the emotions hidden behind the cold steel helmet.

And with that, his expression and eyes hidden, Al snorted and spoke,

Al: "I don't wanna say this, but I've been getting along in years, right? I've been in the same kind of mess as you, bro. —I've even acted lame in front of a pretty girl."

Subaru: "Ah…?"

Al: "What's with that "ah"? Stuff like making a big fool of yourself and then wanting to die's a road any man has walked. If you ask me, even at my age, I do it quite often. When I do it, the Princess looks at me like I'm a bug."

With a chuckle, Al patted Subaru on the shoulder and gave him a lesson typical of a senior.

Taking in that content and his demeanor, Subaru stared back at Al, trying to determine if he was being deceptive or serious.

Al: "Hmm? What's up, bro?"

Subaru: "…No, it's nothing."

However, even if Subaru attempted to uncover Al's true intentions, he would be incapable of doing so, as his view was obstructed by black iron.

Till this moment, he had always dismissed Al's outfit as nothing more than one of his eccentricities. But when confronting him, attempting to ascertain his true intentions, he became aware that it was a protection much more potent than expected.

But, at the same time, he also reflected on getting too nervous.

Subaru: "There's no way he knows, huh…"

It was just a coincidence that Al's comment had caught Subaru's attention.

If Al knew about Return by Death, he would have tried to show it to Subaru in a way that was easier to understand. —The very existence of that Authority, of Return by Death, was a perilous affair.

Were he to be aware of it, he would not keep himself from alluding to it, much like Roswaal.

Simultaneously—

Subaru: "—I guess not everyone who gets summoned to another world gets some kind of power."

He was not in the know regarding the details of Al's situation, but he thought it safe to assume this.

Because, if Al possessed some kind of special power dwelling inside him, it seemed to him—that the loss of his left arm could have been prevented.

For example, if Subaru were to lose one of his arms in similar fashion, then he could utilize his Authority to prevent the loss of his left arm before it happened, by—

Subaru: "…Returning?"

With that thought in mind, Subaru stared at his left arm intently.

It was merely hypothetical, but very possible. In the first place, the only reason Subaru had been able to survive with all his body parts intact so far, was because he had been able to make full use of Return by Death.

Many times, among the loops in which he had been robbed of his life, he had suffered the loss of an arm or a leg.

Had he been able to survive without Return by Death, he would have been plenty able to live with missing body parts.

—Subaru had decided that he would never fully rely on Return by Death.

But then, to what extent should he rely on it?

How many of his arms, legs, fingers, and eyes would he have to forfeit before he decided to rely on it? Above all, what if it was not his own limbs, but those of Emilia or Rem?

In the Watergate City of Pristella, Subaru had not Returned by Death for the sake of Ricardo's lost arm. Today as well, he had not Returned by Death because Mizelda had lost her leg.

Even though he knew that, via the use of his Authority, he might have been able to procure better results.

Even though he was aware that the number of those who had lost arms or legs, with the paths they had taken so far cut off, could be reduced.

Subaru: “I’m…”

Al: “…”

Subaru: “I’m a hypocrite.”

Conscious that the Authority he had been bestowed with was a mighty one, he was unable to take a decisive step.

Natsuki Subaru was far too impotent and selfish.

Therefore—

Subaru: “Rem too… Zuah?!”

Al: “You’re in a bad loop, bro.”

He had ended up allowing Rem to speak those decisive words.

Right before he was about to fall into depression, Subaru’s forehead was struck by a powerful finger flick. The strong pain brought tears to eyes, and while uttering “Wha, wha…”, he looked at Al.

Al: “Oh, that made a pretty good sound. Wait, did I hit you right where you slammed your forehead? Sorry, sorry, I didn’t mean to.”

Subaru: “It’s fine… Not, what the hell was that!”

Al: “That was a finger flick. So, the questioning power shifts to me, and I’ll ask the questions now.”

Al pointed the flicked finger at Subaru, whose surprise overrode the pain. Upon having that finger thrust at his nose, Subaru involuntarily backed away and kept his mouth shut.

Then, Al continued with a “Listen”,

Al: “How unsettled are you by that girl’s words? It’s a shame, just because she told you something. Don’t you think so yourself?”

Subaru: “Well, I…”

Al: “I don’t want you to get woozy over something like that. I’m embarrassed to say this, but… I got expectations for you, bro.”

Subaru: “—Expectations?”

Subaru was simply surprised to be given a talk that he had never expected.

Seeing Subaru’s reaction, Al gave a deep nod, and said, “Yes, that’s right”,

Al: “You remember that speech you gave at Pristella, right bro?”

Subaru: “Oh, yeah, I do, but …”

Al: “I’m pretty sure that, back then, I told you that that broadcast would mean that you’d have to carry “heroic reveries”, bro.”

It had been a tense situation, with the city being assaulted by the Sin Archbishops, and many people in dire straits.

Subaru recalled the words Al had given him upon being requested to play a role in that situation, yet been unable to take the next step: those were the “heroic reveries”.

He was an existence burdened with the expectations and hopes of many people. He could not be allowed to lose.

He was carrying the “reverie” of being the “hero” everyone wished for there to be.

And at that time, Subaru responded way too relaxedly.

—It was the same as it had always been.

Al: “It’s the same here. One person denies you, so what? It’s not like it’s going to change what you’ve done, bro, or turn your resolve inside out.”

Subaru: “…”

Al: “Don’t break, bro. Go get ‘em, bro. —Live up to expectations, bro.”

Al, who knew about Subaru’s achievements in the Watergate City, patted him on the back.

Neither Rem, who had forgotten everything, nor Louis, who had regressed to an infant, and obviously, neither Abel, Flop, Medium, nor the People of Shudraq, were cognizant of Subaru’s achievement.

Priscilla also knew, but he doubted she would remember about it in the first place.

Al: “I haven’t forgotten. And I’m sorry, I’m not letting go of it, bro.”

Subaru: “Not letting go of it, you say…”

Al: “You’ve started it. I’m telling you, that’s a reputation you gotta keep up until you die.”

Subaru: “…”

Subaru’s breath was taken away yet again, due to Al’s critical words.

He knew that the broadcast in the Watergate City had spread not only to the people in that city, nearly consumed by anxiety and fear, but also to the rest of the world.

He had to maintain that reputation until he died.

And unfortunately, “death” would never come to Subaru.

Therefore, he had no choice but to keep fighting.

Subaru: “…Forever.”

At Al’s words, a voice leaked out of Subaru’s mouth as he covered his face with both hands, and shut his eyes.

Echoing in his head this whole time were the deadly words spoken by Rem. Those devastating words had shredded Subaru’s heart to bits, making him drown in his own stream of blood.

Rem: "—Because, you're not a hero."

Subaru: "I've been relying on a single thing Rem said, all this time."

Rem: "—Because, you're not a hero."

Subaru: "Rem believed in me, and that's why I didn't falter. It was the same in Sanctuary, in Pristella, in Pleiades Watchtower…"

Rem: "—Because, you're not a hero."

Subaru: "Rem woke up without her memory, but I was still happy… I'm one step closer to getting it all back, and this is the time when I need to hold on the hardest."

Rem: "—Because, you're not a hero."

Subaru: "Those were the magic words that roused my spirit."

He was a hero, Rem had told him so.

They had stopped Subaru from giving up on everything and running away; they had not allowed his knees to buckle because Rem had fallen into slumber; they had let him challenge the obstruction of the Sanctuary and the difficult problems at the mansion; they had played a role in his efforts to save the Watergate City of Pristella that had fallen into enemy hands; and they had rocked the soul of a Natsuki Subaru that had lost his "memories", and enabled him to conquer the Pleiades Watchtower.

They were—

Rem: "Because Subaru-kun is Rem's hero."

Because of those words, because of that trust and support, he had been capable of making it to this day.

To take those away, for Natsuki Subaru, that meant—

Al: "Then, you just gotta get them back."

Subaru: “—Huh?”

With his face covered, Subaru was in the midst of drowning in a darkness too deep to be called the back of his eyelids when he gasped due to Al’s statement, raising his face.

Right in front of him, was Al’s face, causing him to take a step backwards. However Al was the one to move forward this time, in a mirrored image of the previous scene.

Subaru’s back immediately made contact with the wall. He could not move back any further. As if to push Subaru, unable to retreat, Al extended his arm and blocked his escape.

And then—

Al: “We’re gonna get them back. Both that girl’s expectations and your confidence, bro.”

Subaru: “Expectations and confidence…”

Al: “You gotta maintain your reputation. You gotta fight. And if you can’t afford to keep losing, then you got no choice but to keep on winning just like you wish. That’s how we’re going to win and get them back.”

Subaru: “…”

Al: “The expectations and reputation you lost can only be regained with better results. That’s something you too should know, because you’ve experienced it many times.”

Suddenly he brought his face closer and the cold iron helmet hit his forehead.

However, Al appealed to Subaru so strongly and sincerely that the latter did not even notice that their foreheads were touching. This had bore a great impact on Subaru. Most importantly, Al seemed to have a point or two.

Lost expectations and reputation—the most bitter of Subaru's memories was, of course, his blunder at the Royal Castle.

At that time, Subaru had lost Emilia's trust and expectations, and his valuation amidst the Royal Candidates dropped. The reason why he had been able to regain their trust afterwards were his actions.

For sure, not because he was banging his forehead against a wall in utter devastation.

Subaru: "…Am I an idiot? No, I am an idiot."

Wasn't it like though nothing had changed from when he made that blunder at the Royal Castle?

At that time as well, Subaru had attempted to disregard a massive hole, by pretense of asking Wilhelm to train him, in order to escape from the immense pain in front of him.

But now, Subaru could not afford to be so weak.

He had to protect Rem and bring her home. In contrast to that time, there was no one else he could turn to for that purpose. —For Rem, there was only Subaru.

And in order to reassure Rem, surrounded by anxiety and gone without memories, he could not display even a little bit of a pathetic appearance in front of her any longer.

Even if Rem, who had forgotten everything, had stated that Subaru was not a hero.

Even if the words that had so strongly supported Subaru's back were retracted by that same face and voice.

Subaru: “—I’m Rem’s hero.”

Yes, wasn’t Natsuki Subaru’s true nature to keep his head up?

Al: “…Got a tad of your energy back?”

Hearing Subaru’s determination, the harshness vanished from Al’s voice. Replying to his words with a “Yeah”, Subaru directed his eyes towards Al from up-close, and,

Subaru: “It’s gotten much better. But back off, move away! What the hell’s up with this kabe-don?”

Al: “Right! Bro’s crossdressing, and I’m a forty-year-old man missing an arm!”

Laughing heartily, Al pulled his hand from the wall and stepped back.

As Subaru’s field of view opened up, Subaru felt as if not just what was in front of him, but he felt like he was able to expand his horizon much more.

—In all honesty, Al’s words had only acted as first aid, and the fatal wound had not been closed completely.

He was not sure that his legs would not tremble in case he met Rem, that he would not be afraid of her repeating her previous words once he regarded her once again.

He had not been able to reach an answer thus far, as to how much and for what purpose he would exercise the Authority named Return by Death.

He was sure that even if he mulled it over in his head, he would be incapable of arriving at a conclusion until that moment came.

But he could say it clearly.

This prideful Authority in Natsuki Subaru’s possession, was indispensable to materialize the “heroic reveries” that he must bear on his back.

Henceforth, he was certain he would continue to be confused on the manner to deal with it in the times to come.

Al: “Ohh, right bro, I just wanted to ask.”

As Subaru stared downward at his hands in the process of renewing his mind, Al suddenly spoke up in an uncomfortable manner, his gaze directed toward Subaru.

Subaru wondered about Al’s attitude, as he had not shown any sign of reservation up till this point.

Subaru: “What’s the big deal now? If you have something to ask me, ask.”

Al: “Then, I’ll feel free to ask… What’s your relationship with that Rem girl?”

Al uttered that question with his head cocked in puzzlement. The question was one that seemed weird to ask at this point.

But it was only when Al asked this, that Subaru realized that he had given no explanation.

Al: “She’s your companion, bro, that you brought all the way to the Empire. She ain’t that half-elf girl or that contracted loli. On top of that, you’re treating her like a wife, right?”

Subaru: “I do that as a matter of convenience, and she herself doesn’t like it.”

Al: “But that girl’s words are tearing you to pieces, bro. —The hell’s up with that?”

Al lowered his voice slightly and asked in a very serious manner.

In response to his words, Subaru frowned and searched his memories to make sure that there was no acquaintance between Al and Rem—at least not in this timeline.

In the first place, he had never even brought up the subject of Rem in front of Al. It was only natural that he did not know about her.

But still, there was something peculiar about his question.

The reason was probably Al's attitude as he made that inquiry.

Al: "…"

His expression could not be seen. But he could feel the heat in his gaze.

Subaru sensed that it was a sign of seriousness and urgency. He was bewildered by the unfamiliar sides of Al he had been shown in such a short period of time, the previous exchange included.

He was his sole compatriot, one who had survived in this other world with his aloof, carefree, and unserious attitude.

As he felt his impression of Al morphing within him,

Subaru: "Rem's my… one of our companions. However, she fell victim to the Archbishop of Gluttony. Because of that, she's gone from everyone's memories. She doesn't even remember herself."

Al: "—. So that's what happened. I see, I see, that makes sense."

Subaru: "Sense?"

With Subaru having simply stated the truth, Al put his hand on his chin and nodded repeatedly.

Subaru's head tilted due to the words that had leaked from his mouth, which prompted a "Right" from Al,

Al: "There were a few things that were bothering me. It was supposed to be a girl I didn't… know, but it looked like a girl I did know. It was kinda asserting itself like the small bone of a fish stuck somewhere."

Subaru: "You don't know her, but you know her… Are you talking about Ram?"

Al: "Oh, yes, yes."

Al’s voice fluttered as Subaru blinked at the unexpected connection that had popped up.

But that was enough to convince Subaru of Al’s attitude.

Thanks to everyone in the Emilia Camp, he was well-aware of how someone would react when one of the two, Ram and Rem, were to be forgotten.

Even Roswaal and Frederica, who had known her for a long time, had completely lost track of her existence until laying eyes on the real Rem, and once they met her face-to-face, they had never doubted the fact that she and Ram were twin sisters.

Aside from their personalities and qualities, Ram and Rem were really very similar. —No, surprisingly, as of late he found himself wondering that they might be similar in nature as well.

Anyway, he now understood what Al’s strange feeling had been.

Knowing Ram, it would be confusing to see a Rem who looked exactly like her.

Subaru: “But I’ve never heard of you and Ram knowing each other.”

Al: “It’s not like we know each other. We ain’t really acquaintances, it’s just like, we got a bit of a connection, somehow. It’s not so much that we know each other. —Twin sisters, huh? So you wanna reunite them.”

Subaru: “…Mhm, that’s right.”

The top priority was to reunite Rem with Ram.

After that, Subaru’s main goal was to bring Rem back to where she belonged, and have everyone in the Emilia Camp, along with him, welcome her. To do so, he could not afford to lose Rem’s trust.

He must do whatever it took to regain her trust and get her to take his hand.

Al: “—Aight, okay. I’ll help you, bro.”

Subaru hardened his fists as he once again focused on the big goal, when Al, still at his front, having mulled over the circumstances that had been relayed to him, nodded and spoke those words.

Unintentionally, Subaru let out a dumb-sounding “Aeh?”,

Al: “Bro, did you just make the dumbest squeal ever?”

Subaru: “Leave me alone! I mean, what did you say? Do you want to help? Help who?”

Al: “I’ll do it for you, bro. And I’m sure the Princess’s gonna have a lotta stuff to say about that, but she can do whatever she wants with that. Anyway, I’ve decided that I’m gonna support you.”

Subaru: “…”

Al: “But I only got one arm’s worth of shoulder to put into it.”

Subaru: “That’s not funny.”

He’d stated that with annoying enthusiasm, and Subaru was puzzled even as he replied swiftly back.

That was probably true. He did not know what in the world tugged at Al’s heartstrings.

Subaru: “…Because you know Ram, that’s why you’re going to help me?”

Al: “It’s not like that. It’s you I’m rooting for, bro. —In any case, if you gonna be a hero, the girl can’t be left out. That’s what I’m talking about.”

Subaru: “It’s not like I’m trying to be a hero…”

Al: “—You will be. Natsuki Subaru will become a hero.”

It was a way of interrupting that did not allow him to say no.

It was a strong, quiet statement, and the heat that it held within scorched Subaru’s heart.

Al: “…Just kidding.”

However, the intense fervor dissipated at the sound of Al’s jesting voice.

With Subaru at the mercy of the sudden change of situation, Al waved his hand and said ”Sorry, sorry”,

Al: “But let’s keep that kinda spirit, bro. It’s better for lazy people like me and you bro, to bluff our way out a little.”

As he said this, Al turned away and walked off with a jaunty gait.

Lagging behind his stately steps, Subaru beckoned him.

Subaru: “Al. That just now was…”

Al: “Whoa, let’s not go off on a tangent here. After all, as I recall, I came to call you to the conference hall, bro. I’m pretty sure the Princess’s gonna gimme a hard time.”

Subaru: “…”

Al: “Com’on, let’s hurry up. There’s always gonna be a chance to talk it out.”

With that, Al turned his head and shrugged his shoulders, gesturing for him to start running. Subaru, hastened by his gesture, had no choice but to retract his concern.

How much of what Al just said should be taken seriously, he did not know.

Even so, declaring his willingness to “cooperate” outright, gave Subaru considerably more energy to be optimistic.

Even if it was forced, Subaru had to be optimistic.

And so, he must keep his chest up, his back straight, and his legs wide apart as he walked.

Subaru: “Rem’s…”

—Hero, because he had lost the person who saw him in such a manner.

2

???: "—Heroic reveries", huh?"

As he dashed, a murmur echoed only inside his steel helmet.

He closed his eyes, uttering in a voice that could not be heard outside, only to be heard by himself.

And so, with his eyes closed, he let it echo in the darkness behind his eyelids.

Al: "I'll have you become a hero, bro. —No, Natsuki Subaru."

Chapter 32:
The Path Onwards

1

???: “How much time does it take just to bring one foolish commoner back? Do you think that the value of the time that flows by is the same between you and I?”

???: “No, that’s why I’m apologizing to you…”

Greeted by his master’s frigid gaze, Al bowed his head in a sullen manner.

As soon as he returned to the conference hall with Subaru, the aforementioned reprimand awaited him.

The original purpose of his mission was to bring Subaru back to the meeting hall, so it was not unreasonable for him to be scolded for having an unplanned conversation. Not unreasonable, but—

Subaru: “Priscilla, please don’t blame Al too much. It’s not Al who’s at fault, it’s me.”

Priscilla: “Hmm. I’m sure you two clowns were consoling each other over some trivial anguish. Your forehead is red, did you bash it against the wall or something?”

Subaru: “Do you have Clairvoyance? You’re so spot on it’s scary.”

Priscilla shot back at Subaru, who had come to Al’s defense, with a comment as if she had seen it before.

The scene was not supposed to be so common as to come to mind easily, but he couldn’t help shudder at Priscilla’s insight.

Anyway—

Subaru: “It’s like the conversation didn’t continue without us…”

Priscilla: “It is not facile to arrive at a conclusion. After all, are you not Abel’s military strategist?”

Subaru: “Well, um…”

Being pierced by Priscilla’s narrowed gaze, Subaru glanced at Abel. In response to his gaze, Abel, sitting on his seat, arms still crossed, paid no heed to Subaru’s questioning look.

Abel must have been reluctant to treat Subaru as a military strategist, but since he had stated such directly to Priscilla, it could be that he was unable to retract it.

As a result, they could not conclude the meeting without Subaru.

Subaru: “Aren’t you shooting yourself in the foot by acting without thinking?”

Abel: “You are the one who needs to regard the value of your words. Any great strategy can be treated as either wise or foolish, depending on how you choose your words.”

Subaru: “You’re regretting treating me as a military strategist, that’s some nerve…”

Frowning at Abel’s officious answer, Subaru sighed deeply.

He then looked around at the people in the meeting room—Abel, Priscilla, Zikr, and Taritta, who had taken over as Chieftain, and then closed one eye.

Without Subaru and Al, they didn’t think they could have reached a conclusion. —

Subaru: “The conclusion you haven’t reached is about cooperating with Priscilla? What was said before, was that Priscilla had a collaborator.”

Abel: “You seem to have the brains to keep up. Of course, I am talking about that. —The one who gathers the most members of the Nine Divine Generals wins, remember?”

Subaru: “Yeah, we got to the part where the First’s a pain in the ass for being useless.”

If he went unrecruited and became an assassin, there would be nothing they could do. On the other hand, if he were recruited, he would not contribute much to the situation. If this were a simulation game, he would be a troublesome unit.

Someone that lacked charm even if turned an ally, all while becoming deadly poisonous if left to their enemies.

Subaru: “But it’s about the final victory. It’s not about Priscilla and the support of her collaborators. Right?”

Priscilla: “—Hmm.”

Priscilla made a small sound in her throat as Subaru summarized the story deftly.

For an instant, Priscilla’s crimson eyes flashed with a look of curiosity that seemed unusual in Subaru’s own eyes—a reaction that suggested that she was interested in someone else, and in addition to that, it was Subaru.

I haven’t done anything special, Subaru contemplated.

Subaru: “What?”

Priscilla: “No, I thought you looked deflated in that guise, but you have made your return with a new look on your face and a new light in your eyes. On top of that, your blood circulation is a little better, so your appearance is slightly different.”

Subaru: “…Are you, complimenting me?”

Priscilla: “You may jump in jubilance if such is your wish.”

Subaru: “I won’t go that far.”

The fact that she had not denied it, must be a compliment in Priscilla’s own way.

Replying with a snort, Subaru accepted the praise for his change of heart.

From Rem's own mouth, the words that had supported Natsuki Subaru had been repudiated.

However, he was encouraged that this was not the time for his knees to buckle because of it.

Subaru: "Well, if that's the case, then it was worth being late for the meeting."

Priscilla: "I see, the result of a conversation between clowns is superb. You are being so uncharacteristically friendly, Al."

Al: "Oi, oi, it's not unusual for a nice guy like me to be friendly to someone, Princess."

Priscilla derided him, and Al shrugged his shoulders as he replied.

Subaru could not decide whose words were correct, Priscilla's or Al's.

For Subaru, Al was the only person from his homeland, the one who patted him on the back and pushed him out of a dead-end situation. It was true that his image was not without its unsympathetic side, as he had been harsh to him elsewhere, and he treated any situation as someone else's problem.

Subaru: "I can forgive it if I consider it as an after-effect of spending so much time in a different world."

Al: "Didn't you just say something really upsetting? Maybe I'm imagining things."

Al tilted his head as if he couldn't make any sense of it, but Subaru let it slide.

Neither the fact that Priscilla had changed her mind about Subaru, nor the fact that Al had contributed to that change of heart, were what was important.

Subaru: “What we need to do is settle the debate… and see how Priscilla’s willing to deal with us in the future. Let’s not go off-topic.”

Abel: “Oh, I am sorry. That someone who gets side-tracked so easily became a military strategist.”

Subaru: “…”

To Abel, who narrowed his eyes in displeasure and retorted sarcastically, Subaru stuck his tongue out and ignored him. Then, turning to Priscilla once again, he urged her to continue the conversation.

Subaru: “So, what are you going to do? With or without the support of Priscilla and her collaborators, I’m sure Abel’s still going to raise an assault on the Imperial Capital…”

Al: “With or without the Princess’s support, the extent of the assault will be the same.”

Priscilla: “It is that you clowns are so in tune with each other. Anyway, your assessment is correct. Therefore, for us to assist you in the future… I have raised a condition to Abel to serve as proof that he is worthy of the support.”

Subaru: “Condition?”

Priscilla: “It is simple. —One of the Nine Divine Generals must be on your side.”

To Subaru’s frowning face, Priscilla presented the requirement as a matter-of-fact.

Upon hearing that prerequisite, Subaru muttered “Nine Divine Generals…”.

It was not an absurd condition, definitely.

In the first place, if one wished to mount a challenge in the battle to regain the throne, the acquisition of many Divine Generals was required beforehand. Priscilla was merely looking for that first step.

In fact, it would be a very fortunate condition if they could get Priscilla on their side just by fulfilling the prerequisites for victory, right—

Subaru: "It's not exactly a condition to be jumping up and down about, is it?"

Abel: "Of course. As long as I remain unknowing of Goz's safety, there are no Divine Generals among the Nine who would follow me unconditionally. Additionally, there are not many eccentrics with an inclination to trouble themselves to fight a losing battle."

Subaru: "…If they can't see even a small chance of winning, no one will come on board."

As Abel described the tragic situation, Subaru also wrinkled his brow with a difficult expression.

Abel's sad self-awareness—if the Emperor's prestige was not enough for the Nine Divine Generals, he desired to get as much support as possible from Priscilla and her collaborators.

At the very least, the presence of such a collaborator would have been a bargaining chip to persuade the Nine Divine Generals.

At this point, Abel had only a few things to go on: his big claim that he was the true Emperor, the People of Shudraq, and the military strength of the Fortress City of Guaral.

Subaru: "I wonder if they'll listen to us when we say we'll fight the Empire with one city and one tribe."

Abel: "Those working with Priscilla… If they rank as mid-level Counts or higher, their names shall pose as good bargaining chips."

Priscilla: "I tell you, do not expect mercy from me. I possess a certain amount of generosity, but it is not meant for beggars."

Priscilla, with her chin resting on her hand, easily trampled their feeble hopes.

As they were already aware, there was no way she was going to change her opinion. Then, all they had to do was to directly challenge the conditions presented to them.

Zikr: “With all due respect, Your Excellency, perhaps we should turn to General First-Class Cecilus for help?”

Subaru: “Zikr-san, what are the odds of success?”

Expectations were placed on Zikr after those words, as heavy silence fell over the room. However, in response to Subaru’s expectant gaze, Zikr shook his head and said, “No”.

Zikr: “As Your Excellency stated earlier, given the current balance in strength, anyone who considers cooperating with us is not thinking straight. Therefore…”

Subaru: “Therefore?”

Zikr: “I am afraid we can only rely on people who don’t think straight, such as General First-Class Cecilus…”

Subaru: “Ah, so Zikr-san thinks that person’s nuts, too.”

Cecilus, who had only a dismal reputation, was hardcore enough that Zikr thought he could be brought to their side due to his craziness.

However, if they really had no other choice, they may have to go for the first troublesome unit they could think of bringing over to their side at some point.

Subaru: “The question is, where is he? Where does that person usually live?”

Abel: “That one usually lives in Arakiya’s house in the Imperial Capital.”

Subaru: “I see, Arakiya’s… wait, why?”

It was said flatly, and Subaru’s understanding of Abel’s words was delayed for a few seconds.

Even Priscilla scowled in displeasure at the outlandishness of the content.

From what he had heard, Cecilus was the First, and Arakiya was the Second.

Subaru: “Does that mean that this Cecilus guy and Arakiya are lovers or something?”

If that were the case, the impression left by Subaru and the others who had repelled Arakiya could not have been worse.

Subaru and his team had successfully made enemies of both the First and Second.

However, Abel shook his head in response to Subaru’s question.

Abel: “No, that is not so. Arakiya is looking for an opportunity to kill Cecilus, but she cannot achieve such a thing if people around him are harmed every time she attempts to murder him. That is why I ordered Cecilus to do it.”

Subaru: “Ordered what?”

Abel: “If it was going to happen anyway, he should stay in places where it’s easy for Arakiya to go after him.”

Subaru: “…I see?”

Even with a concrete explanation, their relationship was difficult for Subaru to understand.

He did not understand the mentality of letting his own Generals kill one another, and he also did not comprehend the idea of living in the house of someone who would try to kill oneself.

First of all—

Subaru: “How can you live with someone who wants to kill you…?”

After he asked that, he felt as if he had spoken something strange, but he was incapable of finding the answer to that odd feeling, and

Subaru quickly forgot his question.

Anyway, the fact that Cecilus usually lived in the Imperial Capital was now known.

Subaru: “So, the only way to get Cecilus on our side is to head to the Imperial Capital… Hey, you sure you’re okay to go all the way to the Imperial Capital?”

Abel: “Of course not. With the current status quo, if I were to get close to the Imperial Capital, it would be no different than advancing toward my own execution. More than that, I do not even know if Cecilus is in the Imperial Capital after all.”

Subaru: “Then we’re out of luck…”

When it came to matters of the Vollachian Empire, and even military matters, Subaru’s knowledge was useless.

Though, since Zikr, who was also a commissioned officer, had been the first to suggest it, it could be considered to be one of the better ideas they could come up with.

If that idea was rejected, Abel’s path would be bleak.

Subaru: “…Yet this isn’t the time to be in a stalemate.”

A dark and heavy feeling began to assert itself in Subaru’s chest.

It was like a bittersweet stagnation, a lump of helplessness that would not vanish even if he banged his head against a wall, something like an aftereffect of Rem giving up on Subaru.

Because of it, Subaru had lost Rem’s trust.

He had to get rid of this stagnation as soon as possible and regain her trust. In order to do so, every second of time spent at a standstill was regrettable.

Abel: “—There is a way.”

However, the gnashing of Subaru’s teeth was halted due to these words of response from Abel.

One eye closed, Abel turned to face Subaru, the latter looking upwards as if he had been struck, and spoke—

Abel: “Cease with that pathetic face, I am sick of seeing it. I have an idea.”

Subaru: “Sorry, but my face’s at the limit of what I can do with the character maker, without whaling for it. I don’t care about the inequality between such faces. What do you mean you have an idea?”

Abel: “It was part of Zikr’s idea. I shall adopt some of it.”

Zikr: “Some of my idea? I would be honored, but that is…?”

With furrowed thick eyebrows, Zikr displayed confusion upon hearing that his opinion would be utilized.

Subaru was just as confused as Zikr. In the first place, Zikr’s idea had been to recruit Cecilus, the First.

As long as they could not go to the Imperial Capital, they would be forced to reject that idea, and he thought that there were no other parts that could be used, outside of that.

To Subaru, who thought so, Abel exhaled via his nose, “Hmm.”

Abel: “I do not possess a chance to talk to Cecilus, but Zikr also stated. —If there is someone else who does not think straight, there is a possibility.”

Zikr: “—Hk! Impossible… Your Excellency, that is dangerous! Please reconsider!”

Subaru: “Eh? Eh? Eh?”

Abel’s bold words were met with fierce opposition by a pale-faced Zikr.

Zikr’s fierce determination made Subaru’s eyes dart back and forth, and he was surprised to see what was going on.

Zikr seemed to have an idea of what was going on, but this seemed illogical to Subaru. From the way the conversation was flowing, it seemed as if he were going to talk to someone crazy—

Subaru: “Is there anyone crazier than that General First-Class Cecilus no one likes?”

Zikr: “I would not label them crazy! But that person is too dangerous…!”

Al: “…Well, I get what you’re saying Afro General, but from the way the conversation’s going, it’s one of the Nine Divine Generals, right? If you leave them out, is there anyone else you can count on? It’s not a situation in which you can be picky.”

Zikr: “That is true, but…”

Subaru and Al spoke to him from both sides, and Zikr quieted down with a reluctant face.

Having seen the good-natured Zikr in suffering made Subaru feel as if they had done something wrong.

Rather, the problem lay with Abel’s personnel management, which had placed people in key positions that Zikr could not help but anguish over.

This was an example of how appointing people based on their abilities alone could lead to such tragedies.

Subaru: “In that respect, Lugunica was run pretty well… Basically, I’ve never come across a big shot who was a jerk… No, there was that old man who said bad things about Emilia-tan, but…”

In hindsight, that was also part of a statement born out of excessive fear of the Witch of Envy.

At the time, Subaru was a foolish hero who did not understand such circumstances and took on the challenge, equipped only with recklessness. Now, were he to encounter an identical situation, he would be better equipped to challenge it.

Of course, the option of not challenging someone over Emilia because of her bad reputation was not present for him.

Subaru: “So just who’s the cause of Zikr-san’s suffering?”

Abel: “What is with that foolish wording?”

Abel responded to Subaru’s question with a resentful look on his face.

Abel: “To answer your question, it is Yorna Mishigure, based in Chaosflame, the Demon City.”

Subaru: “Yorna Mishigure…”

Despite the unfamiliar name of the city, the person’s name was familiar to Subaru.

Yorna Mishigure was one of the Nine Divine Generals mentioned in the list, and he believed her nickname to be—

Subaru: “She’s called the Flamboyant, something like that, right?”

Al: “You’re good, bro. I don’t know how you managed to learn it in one shot.”

Subaru: “I like to memorize the nicknames of executive-level characters in manga and such. That said, this Yorna person is Zikr-san’s…”

As he said this, he glanced at Zikr, and Subaru became speechless.

Because Zikr’s face had gone pale, now covered by his hands.

Zikr: “The Seventh of the Nine Divine Generals, General First-Class Yorna Mishigure…”

Subaru: “Is she that dangerous? I thought the name was feminine, but…”

If his impression was correct, she would be a woman feared even by

Zikr, renowned as the Womanizer, who acted like a gentleman even towards a Subaru only dressed as a woman.

He could not even envision what kind of spectacle was going to come out of her, but—

Zikr: “She is beautiful. I am sure everyone can agree on that, not just me. However, General First-Class Yorna has a small… no, not a small, rather, an inexcusable problem.”

Subaru: “Well, what’s the problem?”

Zikr: “—It’s insurrection.”

Subaru & Al: “Eh?”

Subaru’s and Al’s voices overlapped with Zikr’s, as the words spilled from his mouth.

To Subaru’s dismay, who was suspecting that his ears had heard that wrong, Zikr covered his face with his hands and continued in a trembling voice.

Zikr: “General First-Class Yorna Mishigure has rebelled many times and threatened the reign of Emperor Vincent Vollachia.”

Subaru: “You can’t put someone like that in the position of army general!”

Subaru’s angry voice echoed through the conference hall for a second time.

2

Priscilla: “—This affair seems to have been settled.”

After a while of listening to the ridiculous information about the Nine Divine Generals, and after Subaru’s angry shout, Priscilla adjudged that she had witnessed the conclusion of the discussion, and opened her fan with a snap.

Honestly, it was a conclusion Subaru wanted to object to, but—

Abel: “There is no other option. As of now, the only one among the Nine Divine Generals who might join us is Yorna Mishigure.”

Subaru: “Didn’t she rebel against you because she didn’t like you in the first place…?”

Zikr: “No, actually, that would not be entirely true… It is impossible for me, at least, to know what she is thinking.”

Subaru: “If Zikr-san says as much, then it must be true…”

At the words of the trustworthy Zikr, Subaru had no choice but to retract his doubts.

And Abel, having heard this, sniffed disapprovingly and spoke.

Abel: “What is it with you and your willingness to listen to Zikr’s opinion?”

Subaru: “Even if the opinion’s the same, who said it is important. Do you think you have more credibility in my mind than Zikr-san does?”

Abel: “I see. But what happens if Zikr dies?”

Subaru: “Even though it’s a thought experiment, I’m going to kill you!”

He cursed at Abel for saying something so disturbing.

Taking Zikr’s loyalty into account, if Abel ordered him to do it, he may seriously commit suicide. Subaru was doing everything in his power to prevent such an incident from happening.

Anyway—

Subaru: “Silly stuff aside, Chaosflame… where is it? Is it far from Guaral?”

Abel: “Not in terms of location. That is another reason as to why it is an appropriate place to head towards. It is located southeast of here… and south of the Buddheim Jungle.”

Subaru: “I see, indeed…”

Having been shown the location on the map on the desk, Subaru was convinced by Abel’s explanation.

The location of Chaosflame lay south of the jungle where the People of Shudraq lived—the distance was larger than that between Jungle and Guaral, but it was a destination far more realistic than the one till the Imperial Capital or the land further west.

Subaru: “And then there’s why it’s called the Demon City…”

Priscilla: “Rest assured, foolish commoner. It is not because of a reason that shall crush your minute heart. It is a city where many races have lived in chaos since ancient times. Vollachia is home to a much wider variety of races in comparison to Lugunica, but Chaosflame is a particularly eclectic mix.”

Subaru: “In chaos… and it’s the Demon City.”

Once that was said, the fact that the word “chaos” was connected to the city said to be “in chaos” made a lot of sense.

Given that this was another world, it was probably just a coincidence.

Abel: “—In the Demon City, I shall add Yorna Mishigure, the Seventh of the Nine Divine Generals, to my army. I am certain you shall be able to open your heart… when that comes to pass, Priscilla.”

Priscilla: “That is fine. I am quite magnanimous. I shan’t add conditions afterwards.”

Subaru: “I thought you said something about generosity being out of stock earlier… No, never mind.”

With Priscilla’s glare falling on him, Subaru immediately withdrew his unnecessary remark.

And so, once the plan was properly settled upon—

???: “—Abel, please take me with you.”

Subaru: “Taritta-san?”

Suddenly, Taritta stood up and pleaded with Abel.

Taritta had been seated in place of Kuna during the meeting, but she had never spoken up before this moment.

She was probably confused by the fact that she had to suddenly take over as Chieftain, but even now, her face had a deep sense of urgency plastered on it as she stared at Abel.

In response to her plea, Abel’s dark eyes narrowed.

Abel: “What shall you do? You have inherited the title of Shudraqian Chieftain from your sister. Regardless of your confidence, that will not change.”

Taritta: “I know, I know. I can’t refuse the position that my older sister has given to me. But I’m not strong enough to lead the Shudraq…”

Taritta looked downward, as she bit her lip and stared at her hands.

In her empty hands, what she clutched was probably the same thing that Subaru held in his heart—that was, the sense of helplessness that tormented her.

Taritta: “Because I need… a chance to carry the position of Chieftain with pride.”

Abel: “—. Is that what you are looking for in travelling to Chaosflame?”

Taritta: “Yes, it is… is it no good?”

Taritta’s voice lost some of its power, as if she had lost confidence in herself after saying that.

However, Subaru could understand the anxiety that Taritta was feeling, and what it really was.

After the sudden change in Chieftains, Taritta had been forced to play a major role, but she was not sure that she held the power befitting said role.

So, what she sought was a successful experience. With her own hands, she would seek results sufficient to convince herself, and a success story that would let her deem herself worthy.

—It was the same thing that Subaru was looking for right now.

Subaru: “Abel, I agree with her. Even if she succeeded Mizelda-san with such a mindset, I think Taritta-san wouldn’t be able to fulfill her potential…”

Abel: “…”

Subaru: “Besides, we’re going to need an escort or ally along the way anyway, right? We know what Taritta-san’s capable of. We’re friends who rode into… town together in women’s clothing.”

Taritta: “Natsumi…”

He had rephrased it somewhere in the middle of it, but he declared what he wanted to.

Taritta appeared to be very impressed by Subaru’s decision to side with her. He was painfully aware of her hard work. Therefore, he wanted to be on her side.

Abel: “What shall the Shudraq do while you are gone?”

Taritta: “I will let my sister take over for a while. Kuna and Holly will be assisting her a lot. To protect Guaral we can’t move too many people.”

Abel: “So you thought about that much, whilst keeping quiet?”

Having listened to Taritta’s unrestrained answer, Abel assessed her thoughts.

Then Abel tapped his temple lightly with his finger, Abel: “Only a few are heading for Chaosflame. Of course, as long as I am meeting with Yorna Mishigure, my presence is essential. But we shall not mount an attack.”

Subaru: “At most we can only take one escort…”

Abel: “Then I shall add you, Taritta. The rest—”

???: “—I’ve been listening!”

In the middle of Abel’s sentence, the door was thrown open with great force, and a figure stepped in with vigor.

It was Flop O’Connell, the good merchant who had unabashedly referred to the Emperor as his new friend, and who had no fear of the impertinence of interrupting said Emperor’s words.

Flop snorted, as he held the gaze of everyone in the room to himself.

Flop: “Miss Taritta, I’m very impressed with your spirit in volunteering for such a difficult role! I think it’s great that you’re finding your own way to tackle a big role out of the blue…!”

Taritta: “Ah, thank you, thank you very much, Flop…”

Flop: “I’d like to make a suggestion to keep you and Village Chief-kun safe on the road. —I think it’d be a good idea to take my sister, Medium, with you!”

Finger held high, Flop asserted forcefully.

Subaru almost unintentionally nodded in agreement because of his vigor, but upon examining what he had stated, it was a rather abrupt suggestion.

Subaru: “So, what’s on your mind?”

Flop: “Yeah, yeah, I guess that’s the question. Now let me give y’all my reasons for recommending Medium! First of all, she’s skilled, and then she’s charming. On top of that, she’s a smooth talker!”

Subaru: “Smooth talker…!”

Flop: “She speaks pleasantly and clearly, so your chats while traveling won’t be lonesome. She’s not shy, so she can get along with anyone. What do you think, isn’t she a gem?”

Flop, white teeth on display, praised his sister, but two-thirds of his confident selling points referred to Medium’s people-pleasing nature, and the only real selling point was that she was “skilled”.

In fact, Subaru had confirmed that this one point was accurate, however—

Subaru: “But, have you talked to Medium-san about it?”

Flop: “No, I haven’t! But I’m going to tell her now, so it’s okay!”

Subaru: “…Is this okay?”

It was no travel consultation nor a promise of fun.

Although she would be thrown into a role where her life would be on the line, would discussing it with her later work out? If this were to cause a rift in the relationship between the siblings, it would indeed be painful for Subaru.

However, he was afraid that he could picture them laughing and being okay with it.

Subaru: “Assuming that Medium-san’s okay with it, Abel, what about you?”

Abel: “—. I have witnessed that she possesses the right skills. If she performs her role, I have no objection.”

Flop: “Then you can rest assured! My sister’s one who basically gives her all to whatever she’s told to do! But be careful, she doesn’t get too worked up if she’s not told to.”

Putting his hands on his hips, Flop laughed gaily, “Hahahaha!”.

It could be inferred from the way he’d stated that, and from Abel’s attitude. —This time, Flop would not included in the group that would accompany them to Chaosflame.

Subaru: “But… Medium-san, doesn’t have to go with us, you know.”

Flop: “Don’t be silly, Husband-kun, I have a goal. There’s some revenge that must be done, that must be served.”

Subaru: “…Oh, right.”

Those were the dangerous words that spilled out of Flop’s mouth, but he knew that they were by no means dangerous thoughts, but rather directed towards an outrageous absurdity even the cheerful Flop could not forgive.

Flop’s goodness, which had gone unheard of by Subaru in this world—that was the reason why Subaru trusted him and had been able to spend time with him until today.

Flop: “It’s the same for my sister. My sister and I have the same goal, and the same path to walk. If I abandon you, Wife-san, and Village Chief-kun here, I wouldn’t be able to hold my head high anymore.”

Subaru: “—. I’m going to cry. I’m going to fall in love with you.”

Flop: “Hahaha, that’s a gut-wrenching thing to hear from you Husband-kun, in that outfit! But you can’t do that, because it’d be bad for Wife-san. But I’ll take your feelings!”

Even the way he dealt with it was cool, and Subaru could only admire it.

Perhaps Medium would be willing to follow Flop’s words. In other words, one of their companions in the trip to Chaosflame would be Medium.

Flop: “Miss Taritta, be good to my sister. Hey, you got along well with me, so I’m sure you’ll get along well with my sister.”

Taritta: “Y-yes… Please take care of yourself too…”

Flop: “Hm? Yes, I’ll do my best with Zikr-san and the rest of the Shudraqians!”

Flop slapped himself on the chest as Taritta fidgeted and looked down.

With a smile on his face, Subaru cleared his throat.

Subaru: “By the way, I’m…”

Abel: “I shall be leaving you behind.”

Subaru: “—Hk.”

Abel: “Did you really believe I would say such a thing?”

When Subaru tried to confirm, Abel threw a feint in bad taste at him.

Even though he was enraged by it, he reacted as if he wanted to be take along, so Subaru did his best to hold back and kept silent by clenching his teeth.

Snickering at Subaru, Abel prefaced his remarks with, “Unfortunately, though,”.

Abel: “You are already a bargaining chip. As long as it is imperative for us to append Yorna Mishigure, no talks can be held without your presence.”

Subaru: “I’ll definitely punch you in the side of the head when all’s done and dusted, but… I’m a bargaining chip?”

Abel: “The fall of Guaral was of your design. Those circumstances shall soon be known. I shall make sure that happens.”

Subaru: “What?”

Not grasping the meaning of Abel’s words, Subaru was bewildered.

There was no doubt that the fall of the Fortress City had been Subaru’s plan, but he did not understand the advantage of going through the trouble of making it known.

Basically, being underestimated was Natsuki Subaru's starting point.

Priscilla: "—That there is someone else who can be utilized besides Abel, we must make her think so."

It was Priscilla who answered Subaru's question in a straightforward manner.

Hearing her words, comprehension slowly seeped into Subaru's mind.

Priscilla: "Of course, that encompasses not only this foolish commoner. The People of Shudraq from the Buddheim Jungle, and the defender of the Fortress City of Guaral, General Second-Class Zikr Osman, are likewise material for negotiations. But the best one would be…"

Abel: "The military strategist who assisted in bringing the city down… As I had stated. In the Empire, the strong are respected. It is not merely about brute force, but intelligence as well."

Subaru: "…"

That was why Natsuki Subaru had value, Abel and Priscilla assured this.

Honestly, from Subaru's point of view, it was a very complicated assessment.

On one hand, he was bothered to be so highly praised.

But on the other hand, it also seemed to be an overestimation. In fact, in spite of this high evaluation, Subaru had lost the trust of Rem, and felt the ground under him collapse.

No matter how highly he was regarded in the Empire, it was nothing compared against Rem's trust.

For this reason, Subaru's heart was not moved by Abel and Priscilla's evaluation.

However—

Subaru: “If I’m useful, that’s fine. Use me well. In return…”

Abel: “In return?”

Subaru: “You’ll definitely get the throne of the Emperor back. And you’ll get us back home safely.”

Subaru firmly stated that this was the only thing he would not compromise on.

Having heard this, Abel’s eyes widened slightly, and then he let out a long breath.

Abel: “Being told that is needless. —That is what I am supposed to do.”

And so he answered.

Chapter 33:
Now, Onto the Journey Towards the Demon City

1

—He would use what he could, to reclaim the Imperial Throne of Vollachia.

He would not only use the Fortress City of Guaral, but also the People of Shudraq, General Second-Class Zikr Osman, and of course, Natsuki Subaru.

Yes, Abel had just nodded his head in agreement to Subaru's confirmation.

Priscilla: "—This affair seems to have been settled."

Priscilla so muttered after seeing the conclusion of the meeting, covering her mouth with her opened fan.

Just as she had stated, the meeting had come to a consensus. The victory conditions were understood by all, their future course of action was decided, and their next destination and goal were set.

And then—

Subaru: "If it's just a select few that are going to Chaosflame, what about the others? Currently, it's just me, Abel, Taritta-san, and Medium-san…"

Al: "—On that note, can I say one thing?"

Subaru: "Al?"

Subaru was about to select the final members for their next destination, the Demon City of Chaosflame, when Al butted in.

He raised the hand of his lone arm, then scratching the back of his own neck with said lifted hand.

Al: “Princess, can I step away from your reins for a moment? I wanna stay with bro’s group.”

Subaru: “Ueh?”

Al: “Oh, come on, your voice’s cracking, bro. Is it really all that surprising?”

In response to that unexpected proposal, Subaru’s voice cracked, which prompted a quiver from Al’s throat.

But even though he had stated so like it was nothing, Subaru couldn’t just voice his agreement.

Subaru: “Wh-why…?”

Al: “I told you everything, didn’t I? I said I’d help you, bro. Even a doddering old man like me can be useful in some way.”

Subaru: “You… You were that serious?”

Al answered by shrugging his burly shoulders, and Subaru thought back to the talk he’d had with him before joining the meeting, and was surprised at how he had adhered to the conversation they’d had.

It was true that he had encouraged him, it was true that he had raised his spirits, and it was true that he had pushed him onwards.

However, he had not expected him to go as far as seriously saying he would “cooperate”.

Al: “Heh, why are you frozen stiff? Did my offer impress you that much?”

Subaru: “…No, shelving away my initial surprise, I haven’t heard anything about you being strong, Al, and with me and Abel, the ratio of men-to-women in our group’s just awful.”

Al: “Sorry if I got your hopes up, but I’m a lot weaker than the amazon nee-chan over there!”

Pointing at Taritta with a snap, Al proudly assured him that he was fairly pathetic.

In fact, Taritta's ability probably ranked among the best in the People of Shudraq, but after witnessing the battle with a member of the Nine Divine Generals, she was a rather unreliable battle reinforcement.

Anyhow—

Subaru: "Still, I'm glad to hear you say that. I'll accept your sentiment."

Al: "Ha, don't worry about it, bro… Huh? Just the sentiment? Are you turning me down gently, perhaps? Are you saying we're not tied together this time?"

Al had endless questions about Subaru's response, but there was no mistaking how he took it.

He was really happy about the offer, but this was the Vollachian Empire. In the first place, more so than Flop and Medium, that Al was participating in the war was purely by chance—

Priscilla: "—Al."

Al: "Yeah, Princess."

While Subaru made his conclusions, a beautiful voice next to him unexpectedly called out Al's name.

The owner of the voice was, of course, Priscilla Barielle, who sat proudly at the roundtable. She squinted her crimson eyes and turned her emotionless gaze to Al.

To her own follower Al, who had just announced his next move,

Priscilla: "You were the one who offered to accompany me to the Fortress City, were you not? And now you wish to leave me, and go on an amusement trip with your clownish friend?"

Al: "I don't think it's gonna be a carefree trip, but that's the plan. Or are you gonna miss me, Princess? If you'd like to hug me and hold me back, go right ahead…"

Priscilla: "Nonsense."

Al: "Riiight."

Al's light-hearted comment was interrupted with a snarky remark, and he sagged down. It looked he hadn't been expecting much anyway.

While staring at the top of Al's head through his helmet, Priscilla let out a small breath and said,

Priscilla: "—Dance well, as best you can."

Al: "Oh, I gotcha. Princess's the one who shouldn't be careless just because Schult and I ain't around. Princess's beauty is the world's beauty."

Priscilla: "I needn't be told that. Who do you take me for?"

Al: "Of course, you're the center of the world, my Princess, Priscilla Barielle."

Al said those pretentious words in a droll tone and bowed frivolously in front of Priscilla. Then he turned around and raised his hand to Subaru, saying "Let's go".

Subaru: "What, that exchange made everything final? What about my opinion?"

Al: "What's with all the reluctance? It's depressing. Or is it just that I haven't noticed that I smell like an old man? Like, is it a pain for you to be around me?"

Subaru: "I'm not talking about that. I mean, what gives you the right to decide…?"

Al: "No, of course you're free to refuse, you know. But how can I refuse? —It's the Princess, yeah?"

Al cocked his chin, indicating Priscilla, who was fanning her face.

This regal behavior was the overwhelming basis for Al's words. To overturn Priscilla's decision, just how terrifying would that be.

Nevertheless, if it'd lead to uncertainty in the future, refusal was not an option.

Subaru: "Priscilla, I'm…"

Abel: "—I do not mind. He may follow us if need be."

Subaru: "Abel, damn you, you're not treating me like a military strategist!"

However, just as Subaru was about to present his opinion to Priscilla, he was shot in the back again.

Subaru glared at Abel, who had interrupted him, and he, too, crossed his arms proudly as he opposed the former. Like Priscilla, he intended to stubbornly fulfill his intentions here as well.

However, Subaru had no choice but to appeal directly to him with the argument that the terms of employment were different.

Subaru: "What's the point of being a military strategist if my opinions aren't even taken into account?"

Abel: "Do not be presumptuous. If your opinion were worth listening to, I would listen to it. Nevertheless, I am the one who calls the final shots. I would not entrust it to you."

Subaru: "Gnnh, are you a nasty boss who takes away the fruits of his workers' labor…?"

Abel: "Do not force me to repeat myself. —The results are yours. They must be."

Subaru: "…"

—The Emperor who had been ousted from his throne had a wise person following him that could not be underestimated.

What Abel wanted was a Subaru with such a reputation. And he was willing to give Subaru credit and exaggerate a bit to get it.

But that was no different than building up a myth.

Subaru: “Being a fake isn’t good enough. It’s got to be the real thing, or I’ll never get back what I lost.”

Abel: “—. If such is the case, then do attempt to convince me and everyone else with your own actions. If you cannot achieve it, it remains as a foolish and delusional remark harboring great ambitions.”

Subaru: “Bastard, I’ll do it. I’ll put any useless loans to good use.”

Biting down hard on his molars, Subaru replied peering into Abel’s cold black eyes.

Even though they were facing the same direction, they did not have a relationship where they could lower their guard around each other. Rather than the difference in the soil they stood on, as in the Kingdom and the Empire, it was something bigger that seemed to be the reason for such a divide.

As long as that was the case, he may disagree with Abel on a crucial point.

And once that happened, Natsuki Subaru—

Al: “…Perhaps he meant me as a useless loan, Princess?”

Priscilla: “Fool.”

Priscilla only briefly responded to Al, who slumped his shoulders and muttered that.

2

—The members of the expedition to the Demon City of Chaosflame had been decided, and the plan was set in motion.

Abel: “Get the soldiers of the Fortress City together by the time I return. I shall send word back soon."

Zikr: "I will, even if it costs me my life."

Receiving Abel's command, Zikr knelt down on one knee and reverently obeyed it.

Zikr, who had unexpectedly found himself in the position of an enemy of the mighty Empire, had no hesitation in his stance, but, naturally, that did not apply to the entirety of the city's troops.

In order to unify their intentions and bring them together as a single army, the efforts of the Generals would be essential. In that sense, Zikr's presence was a boon.

Subaru: "Zikr-san, I know this is a lot of work, but…"

Zikr: "No, this is the role that I, as a General, am supposed to play. It is nothing compared to the Bloodless Siege."

Subaru: "…"

Subaru cast his eyes down at Zikr's words, who gave a strong and proud smile.

Subaru's track record was that he had set up a bloodless siege, claimed he could do it, and failed miserably. As a result, he had failed to meet Rem's expectations and had caused her disappointment.

However, Zikr smiled at Subaru's work.

Zikr: "Do not be discouraged, you proposed the Bloodless Siege, and His Excellency approved it. And the fact is that I and my subordinates joined your ranks without shedding a single drop of blood."

Subaru: "Without shedding a drop of blood, that's…"

An exaggerated expression, yet Subaru choked upon seeing the bandage wrapped around Zikr's injury. But Zikr's cheeks relaxed, and then he forcibly peeled off his own bandage.

The bloodstained bandage was removed, revealing the wound on his arm.

Zikr: “For a Soldier, this is merely a scratch. Moreover, you should be proud. Because, as a result of your efforts, the number of Generals and Soldiers fighting for His Excellency has not decreased.”

Subaru: “…”

Zikr: “You are to do your duty. —Miss Natsumi.”

Subaru knew not if he would be able to respond properly to those words from Zikr.

However, even though Subaru could not give praise to himself outright, he had a newfound fondness for Zikr’s character for finding something to praise, and the fact that he had not allowed his death was an achievement.

And—

???: “—Are you sure you want to go?”

Subaru: “…”

???: “No, that was something ridiculous to say. Forget it.”

And with that, Rem, whose eyes could not hide her fatigue, shook her head.

Rem stood at the entrance of the City Hall with her cane. She was not dressed in traveling gear, but in the light vestment of a healing practitioner scrambling around to help the wounded.

Rem would remain in Guaral.

It was a temporary separation from Subaru, who was on his way to Chaosflame.

Before parting, Subaru smiled at that comment from Rem, who had come to see him off. Even though he knew it was out of concern, he couldn't help it.

Subaru: "Well, it's not all been good, but it's hard on me for you to tell me to forget something about you."

Rem: "Oh, I didn't mean to…"

Subaru: "Because everything you've given me, whether a strangled neck or a broken finger, is a precious memory that I can't live without."

Rem: "Huh?"

He had not meant to make fun of her, but he ended up being pierced by Rem's glaciated eyes.

When he thought back to the events that had impacted him since he was sent to Vollachia, it was just that many of the memories that popped into his mind held a powerful pang of pain and suffering.

Of course, there were many, many memories of hope and joy that he had stored deep in his heart, such as the fact that he had been able to come to terms with Rem and that she cared for him.

—But the most painful memories were stored in the same place, too.

Rem: "You're not nervous… Are you really alright?"

Subaru: "You know, it's exhausting to be tense all the time… If you're asking me if I'm okay, I'd say I've got a lot on my mind. If I could, I'd stay by your side forever."

Rem: "Haa."

Subaru: "An indifferent reply! No, I'm just glad you're not ignoring me…"

He was hurt by that casual attitude, but the words Subaru told Rem were his true feelings.

There had been a great deal of last-minute agonizing over leaving

Rem in Guaral. To be frank, even at this moment, he wanted to retract his previous statement, grab her by her slim arms, and whisk her away.

How good it would be to have Rem within Natsuki Subaru's arm's reach, to protect her from the hardships, fires, and every possible bad thing that could befall her?

Subaru: "In fact, I'd even like to tie you and me together the whole time with an unbreakable cord."

Rem: "Are you serious…?"

Subaru: "Somewhat."

Rem: "…"

Finally, he wasn't even able to get her to say "Huh?".

Of course, he knew that he would've been rejected had been serious about it, so he just went for it. It would be best if he could tie himself to Rem all the time, so that he would always know if she was safe and sound.

Depending on the situation, he may have to resort to the power he had awakened at Pleiades Watchtower—

Subaru: "I'm not sure how to use Cor Leonis, either…"

Subaru's new Authority, Cor Leonis, which had manifested at Pleiades Watchtower—it was the ability to vaguely grasp the location and situation of his allies, with Subaru at the center. In addition, Cor Leonis allowed Subaru to take on the burden of his friends and keep them in good health.

Perhaps he could use his power to take the burden of Rem's crippled legs and let her run around the fields and mountains in high spirits.

He didn't want Rem to go out of reach by doing that, though.

Subaru: "…"

Rem: “Hey, why do you look so depressed all of a sudden?”

Subaru: “Nothing, I’m just self-loathing here.”

Rem pointed out, and Subaru sighed, holding his own deflated face in his hands.

It occurred to him that Rem’s limp had kept her in a place where she could not get away from Subaru. The fact that she was incapable of escaping was one of the things that kept Subaru and Rem from ending their relationship.

The fact that Rem was not in perfect shape made him think that he was lucky.

Subaru: “This is why Rem can’t trust me.”

Subaru was always thinking only of himself.

He wished to be gentler. He desired to be kind, smart, and strong. He had been working hard for the sake of everyone, and now that he had taken another good look at himself in the Tower, it was still not enough.

—He could not retrieve the Natsuki Subaru that Rem believed in.

Rem: “Um…?”

Subaru: “Sorry. I was getting a little sentimental.”

Rem: “Sentchi-what, now?”

Subaru: “Don’t worry about it. It’s an expression that’s only understood by Al and… my hometown.”

Rem frowned slightly as Subaru shrugged his shoulders and replied. However, she rubbed her eyes and erased the wrinkles, as if to put off the feelings growing inside her.

There must be a lot of conflicts within Rem. Even the fact that she had come out to see him off like this must have been something she had put a lot of thought into.

Subaru: “I’m not going to be away for long, because I won’t be able to stand it without you.”

Rem: “…There you go doing that again.”

Subaru: “Ugh, I mean it though… If it makes you feel uncomfortable, I’ll restrain myself as much as I can.”

Rem: “You’re not going to try to stop, are you?”

Subaru’s shoulders slumped in remorse as he was met with a stare.

Of course, he did not want to offend Rem nor to make her uncomfortable. But that would not stop his strong feelings for Rem from overflowing.

No matter what Subaru, who had disappointed Rem, said.

Subaru: “Good luck, and I’ll be back soon. I’ll bring back good news.”

Rem: “…Yes, I’m looking forward to Abel-san, Medium-san and Taritta-san.”

Subaru: “Setting aside Al, what about me?”

Rem: “…”

Subaru asked, just to be sure, but the temperature of Rem’s gaze remained unchanged.

However, Subaru must have looked very miserable with that answer, because Rem fell silent for a while, then let out a small breath as if giving up, and stated,

Rem: “It’d be a lot better if I were to talk about believing or not believing in you.”

Subaru: “You’re not talking about believing or not believing…”

Rem: “As usual the evil smell still hasn’t faded, but that’s not the problem.”

Subaru: “That’s not the problem…?”

Rem’s pale-blue eyes continue to do so, a glint of disbelief in them that would not vanish.

They were going to be separated from each other, even if merely temporarily. Her distrust—even though he was aware that its origin had been Subaru’s blunder in Guaral, he wished to get rid of it, even if but a tad.

Not so much for Subaru’s own sake, but for the sake of Rem’s feelings as she waited in the city.

Subaru: “Tell you what, Rem, I’ll do the best I can. How can I help you get rid of your anxiety, or whatever it is?”

Rem: “…Well, why are you still dressed like that then?”

Subaru: “Eh?!”

Subaru looked down at himself as Rem spoke so with scornful eyes.

A wig with long sable hair, white powder to hide flaws, an outfit carefully designed to hide his body’s contours, and ornaments that were not overly flamboyant—

Subaru: “Is there something strange about it…?”

Rem: “One of the strange things is that there’s nothing strange about it, and one of the strange things is that you’re still dressed like that even when you’re leaving the Fortress City. What defense do you have for that?”

Subaru: “No, that’s why I explained to you that this is something that needs to be done!”

While watching the temperature of Rem’s eyes plummet, Subaru let out a sound like a shriek as he continued his Natsumi Schwartz shtick.

It was completely unexpected that this outfit was playing a role in her disbelief, but as he had relayed to Rem, there was a good reason for this.

Subaru: “Rem, I already told you yesterday, we’re people from a neighboring country. And if my real name gets out, I’m going to be in danger across this country. That’s why I need it. I can’t be the real me, I must be Natsumi Schwartz…!”

Rem: “Huh, I see.”

Subaru: “A reply that doesn’t dispel your disbelief at all!”

The temperature of Rem’s eyes did not change, and in fact, she grew ever more distrustful.

However, this was a countermeasure devised in earnest after weighing up Subaru’s situation and the role he had been assigned.

—The name “Natsuki Subaru”, could not be permitted to gain a reputation in the Vollachian Empire.

Natsuki Subaru was already Emilia’s knight, a major figure in the Kingdom of Lugunica. In other words, what he was doing now would undeniably count as impressive interference in the internal affairs of a neighboring country.

Subaru: “Interfering in another country’s internal affairs isn’t about being impressive or whatever.”

Whatever the case, the important point was that the consequences of Subaru’s actions, and the responsibility for them, did not rest with Subaru alone. —Bluntly, it might cause trouble for Emilia.

As her knight, Subaru, who had sworn to help her on her way to becoming the Monarch, could never allow her to be dragged down like that.

Subaru: “That’s where Natsumi Schwartz comes in. It doesn’t matter how well-known Natsumi becomes. Natsumi will just be a beautiful black-haired girl who suddenly appeared in the Vollachian Empire.”

Rem: “Are you finished?”

Subaru: “Not yet, no! Also, I wager that … Natsumi Schwartz’s name will leave a chance for my friends in Lugunica to notice me.”

Rather, that was the main reason for assuming the pseudonym of “Natsumi Schwartz”.

This instance in the Vollachia Empire did not mark the first time that Subaru had dressed up as a woman and called himself “Natsumi Schwartz”. There had been a time when he’d dressed up as a woman not as a sideshow at Roswaal’s mansion—but out of necessity, and his true identity had been known to everyone except Emilia.

The alias he had given at that time had been the same one. In other words, in the future, if Subaru’s existence became renowned in the Empire as Abel had hoped, and if the name that spread were to be that of “Natsumi Schwartz,” Emilia and the gang may have the opportunity to know that Subaru and the others have been sent to the Empire.

Hence—

Subaru: “I’m dressed like this out of necessity.”

Rem: “—. —. ——. I understand.”

It took quite a while, but he was relieved that Rem understood his approach.

Anyway, that was the reason why Subaru’s crossdressing would be maintained for a little while longer. He did not want to undermine Rem’s trust by having it prolong itself, but that would depend on the situation.

Subaru: “Rem, if you have a problem, talk to Flop-san or Zikr-san. If it’s too difficult for a man, Mizelda-san and the others are there. Don’t keep it all to yourself.”

Rem: “It doesn’t make sense for you to say that, but I’ll consider it… You as well, please try not to bother Abel-san or Medium-san.”

Subaru: “I’ll just watch my back.”

Medium and Taritta aside, Subaru was not going to shy away from burdening Abel.

Once in a while, Abel should have his cool demeanor broken, struggle, and break a sweat.

Once they had said their goodbyes and passed a few words of caution, it was time to depart.

Repressing the difficulty of leaving before the journey—

Subaru: “Rem, where’s that girl?”

Rem: “You mean Louis-chan? I think she’s with Utakata right now…”

Subaru: “I see.”

Rem: “…You don’t want me to go and get her, do you?”

The tone of her voice dropped, and Rem gave him a questioning look.

The tone of her voice was not pleasant, though she knew Subaru’s intentions. Rather, the tone was one of deep-seated irritation and bitterness.

Since the battles at the City Hall, Subaru’s suspicions about Louis had remained unchanged, despite the fact that they’d had very little contact in their hectic schedule. In fact, his suspicions were never cleared up.

Even though she seemed to have a soft spot for Rem and Utakata, and was getting along well with the Shudraqians and the others, there was no telling when and where she might reveal her true nature.

In that sense, he was worried about leaving Louis behind.

It was just that—

Rem: “You’ve already been keeping your eyes away from her for the entire duration of the mission to take down Guaral already, right?”

Subaru: “…”

Rem: “After all this time, it’s still at this.”

Upon being told that by Rem, Subaru had no words to reply.

If Louis was going to take any action, she had already possessed several chances to do so. So it was probably useless to keep on being wary of Louis.

Subaru: “For the time being, I’ve already told Kuna and the others that they should remain vigilant.”

Rem: “Stubborn…”

A minute whisper of a word, and having caught it, Subaru mulled over it for a moment.

The reason why he had not disclosed Louis’s true nature and dangerous powers to Rem in the first place, was because she had no basis whatsoever to believe Subaru’s story. To lose Rem’s trust and alienate her by telling her about Louis’s situation was not within his wishes.

But what about now?

Their relationship had improved and she listened to him, albeit coldly. Maybe now she would not be so dismissive when he talked about Louis’ true nature.

Subaru: “…No, don’t do anything stupid.”

Subaru shook his head and rejected the idea that had faintly popped into his head.

She might believe him, but even then it would be pointless. Thus far, Louis had not revealed her true colors. It was hard to believe that she would give away her true nature as soon as he talked to Rem. The situation would remain the same.

It would only make Subaru feel better, but in turn, it would increase Rem's anxiety.

There was no need to do that.

Rem: "…What's with that face?"

Subaru: "Yeah, I was just hoping that only good fortune rains down on Rem's life."

Rem: "Huh?"

Rem's line of sight became narrower, as Subaru attempted to keep the warmth welling up inside him at bay.

However, if he tried to say something, the conversation would go on and on and on and on.

???: "—Bro! It's high time we left."

So said Al, leaning against the carriage, waving his lone hand.

Behind him was a carriage and a single horse-like creature boasting a body as sizable as the carriage—a creature called a Galewind Horse, which was said to pull them along their journey.

Rem: "I've heard that it's a rare animal in Vollachia, it seems it's only given to Generals…"

Subaru: "Zikr-san lent it to me. She's actually female, so he's consistent…"

Rem: "Consistent…?"

Rem tilted her head, seemingly unconvinced by Subaru's words.

This was how Rem reacted to Subaru's words, for better or worse. Such happy circumstances would have to be put on hold for a while.

Al: "Oiii, bro?"

Rem: "Um, Al-san is calling for you."

Subaru: “Yeah, I know. I’m aware of that…”

Rem: “—?”

Subaru: “The soles of my shoes think it’s hard to leave your side and lift off the ground… Ouch, ouch, ouch!”

The tip of the cane poked his back, and the sole of the shoe that should have been attached to the ground, left it. He was forced to take two or three more steps forward, opening the distance between him and Rem.

The distance between them became real.

Subaru: “Rem, I’ve told you many times…”

Rem: “I’ll be careful. I’ll also be vigilant. If I’m in trouble, I’ll turn to someone else. Goodbye.”

Subaru: “Uhh…”

Subaru’s shoulders slumped and he wilted as he was told goodbye in a harsh fashion. Directing her eyes towards him, Rem sighed deeply and said,

Rem: “Take care, and have a good trip. I’ll be waiting for your return.”

Subaru: “Oh…”

Rem: “I’m not going to disappear all of a sudden… There are people other than you I trust.”

She added onto it, and Subaru reflected on it carefully.

Then he shook his head several times, even as Rem frowned in disgust, and,

Subaru: “—I’m off!”

And with a big wave of his hand, he was sent off by Rem.

3

???: "…"

The carriage was moving away, passing through the main gate of the Fortress City and disappearing into the distance.

The carriage was headed southeast of the city, to the Demon City of Chaosflame, where one of the most powerful people in the Empire was based, and the focus was on whether or not they could persuade that person to join them.

To be honest, if it meant recruiting someone, the choice to take Subaru with them was questionable.

???: "…I am certain that anyone would agree that you are putting in effort."

With her cane, Rem squinted at the tracks of the carriage, which was no longer visible.

Subaru had been in a joking mood up until the moment they parted. He had made all sorts of excuses, but all Rem could think of was that he did not want to stop dressing as a woman.

Of course, it did not signify that she believed all of the excuses to be lies.

???: "They have parted. The city shall be a little more airy once the boisterous ones have left. I am not sure however, if they shall be bringing back good news, or Abel's head."

Rem: "—Priscilla-san."

Suddenly, a voice called out from behind Rem as she stood there.

Without even needing to turn around, a beautiful woman who made a vivid impression in red stepped out beside her—Priscilla, wearing a luxurious dress and sparingly exposing her violent beauty.

Rem had not held a conversation with her since the latter had saved her life from Arakiya's rampage, during her assault on the City Hall.

So with her suddenly speaking to Rem, her confusion and bewilderment grew stronger.

Rem: "…Thank you very much."

Priscilla: "Hmm, what is this gratitude in regard to?"

Rem: "For what happened yesterday, at the City Hall. I was saved from that woman, Arakiya. Not only me, but everyone else as well. Thanks to you."

Priscilla: "I saved many lives you say? In my opinion, the credit for saving their lives goes to you. You used your talent and skills to save those who were dying. It was not my intention to show mercy to them. Do not take the liberty of twisting mine actions."

Rem: "I didn't mean to…"

Rem thought to herself as she tried to say that she did not.

It was a bad habit to prematurely judge the thoughts and actions of others and their intentions, and try to fit them into one's own mold. She remembered many times of such a thing, not pertaining only to Priscilla.

Considering her lost memories, she had only been alive for about two weeks.

Rem: "…"

Priscilla: "So, you will not state anything in riposte? That too, is an extremely dull decision, is it not?"

Rem: "…I'm sorry. I thought you were right. But I guess you can't twist the fact that I'm grateful to you, either?"

Priscilla: "Hoh?"

Speaking with interest, Priscilla pulled out a fan from her cleavage. Then opening it with a rapport, she hid her own shapely lips.

However, in her unconcealed eyes, there was a light of pleasure and opportunity that could not be concealed.

Priscilla: “I had heard that you had lost yourself, but… How dare you speak back to me?”

Rem: “Lost myself isn’t quite the right expression. Just because I can’t remember, doesn’t mean it’s gone.”

Placing a hand on her chest, Rem defended herself from Priscilla’s words.

If she had indeed disappeared, it would be no different from a dream unreachable by anyone. But Rem’s lost memories were not gone. They were not in Rem, but in Subaru, who was desperately trying to attain them again.

If what he had stated was true, she had a twin sister.

She wondered if there was any trace of the person she had been before she lost her memories in that sister, or if there was any trace of her in the friends that Subaru had talked about, in the people she had not yet seen.

If Rem could be satisfied with the fact that everything in her was gone, and that everything was building up from where there was nothing, then—

Rem: “—Were I able to do that, my heart wouldn’t be aching so much.”

Priscilla: “…”

Rem: “All the time, every second, I’m reminded of it. Every time I look into his eyes, I know I’m betraying his expectations.”

Of course, Subaru probably did not mean to do that.

The stench was so thick and intense to the point it was difficult to even regard him—and whenever she peeked at it, his face was always desperate.

And that desperation was directed at the version of herself that had disappeared, not the Rem that remained.

Rem: “How selfish of me. I’m disgusted with myself…”

So she could not tell him that she was relieved to be apart, she found it difficult to tell him, who wished to not be separated from her.

And not only was she relieved, but also had this disgusting feeling.

Priscilla: “—What had you stated to be your name?”

Rem: “Eh?”

Priscilla: “Your name. Surely you shall not tell me you have likewise lost your name? But then again, you are not nameless, you are certainly called by your name. I am quite certain it is…”

Priscilla raised her gaze slightly, searching the void for an answer to her question.

Perhaps she would remember Rem’s name. Even in the short time she had been present here, Rem could sense that she was a very intelligent person.

At the same time, she was also a very mean person.

Hence—

Rem: “—It’s Rem.”

And before Priscilla could say the wrong name on purpose, Rem said it herself.

Even though her memories had vanished, and there was no sign of them returning, and even though she was separated from the people who knew her in the past, at least the name she had been called and recognized for the past two weeks was real.

Priscilla: “Interesting.”

Priscilla muttered shortly after hearing that answer.

She then closed her fan with a snap, and lifted Rem’s chin with the tip of the closed fan ever so gently. Pierced by the crimson eyes up in front of her, Rem's throat was scorched by that heated gaze.

But even though she was unable to word it, she stared back with intent in her eyes.

Priscilla: "Rem, I shall be keeping you by my side for a while."

Rem: "…By your side?"

Priscilla: "You may have the background and ambition, but not the ability. Your ugly healing magic shall be rehabilitated by me in moderation. Then it shall become something you may lay your eyes upon."

Rem: "—! You're going to teach me how to heal?"

Priscilla: "Nonsense. I hold no background in the healing arts. I only have an eye for beauty. I shall know what you are lacking when I see it."

Rem: "…"

The answer that came back was not the one Rem had expected, but in a way it was either more than she expected, or very far from what she had expected.

However, if Rem's only current skill—the healing magic able to heal others, could then be utilized, it was worth relying on Priscilla's words.

If only she had more power, she thought. It was something she regretted not having.

Rem: "But, Priscilla-san, aren't you returning to your base?"

Priscilla: "I shan't. I have also attached that Al fellow to Abel. It shall not be long before we see whether the conditions I have imposed on him can be met. I shall wait here. There will be some inconveniences, but… I shall summon Schult to resolve them."

Rem: "Ha, haa…"

Rem was unaware of what was tugging at her heartstrings, but Priscilla had settled on staying in Guaral. Either way, it would be helpful to have her as a mentor.

There were still many people in this city in need of Rem's poor healing skills. She could not leave the city without tending to them.

Priscilla: "Now, with that decided, prepare a room for me. I shall allow Schult to take care of the details, but we require a place to spend today and tomorrow."

Rem: "I understand. I'll have it ready for you right away."

Priscilla gave orders as if she owned the place, but Rem didn't feel like disobeying, so she obeyed.

Priscilla had a way of making others obey her, but Rem herself had no resistance to being ordered to do what needed to be done.

With a flurry of steps and a cane in hand, she returned to the City Hall and thought that she should consult with Zikr about Priscilla's stay and the arrangements for her room.

The People of Shudraq were not used to city life as well, and so she felt bad that she had to rely on Zikr for so many things.

However, he was a man who would refuse or label something impossible, if solicited by a woman.

???: "Ah, Ree, there you are."

Rem: "Utakata-chan."

Inside the City Hall, on the way to the office where Zikr would be, she ran into a girl looking out of the corridor window—Utakata.

Upon noticing Rem's appearance, Utakata smiled at her with a friendly face. Rem could not avoid smiling in return, her cheeks relaxing.

Rem: "I'm sorry, I've been kind of busy."

Utakata: “Uu is fine, composed even. I’m more worried about Taa. She’s been wobbling around.”

Rem: “Taritta-san, right…”

Newly appointed as Chieftain, Taritta was accompanying Subaru and the others on their journey.

Even in the eyes of the young Utakata, Taritta must have looked shaky, almost crushed by her sudden assignment. Still, it was admirable of her to seek her own way out, and take the first step to gain confidence.

While Rem had remained crouched in place, whining that she had nothing, the people around her continued to move forward, leaving Rem behind.

She definitely did not wish to curse the world with her whining and drag everyone down alongside her.

Rem: “Taritta-san will be fine. So, Utakata-chan, the others, and I, will protect the place to which Taritta-san will come back.”

Utakata: “Mhm, got it! Ree, you’re dependable.”

Rem: “I wonder. When you say that, I feel a little more confident.”

Rem’s cheeks relaxed slightly at Utakata’s unpretentious words.

Then suddenly, Rem noticed something strange and looked around. Utakata, standing in the aisle looking out the window, was alone. And there was no one else around.

It still seemed like an inappropriate environment for a child to be walking around on their lonesome, but she wasn’t trying to blame her for not being with an adult. —Rather, it was something more fundamental.

Rem: “Are you alone, Utakata-chan? Where’s Louis-chan?”

Although she had been left to her own devices for a long time, Louis had grown quite fond of Utakata.

They were friends of the same age and seemed to have a comfortable relationship, which was why Utakata being alone was such a conspicuously uncomfortable situation.

Of course, she was probably overthinking this, but—

Rem: “Isn’t Louis-chan with you?”

Utakata: “Yes! Lou already left.”

Rem: “…Eh?”

Rem went stiff upon hearing Utakata’s words, the former’s head tilted back.

Stopping her thoughts from going blank for a moment, Rem did her best to use her brain to ascertain the truth of Utakata’s words.

Louis was not with her, so the meaning of Utakata’s words was—

Rem: “L-Louis-chan’s—”

Utakata: “Mm, she’s gone! Uu helped her get into the carriage.”

And the brave and courageous Shudraq girl puffed up her chest with pride, speaking those words to Rem, in a completely nonchalant manner.

Chapter 34:
A Quarrel in the Carriage

1

The carriage moved slowly, but not to the extent of being idyllic, down the road.

The chestnut-haired Galewind Horse, swinging its huge body with a delicacy that belied its sturdy figure, was carefully escorting the carriage carrying Subaru and the others.

Subaru: “How predictable, we’ve got Leidy, who isn’t quite lady… Given it’s Zikr-san’s beloved horse.”

Subaru recalled this as he looked at the Galewind Horse as it dashed, its master in the forefront of his mind.

Zikr’s beloved horse, which they had borrowed, was named Leidy—a name very close in meaning to “lady”, and a surprisingly fateful one for a person dubbed the Womanizer.

In any case, thanks to Leidy’s efforts, the group’s journey to the Demon City of Chaosflame had been progressing smoothly. If things continued at this pace, they expected to arrive in about four days.

Subaru: “But it’s not just about arriving, you know. Not only the reputation of member of the Nine Divine Generals we’re going to meet, but the sound of the name “Demon City” is also scary in the first place.”

The Demon City, a city bearing the word “demon” in its name. It seemed unlikely to be a simple matter.

He’d gotten word that it was a melting pot of a diverse mix of races, but was that enough to crown the city with the words “chaos” and “demon”?

With the fact that one of the Nine Divine Generals, someone who often caused a rebellion, was in charge included, there was the impression that they were only trying to urge on Subaru's sense of danger. —That was one of the reasons why he had not brought Rem along.

Subaru: "I wonder what kind of chaos awaits us…"

Al: "As chaotic as it sounds, it still confuses the hell out of me. That outfit and the bro I know don't seem to go together quite as well, and it's starting to look like a bug."

Subaru: "Ah? You're still saying these things?"

Subaru, who was in the front seat of the spacious carriage, looking out the window at the back of Leidy's nimble running figure, turned around while gently using his hand to stroke his long black hair blowing in the wind.

Raising his chin as if he were exasperated was Al, sitting at the back of the carriage.

Al was occupying a three-seater in a slouched posture. He then hooked his fingers on the chin of his helmet, making his raised head look down.

Al: "You're definitely doing that on purpose."

With a bitter tone, he blurted that out due to Subaru's behavior.

Subaru shrugged his shoulders, feeling disappointed at Al's strong rejection. Surprisingly, Al was the second person after Rem to criticize Subaru's crossdressing.

Abel, the Shudraqs, the O'Connell siblings, and Zikr, all of them naturally indulged him once they accepted it, but Al kept harping on it.

Subaru: "The same mouth that had said they were going to support me is now complaining… So that whole mysterious conversation was a lie?"

Al: "It was no lie, and my decision to help you's genuine bro, but that's not the same thing as this. I'm sure you'll be able to understand why I ain't happy with your crossdressing, bro."

Subaru: "If you're on my side, you'll have to accept me as I am in the meanwhile."

Al: "You sure you wanna keep being called bro when in that disguise? For real?"

Once someone reiterated this to him, even Subaru would feel that it was a bit unreasonable.

Natsuki Subaru and Natsumi Schwartz—albeit the two names may share the same body, there was a clear difference in the way they were and the way they stood.

In other words, Natsuki Subaru was his grounded self, and Natsumi Schwartz was an idealized image of his own fickle self.

Subaru: "Of course, I don't want to be a woman. It's about self-confidence and all that."

Al: "I didn't ask!"

Despite being rebuffed out loud, Subaru looked down at his body and changed his perception.

Natsumi Schwartz had now been recreated with the use of a wig and makeup, but unlike the time he was posing as a dancer, his role in the future would be more intellectual.

Therefore, the costumes and makeup had been put together to reflect that impression.

The red-colored outfit with a collar was a one-of-a-kind design based on the uniforms of the Vollachian Empire's officers—the one worn by Zikr had a similar design. He didn't normally wear a cloak unless necessary as it inhibited his movement, but he was proud of the fact that this bluff was working.

Further down were pants, on his feet were tough boots, and on his head lay a military cap with a bird's feather on it.

This was the complete picture of the Female Military Strategist, Natsumi Schwartz.

Subaru: "Well, I guess I'm more of a female soldier than a female strategist. When you think of women in military attire, you'd expect them to be dressed as men, right?"

Al: "Even when I'm literally looking at the fact, of you, bro, crossdressing as a woman, who's crossdressed as a man, my confusion is only getting worse."

Subaru: "I don't want to stand out, so it's put together in the Empire's style. It's a male look, so I drew a bit of inspiration from Crusch-san's taste."

Al: "I ain't sure if the Duchess'll be pleased with that expression, saying that you got a little inspiration from your previous encounters with her… Am I the only one who thinks that this is strange? What do you think about it, Emperor-san?"

Al raised his right arm in exasperation to Subaru, who explained the concept. With that, Al then turned his lifted right arm to the front, pointing at the figure in front of him.

In the middle seat of the carriage, or in other words, the position where he was endlessly sandwiched in between their conversation, was Abel, looking out the window with a grim expression.

He seemed to be pondering something with a serious look on his face. He raised his eyebrows at the imprudent name Al used, and without turning around, he coldly voiced a "Clown".

Abel: "I do not have the recollection of allowing you to call me that. Know that one careless word can jeopardize the very existence of the Empire. If you do not, you shall lose more than just your other arm."

Al: "Ugh, gimme a break. I've gotten used to it, but an inconvenience's an inconvenience. If I lose another one, it'll be more than just an inconvenience."

Abel: "Then you should bear that in mind."

Al: “Hey, heeey, the imperial way’s not even funny. It’s hard for comedians like ourselves. Right, bro?”

Subaru: “I don’t want to be asked for my agreement.”

The atmosphere was tense, with no room for jokes or light-hearted conversation, but Subaru had no intention of criticizing the Empire, like saying that it was a problem of the country’s character.

At most, as an individual, he found Abel to be difficult to get along with. The answer itself was light-hearted, so it was a complaint that he had never felt on the surface.

Of course, when it came to issues of beliefs and values, it did not stop at that.

Al: “So, what do you think of bro’s outfit, Abel-chan?”

Abel: “…”

For a moment, Abel’s brow creased at the new name.

Subaru was surprised by Al’s daredevil approach, but after a few moments of silence, Abel snorted roughly at the insolence and disregarded him.

Was it better than being called “Emperor-san”? Unsure of Abel’s thoughts on this, Subaru suppressed an inner chill with a sigh.

In the meantime, Abel looked at Subaru again to answer Al’s question,

Abel: “Yes, it is a ridiculous look, but I do not care as long as it pays off. You should separate your abilities from your hobbies.”

Subaru: “Don’t stab me in the back under the guise of backing me up. How many times do I have to tell you that it’s not a hobby, but a necessity? Do you think I dress like a woman because I like it?”

Abel: “…”

Subaru: “Don’t just say nothing!”

Because of the suggestive silence, Subaru's suspicions were unfairly intensified.

Naturally, this was a very unpleasant understanding for Subaru. He did not want to dress as a woman at all, if it was not required.

However, if there was even the slightest possibility that it would resolve the situation, he would not exclude crossdressing as an option. That was all there was to it.

Subaru: "Everyone has a proper… argument prepared by them, listen."

Al: "You said you were armed with an argument. Anyway, I'm pretty sure it's a cliché. The Emperor who was expelled from the throne recruits allies to regain it… In that case, it‘s only natural that there's a position for a mysterious woman to accompany him."

Subaru: "Yeah, that's right. Like a strategist or a mage. And usually in those stories they have that sort of position be the heroine… I'm not the heroine!"

Al: "Don't get mad even though you said it yourself. You'd surprise everyone, not to mention me."

Subaru was indignant, but his intentions were not understood by anyone other than his fellow countryman Al.

In the first place, there were many phrases that would not be understood even in their homeland. Al's knowledge was quite close to Subaru's, as evidenced by the fact that he could even employ it.

Subaru: "…I never asked about which time period he came from, or anything in depth."

So far, even though Subaru had shared the information that he and Al were from the same place, they had never talked about which period they had arrived from.

Al had once told Subaru that he had been summoned to this other world nearly twenty years ago.

Furthermore, his experience had been so terrible, that he had even lost one of his arms.

Though the confession itself had been done without a care, the reality of it was not so frivolous.

The anguish and despair that Al had endured must have been a constant part of his everyday life. Al was a man who had been tormented by the harshness of this other world much more than Subaru.

Now that he was speaking about it, he realized how blessed he was compared to him.

At the same time, he was wondering what the difference was between himself and Al.

Because of this fear, Subaru had not tried to have deep conversations with Al, and Al had not tried to go any further either.

However, considering the language used and the sub-cultural topics that they could understand, the original world where Subaru and Al lived must have been in the same time frame—If he had been summoned twenty years ago, he must have been the same age and from the same epoch.

The current age difference between Subaru and Al was merely a function of the time in this other world they had been summoned to. Henceforth, despite the age difference, he and Subaru were on the same wavelength in their conversations.

—That seemed to be the cause of the vague tingling sensation Subaru felt when interacting with him.

Al: "—I hate clichés."

Subaru: "Huh?"

Al: "A suspicious mage beside the Emperor… Ain't that a cliché? What about that?"

Al's light-hearted comment snapped Subaru, whose thoughts had gone astray, back to reality.

Blinking his eyes, Subaru nodded his head in agreement with what he called "a cliché", with a "Yeah".

Subaru: "It's a cliché, indeed. A bewitching female mage seduces the Emperor and slowly turns him into a puppet of her will… And then the prosperous country collapses."

Abel: "I shall not allow it to collapse on its own. I shall take it back no matter what. It just—"

Subaru: "Just?"

Abel: "It was neither a mage nor a woman, but it is true that there was one dubbed the Stargazer."

Subaru & Al: "—Stargazer?"

The words from Abel's mouth were met with overlapped doubts from both Subaru and Al.

It was a word they had never heard before, but they thought it strange.

Subaru had never heard of this word before, but strangely enough, he held an idea of the characters in his head. And once the characters fit, the role of the word also came to mind, vaguely.

Subaru: "Maybe they're a Feng Shui master, or something of the sort… kinda like the position of a fortune teller?"

Al: "It's more like a prophet, ain't it? I mean, that's what the stone tablet does in the Kingdom."

Subaru: "Yeah, the Dragon History Stone, they called it…"

Convinced by Al's words, Subaru retrieved the knowledge of the prophetic tablet passed down in the Kingdom from his head.

Although Subaru hadn't laid eyes on the actual artifact, it seemed that the tablet contained information about future events that would occur in the Kingdom of Lugunica, and was said to be a useful artifact that also provided solutions to said problems.

However, having forecasted that the Royal Family of Lugunica would succumb to illness, the Tablet had presented an approach for the selection of the next Monarch—In other words, the Royal Selection, in which Emilia and Priscilla were partaking.

Honestly, it was a result that made him tilt his head at the idea of being grateful to the prophecy tablet.

Subaru: "If it was serious about giving advice on how to save the Kingdom, it would tell them how to cure or stop the disease in the first place…"

As he deepened his knowledge as a knight of a Royal Candidate, he learned that the Royal Family of Lugunica possessed no tyrannical behavior or imbecility, and were, at the very least, loved by their people.

Many of their subjects and citizens had been saddened by their deaths, but none had been happy about it. —It was still a mystery as to why the Dragon History Stone had forsaken them.

Subaru: "If the other party's a slab of stone, it'd be a pipe dream to get any answers."

Al: "If they're a stone slab, then sure, but the Stargazer ain't one, right? What role did he play in the court, Abel-chan?"

Abel: "—. Not too far from all of your perception. Because the power of the Stargazer was to peer into the future, to preserve the Empire."

Abel's answer to the question was roughly in line with the impression Subaru had gleamed from the name "Stargazer". Nevertheless, there was one problem.

Subaru: "…But they weren't able to predict things. You were driven out, after all."

Abel: “As I told you before. The Stargazer’s power is for the preservation of the Empire. —It does not necessarily coincide with my safety.”

Subaru: “That would mean… that it’d be better for the Empire if you were chased away.”

Abel: “At least, I suppose that is what the Stargazer has settled upon.”

Abel crossed his arms quietly as he answered nonchalantly.

It could be argued that the Tablet and the Stargazer, two objects with similar roles, had both overlooked the plight of what should be the most noble position in their respective countries.

To suspect a connection between the Kingdom and the Empire was tempting, however—

Subaru: “Before that, I’m starting to feel that there’s a problem with you, who got abandoned by the Prime Minister, your right-hand man, and this prophet. You sure it’s okay to put you back on the Emperor’s throne?”

Al: “Oioi, that’s too straight of a fireball, bro.”

Subaru: “No, don’t you feel concerned when hearing the situation surrounding this as well?!”

Al: “But that’s it. Afro General approved of Abel-chan, didn’t he?”

Subaru: “Yeah, that’s right. Then I guess it’s okay…”

With the mention of the Afro General, Zikr, Subaru was peacefully convinced.

Zikr was on Abel’s side, which was a relief, although it made him worry about a lot of other things. On the other hand, without Zikr, it was highly doubtful that he could have gone along with Abel, given his suspicions.

Regardless of how much he wanted to get himself and Rem back to the Kingdom safely, it did not mean that he did not care what happened to the Empire.

To be honest, Subaru held more bad memories of the Empire than good ones, but there were many people he wished to see happy, including the People of Shudraq and the O'Connell siblings.

Subaru: "I'm starting to get pretty worried about including you in that, but…"

Abel: "Whatever you say, no matter what the Stargazer sees regarding the future, I have my answer."

Subaru: "…"

Abel: "If the Stargazer decides that I cannot remain on the throne, I shall not comply. If the Stargazer declares that my presence shall destroy the Empire, then I shall disprove that with my own hands."

Abel's declaration was a little too passionate to be casual.

Abel's fervor was equal to the fervor with which he had stated he would take back his throne on numerous other occasions. This was Abel's unyielding position and his unshakable heart.

Subaru did not doubt Abel's last line, because he could feel that it was not merely revenge or rebellion, but a larger and purer belief.

Other than that, he really wished more of the surrounding parts could be embellished to make it believable.

???: "—Ah! Guuuys! Look ahead a little bit, look ahead~!"

Subaru: "Hm?"

Just as the conversation was coming to a close, from the front of the carriage—from the coachman's bench suddenly came a boisterous voice, and Subaru and the others turned their attention to it.

Medium, who was holding the reins of Leidy on the coachman's bench, was the one to raise that lively voice.

It seemed she had not been allowed to take the reins during her travels together with Flop, so she had taken the initiative by speaking up, “I want to!”.

Medium, her tall, slender frame tucked into the platform, grasped the reins in one hand while pointing to the path ahead with the other.

Medium: “I see a lot of hustle and bustle up ahead! Can you see it too, Natsumi-chan?”

Subaru: “Uh… Barely looks like anything, I guess.”

Subaru leaned out of the window of the carriage, but he could not be sure of what Medium had been talking about with “hustle and bustle”. Maybe it was the angle, or maybe it was just his eyesight.

Subaru had believed to be in possession of good eyesight, but in this other world, that was no longer the case.

People from this other world had eyesight of a different level. Emilia probably had a visual acuity of 5.0. Subaru had the impression he had seen a TV program in his original world that said people in Africa had exceptionally good eyesight.

In this regard, Taritta’s eyesight, as one of the amazonesses of this other world, was quite impressive.

Subaru: “So, what about you, Taritta-san? Can you see it?”

Taritta: “Wait a minute, that’s…”

She answered Subaru’s call, but Taritta was neither inside the carriage nor on the driver’s platform.

Leaning out of the window, Subaru beckoned her; she was atop of carriage, of all places.

Positioned on the roof of the moving carriage, from which Taritta served as a sentinel keeping watch of all directions.

Al: “Is it just me, or is it kinda uncomfortable to have people on the roof like that?”

Subaru: “I don’t know about Abel, but I’m used to it with our Garfiel.”

Al mentioned Taritta whose task lay atop the horse-drawn carriage, but Subaru, familiar with Garfiel who wished to play the same role, was not particularly uncomfortable with it.

In fact, in this other world, it was essential to be vigilant while on the move, so it will have proper effects rather than just a chuuni thing. The fact that Abel did not halt her was proof of that.

Taritta: “…Looks like Imperial Soldiers are gathering. Looks like an Ox Cart or something is being stopped in front of us.”

Subaru: “That’s…”

Abel: “—A checkpoint.”

So muttered Abel to himself after receiving Taritta’s report and understanding the situation.

The checkpoint that came to Subaru’s mind was the one at the main gate of Guaral. However, the fact that the checkpoint was not at the entrance to the city, but in the middle of the road, seized his attention.

It was natural to check the comings and goings in a city, but the impression given by checkpoints on the roads was different, in that they were in response to some kind of anomaly.

In short, they were most likely looking for something specific.

Subaru: “No way, us? Arakiya got away from us, and that’s how things got spread?”

Abel: “Of course, it is inevitable that information shall eventually leak out from Arakiya. But I do not believe it can move as quickly and accurately as this. In addition, the Demon City is in the opposite direction of the Imperial Capital.”

Subaru: “So location-wise, they shouldn’t have any reported information?”

Abel: “Yes. —Although there is the matter of her companion, is there not?”

With his arms crossed, Abel was concerned not about Arakiya, but about her companion.

Arakiya’s companion was the person who had retrieved her from Guaral.

Al: “The guy who dragged Lil’ Miss Arakiya away? He’s the kinda guy who’d fearlessly ride into the middle of enemy territory in the situation, he’s prolly a sharp and able person.”

Subaru: “A sharp and able person…”

Abel’s concern and Al’s point of view made Subaru imagine something unpleasant.

As far as the Imperial Soldiers in the Fortified City were concerned, Subaru had an idea of who the “sharp ones” were. And amongst the Imperial Soldiers who had surrendered after the fall of the City Hall, the object of Subaru’s fear could not be counted.

Perhaps they had mixed amidst the soldiers who had abandoned the city and fled.

Subaru: “No way.”

He did not want to think that it was that man who had taken Arakiya away, no matter how much he wanted to.

He wished that the fate of their relationship would not grow any deeper.

Subaru: “—. Right now, we need to focus on the problem at hand. What do we do? Do you think we can bypass it?”

Taritta: “Right now, I don’t think they’re even aware of us yet…”

Medium and Taritta, two people with excellent eyesight, had been the first to spot them.

Before the Soldiers ahead of them noticed, they could go off the road and avoid the checkpoint. If nothing about them was found to be amiss, they could pass through brazenly, but if they had contraband or something, they would have no choice but to evade.

But—

Abel: "—Hold it, do not take detours."

Subaru: "Ahh?"

And just before he gave the order to get off the road, Abel, of all people, stopped him.

In response to his call for restraint, Subaru turned his suspicious eyes to Abel.

Subaru: "You tell us to not take a detour, what else do you want us to do? If they find you, we're in trouble."

Abel: "I want to know their goal. If the fall of Guaral is the matter, the developments would be too swift. If it is my whereabouts, I would like to learn what the Soldiers say they are searching for."

Subaru: "Sooo, what's going to happen when they find you? You'll poke the beehive and we'll end up getting into a raging car chase."

Of course, the possibility existed that they would be caught on the spot.

Of the five people in the horse-drawn carriage, only three, excluding Subaru and Abel, were capable of fighting, but their total strength was not much different from that of the dancing troupe that had ridden into Guaral. In the event that they were to escape in their carriage, it would be extremely difficult to shake the enemy off on the wide-open road.

Subaru: "The conditions are too bad. Or do you have a better plan?"

Abel: “There is. —You.”

Subaru: “Heh?”

Subaru was stunned as he weighed the risks and rewards and decided that the odds were not in his favor.

They were supposed to be talking about the odds of taking on a dangerous bet right now.

Subaru: “What do you mean, you want me to be the one to appear out there?”

Abel: “There is already a precedent for this in the Fortified City. The carriage is disguised so as not to be recognizable as one from the army. It shall be as we agreed upon in advance.”

Subaru: “Wasn’t that just preparation for small talk while on the road?!”

Abel’s brash statement had been a set-up for making conversation with other vendors and travelers along the way, not a premise to fool the carefully watching Imperial Soldiers.

Yet, Abel turned a deaf ear to Subaru’s complaints that sounded like screams,

Abel: “I shall hide at the bottom of the wagon. You get the Soldiers to talk.”

Subaru: “Wait, wait, wait, are you serious?”

Abel: “Do not allow the soldiers to look into the bottom of the carriage. You too might lose your life.”

Subaru: “I don’t know why you’re so high and mighty…!”

With that said, Abel stood up from his seat and put his hands on the floor. There was a slight gap in the floor underneath the seats, and the floorboards flipped up, allowing him to descend onto the bottom part of the carriage.

The horse-drawn carriage had been originally intended to be pulled by the Galewind Horse of General Second-Class Zikr.

The exterior of the carriage had been replaced to disguise the fact that it was related to the Imperial Army, but this did not mean that its functions had been disabled. The carriage, designed to be used by people of high rank, had a mechanism which allowed the floorboards to come off, so that they could hide in case of emergency.

Subaru was sure the one who had crafted this horse-driven carriage had never imagined that it would be the Emperor who would be hiding there.

Anyway, Abel quickly lifted the floorboards and twisted his thin body into the narrow space. In earnest, he had entrusted the rest to Subaru.

It was not so much daring as it was pride.

Al: “Good grief, Abel-chan’s so pushy. Nevertheless, we got no choice but to do it, bro.”

That was Al’s comment about Abel, who had only made his point and quickly made his retreated. His words after that were based on the reaction of the checkpoint in the carriage’s path.

It seemed that their presence had become known to their side as well.

Taritta: “Natsumi, they’re aware of our presence.”

Medium: “Then, it looks like we have no choice but to go! Alriiight~, good luuuck~, Natsumi-chan!”

Courteously, Taritta’s and Medium’s shouts eliminated the option of a detour. Changing direction at this point would be like advertising “It’s inconvenient to have the carriage inspected”.

Therefore, they had no option but to proceed as His Majesty, the Emperor, desired, even though it was annoying.

Al: “Bro, you ready?”

Subaru: “—Yeah, yeah, I know right! It’s nice to meet you!”

Al: “…Well, that was some switch.”

Delivering a light tap to his cheeks with both hands, Subaru flipped a switch inside himself.

If he slapped his cheeks hard enough, his makeup would be ruined. If he scratched his head, his hair would get messy. If he did not shelve his inner irritation, his words would become rough. —He could not fool the Imperial Soldiers with that.

He had to play the part that was required of him, and accomplish the duty that was expected of him.

That was the first step for Natsuki Subaru to regain the lost trust.

Subaru: “Oh, thank you for your service, gentlemen of the Army. What can I do for you?”

Subaru said, as he leaned out of the window, smiling as dainty and charming as he could, and waved cheerfully to the Imperial Soldiers who stopped the carriage.

2

—The Imperial Soldiers who had halted the carriage did not take the presence of a carriage carrying only Al, in addition to the three “women”, Medium, Taritta and Subaru, seriously.

What they had requested, was the identity of the group and the purpose of the trip.

As they had agreed upon beforehand, Al and Medium had been hired to guard Subaru, the daughter of a lower-ranking count, and Taritta was to be Subaru’s servant.

Before leaving Guaral, Taritta’s style had undergone trial and error, and been changed from the Amazoness style that was instantly recognizable as that of the People of Shudraq.

Currently, Taritta was dressed in the style of a male butler, which was Subaru's preference. Al given rave reviews, his words being "Bro's dressed as a woman who's dressed as a man, and Taritta-chan's dressed as a man… I don't understand anything anymore".

Anyway, the Imperial Soldiers at the checkpoint had not been suspicious of Subaru and the others' kind of behavior.

Only when being told that their destination was Chaosflame, did they display a meaningful hesitation, saying, "Well, that's…". Even among them, the Demon City's impression seemed to be poor.

Soldier: "I wouldn't really recommend visiting the Demon City, young lady."

Subaru: "Even if you say so, I'm afraid my father will be angry with me. Even though I'm a noble, it's not a luxury the family of a lowly Count can afford…"

Soldier: "Hmm, I see. Well, you seem to have a good head on your shoulders, so I guess there's nothing to worry about."

Subaru: "Oh my, you flatter me."

Smiling with the back of his hand over his mouth, Subaru elegantly sidestepped the Soldier's suspicion.

In general, there seemed to be no problem in getting through the checkpoint. The only thing left to do was—

Subaru: "Well, there appears to be quite strict security… Has something happened?"

Soldier: "Oh no, it's nothing serious. There's deserters from a recent skirmish up north near Buddheim, so we're looking for them… And we're also looking for a wanted criminal."

Subaru: "Wanted, is it?"

Careful not to let his voice waver, Subaru frowned at the sound of that.

Fortunately, the soldier did not seem to notice Subaru's surging inner thoughts and nodded, "Yeah".

Soldier: "There's talk of a man wanted in the Imperial Capital being sighted around here. It's said that he's about fifty-years-old and has blue hair, do you have any knowledge of him?"

Subaru: "—. No, I'm afraid not. But to have deserters from the Imperial Soldiers, who are renowned for their strength, makes me worry that the mantra of the Empire is being disturbed."

Medium: "It's okay, Natsumi-chan! We're here for you, so don't worry, don't worry! Let's hold our chests out strong!"

Subaru: "Well, that's reassuring, Medium-san. Ohohoho."

Subaru had not meant for that to happen, but Medium's blunt words made the Imperial Soldiers lose their composure.

There was the possibility that by probing into it, they would become suspicious, but it seemed that they had been successful in evading that worry. Taritta, too, was silent and played the role of a butler who did not interrupt her master unnecessarily.

She had a tendency to be shy, though, so the silence may just have been natural.

And, except for the women, the most worrying person was Al and his suspicious appearance—

Al: "My oh my, thank you Soldiers for all your hard work. It's thanks to your hard work that a half-wit like me's allowed to work so lazily."

Soldier: "…We are only working for the well-being of the Empire. Definitely not for someone as weak and lazy as you."

Al: "I know, I know. I understand where I stand."

Al, too, had perfectly handled the disrespectful move from the Imperial Soldiers, having been met with scorn.

It was hard to discern if he was acting or not, but he had a good point. The unnaturalness of hiring the one-armed Al as a bodyguard was also quashed ahead of time by Subaru.

Subaru: “It wouldn’t look good if I didn’t say I hired him as a bodyguard, would it? With his arm like that, I’m sure he used to be a Soldier serving this country as well.”

Soldier: “…If he resigned his position because of his injuries, there’s nothing for us to say. Just be very careful, because it doesn’t mean that he doesn’t have evil intentions.”

Treating Al’s arm as a strength rather than a weakness reinforced the rationale for his frivolous attitude.

The Imperial Soldiers, with their aversion to weakness and their respect for the strong, were also considerate of those who had retired from the front lines due to unhealable wounds.

—With that, they had been capable of getting through the checkpoint without any major problems.

Medium: “Well, Natsumi-chan was really good. I’m so impressed with you!”

Medium praised him as he waved from the platform towards the Imperial Soldiers in the distance. At her words, Subaru shook his head with a, “No, no”,

Subaru: “It’s no big deal. If the checkpoint had been set up for a more pressing reason, we would’ve had to use a lot of finesse to get through… In that sense, I guess you could say we were lucky.”

Medium: “Yeah? Then I guess so. I’m often told I’m lucky by big bro too! I feel that way too.”

Subaru: “Hehe, both Medium-san and Flop-san are naturals at finding happiness, aren’t they?”

Subaru smiled at Medium’s pleasant answer as he put his hand on his cheek.

At this exchange between Subaru and Medium, Taritta, who was sitting in the front seat of the carriage with an exhausted look on her face, turned around. Subaru tilted his head at her meaningful gaze, as she was relieved of her tension and patted her chest in relief.

Subaru: “What’s the matter, Taritta-san. Is there a problem?”

Taritta: “No, I don’t have a problem, but… Natsumi, how can you be so bold? I’ve been wondering that ever since you planned to dress as a dancer.”

Subaru: “…Yeah, I guess.”

Taritta had found Subaru’s transformation into a woman hard to get used to.

The time Taritta had spent with him in women’s clothing was the same as Abel’s; ever since they had entered Guaral. And yet, it seemed strange to her.

In a way, Abel and Flop had been able to pull it off with zero effort—Bianca and Flora were able to overcome all problems with their natural good looks.

Of course, Subaru’s character, Natsumi Schwartz, had no such sort of grounding.

There was a quality that could not be disguised by clothes or makeup alone, and it was a problem that inevitably arose for those who were not in its possession. —It took effort to compensate for that.

Subaru: “So, I just tried my hardest, that’s all.”

The perfection of Natsumi Schwartz was part of the results of humanity’s accumulated quest for beauty.

Were it not for these pioneers, Subaru’s crossdressing would not have been accepted even at a school festival. Behind its success, were the forefathers’ many wishes and efforts.

Because of this, he also had a sense of being unable to disregard what had been established.

Taritta: “I’m jealous of your confidence… I don’t have that.”

Subaru: “Confidence… What I have is trust in Natsumi Schwartz, but confidence is a different thing.”

Taritta: “Eh? Eh? Eh?”

Al: “Oioi, bro, don’t do that. You’ll confuse Taritta-chan. That level of thinking’s a bit too much for us to follow, y’know?”

In place of Taritta, her flickering to and fro, Al interrupted Subaru’s self-assertion.

He was unaware that he was talking about something so difficult that it would confuse the two of them. He had merely stated that even though it was difficult to believe in himself, he could believe in the ideal image he had created in his mind — one that he could believe in.

Subaru: “I always envision myself as the best version I can be—you know?”

Taritta: “I-I find that a difficult concept to understand…”

Subaru: “But I’d recommend trying that mindset, you know? Comparing yourself to the person you admire can be painful, but… you can envision your ideal self.”

Taritta: “…”

Taritta’s eyes widened slightly as Subaru put his hand on his chest and spoke.

Something about it seemed to resonate with her in no small manner.

Taritta: “Envision, your ideal self…”

Resonated such, that it seemed that she had quietly stored it within her heart

Al: “Deserters aside, dunno what the wanted guy did. Even if it’s a big help that Abel-chan’s story hasn’t spread, that was a pretty big deal.”

Subaru: “Well… A blue-haired man of about fifty years of age, I’m sure there are many gentlemen who fit that description, and I can even think of one in my memory, you know?”

In his original world, blue hair did not occur naturally, but in this other world, it could be seen as a not-so-uncommon hair color, Rem at the forefront.

The wanted man at the checkpoint earlier also fit that description, as did the heavy drinker who had once helped him in the city of Guaral—the mercenary named Rowan also possessed said characteristic.

Unfortunately, Rowan’s demonstration of his abilities had been foiled by Todd’s surprise attack, but Subaru believed that he would have been quite good were he able to do battle in a proper fashion.

However, Subaru did not believe him to be a wanted man, one that would require the mobilization of so many Imperial Soldiers. So it was possibly a matter of someone else, with similar characters, that was wanted.

Subaru: “In any case, Abel’s situation hasn’t been reported to the ordinary soldiers yet… As long as there’s no disorder in the Imperial Capital, it seems safe to assume that a body double’s acting as Emperor.”

Al: “Dunno if that’s a good thing or a bad thing. Honestly, I think it would’ve been more convenient for us if the Emperor’d been absent and that there was a lotta commotion.”

Subaru: “I feel like it has its advantages and disadvantages. Setting handling things if he’s discovered aside, the gravity of finding Abel remains unchanged.”

If the Emperor’s absence were to become public and the Empire thrown into turmoil, it was currently unknown whether Subaru and the others would be able to handle it effectively. At the very least, Abel's perception was that they were still lacking in strength to claim the throne, and Subaru was of the same opinion.

However, the insistence of going through the checkpoint had made him very nervous.

Al: "At any rate, now that we've escaped the checkpoint, let's get Abel-chan outta there."

Subaru: "Right. Besides, I want to complain about something."

Nodding at Al's suggestion, Subaru crossed his arms over his fake cleavage to assert his indignation.

The reason for Subaru's indignation was, of course, the unreasonable reason given so they would go through the checkpoint. But beyond that, it was the reckless flailing by Abel during the checkpoint.

While talking with the Soldiers, noises had echoed from the bottom of the carriage several times, which had been disguised with great difficulty.

Ultimately, it was settled that Subaru, posing as a woman, had a stomachache, saying, "It's not easy being a lowly count…". But it was an outrage that damaged the reputation of the elegant Natsumi Schwartz.

Subaru: "It seems that His Majesty, the Emperor, isn't fully aware of his position."

Al: "Oh bro, you seem angry. Well, guess I should be mad too."

Al agreed with Subaru, who was eager to complain to His Majesty, the reckless Emperor.

Then Al flipped up the floorboard, and Subaru peered into the bottom of the rocking carriage to complain bitterly to the face that appeared—

Subaru: “Hey, Abel, what’s going on? You have no idea how hard it was for us to cover up for you after you did that—”

???: “Uu—!”

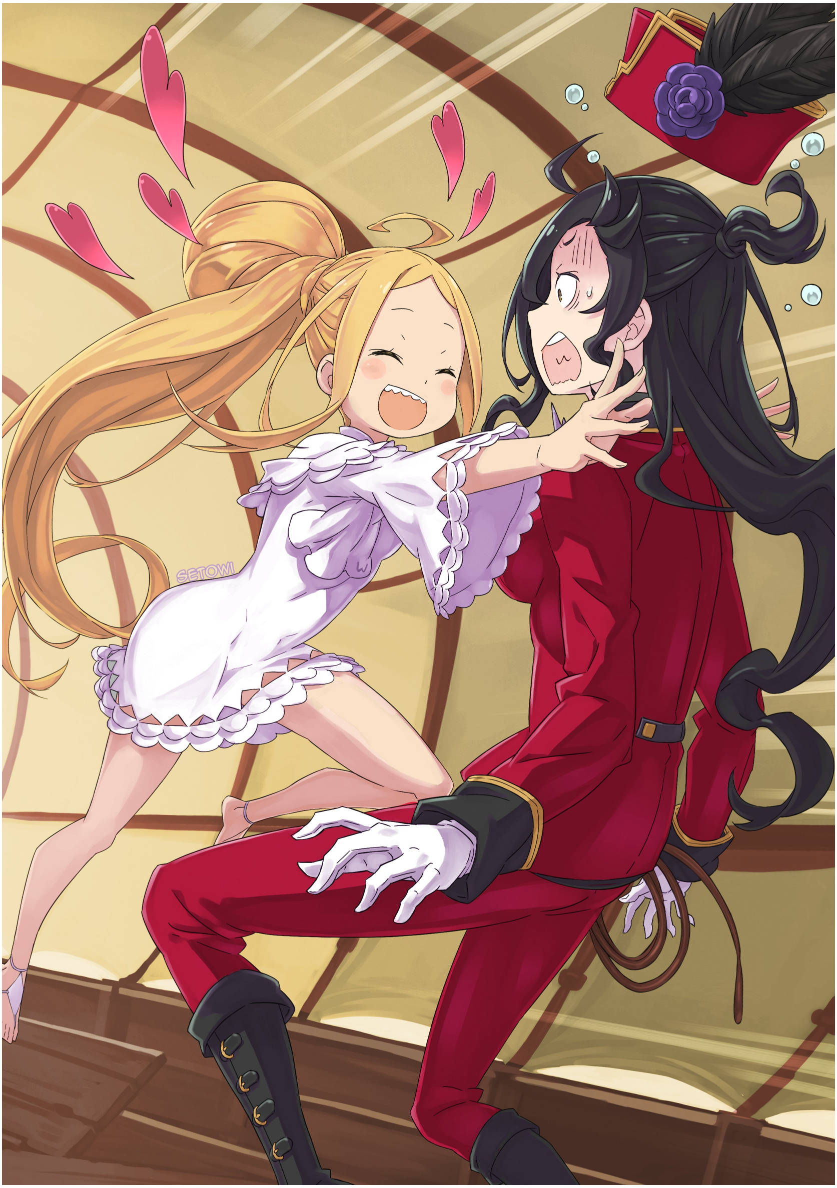
Subaru: “Uhyaahhh—Hk?!”

Subaru’s “Or at least I think”, which was about to come with his candid advice, was swallowed by a shout, causing him to jump away landing in Taritta’s arms. All of a sudden, Taritta was holding him in a bridal carry, but he did not have the leisure to admire her core strength.

What appeared was not Abel breaking into laughter—but a young girl of golden hair.

The girl was more than familiar to him, and he had more than enough bad memories of her.

It was Louis, a girl who should not be present.



SETOWI

Louis Arneb, an irregular representative in the Empire, burst cheerfully out from under the floor.

Subaru: “Wh-Wh-Wh-Wha…”

Louis: “Aa, uu?”

Subaru: “Why! Why are you in the carriage…?”

??: “—Apparently, she had been hiding under the floor all along. I cannot believe no one had noticed it until now. It was probably the work of Utakata.”

His eyes going wide, Subaru’s voice quivered. Following up Subaru’s question was Abel, his figure emerging from the bottom after Louis.

He patted the dust off his dirty traveling clothes and hand-combed his wildly-disheveled sable hair. Then, regarding Louis leaning in towards Subaru, the latter still being held up by Taritta,

Abel: “Hmm. It appears that she missed you a lot. So much that rather than being with Utakata or your woman, she opted to be with you.”

Subaru: “Wh-What are you so composed for… were you okay with being under the floor with her?”

Abel: “How could it have been fine? She was unnecessarily rampaging at the bottom, and even I was chilled by it. I mulled over about how it could be explained away once the Soldiers discovered me due to her.”

Shutting the floorboards and returning to his seat, Abel’s words made sense to Subaru.

It seemed that the cause of the commotion that had distracted Subaru’s mind so much during the Imperial Soldiers’ inspection of the carriage was none other than Louis.

Perhaps Louis, hiding in the bottom of the carriage as she was, had jostled with Abel, who had come down there to hide. He did not seem to have any talent for caring for children, although it was unclear how Abel was treating Louis.

Subaru: “Then, what the hell can you do…?”

Abel: “You have been speaking disgracefully about me to no end, but what are you planning to do with that thing?”

Subaru: “What should I do…?”

Abel: “I am telling you now, that there is absolutely no way we can turn back anymore. That checkpoint and time both, shall not allow it.”

Al: “Well, Abel-chan’s right about that, ain’t he?”

Touching the clasp of his helmet, Al nodded his head in agreement with Abel’s words.

Meanwhile, an anguished Subaru had Taritta put him down on the floor, then held down Louis’s forehead as she giggled with “Auu”, and snuggled up against him.

Subaru: “Why did this happen…?”

Confusion and bewilderment swirled within his head.

On the other hand, there was a part of him that felt relieved that Louis was here—that he did not have to deal with this uncertainty being beside Rem who had been left behind in Guaral.

However, the fact that Subaru had been followed did not make him any less cautious about Louis’s true nature and what could be in her plans.

Taritta: “Subaru, there’s nothing we can do, we’ll take Louis with us.”

Subaru: “Even you are saying that, Taritta-san?”

Taritta: “Abel’s right, we don’t have a choice but to keep going now. But we also can’t leave Louis behind. I know that you and Louis have a complicated relationship…”

Subaru: “…”

Looking at Subaru and Louis alternately, Taritta timidly offered a neutral opinion.

In addition to their mission to infiltrate Guaral, they had also spent time together in the People of Shudraq’s settlement. The majority of the Shudraqian, though not as much as Rem, were aware of Subaru’s wariness and hostility towards Louis and her existence.

Even with that in mind, Taritta had stated that leaving Louis behind was not an option.

And, much to his own chagrin, Subaru agreed with her.

Subaru: “We can’t just leave her here and let her cause trouble for people who don’t know anything about her…”

Louis: “Uu?”

Inclining her neck, Louis looked clueless.

As things stood right now, ever since they had been sent to Vollachia, Louis had never shown her true face as the vicious Sin Archbishop of Gluttony. But that did not mean it would not happen in the future, and Subaru would be responsible for any damage that may occur once her true nature surfaced.

Subaru had enough conviction that she was dangerous and countless opportunities to preempt a lot of damage from being done.

That was exactly why he felt he should strangle her thin neck this very moment, and sever her future.

With that and that alone, many seeds of anxiety would wither and die without sprouting.

And yet—

Subaru: "…"

Al: "Oh man… I dunno what's going on here, but that lil' girl's fond of you bro, right? I'm sure you understand that she might slow us down in the future, but we'll have to consider how to use that too."

Subaru: "Al…"

While saying this, Al tried to help the anguished Subaru reach a decision.

Walking over toward Louis standing beside Subaru, he took some steps upon the floor of the horse-drawn carriage with a casual gait. Then, trying to stroke the girl's blonde head gently—

Al: "Maybe with a child it'll be easier to have them look away in case there's another checkpoint like that. Traveling with a child ain't so bad after all… Ouch!"

Louis: "Gauuk!"

Just as Al's hand was about to stroke her head, Louis suddenly bared her fangs, literally.

Louis opened her mouth wide and chomped at Al's outstretched hand as hard as she could. With a scream, Al pulled his hand away and Louis hid behind Subaru, snarling like an animal.

It was an ingrateful act, like an unwanted stray cat biting the person who had tried to feed it.

Al: "Whoa, that shit really hurt! I tried to help you out, but that was wrong!"

Subaru: "Y-you've done it, haven't you…! I knew it was your style to prey on others like that!"

Louis: "Uu! Aa! Aauu!"

Subaru: "I can't understand you with your uhhs and ahhs!"

Louis was clinging to Subaru's waist, shaking her head. Subaru was struggling to pull her off, but the pressure was too tight for him to wriggle free.

Luckily, Subaru knew Al's "Name" and who he was, and Al himself did not appear to have lost himself due to having his "Memories" snatched away. But the damage was yet to be confirmed—

Taritta: "—Please calm down!"

Subaru: "Hyaan?!"

Louis: "Uu?!"

Once Subaru and Al began raising a ruckus, Louis started screaming like a child with a tantrum.

To interrupt them, Taritta had intervened by raising her voice.

Putting her hands under Louis's arms, she picked up the child, shooting Subaru and Al both with a potent gaze, her eyes like those of her sister's, conveying a strong impression.

Taritta: "You're a grown man and you're acting like a child! Even more, why don't you behave like a calm adult? The little ones will mimic you."

Subaru: "Uh, kuh… bu-but, Taritta-san, the girl's…"

Taritta: "No buts, Natsumi. I know your relationship with this girl is complicated. But even if that's the case, what are you going to accomplish by making a scene?"

He was reprimanded directly, and the simplicity of the reprimand was the most effective reply for Subaru.

How many could win against the argument that they had been acting immature towards a child? However, such naïve theory would not be applicable to a Sin Archbishop.

If only she was privy to the dangers posed by Louis Arneb, Taritta would surely possess a different opinion—

—Then, why didn't he just tell everyone who Louis was here and now?

Subaru: "…"

The black emotions echoing from within his own heart caused his throat to clog.

Subaru's cheeks tensed up, and Taritta and Al reacted in a quizzical manner.

In the end, the whole situation had been brought about by Subaru's vague decision-making abilities.

The only way to make them understand Subaru's wariness of Louis, was to disclose the fact that Louis was the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony. Unlike Rem, who had lost her wariness of the Witch Cult along with her Memories, the people in this room would be able to understand the threat.

Once they realized the gravity of the situation, they would not treat Louis as the child she seemed to be. And to get rid of the disturbing threat——What could be done to get rid of her?

Subaru: "…"

Louis: "Uu?"

Louis tilted her head at Subaru's expression while being held by Taritta.

Immediately once Subaru and Al stopped being rowdy, Louis calmed down as well. As they had found out in the time so far, Louis would only make noise if there was a lot of it in her environs.

If her surroundings were quiet, Louis, by her lonesome, would not make a peep. The reason as to why Utakata was such a good match for Louis was because she was an exceptionally calm child.

Perhaps this form of behavior was another way for Louis Arneb to blend in with her surroundings.

That girl, so vicious and irredeemably evil, that Subaru had come into contact in the white world he had arrived at the Pleiades Watchtower; was this the guise she had adopted?

He was aware he must consider that way, and deal with it. And yet —

Abel: “—I shall tell you this, our purpose here is neither pleasure nor amusement.”

Abel, alone in the seat, coldly said this to a Subaru still agonizing over the situation.

For a moment, Subaru could not make out the true meaning of his words, but quickly realized that it was Abel’s opinion on how Louis should be treated.

This road trip was no game, Abel asserted. As soon as he voiced that and regarded Louis with his dark eyes, Subaru gasped at their coldness.

Abel’s eyes, directed towards Louis, were devoid of any warmth.

This was a sign that Abel had not found any value in bestowing Louis with any consideration or warmth, and that he did not distinguish between Louis and a stone by the roadside or a wildflower.

The warmth of his eyes made Subaru understand the consequences of revealing Louis’s true identity.

Subaru: “—Let’s take her.”

Abel: “…”

Immediately after making his decision, the dark eyes looking at Louis were turned to Subaru. The sharpness of his gaze felt like it was burrowing into Subaru’s chest, but clenching his molars, he drove that out of his mind.

Subaru: “Since this isn’t a pleasure trip, show them you’re useful… That’s how it works, isn’t it?”

Abel: “Yes, it is of no consequence. —I had a feeling you would state such a thing.”

Subaru: “…That’s a difficult evaluation to interpret.”

Whether it was disappointment or some other sort of emotion, it was hard to tell.

Naturally, Abel wished to have his real intentions go unrevealed, and Subaru was afraid that rehashing them would lead to a different conclusion.

Medium: “Hey, hey, are you done with that? Louis-chan, come here when they are finished talking!”

Taritta: “…Is that okay?”

Feeling the tense atmosphere between Subaru and Abel, Taritta asked for permission to respond to Medium’s voice coming from the driving platform.

Abel was already unconcerned, and although he had decided to take Subaru with him, he did not want to take Louis, so he decided to take advantage of their generosity.

Medium: “Alright, Louis-chan, you want to hold the reins? Try to steer Leidy-chin!”

Louis: “Uu!”

Taritta: “Let’s not do that!”

Louis was welcomed by the two women, although there was a lot of noise coming from the driver’s seat all of a sudden.

Subaru was the only one who had originally been quite wary of Louis, so there was nothing surprising about their reaction. If something had to be said however, was that Louis’s disappearance may have caused Rem, who had remained in Guaral, to panic in search of her.

Abel: “I do not believe that girl could have gotten into the carriage by herself. If there is someone who assisted her, that one should reveal the situation.”

Subaru: “…Well, I guess that’s true.”

Perhaps sensing the nature of Subaru’s anxiety from his expression, Abel dispelled without emotion.

If he was right, and Utakata had helped Louis stowaway, that information would have been shared with Rem and the others back in the city.

With him and Louis together, Subaru wondered if that would help with Rem’s anxiety.

Subaru: “Which would be better, her not knowing where she is or knowing where she is…?”

Al: “—? Of course it’s safer to have her with you, bro. I mean, from what Taritta-chan said, it sounded kinda complicated.”

With Al having overheard his muttering, Subaru’s feelings were further muddied by Al’s words.

The relationship between Subaru, Rem, and Louis was not as simple as it appeared.

Subaru: “…But, that’s right.”

With Rem’s figure behind his eyelids, Subaru found an excuse within himself.

Regardless of Louis’s identity, Rem would be concerned for the girl. Even if he told her the truth the next time he got the chance, it would be one-sided without Louis’s presence.

For that reason, Louis must be kept safe.

Al: “Bro?”

Subaru: “No, nothing unless… Al, do me a favor —Please, pay as much attention to Louis as you can.”

Al: “…What’s with the out-of-the blue request, anyway? What’s with that little girl?”

Al, who’d just had his hand bitten, seemed to have some difficulty with Louis, and responded to Subaru’s request in a reluctant voice, questioning his intentions.

It was a natural question, but for a moment, Subaru hesitated to answer.

When it came to Al, he would believe Louis’s identity more frankly than the others.

However, how would Al act upon learning that Louis was a Sin Archbishop? Would he understand the danger and become an advisor that held the same worries as Subaru?

Subaru: “—. If she gets hurt, Rem will suffer. Please, I beg you.”

Al: “…”

Subaru was troubled, but, a moment later, he kept the truth to himself much like he had done with the rest of the group.

Hearing Subaru’s answer, Al went silent for a moment, and,

Al: “Yeah, sure. I’m worried she might eat my remaining arm, but I’ll deal with it.”

With that as his reply, Al settled into the front seat of the carriage as if he had heard Subaru’s request. He threw his legs out lazily as he listened to the voices of the three girls bustling around the driver’s platform.

It could be said it was his typical way of accepting a request.

Subaru: “—? What is it?”

As he directed his gaze towards the back of Al’s head, Subaru noticed Abel's own trained on himself.

He folded his arms and slumped in his seat, his unreadable black eyes reflecting Subaru, frowning with just a hint of displeasure.

This made him feel terribly anxious, so Subaru's question had ended sharply.

Abel, however, gave a small "Hmm", and said nothing.

Subaru: "…You still haven't thanked me for successfully getting us past the checkpoint in the first place."

Taking out his frustration on Abel's attitude, Subaru stroked his long black hair and settled into a seat a little farther away from both Al and Abel.

The journey to the Demon City of Chaosflame continued with a sense of uncertainty about the future.

However, upon hearing the bustling voices from the driver's platform, especially that of Louis…

Subaru: "Really, who do you think is the cause of my suffering?"

The sound of the horse-drawn carriage swallowed his words of complaint up entirely, and so they did not reach anyone.

Chapter 35:
A Night For Talking

1

Medium: “The place where big bro and I were was a really bad place.”

That was what Medium had said in her usual tone, as they surrounded a campfire at night.

Always bright and cheerful, Medium never cared to keep her voice down. What had come out from her mouth, was the story of the orphanage in which Flop and her used to be previously.

From Flop, too, it had been heard that the two of them had grown up in poor conditions.

The siblings had grown up while being beaten every day, in a facility that took in orphans. Flop had stated that they resented a world where unfortunate adults would beat up unfortunate children, and that they had vowed to take revenge, as well.

Medium: “I don’t get everything big bro says ‘cause it’s too difficult for me. But when he’s walking around with such big steps and his chest puffed out, I wanna help him.”

Subaru: “Even if it’s revenge against the world?”

Medium: “Yes, yes! Though, I dunno how he’s gonna do it.”

With a bashful smile, Medium plunked down cross-legged, taking Louis into her lap then brushing the girl’s hair from behind.

The reason she had spoken about the orphanage in the first place, was because of her skill in dealing with children.

He was surprised that Medium, who, if he may say so, gave the impression that she did everything in a relatively rough manner, was taking such good care of Louis.

So, he asked her about her familiarity, which led them to the previous point.

Medium: “Because there were other children in the facility besides big bro and me, you know. Some of them were smaller than me, and it wasn’t much fun, so I wanted to at least let their hair grow.”

Subaru: “So because of that, you’re good with the little ones. It makes sense, since you’re very good at taking care of people.”

Medium: “Uhehe, you think so? Well, if that’s the case, I’m glad I could help.”

Medium’s beautiful blonde hair glimmered, illuminated by the red glow of the bonfire. Louis, to her front, had hair the same color. The two of them were so intimate they appeared to be sisters.

If Flora was considered and not Flop, one could say that there were three beautiful sisters.

Subaru: “…I shouldn’t have thought of imposing such a liability onto you and Flop-san.”

Medium: “—? Natsumi-chan, did you say something?”

Subaru: “No, it’s nothing. It’s just that I really feel that Medium-san’s been a great help to me.”

Setting aside the improper connection between the O’Connell siblings and Louis, it was a statement that seemed to have been wasted under false pretenses, but that was how he truly felt.

There was a great deal of help from the presence of Medium and Flop being there, both militarily and emotionally.

Had it not been for Flop and her, Subaru and the others’ march through the Empire would have been much bleaker.

Subaru: “In that respect, shouldn’t you be more grateful?”

???: “…”

Narrowing his eyes as he said it, Subaru tried to lure a response out of Abel, who was sticking right by the bonfire.

Surprisingly, Abel had not made his quick return to the carriage for rest after dinner, instead remaining, in silence. However, it did not appear that his attention had been focused on the chit-chat, or on Subaru's words that were merely sarcastic and teasing.

Abel: "Medium, where are you and your brother from?"

Medium: "Huh?"

However, though not in response to Subaru's words, Abel posed a question to Medium.

The content of the question was based on the conversation that had just taken place.

Caught off-guard, Medium's large eyes widened to their fullest and her mouth dropped open. It seemed she was surprised that Abel had started a conversation with her, and that he was listening.

Medium: "Abel-chin, you know my name?"

Apparently, those were not the sole reasons for her surprise.

Anyhow, Abel let out a small sigh at Medium, the latter having utilized a way of addressing him equally as disrespectful as what Al had used, one that could displease His Majesty the Emperor.

Abel: "Remembering names is a trivial task. Cease such trifling admiration. Answer my question. Where are you and Flop from? Who was the head representative of that facility?"

Medium: "Representative? You mean the director? I don't remember his name, but me and big bro were in a little town called Averyk."

Abel: "Averyk… That's a town to the west. I shall remember that."

Medium: "—? You're gonna remember it? What for?"

Abel: “It shall be dealt with accordingly. Whether I do it directly or not.”

Abel’s answer was succinct, but his true intentions were lost on Medium.

A question mark appeared on Medium’s face, and her expression was like her head had been stuffed full of questions. And Abel, unkind as he was, did not attempt to try and dispel the mystery.

Subaru, for his part, did not quite get the whole idea, but,

Subaru: “So you want to listen to the people’s frank opinions and immediately apply them to national politics?”

Abel: “I am not that laudable. I have told you. —It is a matter of definite punishment or reward.”

Achievements should be rewarded, and foolishness punished.

That was Abel’s creed as a ruler, and it seemed to be an unmovable way of being.

Thinking back to the Lifeblood Ritual at the Shudraqian Village, he had desperately appealed to Subaru as the latter was on the verge of death, to tell him of his wish. Behind that desperation laid the same belief.

Namely—

Subaru: “—You’re the kind of person who can’t stand it when other people come up empty-handed, aren’t you?”

Abel: “Many are dropped into this world as have-nots. What they grasp in their hands and what they die with, is their life. There should be no thing such as letting go of something one has earned.”

Subaru: “Hearing that from the Emperor’s mouth having been born as a have-not’s unpleasant.”

Most people were have-nots, and had no choice but to struggle on, lamenting their incompetence and inability. They knew that life was like that, but could not tolerate being told that from the standpoint of those who are blessed.

However, Abel did not even regard Subaru, who took this as irony.

Abel: “—I am no exception.”

Subaru: “—? What do you mean?”

Abel: “With the position, comes a certain amount of responsibility. If one carries a burden that they cannot bear, then those who are crushed are no more than fools. Character and pride can only be honed by daily self-awareness.”

In response to Subaru’s question, Abel’s gaze slowly turned toward him.

He observed Subaru sitting next to the bonfire, and directed his sight to his dark hair and clothes, as if to examine them.

Abel: “False and contrived identities shall eventually be exposed. You seem to be quite adept at disguising yourself, but it shall take some effort to mend it once it comes off.”

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “I do not interfere with other people’s interests as long as they produce results. I do not mean to contradict that statement, to see a false image as a pillar of support is something I cannot tolerate. Eventually, the entire foundation shall tilt.”

Abel’s eyes, bathed in a feverish breeze, were as clear as a cold night.

The words he had chosen had no room for consideration or understanding by others. Therefore, the true meaning of his words was not even half-understood by Subaru.

The only thing that remained, was the pain of having had his heart insulted so callously.

Abel: “…I have spoken too much. I shall be leaving the rest to you.”

After saying that, Abel stood up and disappeared into the carriage.

The thick door closed with a thud. The only people now remaining around the fire were Subaru, Medium, and Louis, who was oblivious to the topic at hand.

Subaru: "…What's with that guy?"

Then, making a bitter face as he held his own mouth, Subaru blurted out those words.

It was as if he was a sore loser of a villainess, wasn't it? The iron-blooded female military strategist, Natsumi Schwartz, was much tougher and more supple.

That was Subaru's never-ending desire for a heart of steel, and the image of the strongest woman in its possession.

Medium: "Natsumi-chan, are you okay?"

Medium's hand gently stroked Subaru's conflict-laden head.

Medium moved dexterously next to him, sitting on her haunches not letting her buttocks touch the ground. Her hands were proportionate to her height, large enough to grasp Subaru's head with ease.

Her large palm gently, and softly, wrapped around Subaru's heart.

Subaru: "Yes, I'm fine. I mean, that guy was so insinuating… Did you understand what he was trying to say, Medium-san?"

Medium: "Hmmm, not at all! But I could see that Natsumi-chan looked like she was in pain, so this is the least I could do."

Subaru: "That's not true…"

Medium: "It's okay, it's okay, I know! I'm in charge of using my big body to do my best and leave the hard stuff to big bro and everyone else."

Medium smiled pleasantly and continued to pat Subaru's head, her face not showing any lie.

Even though she was aware of her shortcomings, she did not permit it to bother her and had a sunny disposition, something she had in common with the people Subaru admired.

Subaru: “You’re very mature, aren’t you, Medium-san?”

Medium: “No one’s ever told me that before! Although I’ve been told things like, that I’m a good older sister, or that I eat a lot without having any issues after.”

Subaru: “Those are other nice things about you, Medium-san.”

Medium: “Uehehe~”

Because he was unable to express his gratitude and admiration even with all his words, Subaru was frustrated. However, Medium merrily accepted Subaru’s hollow words of praise.

Louis, curled up in her lap, was happy, like she was being carried along by her cheerfulness.

It was a moment so peaceful that, to Subaru, it felt as if he’d been cut off from all hardship and anxiety.

He ended up imagining it as such, so peaceful was this time.

2

Time flowed protractedly, as he gazed at the flickering flames of the fire.

Subaru: “…”

The world was so quiet, with the crackling sound of burning chips of wood popping.

Subaru used to hate this kind of idle time. When spending it in a daze, he would feel tormented and driven by an unfathomable sense of urgency.

He wondered if he was allowed to spend his time aimlessly, as if he were in a stupor.

An unidentified black shadow would creep up behind him, crossing their arms around his shoulders in an intimate manner, persistently hounding Subaru.

Keeping this nightmare away was impossible, even if he plugged his ears and closed his eyes—to escape from it, Natsuki Subaru had attempted everything.

At times, he would be praised for his versatility and guile.

But all of that, was just an excuse to escape from responsibility and guilt.

Natsuki Subaru was papier-mâché, the result of a series of excuses—

Subaru: "—I'm just a little relieved that it didn't end up being just an excuse."

???: "Is that so…"

After listening to Subaru's story, Taritta nodded her head.

On the other side of the flickering flames, Taritta's face was lit up red as she knelt on the ground. The shimmering radiance of the flames appeared to suit her brown skin quite well.

And to mention something suiting, so did her outfit that concealed her identity as a Shudraqian.

Taritta, having removed the white patterns on her body and being dressed like a civilized person, coupled with her tall and well-proportionate body, looked like a beautiful woman dressed in men's clothes.

However, as she stood guard as a night watchman, she had taken off her jacket and rolled up her sleeves, giving the impression that she was more wild than smart.

Taritta: "…"

In the slight silence that fell, Taritta was lost in thought.

She had pestered Subaru into speaking of his personal circumstances—of his original world; he had made the darker and heavier parts of his life ambiguous, but how had it affected Taritta?

It had all begun when Taritta saw Subaru cleaning his nails and asked, “Where did you learn to wear makeup?”.

Using makeup and crossdressing, were not that big of a deal to him.

Subaru had spent his junior high-school year in disarray, and had taken up the challenge as a bit of entertainment to make a spectacular comeback in his high-school life to come.

Subaru: “I’m a bit of a meticulous person, so if I’m going to do something… I want to be thorough and not embarrassed to present it.”

As would be the case in any field, the efforts of many predecessors were involved in the development of arts.

Subaru’s high-school life ended as a result of his attempt to show that he was not embarrassed of it. Since then, he had made up his mind that he would never dress as a woman again, but here he was.

One’d never know what would be useful in life until it was over. — In Subaru’s case, who would not die even if he died, that rang especially true.

Subaru: “Oh, that’s not funny—”

Taritta: “…Natsumi’s attitude, I’m jealous of it.”

Subaru: “Wh-Whaaat?”

Taritta: “Wh-why are you so surprised…?”

Subaru: “Oh, no, it isn’t something I’ve been told very often…”

It was a rather serious shock, and it took Taritta by surprise.

However, the shock in Subaru's mind, as he pressed his fake breasts, did not go away. Objectively speaking, Subaru did not feel that his position was worthy of jealousy.

It was partly from his own perspective, but ever since he came to this other world—and, in retrospect, even before that, his life had been a series of failures and disappointments.

To be honest, had it not been for his encounter with Emilia, he doubted he would have had the chance to turn things around.

Subaru believed that all his encounters and happiness had been given to him by Emilia, who had tried to save him from being beaten up by some thugs in that alley.

—The memory of that moment no longer was present in Emilia's mind, though.

Taritta: "I've always grown up hiding behind Sister. Sister's as we all know her to be, so no one doubted she'd eventually become the Chieftain. Neither did I."

Subaru: "Taritta-san…"

Falteringly, Taritta began to talk about herself.

At first, Subaru had intended to stop her if she started talking about something she did not want to speak about, as a response to his confession. She had inquired him about the source of his makeup and crossdressing skills, and Subaru had told her about himself, which were his own problems. He had no intention of forcing her to do so.

However, upon noticing Taritta's moist eyes and trembling voice, her visage downcast, he halted.

She was talking because she wished to, that was what Subaru felt.

Taritta: "Sister and I are three years apart in age. But the reason why I feel Sister's so big isn't because of the three years difference. That's right, isn't it?"

Subaru: "…"

Taritta: "What Sister could do when she was ten, I couldn't do when I was the same age. It wasn't a difference in age, it was a difference in something different. What that is, I don't know."

Every word that Taritta spoke pierced through Subaru's heart.

It was a story he had heard somewhere, yet, simultaneously, it was a story he had never disclosed to anyone.

An inferiority complex towards her outstanding elder sister, something Rem had been harboring.

An inferiority complex towards the person he yearned to be like, something Subaru had been tormented by.

Taritta: "Why did my sister make me the Chieftain? I just can't see myself in that role."

???: "—He's that guy's child, after all."

The disappointment in oneself. The feeling of guilt regarding the expectations of someone dear.

Nearly overwhelmed by these feelings, Taritta had embarked along on this journey. Mizelda, the former Chieftain, had pledged to assist Abel on his journey with the goal of reclaiming the throne.

Perhaps it was a journey for Taritta to reflect and acknowledge herself, and at the same time, a way to escape the burden of expectations that had fallen upon her.

Taritta: "During this journey, I have to find an answer. No, I need to harden my resolve."

Subaru: "Resolve… Is that resolve to take over as Chieftain?"

Taritta: "…"

Subaru's question was met with a nod from Taritta's thin chin.

It would be unfitting to say she had arrived at an answer, but to say she had readied herself to a fitting fate was possible. —The duty of being the tribe's next Chieftain had been entrusted to her by Mizelda, he could understand that was the way she considered it.

Taritta believed that taking over as Chieftain was inevitable.

She believed that she had no right to reject it. That it was the duty of a sister who had been appointed by her elder sister, and that she must lead the next generation of the clan—.

Subaru: "Even if you run away…"

Taritta: "Eh?"

Subaru: "Even if you run away, I think it'd be fine. I wouldn't blame you for that."

The astonished expression on Taritta's face conveyed to him that she had not expected to hear such words.

Though that had been the flow of the conversation, Taritta had confided in him her innermost thoughts. Her situation, the insecurities, the responsibility she carried on her thin shoulders, could be seen.

He could also see that she was extremely responsible and self-punishing, and that she was struggling to cope with it.

Or perhaps Taritta had wished that Subaru would tell her to "get a grip" here, to encourage her to make a decision that she could not make herself. Perhaps she wanted him to advise her that there was no such thing as a lack of self-confidence in the sight of Subaru proudly and unashamedly wearing women's clothes.

But what Subaru had told her, had betrayed her expectations.

Subaru: "If you can't bear it, if you think there's someone better suited than you, we won't blame you if you pack up and leave the carriage. At least, I won't."

Taritta: "B-but, if I'm gone, our strength will be…"

Subaru: “Of course, I’m worried about that. But I’ll do whatever I can.”

Taritta: “…”

Subaru inwardly ridiculed himself for saying such selfish things, though he did not display it.

If he heard this exchange, Abel would be discontent. As Taritta had said, she was a valuable military asset to their faction, which lacked in strength.

That could be attributed to both their faction as a whole, as well as to the group on this journey.

Of all things, he wondered whether it’d be fine to let them go.

Taritta: “You’re saying I’m not needed…”

Subaru: “No, that’s a big mistake. I also want Taritta-san to be with us in terms of both personality and strength. But that’d be selfish of me, wouldn’t it?”

Taritta: “Selfish…”

Subaru: “Because I’d be telling you to numb your feelings, so that I can live.”

Being an experienced and kindred spirit, Subaru could not force Taritta to do that.

Subaru, who had been given the opportunity to exit that dark place previously, had declared to Taritta, who was older and possibly more experienced than Subaru in this matter, much like if they were senior and junior.

—You cannot be someone else.

No matter if they were a blood relative or just someone close. No matter the degree one had longed for them, envied them, or scorched them into their heart. You cannot be someone else.

Subaru: “We can’t be anyone but our own “self”.”

He could not be anything other than himself, and he had to at least become something he could like, something he could be comfortable with, something he could be confident in.

Like a butterfly that would hatch after repeated disappointments, discouragements, and a small sense of accomplishment.

Subaru: “…It’s unpleasant, isn’t it?”

So whispered Subaru, in a voice so quiet that Taritta had been unable to hear him.

What he was recalling as he spoke, was the ideal that Abel had conveyed to him a few hours prior, around the same bonfire. What many of the have-nots were clutching at, living with, in their empty hands, he had wondered.

The essence of what he had stated, seemed to overlap with what Subaru was attempting to say.

Taritta: “…”

Listening to Subaru’s story, Taritta’s eyes swayed, her hesitation becoming even stronger.

It was up for Taritta to decide which way her hesitation would lead her, but he knew that he should respect whatever she chose.

Subaru had run away from the expectations placed on him and the guilt of not living up to them.

He even suspected that his being summoned to this other world had been an act of consideration by someone who had taken in his desires to escape.

Of course, that was the reason as to why he had been unable of saying goodbye to his parents, his real parents—

Subaru: “You know, the fact that I was able to escape was salvation.”

At the very least, had he stayed locked in his room, always trapped between expectations and guilt, Natsuki Subaru would not have been able to catch up with his current emotions.

He would still be Subaru, his hands full with himself and no opportunity to strain his own heart, or to do something for someone else, or to give something to someone else.

There was nothing wrong with running away until one was ready to fight.

This should be a world in which everyone could choose not to fight.

Taritta: “Confidence and determination…”

Subaru: “What?”

Taritta: “I’m lacking in confidence and determination. But that’s not all…”

Hearing Subaru’s story, which came from his own experience, Taritta muttered, her lips trembling.

It had been so small that it seemed to have been drowned out by the sound of the crackling bonfire. Or perhaps she was filled with acute emotion, more so than when she had recounted the tale of her own powerlessness.

Taritta: “If I make a big mistake, how could I… Make up for it?”

Subaru: “Mistakes and making up for it… Taritta-san?”

Taritta: “…”

The question was repeated and Taritta let out a small “Ah”.

Her eyes widened, and Subaru could see the regret in them. In the same way she had spoken of making a mistake before, her regret for what she had ended up telling Subaru peeked through.

It seemed like Taritta had been burdened with a lot of guilt regarding that big mistake.

Not only the helplessness of comparing herself to her sister, but also the existence of her sister seemed to be a factor that prevented her from making her own decision.

Taritta: “The strange things I said… Please, forget them.”

What followed in the end, was the conclusion that her untold story could not be told.

He could tell by Taritta’s voice and expression that she had not arrived at an answer, but Subaru interpreted it as a sign that he could not force her to talk.

If only he could be there for her when she eventually felt the need to vent—

???: “—Bro, time for a shift change.”

Upon Subaru’s conclusion, a voice called out from the carriage.

It was Al, twisting his thick neck as he slowly walked over to the campfire. The time for Subaru’s shift was over, as the night watch was supposed to change every three hours.

Subaru: “I’m not happy that Abel and Louis are out of the rotation, but…”

Al: “Stop it, stop it. It’d be a terrible thing if we get executed for having Abel-chan work the night shift once he returns to the throne.”

Subaru: “If you’re on about grudges, I don’t think I’d be able to decide how many of my heads should be lined up for that.”

Al: “If you’re aware of it, please control it. Because it’ll make me nervous to be around you.”

Overhearing Subaru’s rambling, Al made a reasonable complaint.

Nevertheless, he would continue complaining about Abel’s attitude going forward. The reason why Abel was so arrogant and tyrannical was because no one had ever spoken up.

While he remained as a fugitive with no real power, to correct that character as much as possible was needed.

Subaru: “Otherwise, even if he returns with our help, another rebellion will soon ensue, and he’ll lose his head that time.”

Al: “Yeah, I’ll leave that to you. As you can see from the Princess, I’m basically a laissez-faire kinda guy.”

With a fluttering wave of his hand, Al threw out the idea of getting Subaru to change his mind.

Sighing at Al’s unreliability, Subaru turned to face Taritta again. “Taritta-san,” he called out to her as she gazed at the fire, lost in thought,

Subaru: “I’ll leave you to it. If you find Al’s sexual harassment or silly jokes unbearable to listen to, please let me know immediately.”

Taritta: “Sexual hara……?”

Al: “I’m not gonna act the same as I do with the Princess! It’s a matter of distance and intimacy, and TPO.”

Subaru: “That’s something I’m not good at.”

Taritta replied in a faint voice, while Al loudly proclaimed his innocence.

After comparing the two, Subaru stood up and whispered to Al as he brushed off the dirt on his hem and buttocks.

Subaru: “Perhaps Taritta-san’ll ask you for some life advice. If she does, please guide her as an experienced leader.”

Al: ““Experienced leader” seems to be the opposite of my description, doesn’t it? I can’t be responsible for other people’s lives, as I’ve been actively running away from such things.”

Subaru: “This is your chance to overcome your weaknesses. It’s the same with peppirs.”

Emilia and Beatrice, who were not fans of peppirs as well, were also trying their best to overcome their dislikes in various ways, without losing their bold challenging spirit.

The two of them had yet a single battle together, but Subaru believed that as long as they kept fighting, one day they would be able to win.

Subaru: “So, please do your best, Al.”

Al: “Is it just me, or that doesn’t resonate that much…?”

At least, what he had just said met the conditions to inspire Subaru, so he concluded that the problem was with Al, who was not affected by it.

Taritta: “Natsumi, see you… tomorrow.”

Subaru: “—Yeah, see you tomorrow.”

Taritta called out to Subaru, who handed over the shift to Al and turned to head back to the carriage.

That feeble yet certain promise of tomorrow, gave Subaru hope that she would accept Subaru’s words, and that they would meet face-to-face the following day.

Running away was not a bad thing. There was power to be gained as a result of running away.

But there were also people who would steel themselves to fight instead of running away, and were able to overcome it.

Subaru hoped that was the case with Taritta.

Subaru: “…”

Back at the carriage, Subaru was greeted by the tranquil air of the dark interior.

The interior of the carriage was divided by a simple curtain, separating the sleeping quarters for men and women in the front and back. The men were at the front, the women at the back, but the group currently sleeping was surprisingly quiet.

Abel, Medium, and Louis were the three resting right now, and how quietly Medium and Louis were slumbering, Abel notwithstanding, seemed to him relatively surprising.

Upon questioning them about their sleeping patterns, knowing that it was against etiquette, Medium had cheerfully replied, "If you snore too loudly, people will know where you are".

It was not until some time later, that Subaru realized that it had been during her travels as a peddler, or during her days in the facility that had been stated to have been in poor condition.

A skill acquired out of necessity.

In that sense, it might also be the reason as to why Abel slept quietly.

Subaru: "…You look odious, even when you're asleep. Perhaps I should doodle on you."

???: "—What, you are staring at me quite rudely."

Subaru: "—Hk."

In the middle of the allotted space in the carriage, Abel was sleeping. Upon peeking at his slumbering face, Subaru was startled by the sudden voice. He almost let out an instinctive scream, but Subaru managed to restrain it, instead saying, "You're awake?".

Subaru: "…Since we're keeping watch, I'd hoped you could at least enjoy the benefits of it."

Abel: "It is the custom of the Vollachian Imperial Family to sleep with one eye open. I am no exception to that rule."

Subaru: "With one eye open, this isn't a movie… Eh, you serious?"

Abel: "Why should I crack a stupid joke with you?"

Subaru’s breath hitched after Abel’s retort, the latter unconcerned, one eye open as he had declared.

The light in his dark eyes proved that his earlier words had been no deception.

There was an old movie that talked of an assassin with the habit of sleeping with one eye open.

Apparently, the structures of the human brain made performing this difficult, but seeing Abel doing it as a matter-of-fact in front of him, made Subaru realize that it was not impossible.

But that was not the same thing as being convinced.

Subaru: “Why don’t you sleep properly? Do you think we’re going to hurt you in your sleep?”

Abel: “If there is a small chance, then it is a possibility. You cannot lose your life for lack of attention.”

Subaru: “Lack of attention…!”

Hearing that detached reply, Subaru’s voice trembled and he pointed out the window.

All that could be seen through the carriage window was the light of a campfire some distance away. Two people, Al and Taritta, stood on night watch, on the lookout for any looming danger.

Of course, it was also for their own safety, but—

Subaru: “—Who the hell do you think they’re doing that for?”

Abel: “…”

Subaru: “After all this time, you still can’t even close both eyes in front of us?”

Natsumi Schwartz’s skin peeled away, revealing Natsuki Subaru from their contorted expression.

Faced with this, Abel's clear expression did not waver. As he had done in the past, Abel blinked alternately with his right and left eyes.

Even the number of blinks was minimal, which was the same reason as to why he could not sleep with both eyes closed.

The time they had risked their lives together in the Lifeblood Ritual, when they infiltrated Guaral dressed as dancers, and when they boarded the carriage and headed for their destination, were no different.

Subaru sympathized with the people who had to be on-guard, in a situation where failure was not an option.

So, why would Abel not make an effort to loosen up before entering a place that could be hostile territory, at least?

At Subaru's raised eyebrow, Abel closed one eye. —A single eye.

He closed a single eye, folded his arms, leaned his back against the seat, and snorted.

Abel: "Do not consider any ideas about distorting my way of being. Mind your place."

Subaru: "…"

Abel: "The Demon City is close by. You must do your part. I desire no more, nor shall I allow it."

Subaru clicked his tongue as he was confronted with an untenable disconnection.

There had been times when he thought he could be able to make some progress, but it was still no use.

Subaru: "Oh, yeah… Oh, yeah! I'm going to snore so hard."

He raised his voice in annoyance, but Abel did not respond.

Subaru frowned in bitterness as he settled into a seat as far away from Abel as possible, loosened his clothes, and laid down, with care not to damage his wig.

He thought about keeping himself awake as an act of rebellion against Abel, but Subaru was unsure what would be the point of doing so, or whether sleeping or staying awake would be the right thing to do; and so, his consciousness went blank.

The carriage ride continued with various problems, anxieties, and relationship values in the air.

—The arrival at the Demon City of Chaosflame was just around the corner.

Chapter 36:
Chaotic Demon City

1

Louis: “Aah! Uuh!”

As she pointed at the cityscape in front of them, Louis bounced her butt off the driver’s seat.

Subaru would’ve liked to warn her that she was disturbing the handling of the Galewind Horse, however Medium, the one who held the reins, pulled Louis by her shoulders and said with a cheerful, yet unrefined “I know, I know!”.

In addition, Subaru, who had also been watching the same thing, was suitably overwhelmed.

Subaru: “So that’s the Demon City of Chaosflame…”

With a gulp, Subaru couldn’t help but express his surprise with his own body.

In Lugunica, he had been amazed by the scenic beauty of the Watergate City of Pristella, and in Vollachia, he had been impressed by the difference in architectural styles. However, the spectacle of the Demon City looming before him had bore a different impact on Subaru compared to either of these.

In Subaru’s perception, a city was an assembly in which a large number of people lived, and for this reason, unified styles and rules should be laid down for architecture.

However, in the streets of Chaosflame, no such sense of unity could be sensed.

Undoubtedly, it was a crucible of miscellaneous and haphazard principles, befitting a city crowned by the term “chaos”.

At the heart of the city lay the most conspicuous feature: a castle painted in vermillion glossy paint, and the streets expanded out as a circle as if encasing the castle. At first glance, it appeared similar to the structure of the Royal Capital of Lugunica, but even there one would notice a clear difference between noble, commoner, and poor.

Chaosflame, on the other hand, had none of that.

Old ruins beside gleaming buildings, streets were lined with short buildings with sudden appearances of spires twice their size, and desolated sandy areas were adjacent to lush parks.

There were countless beams and scaffolding that had been arbitrarily pieced together on top of these streets, and from a distance it seemed as if the entire city were covered in a lattice of spider webs.

This was a city that had nothing to do with discipline, neatness, or decency in general—there was only one way for it to be called. The Demon City.

He could tell, at a glance, that this was without a doubt, a place where chaos prevailed.

Al: "—It looks like a city that could easily crumble with a "giant's thrust", doesn't it?"

Said Al calling out to Subaru, the former having been squinting at the mayhem, shading the tops of his eyes with his hands, spilling his thoughts about the spectacle that was Demon City.

It was a trivial matter, but what was the point of putting his hands over the helmet?

Al: "I've lived in Vollachia for a long time, but this is my first time coming to the east, so it's refreshing."

Subaru: "Is this your first time in Chaosflame too? So you've been on the west side of Vollachia all this time?"

Al: "It's more like, I've been in only one place on the west side. There's a Colosseum smack dab in the middle of a lake, called Gladiator Island. I was a gladiator there for a long time.”

Subaru: “A gladiator in a colosseum…”

Subaru was taken aback by the tumultuous grandness of Al’s career, which he had incidentally heard about before.

The loss of his arm included many of the things that Al had talked about without hesitation were very serious. It was because of the gravity of his situation that he spoke so casually, in order to not make the other person feel uncomfortable, but—

Subaru: “That doesn’t relieve my mental burden at all…”

Al: “Mh? What did you say, bro?”

Subaru: “No, not a thing… By the way, what’s a “giant’s thrust”?”

Al: “Huh? Didn’t they say that in your hometown? You know, earthquakes and stuff like that?”

When asked about the unfamiliar expression, Al twisted his head and replied to Subaru with a question.

Although Al and him were from the same hometown, hometown in this case broadly referred to their original world, so of course their real hometown would be different.

That said, while there were many proverbs related to demons, he could not recall many related to giants.

Subaru: “Maybe it’s related to a baseball team? I don’t really know much about it.”

Al: “Oh, no, I’m not sure. I don’t remember where I got the word, and I don’t remember being particularly fond of baseball, but…”

Subaru: “I see. Even though you’d look right at home drinking beer and watching a baseball game.”

Al: “In the first place, I never drank anything of the sort.”

Sharing a bitter smile with Al at those words, Subaru remembered the age at which Al had been summoned to this other world, and inwardly agreed, “Yeah, that makes sense”.

In any case, during their little chat, the carriage that transported the group approached the front of the Demon City, the entrance to the city of chaos.

Speaking of entering and exiting the city, the most recent thing that came to mind were the checkpoints in Guaral.

Checkpoints had been set up at the main gates of the city, one in the north and one in the south, and in each the identity of people entering and leaving the city would be inquired, along with the purpose of their stay.

In the end, it was possibly debatable whether the checkpoints were functioning properly, since they had allowed Subaru and the others to infiltrate, but Zikr’s words should then be taken in consideration: “The soldiers’ eyes must have been burned by the sheer beauty of Natsumi and the others”. So it should be treated as a result of their side’s skillfulness.

Regardless, the existence of such checkpoints was not different between the Kingdom and the Empire.

Every city in Lugunica had such checks. Therefore, Subaru thought that this was a win-or-lose moment, and stepped into the shoes of Natsumi Schwartz again—

Guard: “—Enter.”

Medium: “Understooood! Thanks.”

Louis: “Uuh!”

The man had looked around the carriage and given them permission to pass; he was supposedly a part of the city’s garrison, and a member of the Cyclops Tribe—a man from a race with a single large eye at the center of their face.

To Subaru, the fact that he had been given permission to enter with just a quick glance was anticlimactic. He wondered if, possibly, the guard held the power to see something special in that characteristic single eye.

Subaru: “Maybe that’s why he’s been appointed as a gate guard, isn’t it?”

Abel: “It appears that you are reading too much into it, but the Cyclops Tribe does not possess power of that nature. I have heard that they can see a little farther than normal people, but generally, there is no difference in the functioning of their eyes.”

Subaru: “Right! Because how’d he let such a suspicious carriage pass by!”

Subaru, who had put his hand on his chin while trying to convince himself in his own way, barked at the unkind words.

Hearing Subaru’s high-pitched complaint, the other party emitted a small snort, as they adjusted the angle of their face, a mask—an oni mask in red. Following this, they sank back down in their seats.

As soon as he had arrived at the Demon City, Abel had equipped the mask he had brought along. Subaru had protested that such an action would make the guards and soldiers suspicious of him.

However, Abel’s mask did not come off, and the guards had reacted as he had foreseen, leaving Subaru bitter twice over.

Of course, it was good news that Abel had not been suspected.

Subaru: “It’s a serious matter, really. What kind of laws are in place, so that the city’s first line of defense, the gate guard, is in such a state?”

Taritta: “I agree with Natsumi. I’m wearing clothes with sleeves, and they didn’t say anything about it.”

Subaru: “Hmm… your surprise’s of a slightly different nature than mine…”

Taritta agreed with him, her cheeks stiffened, but unfortunately, the gap in cultures she had experienced was different from that which Subaru had experienced.

While Subaru's pertained more so with the way the city carried itself; hers was attributed to her self-identification as a Shudraqian.

Subaru: "…"

It reminded him of the conversation Taritta and him'd had around the campfire, before their arrival at the Demon City.

Following that event, she never again spoke of the same worries and anxieties, but that did not mean that Taritta had been freed from their fetters. It was a concern that might not go away, even if she were able to achieve the decisive event of taking over as the Chieftain.

Subaru sincerely hoped that she could reach a resolution that would put her mind at ease if possible, however—

Subaru: "Well, let's focus on the problem of the Demon City."

After overcoming the careless checkpoint, the carriage was swallowed by the chaotic and disorderly city itself.

The high-pitched cheers of Medium and Louis being impressed at every step arose from the coachman's seat, and Subaru too witnessed the spectacle of what lay within the Demon City, of that which could not be seen from the exterior alone.

The first thing that struck him as he entered the city, was the unprecedented number of races.

The impact caused by the one-eyed guard at the gate had been quite potent, but once inside the city, he realized that the guard's presence was not particularly eye-catching.

In broad terms, there was a large variety of beastmen—And it wasn't just catfolk and dogfolk, there were also rabbit and lionfolk, with a clear distinction between small and large among them, passing through the streets.

A group of reptilian-looking lizardmen set up a store, a member of the Multi-Arm Tribe with many arms, and a group of people with unusually long hair that might or might not be a fashion statement or a racial trait.

As soon as he thought that, he noticed a race that appeared to be made of actual stone walking around, and a chimera whose body parts seemed to be mixed with another race's as well.

Subaru: "…"

Subaru was left speechless by this senseless mixture of races.

Of course, even in the Royal Capital of Lugunica, there were scenes that had reverberated within Subaru similarly, which had made him realize that he had been summoned to another world immediately. But later, as he acquired the knowledge required to live in this world, he also learned a smidgen of the complicated circumstances surrounding demi-humans.

With how Emilia was ostracized for being a half-elf as an example, the environment for demi-humans in this world could not exactly be labelled as favorable.

For better or worse, the custom of keeping away those who were different did not change even across worlds.

Consequently, many demi-humans whose appearance very much reflected their characteristics left human settlements and kept to themselves to avoid trouble, so he had heard.

The Sanctuary, that which Garfiel, among others, called home, was one of those.

But what about Chaosflame, which lay in front of Subaru's eyes?

The variety of species living side-by-side and without prejudice aside, what had struck Subaru the most, was the way they stood.

With their backs straight, everyone was proudly asserting their own species.

Beastmen that did not curl their claws and fangs, lizardmen that would not polish their scales, and those whose shapes were considered abnormal would not cover their faces and bodies with cloth. —To Subaru's eyes, this was novel.

Abel: "What kind of laws are in place, you said?"

The one to speak suddenly was Abel, sporting the oni mask, remaining in his seat.

While not only Medium on the platform, but also Subaru, Al, and even Taritta were looking around curiously, the Emperor, his visage concealed, drew Subaru's attention with his words and continued.

Abel: "As you can see, what we have here, is lawlessness. If you ask what sort of law prevails, that would be an intangible sort. It is a mockery of the nature of order, a city of vices, if you will."

Subaru: "Vices…? People are impressed, yet you still managed to put a damper on it."

Abel: "Impressed? It left a deep impression on you? I guess that is to be expected from an outsider such as yourself."

Abel shrugged his thin shoulders at Subaru's response, with a slight grimace on his face.

The word "outsider" once again made him feel like he did not belong, which in turn reminded Subaru of the argument they'd had in the carriage a few days prior. In spite of that, as Subaru had been the only one becoming emotional, the other party would probably laugh at him labelling it an argument.

Al: "But ain't the concept consistent throughout this city that of disorder itself having become order? What do you think, Abel-chan?"

Abel: "If you question the nature of order, you shall know whether this city is disorderly or not. —Where do you believe the essence of order resides in, in the first place?"

Al: "Getting all philosophical on me… Bro, pass!"

Subaru closed one eye at Al, who had given up on thinking pretty quickly.

However, unlike Al, bereft of pride, Subaru was not willing to raise the white flag so easily. He crossed his arms and twisted his neck, permitting his long hair to flow over his shoulders, then stated,

Subaru: "The essence of order is not that, you know. Everyone getting along! Harmony!"

Abel: "—The essence of order is to be the same."

Without reacting to Subaru's opinion, which sounded like he was in the lower grades of elementary school, such was Abel's statement.

Frowning upon his words, Abel resumed piling on.

Abel: "It is many beings sharing the same values. It may be doctrines or beliefs, goals or self-interest. When as a group, rather than as an individual, the identity that does not deviate from each other is called order. What is built on the foundation of that order, is the pipe dream you spoke of."

Subaru: "Pipe dream… Do you think peace is that ridiculous?"

Abel: "Struggle is an unavoidable human instinct. Even if the weapon for that is not a sword, but a language or a country, the essence remains the same. But order is the perfect mechanism for shaping an environment far from collapse. —Behold."

Jerking his chin, Abel urged Subaru and the others to look out the window.

As he sat in his seat, he presented them with something that they could be confident of its presence without bothering to look out the window—the red castle, the symbol of the Demon City.

Abel: "As the clown said, there is an order called disorder in this city. And that poses as the reason as to why the city has not fallen into collapse, despite its existence as a melting pot for myriad species."

Subaru: “That castle… No, inside the castle…”

Abel: “—Yorna Mishigure.”

The sound of Abel’s voice assaulted Subaru’s eardrums, which trembled slightly.

Abel, his expression unseen behind that mask, spoke of that name. But what did he think of the existence of the most problematic person in the Nine Divine Generals? One who could be indispensable for him to regain the throne?

The Demon City where various things stood in close proximity, both vertically and horizontally; Where people without any sense of unity would arrive, and leave.

The castle at the city’s core appeared to be looking down on the Emperor’s group that had arrived at its laps, its glossy outer walls glowing with a mysterious light.

2

—The information provided in advance regarding Yorna Mishigure, amounted to little.

One of the Nine Divine Generals, the strongest of the Vollachian Empire, and a woman who had been anointed with the rank of Seventh.

Although she held a position as a General of the Empire and was counted as one of the swords of the Emperor, she was a loose cannon who had brought unnecessary chaos upon the country by committing rebellion many times.

Zikr had been the one to supply information about the Nine Divine Generals to Subaru on the behalf of the Emperor who was incapable of communicating with others, but the only two people whose humanity he had vaguely spoken about were Yorna and Cecilus, the First.

In short—

Subaru: “From the craziest men and women of the Empire, it’s the woman who’s the one that’s recognized as such…?”

With those words, as he mulled over what laid ahead, Subaru’s fake chest became laden.

Negotiating with the woman was the challenge at hand, but eventually he would have to face the man as well. Moreover, there was also an agreement on the fact that if they did not have him as an ally, they were almost certain to lose.

Although when he started to say the same thing, he was reminded of the talk about order that Abel had given,

Subaru: “It’s those who are far from orderly that we’ve got to deal with, isn’t it…?”

With a slight headache, Subaru muttered as he brushed a strand of hair off his forehead with his fingers.

Abel’s reasoning was deeply interesting, as expected of the Emperor, but whether it would be of use in capturing Yorna soon was debatable.

However, he was not simply trying to assert his dominance by telling Subaru something clever, instead he wished to convey something else. —The order of the Demon City.

Chaosflame seemed to be overflowing with people and things in a chaotic and disorderly manner, but even in a pot brewing such bedlam, an “order” that would not crumble existed.

Abel had declared that this order was Yorna Mishigure.

In other words, Yorna was in possession of the ability and ingenuity to bring all this disorder together and keep it from overflowing out of the pot.

That was why Abel had not ordered her removal from the Nine Divine Generals, or even her execution, despite the fact she was a dangerous rebel with a history of multiple revolts.

Al: “But I’m sure she’s got a screw loose, and I don’t wanna get the short end of the stick, bro.”

While Subaru was lost in thought, Al, casually sitting cross-legged, laughed at him.

Subaru exhaled lighted as he peeked at Al, the latter sitting in a slouched position on the wooden floor. There were times when his calmness would save the day, but it was on a case-by-case basis.

Subaru: “Al, please behave yourself. You never know when, where, or who might be watching you. Also, please stop calling me bro.”

Al: “Hearing you out about my attitude and posture’s fine, but aside from… bro, what should I call you? Something like, bro but written as sis?”

Subaru: “Isn’t that something that can’t be conveyed without the Kanji?”

The beauty of the Japanese language’s variety of expressions was mind-boggling, but at present, there was no use in increasing the number of exchanges between Subaru and Al that could only be understood by the two of them.

What they needed was a way to call each other externally.

Subaru: “Since you address Medium-san, Taritta-san and Abel as “chan”, wouldn’t it be more natural if you addressed me as such?”

Al: “Then, Natsumi-chan? Whoa, gives me goosebumps!”

Subaru: “Please withstand the urge! You lack so much composure…”

As the leader of the group, Subaru reprimanded Al, who showed the hair on his right arm standing on end.

It was a strange thing to say, but it was unavoidable, because seniority had not played a role in the selection of personnel this time around. Considering the weighty part he had to perform, tempering his behavior was something Subaru had to do.

At any rate—

Subaru: "—We're already inside the Crimson Lapis Castle."

The whisper not leaving his mouth, Subaru began putting his mind in order.

Yes, Subaru and the others had already been invited to enter the Crimson Lapis Castle at the heart of the Demon City, as they had sought an audience with Yorna Mishigure, the Lord of the city.

—After the entrance to the Demon City had been accomplished, the subsequent actions were swift.

They had procured an inn in which they could stay with their Galewind Horse and carriage, booked a room, and began actions towards their goal of conquering Yorna.

Having said that, because they had already decided what steps were required on the way there, no hesitation was to be found in their actions.

The action to be taken was—

Abel: "Deliver this to the lord of the castle, Yorna Mishigure. She should respond."

With that, Abel handed Subaru a letter written by him.

The envelope containing the letter was enclosed with beeswax, rendering it impossible to open. It was customary for important documents to be stamped with a ring, or similar, bearing the family crest before the beeswax hardened, as proof of their origin.

However, there was no such proof stamped on the sealing wax of the letter he had been given.

Abel: "Both of the Emperor's symbols I took with me have already been shattered. One by you, the other in the City Hall of Guaral."

Subaru: "Oh… the Lifeblood Ritual and the Arakiya Panic, yes. But if we don't have anything to show where it came from, I wonder if she'll read it. Even if she does, will she really believe us?"

Abel: "There is no need for unnecessary concern. I shall not disclose the contents of the letter, but I have made it so that if she reads it, she shall know I am its writer."

Subaru: "I see… By the way, wouldn't it be more reliable if you went there in person?"

Subaru asked frankly as he put the letter he received in his pocket.

The reason why he had been requested to hand over the letter, was because Abel would not accompany him to the castle. It seemed like a problem that could be solved in one go had he gone along, even if it meant proving his identity and circumstances.

In the first place, hadn't Abel gone along with them to negotiate directly with Yorna?

Technically speaking, with Abel not going there, wouldn't it be the same as if he had stayed behind in Guaral?

Subaru: "If anything, I think the journey would've been much more relaxed that way, without having to worry about checkpoints along the way…"

Abel: "Your disrespect knows no bounds, does it?"

Subaru: "Because you're disrupting our vibe all by yourself…"

More precisely, it was not restricted to just Abel; Louis's presence, too, was one of the disruptors.

But since he wanted to give Abel a snide remark at this juncture, he put aside the matter of Louis, a specialist in disturbing Subaru's mind.

Abel: "It goes without saying, but I shall be having a direct word with Yorna Mishigure. However, it is not convenient for me to make my entrance so prematurely. You, too, should perceive that."

Subaru: "Perceive… Oh, yeah, that's right."

Abel’s grumpy words, conveyed through that oni mask, peacefully convinced Subaru.

Now you mention it, this was an opponent who had been involved in several rebellions in the past. From Yorna’s point of view, the rebellion had most likely been raised because of her dissatisfaction with Abel’s rule.

Naturally, the relationship between Abel and Yorna was like water and oil, or in some cases, like a smoldering powder keg. It’s already something that he dragged himself all the way to the Demon City.

Abel: “At present, your task is to deliver the letter to Yorna Mishigure. However, you must keep it secret that it is a missive from me… from the Emperor.”

Subaru: “Eh, why not? If I don’t say that, won’t I get turned away at the door?”

Abel: “It’s just in case. Nothing bad shall befall you for allowing her to read the letter, however I cannot read her mind before you hand it over. Therefore, be creative.”

Subaru: “Creative…”

Subaru looked at Abel in surprise as he was thrown an unexpected challenge.

The latter crossed his arms, his expression still hidden by the oni mask,

Abel: “If you look at this city, you can get a rough idea of her temperament and how she weighs her likes and dislikes. Use all the gumption you possess to get her interest.”

Subaru: “There was some malice in your phrasing!”

Abel: “I do have a back-up plan, but I would prefer to not rely on it. It shall not endure for much time. Considering my purpose, we have a long way to go. Do you comprehend that?”

Subaru: “You really are a pompous man, aren’t you…?”

Subaru's lips curved in a grimace at the manner in which Abel spoke his instructions.

He was not afraid to side with Yorna now, and raise a rebellion against Abel. With that rumination in his consciousness, he felt like he could get along with Yorna.

If they could both have a chat about their grievances against His Majesty the Emperor, they could become best friends.

Subaru: "…Well, I guess I'll proceed in that direction then."

Abel: "You seem to have had a flash of inspiration, however, it does not appear to be anything proper."

As far as he was concerned, there was nothing persuasive about being told that by the initiator of something improper himself.

—And so, after going through with this, Subaru and the others had made their way to the epicenter of the Demon City, the Crimson Lapis Castle, the residence of Yorna Mishigure.

In accordance with Abel's instructions, they were taken up to the castle while going without the mention of his name.

Although this was a somewhat unusual move, Yorna's private soldiers, who were as unconcerned as the gate guards, ordered Subaru and the others to enter the castle and await an audience with Yorna.

All said, Subaru and the others were now spending their time inside the castle, within a large waiting room with a wooden floor, until Yorna, the lord of the castle, was ready.

There were no guards in the waiting room, and they could leave at any time if such was their will.

The laxity and carelessness of the security system was enough to make Subaru, an outsider, nervous. In the first place, things had proceeded so smoothly that even Subaru was bewildered.

Subaru: "Of course, it's convenient, but… if they let visitors into the castle like this, with or without the General First-Class, wouldn't they be given free rein to assassinate?"

Al: "In fact, they haven't even taken away our weapons. I was surprised when they said we could enter with them."

Medium: "Well, we don't mean to be violent or anything. They won't get mad."

Subaru and Al were taken aback by their response, which frankly smelled more of defenseless than magnanimity. However, Medium, who had been sitting calmly beside them, laughed boisterously at their conversation.

Subaru, Al, and Medium had been the three to embark to the Crimson Lapis Castle as messengers. The remaining people, Abel, Taritta, and Louis, were currently waiting at the inn.

Since Abel could not come to the castle, one of them had to stay behind to guard him.

And since he wanted to avoid having to spare hands for Louis's protection, who would be in no conceivable scenario be useful, their split had resulted in this.

Subaru: "I also briefly thought about the possibility that the owner of this castle likes unusual things."

If that were the case, it was possible that the People of Shudraq, who would scarcely leave the forest, would attract Yorna's interest; so making Taritta a member of this had come to mind.

However, leaving Abel and Louis alone at the inn was not an option, so the outcome produced was that Taritta had been left with a rather laborious load.

Al: "Even if she likes unusual things, with so many species in the city, wouldn't one or two Taritta-chans be considered unusual now?"

Subaru: "Yes, I thought so too. That's why we're going with this plan."

Medium: “Natsumi-chan, you’re so bold! I was surprised, and so was Al-chin.”

Al: “Yeah, Al-chin was so surprised.”

Even though Subaru had his reservations about Al, who shamelessly took advantage of Medium, the latter saying “Right?” with a tad of pride.

Subaru’d had a bright idea upon being asked to deliver Abel’s letter as a messenger while being disallowed to mention his name.

In fact, the reason they had been allowed to enter the castle this way, was probably because his idea had worked out so well.

Subaru: “The hint for our conquest is, ”Abel pisses me off”.”

Medium: “Haha, Natsumi-chan, you do snap at Abel, don’t you? I think it’s awesome.”

Subaru: “Awesome? Am I? Or is it Abel’s terrible character?”

Medium: “Both of them!”

Subaru: “You’ve got some nerve too, Medium-chan.”

Raising her hand cheerfully, Medium alluded to the relationship between Subaru and Abel.

The relationship between Subaru and Abel was not quite like that of water and oil, but they had no choice but to walk along the same direction; hence, they were bumping shoulders with each other as they went.

In terms of a close relationship, it could be said to be similar to that between Subaru and Julius in a time past.

However, taking in mind the stuff at Pleiades Watchtower, Subaru put a lot of faith in Julius. —Though he would never tell him that, nor was he intending on displaying it via his attitude.

Subaru: “But it’s not that easy either, you know.”

To put it plainly, one could guess that the rivalry had faded and that they had come to terms.

However, that too was the result of a long road, as well as a reasonable quantity of peaks and valleys, having been overcome.

Improving relationships was no trivial undertaking.

A rough road would never be leveled unless both parties were willing to make it better, at the very least.

Even if one side attempted to smoothen it, as long as the other trampled and laid waste to it, it would never happen.

???: “—Thank you for your patience. Messengers, this way.”

Such bitter sentimentality was interrupted by the words of a servant who had made her appearance in the waiting room.

The girl who had shown up, was the same girl who had guided them here—a deerperson with large antlers on her head. She was a half-beastman who, the antlers on her head aside, mostly resembled a human being.

The girl, still in her mid-teens, wrapped her slender body in a kimono-like outfit, its long hem sweeping the floor as she led Subaru and the others.

The grace of that figure and that gesture, made Subaru’s knowledge tingle slightly as he recalled something similar.

With Subaru not being capable of putting a finger on it, the girl who was guiding them conducted them to the upper parts of the Crimson Lapis Castle—to the very top level.

The construction of the Crimson Lapis Castle gave the impression that it was closer to the old-fashioned Japanese castles in Subaru’s knowledge, rather than the Western-style castles that he had grown used to seeing. Naturally, the materials used and the architectural style were different, but the interior and the way the floor had been designed with big open spaces gave him the aforementioned impression.

One of the reasons for this, could be the fact that here and there people clad in a kimono could be seen, together with the girl who had been showing them around.

In any case, Subaru and the others followed the guide in a well-behaved manner, having been brought to a room where they would meet Yorna.

???: “Please wait here. —Yorna-sama shall be here shortly.”

Subaru: “Yes, thank you… Oh?”

After thanking the girl for showing him around, Subaru was ushered into the hall, where he tilted his head.

The reason for this was the presence of previous guests in the hall. —Within the atrium, there were figures other than the three of them who had been ushered in, all facing away as Subaru’s gang entered from the back of the room.

That neither of the figures was Yorna, the lord of the castle, was clear from the fact that the chair placed at the far end of the room was empty.

Subaru: “Those people over there are …”

???: “These are the people who, much like you, have requested a meeting with Yorna-sama. Yorna-sama is a capricious person, so she wishes to see everyone at once.”

Subaru: “Yes…”

Subaru groaned a little from the difficulty of nodding at the girl’s nonchalant words.

It was an idea that was not only unreasonable, but also illogical. In the first place, even if such a situation had been arranged, it would be an extremely awkward one for people who did not even know each other.

There were times a party would wish the contents of their words would go unheard by strangers.

Al: “And that’s exactly what we are, Natsumi-chan.”

Subaru: “…If you call me that, then I’ll get goosebumps too.”

Having had his innermost thoughts peeked into and been called out, he replied to Al.

In fact, albeit the details of the letter he had brought along were unclear, it would undoubtedly describe the circumstances in which Abel had been forced to abdicate his throne, and request Yorna’s cooperation as a foothold to regain it.

Since they had no clue about Yorna’s personality, what her reaction to the letter was likewise unknown. At the very least, Abel had stated that she would not wrong them, were she able to read the missive.

Servant: “Please wait inside. Yorna-sama is here.”

Ignoring Subaru and Al, who were whispering to each other, the girl who was leading the way bowed and stepped back.

Of course, stopping her would not change the situation. If the one who had ordered her to do so was her master, Yorna, it would be pointless to blame her for this.

Medium: “So, what are we gonna do?”

Medium tilted her head as she shook her tied-up hair as she pleased, and touched the twin blades on the back of her waist.

She was quietly following Subaru and the others’ plans, which made her surprisingly reasonable. Medium, who gave the impression of being uninhibited and emotional, was, however, obedient to the directions she had been given.

Perhaps this was the result of the partition of roles between her and Flop in their journey as a duo.

Subaru rubbed his eyes in response to Medium’s straightforward and honest question, rocked his head, and with a “We can’t do anything about this”, he stepped into the room.

Subaru: “Just in case, let’s ask her to clear the room before handing her the letter. We may be refused, but things are what they are. There’s no harm in trying.”

Al: “If it were the Princess, there’s a chance she would have your head chopped off, saying it didn’t suit her fancy, y’know?”

Subaru: “Please don’t give me such an example…”

Having been presented with this most extreme of cases made him become more wary of Yorna, who may also be one such extreme being.

As Subaru hesitated a little to enter the hall, Al tapped him on the shoulder,

Al: “Don’t worry. I told you. I’ll lend you a hand. Today, I ain’t gonna let br… Natsumi-chan get into any trouble.”

Subaru: “Al… You’re the one who’s making me nervous.”

With those words, Subaru then glared at Al’s hand on his shoulder. Al hurriedly withdrew his hand, but for better or worse, his shoulders had relaxed.

Accepting Al’s sentiment with gratitude, the three of them also stepped into the hall.

The atmosphere of the large hall was, the absence of tatami mats excluded, akinto that of a tatami room in a historical drama, where the lord of the castle would hold council with his vassals.

Same went for the messengers in the seats below, waiting for the lord of the castle to make their appearance in the upper seat.

Subaru: “For the moment, let’s stay over here, shall we?”

Advancing through the hall, Subaru settled down in a position opposite to that of the previous guest.

It seemed strange to sit in front of or behind the guests, so he took a position on either side of the hall, keeping a slight distance from them. In historical dramas, there was a strange pattern in which the vassals would deploy to the left and right of the lord of the castle, leaving the front of the hall open. And they had ended up in a matching arrangement.

Pondering that this coincidence was strange, Subaru took a glance at the guests that were there before.

The other party amounted to four people, and like them, they had kept their weapons on their bodies. Among them was one devoid of weapons, sitting a tad ahead of the other three.

Perhaps that person was their representative, and the other three their guards.

Subaru: “They all seem more dependable than Al…”

So did Subaru speak, while looking sideways at the three guards and trampled all over Al’s earlier concern.

Moving on, he turned his attention to the front of the guards, to the person being protected by them, even though he thought it rude.

What kind of person had required to seek audience with Yorna, and for what purpose—

Subaru: “—Hk.”

At that very moment, Subaru’s throat tightened up due to shock, his cheeks and neck completely frozen stiff.

An inaudible voice leaked out, and as he turned his face down in a panicked reaction, the person in question heard the sound, then directed their gaze towards him.

However, having seen Subaru’s face directed downwards and in line with the elevated seat in front of them, his gaze fell away, as if he was not interested, and his attention was diverted.

Sensing this, Subaru took a gentle breath at the explosive beating of his heart.

Al and Medium behind him seemed to think it strange to see Subaru like this, but they soon would experience the same jolt that Subaru had.

Because—

Subaru: “…You’ve got to be kidding me.”

That was Subaru’s bitter complaint, and, just five meters next to him, waiting for Yorna Mishigure to make their appearance—

—Was a man donning the same visage as Abel, who was not supposed to be here.

Chapter 37:
The Lord of the Crimson Lapis Castle

—Towering at the heart of the Demon City of Chaosflame, the Crimson Lapis Castle.

The city looked like a wedding cake with no sense of unity, created by painting chaos on top of disorder—beams and scaffolding of different materials and styles had been strung together, and the castle, with its alternating shimmering red and blue hues, was one-of-a-kind, amidst the Demon City. A city that could not be understood without a certain artistic vein.

To begin with, the word “lapis lazuli” essentially referred to the color blue, so utilizing the word “crimson” in conjunction would be contradictory. However, a glance at the exterior of the Crimson Lapis Castle would convince anyone that such usage was accurate.

The stone used abundantly in the foundation and framework of the castle was, as its name implied, quite literally lapis lazuli.

The jewel emitted a deep-blue luster, and within said gem, crimson was swirling, like a drop of blood slowly dropped into water. So occasionally this supposedly-blue lapis lazuli would be clad in a red glow like that of ichor.

A castle of chaos, clad in ever-changing colors, refusing to stay as one single shade.

That was the Crimson Lapis Castle of the Demon City, the residence of its Lord, Yorna Mishigure.

Subaru: “…”

Having been summoned to the top-most floor, where he would soon meet Yorna, Subaru’s back was drenched in cold sweat.

The reason behind this was because he laid eyes upon a group of people waiting for Yorna in the same keep—and in that group, a face that should not be there was present.

Accompanied by three men who appeared to be his escorts, there sitting with all the composure in the world was a familiar black-haired fiendish figure—That was to say, it was none other than the countenance of that who was supposed to be waiting for him at the inn, Abel.

But there was no way that they could have possibly come across him here. It was for this reason that Subaru and the others had gone to the Crimson Lapis Castle as messengers without him.

In other words, the reason he was here, even though it was impossible was—

Subaru: "—He's a fake, disguised as the Emperor."

Muttering this to himself, Subaru's face turned stark white.

They had been told beforehand that there was someone who looked like Abel and behaved like him. The accuracy and suddenness of the encounter had floored him, but that was why he held no doubt about it.

He was one of the Nine Divine Generals, the body double of Emperor Vincent Vollachia—

Medium: "Eh, Abel-chin? Why are you here… Mguh."

Al: "Whoa, everything's aight, Medium-chan. Al-chin's here."

Behind a Subaru frozen in shock, a dangerous scene occurred.

Having found a familiar face in the crowd, Medium then approached in a friendly manner. Al rapidly covered her mouth and pulled her backwards. Although Medium was taller than him, she obeyed quietly, even though she was surprised at the outburst of the one-armed man.

A close call, but Medium's action had been negated.

???: "—?"

But the exchange seemed to have attracted some suspicion from the other party. Aside from the man with the same face as Abel, a man with yellow-green hair, someone who was probably his bodyguard, glared towards them as well.

That said—

Subaru: “That was a nice follow, Al.”

Al: “Yeah, I’d like to pat myself on the back for my godly reaction, too… But that guy’s a lil’ bit too much of a surprise, ain’t he?”

Subaru: “…Yes. I agree.”

As Al retracted Medium, Subaru nodded with a serious face next to him.

Battling with an unforeseen opponent—and the worst collision imaginable. With this turn of events, it was fortunate that Abel was not with them at this moment.

Had he been present, it would have sparked the start of the battle to determine the true Emperor of Vollachia.

Subaru: “Perhaps that’s an option as well…”

Glancing over at the three guards accompanying the man donning Abel’s face, Subaru was being cajoled by temptation.

The vastness of the troops hiding inside and outside the city was unclear, but at least there were only three of them belonging to him here—He was a false Emperor protected by tens of thousands of Imperial Soldiers within the Imperial Capital, but here and now would be a great opportunity to unmask him.

Subaru: “—No, it’s too soon to tell.”

If they were to believe Abel’s words, the position of the Emperor was no cradle of peace.

Abel never even shut both of his eyes simultaneously in public, constantly on alert for people attempting to slay him in his sleep.

Considering the position of Emperor was one in which this was a normal behavior, even if this Emperor was an imitation, it was unthinkable that he would make a public appearance devoid of any protection.

In other words, either the three people he brought with him as guards were quite powerful, or he had other measures in place.

Al: “You wanna take a shot and see if it works?”

Subaru: “If it were easy to continue, that could be an option. However, what I’m more afraid of’s a development we can’t recover from. So, please, don’t do anything rash.”

Al: “Yeah, yeah.”

Subaru did not know how serious he was, but Al appeared to not mind the rejection of his proposal.

Al’s opinions tended to be rejected relatively often, but that was only because he tended to come up with them faster than Subaru could, giving them time to calmly assess it.

This reduced the number of detours in his train of thought, and allowed him to spend more time examining proper options.

At the very least, they should find a way to get through this without upsetting the false Emperor and his group. He also wished to determine the purpose of the other party’s visit.

Why had he made his appearance in Chaosflame with this timing?

Plus, even though things were in reality different, it appeared like the Emperor himself had shown up.

Medium: “Mm~! Mmphn~!”

In the midst of his thoughts, Medium, who had her mouth covered, groaned something.

She had been forced to step back without explanation, and her mouth was being kept shut, so her indignation was understandable.

Al released her with a “Sorry, sorry”,

Medium: “Pffhaaa, that was tough!”

Al: “Sorry, I didn’t notice. It’s not like I did it on purpose just because of how soft Medium-chan’s cheeks are.”

Subaru: “The more you say, the more the sexual harassment allegations increase.”

Medium: “I don’t really get it, but more importantly!”

Al’s excuse was met with a blank stare from Subaru, and Medium, who took a breath with all her might, thrust a finger at them with both hands.

Subaru and Al both recoiled from her forcefulness, and then,

Medium: “You know, I still don’t really get it but… is that Abel-chin a different person from the Abel-chin we know?”

Al: “Oh yeah, you ain’t wrong. After all, the real one’s supposed to be sitting in an inn downtown, waiting for us to come back, right? That’s why we’re in a pickle…”

Medium: “Wouldn’t that be bad? Because of Natsumi’s plan?”

Subaru: “Me? What have I done… Ah.”

Medium pointed out that although she did not grasp the details, she comprehended the essence of the problem. Subaru, frowning at being the subject of her point, immediately understood her concern.

Medium’s point, and what she intended to do, was obvious.

And it was something that Subaru and Al should have realized before she had spoken.

Of course, there would be no time to take action once the realization dawned on them. Even so, they should have been prepared enough to discuss how to proceed—

Deergirl: “—Yorna Mishigure-sama has arrived.”

Without giving them a chance, it was the deergirl acting as a guide to announce that their time had run out.

Upon her reappearance, the girl lowered her large horned head and bowed to Subaru, the false Emperor, and their groups. Then opening the door at the front of the hall, she voiced, “Come in”.

At that moment a figure slowly stepped into the room, and upon seeing their figure with his own eyes, Subaru succeeded in putting the impression he had of the deergirl into words.

Subaru’s conception of the deergirl, was that she resembled a kamuro.

Kamuros were apprentice prostitutes who worked in Japanese red light districts in the olden days, learning etiquette and the arts while taking care of the other prostitutes in these glamorous pleasure districts.

The unexpectedly stylish kimono and hair ornaments were likely what had brought such a notion to Subaru.

More than anything else though, was the person who brought the girl in question with her—

Subaru: “…”

The reason why Subaru had succeeded in using “kamuro” for the girl, was precisely because of the person who had made its entrance.

Forgetting to breathe and regarding that other person with eyes wide open was a reaction arisen from instinct. Because his mind had been corrupted, his consciousness was dominated by a human being so beautiful and overwhelming.

Yorna: “—There are a lot of guests today, aren’t there?”

The one to speak those words, was a tall woman, as she narrowed her almond-shaped blue eyes.

Her tall, slender body was wrapped in a bright kimono with a floral pattern, and her hair, which faded from white to orange progressively as it reached the tips, was tied with care and allure.

Her hair was adorned with kanzashi fashioned from animal bones and horns, and many other hair ornaments made of fangs and scales played a role in pleasing the eyes of those laying their eyes upon it.

However, they were merely ornaments, forms of beauty crafted by human hands.

In order to truly exhibit their charm, the person being put on display, and the quality of their inner nature was important.

And in this regard, the quality of the person wearing the kimono was something that need not be questioned.

Yorna: "…"

Her beauty was stunning as she moved her svelte body in a supple and relaxed manner.

Those sophisticated gestures and actions that seemed to have taken the eyes of the beholder into consideration, despite the somewhat languid atmosphere, were glimpses of the optimal solution to the act of attracting focus.

What made the impression of the shuffling gait even more striking were the fox tails that looked too large for her slender body—nine of them, with rich fur.

Given the fact that her hair was tied up in a bun, the kanzashi, and between all her hair ornaments, were perked-up animal ears, the information that she was a beautiful foxwoman, clad in a kimono, seeped into his brain like the smell of liquor.

Yorna: "Welcome to my castle, you've come a long way."

With that, she sat on the chair in the upper part of the hall and threw out her long, supple legs, resting her weight on the armrest. She reached out her hand, and the kamuro girl who followed her held a fine, gold-painted kiseru in her pale fingers.

The beautiful woman lit the end of the kiseru in her hand and smiled bewitchingly, as she let the rising purple smoke fill her lungs.

She was sitting in the seat of honor, looking down at her guest—the Emperor of Vollachia seated below.

Yorna: "…"

Her majestic and gorgeous appearance, her way of speech, and her manner of wearing the kimono, exposing her thin shoulders, allied with the presence of the kamuro accompanying her, reminded Subaru of the words "prostitute" and "courtesan".

Of course, Subaru had never seen a brothel or a prostitute in person. It was just knowledge he had acquired from period dramas and other works that dealt with past epochs, but there was nothing else that came to mind.

—No, to say that there was a lack of further words to describe her would be an overstatement.

At this juncture, there was undoubtedly another word to describe her. It was true that she was both beautiful, and it was true she behaved like a prostitute; however, taking precedence over that, she held the position of Seventh among the Nine Divine Generals—

???: "—Yorna Mishigure."

The beautiful woman who appeared—Yorna Mishigure, was called by name, then directed her gaze at the man who had named her.

On the wooden floor, their eyes focused on Yorna's own blue ones, was the fake Emperor—for the purpose of differentiating him from Abel he would be called Vincent, but it was him.

Subaru: "Naturally, the same voice…"

Only a scant quantity of words had been issued, but the voice was very much that of Abel's.

Apparently, the resemblance was not only in appearance, but also voice. However, provided his appearance was being copied, that the voice would be likewise similar was natural. Henceforth, there had been no shock.

Rather, Subaru gasped at the sight of Vincent and Yorna facing each other.

They quietly looked at each other and exchanged glances; their appearance was as magnificent as a painting.

A beautiful and lustrous beauty, and an Emperor with a magical appearance that miraculously combined dignity and majesty. What kind of event would the meeting between the two on this day leave in the history of the Empire?

Whether this affair would lead to love or bloodshed would depend on what was to come.

Subaru: "…What on earth's the purpose of their visit?"

Why Vincent's party had come to the Demon City was currently something that was currently unreadable.

The reaction to their encounter with them and Yorna's entrance was what took priority, but regarding the aim of Vincent's visit—What was the purpose in him having come to one of the Nine Divine Generals who kept rebelling?

Provided he was playing the role of the true Emperor, he must hold some legitimacy. However, why would Yorna welcome the Emperor, given that there was bad blood between them, into the castle?

If he were to end up saying that, due to Yorna's position, she could not refuse it, then that would be all she wrote.

Yorna: "My oh my, Your Excellency, it's been a long time."

As Subaru had a rough time with those thoughts, to his front, Yorna smiled with the corners of her eyes lowered, inserting the kiseru in her mouth. Then exhaling a puff of purple smoke, she closed one eye rudely, and said, Yorna: “I’m honored to have the privilege of seeing your countenance. No matter how many times I’ve invited you to the Demon City, you’ve never come.”

Vincent: “An invitation, is it?”

Without touching on the two instances of disrespect, her posture and the smoke, Vincent frowned in displeasure.

Then, crossing his slim arms and tapping his elbows with his fingers while in thought,

Vincent: “Raising an army against me every so often was your invitation? If so, my response would have been evident.”

Yorna: “Yes, indeed. That’s correct, but my neck’s still connected to my chest. In addition, it seems that you don’t have that troublesome little boy with you today.”

Vincent: “…”

Yorna: “Yes, my chest’s throbbing with excitement to think that my feelings may have reached you. Please forgive me.”

Yorna cleared her throat and let out a chuckle. Her seductive tone of voice and smile, however, did not cause Vincent to waver in his expression.

Vincent’s perfection as a false Emperor was remarkable, but at the same time, Subaru was concerned about Yorna’s attitude—about the passion in her eyes and words toward Vincent.

It had only been a brief exchange, but in Subaru’s eyes, the two of them—

Al: “No way, did that girl plot rebellion just to get Abel-chan’s attention?”

Subaru: “…I really hope you’re wrong.”

Al seemed to have arrived at the same conclusion as Subaru, those words causing Subaru to clack his molars.

He preferred that one of the Empire's greatest warriors would not be someone to deploy their army out of a personal grudge, and it was hard to imagine that there would be anyone around with feelings of goodwill towards Abel, while the latter did not consider them a person.

That was the main reason for the tense state of Subaru's cheeks, but something more important existed.

That being the pretext for Subaru and the others to request an audience with Yorna in the first place.

It was an attempt to capture her attention with the slogan "Abel pisses me off", with the presumption that it would not get through to anyone who was favorable to Abel.

Were the unpleasant imaginations of Subaru and the others true, it would be a not-so-entertaining matter for Yorna. Yet, in spite of this, she'd shown Subaru's group up into the castle.

In fact, that would be why she'd had them being sat alongside none other than Vincent's party.

???: "General First-Class Yorna, is that behavior not a disrespectful one to take? What are you thinking?"

Yorna: "Hmm?"

While Subaru and the others were worried about the unclear situation, the Emperor's group continued their conversation.

In Vincent's stead, who had fallen silent, the figure with yellow-green hair that appeared to be Vincent's bodyguard was the one to cause Yorna to raise her eyebrows.

A man with short, upswept hair, with a portion hanging down as long braids; he seemed to be about the same age as Vincent, perhaps a little older.

Clothed with a sand-colored cloak over light armor of black color, his face and physique gave the impression of being as sharp as a wire. His piercing eyes glared at Yorna as if to denounce her.

Yorna: “So you there with His Excellency, you’re…”

Kafma: “I am Kafma Irulux. I have been ordered to accompany His Excellency. I was planning on only being a bodyguard, but… your demeanor is disgusting.”

Yorna: “My attitude, is it? What do you mean by that?”

Kafma: “Everything!”

Yorna’s words sounded leisurely, to which the man who called himself Kafma became enraged.

He glared at Yorna and pointed his hand at Subaru and the others witnessing the scene in silence,

Kafma: “In the first place, why do you want others to be present here! This is your castle, but at the same time, a territory of the Empire… Did you forget that fact?!”

Yorna: “Of course I did not forget. I belong to His Excellency.”

Kafma: “I am not talking about that! You guys there, you guys!”

Subaru: “Wha?! Us?!”

With Kafma’s anger being directed at them, Subaru’s shoulders trembled, startled. He would have preferred to be left alone, outside of their attention, if possible, but that was quite hopeful.

However, when someone asked you something, there was a way to take advantage.

Subaru: “Um, are we interrupting something? If so, we’ll come back another day…”

Yorna: “That’d be a problem. I have a limited number of hours in a day, and if you miss today, I don’t know when the next time will be.”

Kafma: “Do not keep them here! Those girls are probably feeling awkward too!”

Subaru: “Yes, yes, that’s right.”

For some reason, Yorna was trying to keep Subaru’s group present, but Kafma somehow agreed with Subaru. As long as he was by the false Emperor’s side, he and Kafma were enemies, but the latter’s words and actions were so upright that he seemed to be the sole ally in this situation.

However—

Vincent: “Yorna Mishigure, what are you thinking?”

Suddenly, the one to break the tension was Vincent Vollachia—the false emperor himself.

After he spoke, Kafma, who had been worked up, immediately backed down. Even though the voice and the face were familiar, Subaru also felt his guts shrink.

Even though he was cognizant that he was a fake, the feeling of intimidation was genuine.

Vincent: “Answer. What are you thinking?”

Having silenced both his servant and the uninvited attendee, Vincent inquired Yorna yet again.

In response to that question and the high spirits, Yorna narrowed her eyes slightly. Gently bringing the kiseru to her mouth, allowing the fluttering purple smoke into her lungs, she exhaled sweetly, giving exaggerated emphasis to her answer.

Kafma’s cheeks tugged slightly at the disrespect of keeping the Emperor waiting yet again,

Yorna: “Of course, I am always thinking about Your Excellency… About Your Excellency the Emperor of Vollachia.”

Vincent: “…”

Yorna: “Hehe. Don’t give me those cold eyes. But I’m sure His Excellency will be more pleased if you knock the guests over there down a few pegs, right?”

With a small laugh and a confident attitude, Yorna pointed at Subaru and the others with her chin.

Then, for the first time, Vincent’s consciousness turned his attention to Subaru’s group. He must have judged that there was a reason for the previous exchange, aside from Yorna’s whims.

In order to stop this bad turn of events, Subaru cleared his throat with a “Ahem”, in preparation for a reprimand,

Subaru: “I’m sorry, but I have a new suggestion. We seem to be in the wrong place and there are some things we should most likely not hear. We’d like to step back and go to…”

Yorna: “My oh my, that’s a very timid thing to say.”

Subaru’s words were interrupted as he bent at the waist and attempted to leave the scene politely.

Noticing Yorna’s eyes hidden by the purple smoke for only a moment, and the glint of childishness therein contained, with an “Oh” Subaru realized that he had committed a misstep.

If he was going to go back, he should have made the decision upon seeing the faces of the people ahead of him.

He had misjudged it, and now ended up regretting it.

Because—

Yorna: “I heard it from Tanza… You came here to tempt me into becoming the enemy of His Most Gracious Excellency the Emperor, didn’t you?”

And, such was the manner in which she disclosed the entirety of their intentions.

Chapter 38:
A Reward Eight Years in the Making

1

“Abel pisses me off.”

Subaru had believed this slogan to be a good strategy for conquering the Flamboyant, Yorna Mishigure.

After all, Zikr, a man of distinguished character, had branded her as an owner of a destruction wish, someone who had, time and time again, raised an insurrection.

Subaru’s pretext for requesting an audience with her, was that “a suitably powerful person wished to speak to her privately in order to rebel against the current Emperor of Vollachia”.

Subaru’s group of three were visiting the Crimson Lapis Castle with a missive from that powerful man.

In truth, he had not told a single lie.

The “current Emperor of Vollachia” was none other than the one who had ousted Abel, having usurped his name and position. The “suitably powerful person” who wanted to talk privately happened to also be the real Emperor, the one supposed to be sitting on the throne, so there was no falsehood in his words.

Subaru’s aim was to ensure that the letter from Abel was received no matter what. If necessary to achieve this goal, they would tell as many lies as possible.

Subaru: “This is what Natsumi Schwartz’s plan is all about…!”

In the end, he had been applauded by Al and Medium for his ingenuity.

However—

Kafma: “—Rebels against His Excellency, you say?”

With what had been said to Yorna now laid bare, the atmosphere of the hall grew more gelid.

Kafma Irulux, Vincent’s bodyguard, who had been the most passionate person in the hall for a while now, exuded a hostility that could be mistaken for cold air.

Subaru could tell by the sternness of his gaze that a peaceful exit from this place was no longer possible.

—”A schemer drowns in his own tricks”, that phrase that had never before been more veracious for him.

Subaru: “But aren’t the timing and lack of shared information both Abel’s fault…?”

Kafma: “Keep your mouth shut. —General First-Class Yorna.”

Kafma silenced Subaru, who cursed Abel for getting him into this absurd situation. With that, he then thrusted his steely gaze toward Yorna,

Kafma: “Did you knowingly allow His Excellency and these people to attend at the same time?”

Yorna: “…”

Kafma: “I want you to answer!”

As Kafma raised his voice, his anger was not directed at neither the increasingly anxious Subaru nor his group, but rather at Yorna for having created this tense situation.

The reason for this was not because the blame lay with Yorna.

In simpler terms, it was a sign that they did not regard Subaru and the others as a threat.

In fact, the fighting spirit emitted by Kafma, now standing up vigorously, gave Subaru the feeling that he was as strong and threatening as Arakiya, whom he had encountered at the City Hall in Guaral.

At the very least, there was no doubt that he was powerful enough to be assigned to accompany the Emperor.

From his perspective, it was probably inevitable that Subaru, who went without saying, but even Al, and Medium would be judged as being unworthy of caution.

Al: "We're the ones this concerns but we're being excluded? Is that good or bad…?"

Feeling the same about Al's dim complaint, the tense exchange continued, with Subaru and the others not included in it. Kafma questioned Yorna, who put her mouth on her kiseru and let out a puff of purple smoke.

Then she tilted her head with an "I wonder…", as she shook her vibrant hair ornaments.

Yorna: "What do you mean by, "knowingly"?"

Kafma: "How shameless…! As I have repeatedly advised His Excellency, you are still dangerous."

Yorna: "You're stating the obvious. With all the disorder I've made… do you perhaps not know what I've done?"

Kafma: "—Hk."

Yorna's words, that could not be thought of as anything other than a provocation, caused a vein to bulge out on Kafma's forehead.

Albeit odd, from what he could gather from their exchange, Subaru found himself agreeing with Kafma. Yorna's personality was honestly the worst, even from Subaru's point of view.

Although they had readied themselves for a certain degree of viciousness based on her reputation, it had exceeded their expectations.

However, it seemed that she was not simply planning to give up Subaru and his group, who were plainly rebellious elements, to Vincent and his men, who happened to be visiting.

The air was too far tense for a scene in which traitors were being presented to the Emperor.

Most of all—

Vincent: "—As usual, your taste is repulsive."

And then, disregarding Yorna's intentions, Vincent's voice was loosed.

At Vincent's cold words, Yorna raised her shapely eyebrows slightly,

Yorna: "Oh, does it not suit your taste, Your Excellency?"

Vincent: "Preposterous. If too one-sided, it is akin to letting a rabbit hunt a dog. I have not grown tired of the Empire to the point of making mere cruelty an amusement."

Vincent's statement was one of indifference, but with a definite air of authority.

Taking it in stride, through the gaps of her tied-up hair, Yorna's fox ears quivered. Subaru could not ascertain what sort of emotion she was expressing.

However, the same went for Vincent's feelings.

Subaru: "…"

What sort of storm would brew in his heart upon confronting rebels face-to-face?

Understanding the inner thoughts of the fake Emperor was even more difficult than imagining the thoughts of the real one, especially when he knew that the person in front of him was an imposter.

The fake must think badly of Abel, as he had driven the other away,

but—

Subaru: “Can’t be stupid enough to let it show…”

Vincent: “—You.”

Subaru: “—Hk!”

Subaru gasped for breath as Vincent’s black eyes pierced straight through him. In an instant, Subaru was forbidden even to avert his eyes, and while still unprepared, he locked eyes with his greatest foe.

His face was a replica of the real one, though how it had been made was unclear.

Both the genuine and the fake possessed the same sharp black eyes that attempted to peer through one’s every action. This made Subaru’s insides squirm—

Vincent: “If you have something to say, say it now.”

Subaru: “…Those are some annoying eyes.”

Kafma: “Wha…!”

Subaru: “Ah! No, no, no! I didn’t mean it like that! It was just unintentional!”

At the most inopportune time, the questioning of the false Emperor coincided with a leak of annoyance.

Kafma was lost for words, his face one of absolute surprise, after Subaru hurled verbal abuse straight at the Emperor. Subaru then gave a hurried wave of his hand, to which Vincent closed one eye and became silent.

He was surprised, but at the same time, he regarded Subaru as if assessing him.

The look the real Abel had directed at Subaru in the Buddheim Jungle, the Shudraqian village, and the City Hall in Guaral—this one was of the same kind as those.

Subaru: “Uh, anyway, we…”

At his back, Al and Medium were also watching the situation with bated breath.

Subaru’s shocking rant must have put them under a lot of pressure. The atmosphere in the hall was cold and tense, and one additional gaffe would shatter it into pieces.

The situation they had been put into was too painful to begin with.

Not just Yorna but Kafma as well were not the kind of opponents that Subaru and his group could compete with.

If that were the case, wouldn’t it be wiser to recant their opinion to Yorna, emphasize that them being rebels was outrageous, bow their heads, and leave? Even if it would make the scene bland?

With that in mind, Subaru tried to loosen the corners of his mouth in an attempt to put on an amiable smile.

—Subaru then realized Yorna’s gaze homed in on him, with nary a motion.

Yorna: “…”

In silence, Yorna watched Subaru’s movements as she took a drag of her kiseru.

It was a very ambiguous look, neither disinterested nor indifferent. Uncertain as the rising purple smoke, it was like a phantom that disappeared even when one tried to grasp it.

He thought it would be deeply foolish to try to rely on it.

However, Subaru had a hunch that this was a turning point.

That gaze, on the verge of losing interest in Subaru’s group, was not as capricious as to consider taking back what had once been given up on. The opinions discarded here could never be scooped up again.

In other words, Yorna Mishigure's cooperation could nevermore be obtained.

It was synonymous with blocking the way to an unreliable victory in the dark.

Therefore—

Vincent: "—Answer me carefully. What were you going to say to me."

Subaru: "Well, um—"

At Vincent's question, Subaru took a heartbeat too long to look up.

Kafma, beside the false Emperor, narrowed his eyes and turned his attention to Subaru. Behind him, Al and Medium's tensions swelled, while Yorna sustained a mouthful of purple smoke in her lungs.

Seeing those changes at the corner of his eye, Subaru looked at Vincent, and declared,

Subaru: "It is as Yorna-sama said. We are declaring war on you."

Yes, as if clinging onto a position that he should not withdraw from, a piece that he should not give up on.

Rem, who was waiting for his return in Guaral, Abel, who was absent, and Al and Medium, who were bracing themselves behind him, had entrusted Subaru with this decision.

In order for Natsuki Subaru not to misunderstand the significance and weight of this, and not throw it all away—

Vincent: "…"

Vincent's dark eyes flickered slightly upon hearing the hostile declaration.

Subaru's insightfulness was not able to decipher which emotion it corresponded to; joy, anger, sorrow, or pleasure. Instead, he experienced the rapid parching of his tongue, brought by the enthusiasm of his own words.

Naturally so. Unlike Abel, who had been deprived of his real power as the Emperor of the Vollachian Empire, which boasted of a vast territory, the fake Emperor in front of him was the one who definitely held it as leverage.

Had Vincent not raised a hand to halt Kafma after hearing the gaffe from earlier, the latter would have exploded in rage and Subaru's life would have been cut short.

But that had not come to pass. Vincent would not allow it to happen.

Yorna: "Kuhu…"

Looking down at the confrontation between Subaru and Vincent from her high seat, Yorna let a faint sound slip out from her throat.

A chuckle escaped from the corner of her mouth as smoke leaked out of her mouth, and her shoulders trembled with amusement. It seemed that Subaru's life-threatening pronouncement had taken an effect in relieving her boredom, at least.

Vincent: "What are you laughing at, Yorna Mishigure?"

Yorna: "First of all, these guests have not retracted their words. In addition, the three of them might possibly put His Excellency's life in jeopardy… What do you think?"

Vincent: "Do not taunt me, woman. Even you, who believes in disobeying me, understands my intentions."

Vincent's expression did not change as he met Yorna's provocative gaze.

Like that, he once again cast his dark eyes to Subaru, who had declared his hostility.

Vincent: "This is the land of the Sword Wolf. Only if you possess the mettle to aim at my head can you truly be called a citizen of the Empire."

Subaru: "…That's very sweet of you, isn't it?"

Vincent: "Hmph."

With a snort, Vincent dismissed Subaru's sarcasm with a laugh.

Vincent's behavior, the way he responded included, was a perfect facsimile of the real thing. If Abel were here, he would have responded exactly the same way.

That Abel was together with Subaru and the others made the latter suspect the possibility that he was the false Emperor.

Although in that case, Subaru and the remaining people would be at a complete impasse, so he wished for it to not be the case.

Vincent: "But the value of my head is not so low that I can hand it to you that easily."

Subaru: "—. Then, what do you intend to do with us?"

Vincent: "Well, that's the problem."

The statement acknowledged Subaru and the others who had shown outright defiance to the Emperor by getting the better of Kafma, who was on the verge of a violent outburst. However, the following words showed that there was no change in the cold gaze Vincent directed at his opponents.

Even if he valued their spirit, there was no reason for him to give allowance to those who sought to harm him.

Subaru's and Vincent's black eyes met, the atmosphere of the room an infernal blaze.

Yorna: "Oh, I'm a sinful woman, too. When I see men fighting over me like this, it makes me quite excited."

Kafma: "As if it were someone else's problem… First, there are more women over there than men. Saying men is not accurate."

Yorna: "Kuhu."

Yorna let out her impressions, which really stuck out like a sore thumb, about the staring contest between Subaru and Vincent.

In reaction, Kafma's face grew increasingly angry.

Kafma: "My Excellency! Order me! Those people are…"

???: "—Kafma, ya did that thingy… You've been makin' a bit of a ruckus for a while now."

Fed up with the stalemate, Kafma attempted to appeal directly to Vincent. However, it was not Vincent who interrupted him, nor was it Yorna, but someone else.

Subaru: "Ah…"

Subaru's mouth involuntarily let out an exhale as he turned to the direction of the voice.

The voice had been so far outside of Subaru's consciousness that the very fact that it had been uttered startled him.

It was one of the three people Vincent had brought along as escorts —a small figure sitting cross-legged on the wooden floor, someone other than Kafma.

???: "Ya know, most things work out better when His Excellency's the one ta do the thinkin' rather than us. We're seriously goin' to be in the way if we keep yappin', really."

It was a wrinkled old man who spoke those words, his hair colored white, donning long eyebrows.

He was an old man who had carefully crafted an atmosphere of annoyance in both the tone and content of his speech. His appearance was so striking that it was hard to understand why he had not been seen before.

—No, he had been in sight. It was just that he had been out of awareness.

Perhaps that is what it meant to truly be out of sight.

Once the old man pointed this out, Kafma turned to him and said, "But",

Kafma: "It would be the duty of a loyal subject to remove His Excellency's troubles, Master Olbart!"

Olbart: "When ya call yerself a loyal subject, doesn't it sound like a prelude ta someone bein' purged for bein' self-servin'? I don't like the idea of choppin' off the head of a promisin' young man."

Kafma: "Guh… Hk."

Shaking his head lazily, the old man—the one called Olbart, picked at his ear. Kafma's cheeks tensed up, making one wonder what kind of pressure he had felt from that gesture.

However, Kafma was not the only one who had caused their cheeks to stiffen. Upon hearing the name mentioned, Subaru's cheeks tensed up as well.

Subaru: "Master, Olbart…"

Olbart: "Oh? Ya know me? I'm kinda well-known after all."

Subaru: "…If you're aware that you're a celebrity, then yes, I'm sure of it."

His lips trembled as he spun the name that Olbart reacted to.

If he had that reaction upon witnessing Subaru's look of shock, then there was no doubt about it. In the City Hall of Guaral, and then on their journey to the Demon City, he had heard of Olbart's name.

From here on out, the Nine Divine Generals would be an inevitable part of Subaru's strategy to conquer the Empire. One of them was Yorna, and the other was—

Subaru: "The Vicious Old Man, Olbart Dunkelkenn…!"

Olbart: "I don't really like that name, ya know. Vicious Old Man sounds awful. Do I look like such a vicious ol' man? Well, if someone asked me directly, I wouldn't be able ta say that I do. I wouldn't be able ta say it, kakakakka!"

The old man smiled, as he opened his mouth wide and displayed his beautiful white teeth, which looked great for his age.

However, Subaru was in no laughing mood. —They had encountered Vincent, the false Emperor, as they worked towards their goal of getting Yorna on their side, and in the end, he had brought Olbart with him.

This meant that, at this point, Olbart too was a member of the other faction.

Subaru: "Arakiya and Chisha, and also Olbart…"

Subaru felt like he was reaching his wits' end; members of the Nine Divine Generals they were aiming for had seemingly been secured by the enemy already. And furthermore, they were just going for those said to be high ranking.

The problem was that not only the future, but also the situation in front of them was getting worse at an accelerating pace.

Even if it had been just Kafma by himself, he'd have been way too much to handle, and now Olbart of the Nine Divine Generals had joined the fray.

It was not they could have arranged all those terrible conditions thus far, even if they'd planned to—

Al: “—Hey, old man, do you remember me?”

Olbart: “What’s that?”

Sweat flowed down Subaru’s forehead, running down his cheeks and dripping from the tip of his chin.

Amidst all this tension, an unexpected voice made Olbart raise his eyebrows. It was Al, who had called out from behind Subaru.

Al leaned forward, Subaru’s eyes widening in surprise at that action.

Subaru: “Al? What are you… doing all of a sudden, when every move we make’s being questioned right now?”

Al: “Natsumi-chan’s still talking like a woman for the most part in this situation, but I didn’t just butt in without thinking. No, I didn’t think about it, but… Hey, old man! It’s me, hey hey!”

Subaru: “It sounds like you’re a phone scammer talking like that…”

It would be rash to think that just because he was an old man, he would be able to pull off such a scam. In fact, in response to Al’s call, Olbart leaned forward and snorted, “Hmm?”.

Olbart: “Well, that’s quite the eccentric look ya got there, boy. Even tho’ I’m an ol’ man, I wouldn’t be able ta forget someone who looks like that. Do we really know each other?”

Al: “Maybe I don’t know you that well, and the last time I saw you, I wasn’t wearing my helmet. But I didn’t have an arm, and we chatted a bit.”

Olbart: “You’re the armless one who talked ta me at…?”

Al: “Oh, right. —Lil’ Miss Arakiya was with me, too.”

Lowering his voice slightly, Al mentioned Arakiya’s name, the fearsome girl who had stirred up so much trouble for Subaru and the others and, like Olbart, was a member of the Nine Divine Generals.

Al's words were something Subaru could make no sense of; but as soon as Olbart heard them, his eyebrows shot up and he shouted, "Oh!".

Olbart: "You're that guy! You're the guy who took back the island with Araki! Now that ya mention it, ya look similar ta him. Kakakakka, I can't believe you're still alive!"

Al: "Oh, I'm alive, I'm alive. Somehow, my stars have come full circle."

Olbart: "So, by some chance, you've become an enemy of His Excellency. Maybe I should've talked to ya earlier to make His Excellency's reputation better. I messed up, I messed up."

Al and Olbart exchanged words, the former speaking in an easy-going tone, the latter with a broad smile.

Unknowing of the relationship between the two, Subaru could only stare blankly. As for whether things were getting better or not, even that was difficult to gauge.

Vincent: "—. Olbart, you know that man?"

The one person to intervene to put an end to such doubts was Vincent.

Olbart, with crossed arms, replied, "Oh, yes!" to the false Emperor's query,

Olbart: "Two or three years ago when you'd just ascended ta the throne, there were revolts all over the place, weren't there?"

Kafma: "Master Olbart, His Excellency ascended to the throne eight years ago now…"

Olbart: "Huh? Thought it'd have been 'bout three years ago. Dangnabbit, it's been 'bout ten years, which ta me seems recent, guess I just screwed up."

Vincent: "Never mind that, just proceed. Eight years ago, what happened?"

With Olbart going off on a tangent, Vincent set him back on track. In accordance with that correction, Olbart pointed to Al and said, “So,”.

Olbart: “There was a rebellion on Ginunhive back then… and the ones ta stop it were this guy with the helmet and Araki.”

Vincent: “Hoh.”

After hearing Olbart’s story, for the first time, Vincent’s interest turned to Al.

It was difficult to ascertain which way the pendulum had swung, good or bad, but it seemed that his effort had not immediately led to him being punished for his rudeness.

On top of that, Al stepped forward so that he was alongside Subaru,

Al: “Your Most Gracious Excellency the Emperor, as Old Man Olbart over there is seemingly aware of… Actually, eight years ago, I was of service to His Excellency, and I have yet to receive my reward.”

Olbart: “Altho’, ya said ya didn’t want anythin’.”

Vincent: “Olbart, keep your mouth shut. —You may resume, clown.”

Al: “—I was hoping to get my reward today.”

Subaru imagined a sound that seemed to silently freeze the air in the hall.

Al’s fearlessness in demanding a reward for his own achievements over eight years ago, coupled with the presence of someone who knew of Al’s deeds, was certainly a gamble worth taking.

The fake Emperor who had not opted to execute them immediately after hearing Subaru’s declaration of war—Vincent possessed both reasons and resolution to act as the Emperor of Vollachia.

And, if Abel’s words were true, then his beliefs would include “definite punishment or reward”.

Then—

Vincent: “What do you request? My head?”

Al: “It would be a massive victory for me if I could get you to give it to me, but it would take a lot of courage to ask for it. So…”

As he said this, Al turned his head to look at Subaru. Realizing what he was being asked to do, Subaru pulled out an envelope from his pocket.

All along, their objective had been to deliver Abel’s missive.

Subaru: “It is our purpose to give this missive to Yorna-sama. If you would like to reward my companion for his service, please allow it.”

Vincent: “A missive?”

Subaru: “A love letter from our… Master, to Yorna-sama.”

Hesitant to call him “Master”, Subaru stuck his tongue out internally and continued to speak.

Hearing the expression “love letter”, Yorna, who was sitting at the head of the room, laughed and cleared her throat with a “Kuhu”. Her interest seemed to have been piqued. And Vincent’s reaction was not an undesirable one either.

As he squinted his dark eyes, Vincent pondered for just a few seconds,

Vincent: “Over eight years have passed, but the Gladiator Island incident was troublesome.”

Subaru: “Oh…”

Vincent: “You may have your reward if you so desire it. You may deliver the missive to Yorna Mishigure.”

Gesturing with his chin, Vincent indicated Yorna.

It took Subaru a moment to comprehend the intent of Vincent’s words. But upon realizing that it meant that Al had won his bet, Subaru and the others looked at one another.

It had been a high-stakes gamble, and Al's decision to go for it had been the correct one—

Vincent: "—However."

Subaru: "Huh?"

Just as they were about to burst in jubilation, Vincent held up one finger and spoke up.

To Subaru and the others turning to look at him, the false Emperor closed his black eyes, which felt like darkness itself, and said,

Vincent: "The only thing I shall allow you to do, is to hand her your missive. You know the meaning of that, do you not?"

And thus, the words spoken were processed.

Subaru's eyes widened at this, and he quickly turned around, gnashing his teeth as his gaze fell on Yorna, gazing over the situation with a grin.

The goal of Subaru's party, though, was to give her a missive and get her to respond.

Subaru: "If I were to give you the missive, when should I expect a response from Yorna-sama?"

Yorna: "Yes, I see…"

Upon that question of Subaru's, Yorna cast her gaze towards the void.

Then turning the kiseru upside down, dropping the ashes into a jar prepared by the attending kamuro.

Yorna: "I'm a woman, after all… I don't want to be seen opening a love letter as soon as I receive it. That's why… I'll carefully read and respond to the guests after they have left the castle."

Subaru: "—. So you will read it once we leave the castle, won't you?"

Yorna: "As the Lord of the Demon City, I won't speak lies in front of my attendants."

Subaru could not tell whether the light in her blue eyes was sincere or naive, as he was unfamiliar with her. However, he no longer had a choice.

For example, were he to alter Al's reward, instead saying that the reward would be to exit the castle safely, Vincent probably would have allowed for that as well.

However, much like the previous one, that plan would terminate the possibility of joining forces with Yorna.

Meaning—

Subaru: "Al, Medium-san."

Before he completely made up his mind, Subaru called out the names of his two companions.

What was going to happen and what needed to be done required the cooperation of both of them. So, it made sense to get their approval before taking any action.

Subaru turned around and met their gaze, as Al and Medium nodded to each other.

Al: "Well, I told you bro, that I'd lend you a hand."

Medium: "Big bro asked me to take care of you, too! He said to take care of Natsumi-chan for him!"

Al tilted his head, and Medium exclaimed with powerful words.

Encouraged by the answers of those two, Subaru nodded back at them.

Then Subaru slowly walked towards the front of the hall—towards Yorna leaning on the armrest in the seat of honor, while she puffed on her kiseru.

With her bewitching beauty in close proximity, Subaru presented her the missive amidst a sweet scent.

Subaru: “Here you go, a missive from our Master.”

Yorna: “Thank you for your hard work. But it’s going to be a lot harder from here.”

Subaru: “Yes, I am aware.”

Supple fingers took the missive, and the words expressed with a smile, cursed the future of Subaru and his friends.

But Subaru responded to her words with dignity and turned around.

And then—

Subaru: “—Your Majesty the Emperor, I’m afraid we’re going to have to take your throne.”

And so, right in front of him, he announced a declaration of war even more clearly than before.

2

The events that took place at that moment were dramatic.

Kafma: “How dare you, you insolent little—!!”

Immediately after their declaration of war, Kafma’s eyes went wide open.

Following Subaru’s proclamation, the height of rudeness and disrespect, Kafma Irulux wished to prove his loyalty to the Emperor with his own power.

—As a result, Kafma’s clothes exploded as his arms were extended, and countless thorns rushed towards Subaru.

Dark-green-colored thorns like slithering snakes surged toward Subaru, their overwhelming mass blanketing his vision. The ivy of thorns, each of which in possession of needles as thick as Subaru's arms, was a deadly weapon that would squeeze its prey out of every last drop of life.

It was a strike that would not permit for any reaction from Subaru, and akin to a snake swallowing a rat, it engulfed Subaru's body in thorns with no effort.

Al: "—Well said, bro."

The thorns pierced through his entire body, and he prepared for the fierce pain to come.

However, it was not the pain that struck Subaru, who had tensed up his body, but rather the shock of him being pulled backwards and falling on his buttocks. Stepping before Subaru was Al, whose words had reached him from the side, taking the thorns on with his Blue Dragon Sword.

Al, with Subaru behind him, drew out the thick blade and parried the enemy's attacks. Incapable of blocking their entirety, his shoulder and side were stained with blood.

Nevertheless, Al had been able to protect Subaru from this overwhelming mass.

Subaru: "What about Medium-san!"

Medium: "Uuaah! That was so close! If I hadn't done what Al-chin said, I would've died!"

Subaru turned around hurriedly, and right beside him was Medium answering in a loud voice, having pulled her twin swords.

Glancing over, she was swinging her twin blades up and down, slashing away, or catching, or stepping on, preventing some of the thorns approaching her from all directions.

Subaru breathed a sigh of relief at the certainty of her skills, and the fact that she was safe. However, relief was too premature. After all, this was merely the first wave—

Yorna: “What an extravagant magic trick.”

Subaru: “—Hk.”

To the rear of Subaru’s group putting themselves on guard, was Yorna, who would have been within range of the thorns as well. She pulled her kamuro into her arms and exhaled purple smoke, while remaining in the same posture as when she had accepted the missive.

There were signs of thorns closing in on her from all sides as well, but they avoided her as if by design, the thorns twisting unnaturally as if there were a circle of space around only Yorna.

It was impossible to speculate whether it was Kafma who had intentionally bent it or Yorna who had done something about it, but —

Subaru: “I apologize for the disturbance. We will leave you to it.”

Yorna: “Have a safe return home. If the three of you fail to leave the castle…”

Subaru: “You won’t read the missive. I understand.”

When explained once again in simple terms, Yorna’s intentions could be understood without doubt, no matter how hard to grasp they may be. Vincent too, had made it clear that the game was on—

Subaru: “Game’s on ‘til we leave the castle. —Al, Medium-san!”

Al: “Yeah!”

Medium: “Alright!”

Subaru: “To the right!!”

Immediately after the strong replies, Subaru barked loudly.

Hearing this, his two companions comprehended Subaru’s decision that very instant, and three blades were brandished.

The Blue Dragon Sword of the one-armed man, and a pair of supple swords furiously cut through the thorns, blowing away the mass that blocked their vision and their path, and the three figures flew out of the greenery.

Just like that, they pressed down on the wooden floor to gain speed and momentum.

Kafma: “You think I am going to let you escape?”

However, after one step forward, a needle as thick as a thumb snagged the tip of Subaru’s nose.

As it flashed across his vision, it appeared to be more akin to a piece of white bone to him a rather than a thorn. It was not a shot intended to deter Subaru, but a blow that should have pierced his temple.

He would have died had Al not swiftly placed his blade in the path of the launched needle.

Subaru: “Thorns and needles, along with a freak show?!”

Al: “It’s the Insect Cage Tribe! They attack with the insects they carry inside their bodies!”

Subaru: “This isn’t the Aburame clan!”

While having a dispute over something trivial, Subaru kept his stance low and moved forward with Al and Medium providing support. It was not the exit of the hall that they were headed for.

Even if they headed that way, they would have had to retrace their steps the long way back down the castle tower. There was no way they could continue to be exposed to Kafma’s attacks for that long.

In other words, Subaru and others would need to take a significant shortcut.

Therefore—

Subaru: “Medium-san!”

Medium: “Yeah!”

Subaru: “Do your best!”

Medium: “—I’ll do my best!”

The moment she received that encouragement, without exaggeration, Medium’s whole body bounced and her momentum increased.

With her long hair billowing, she swung the twin swords in her hands, fiercely dispatching the thorns that rushed forth in complicated and bizarre trajectories.

Of course, this was partly due to Medium’s own skills. But in addition to that,

Al: “Right! Right knee! Nape of the neck! Sexy hips!”

Medium: “Uh! Ha! Take this!”

Al’s blood-curdling shouts told Medium of the aim of the approaching dangers, and Medium responded instantly, successfully guarding against and handling the thorns just before they hit.

Subaru wondered how far he could see, but Al’s high level of survivability, which had also been demonstrated against Arakiya, apparently applied not only to himself, but to others as well.

Taking advantage of this, Medium reached the window of the hall. With a single swing, she destroyed the wooden railing, and her long, leaping legs blew down the wall.

Beneath their gaze, the hall of the castle tower, which was more than thirty meters above the ground, had opened up. The blue sky of Demon City spread out in full view, and a wild wind greeted Subaru and the others.

It was not a matter of all or nothing, but—

Subaru: “—If we get out of the castle!”

Yorna put her hand on the missive.

Since they’d accepted these terms, Vincent’s group would cease from doing anything further. Perhaps, it wasn’t like they had made such a promise explicitly.

But with nothing else to believe in, it was the only way to see things through—

Medium: “—Natsumi-chan!”

Medium, who had smashed through the wall, beckoned him, and Subaru ran as fast as he could.

He was grateful for not having worn a skirt carelessly. If the cause of death were crossdressing, Subaru would not be able to face the efforts of his many predecessors.

At the last moment, Subaru, while even forgetting to keep his appearances up, kicked the floor as hard as he could.

He would then catch up with Medium, and exit through the wall with her—

Olbart: “Sorry, but I got a job ta do too, ya know.”

Subaru: “Kah… Hk.”

At the same moment, intercepting Subaru and Medium, the old man appeared in front of them as if from out of nowhere, and his piercing hand struck them both squarely in the chest.

His breath caught in his throat as he was struck by the impact. Subaru’s consciousness cracked, everything seemed to shatter after he took the blow from the Divine General.

However—

Medium: “Natsumi-chan! It’s nothing!”

Subaru: “Huh?!”

A loud voice called out next to him, and Subaru regained the consciousness he had almost lost. Looking down at his chest in a panic, no damage from Olbart’s piercing hand could be seen.

There was no blood, no sign that his heart had been removed without bleeding.

Medium: “Let’s go, Natsumi-chan! Don’t bite your tongue, okay?”

Medium grabbed Subaru by the collar as the latter looked around in confusion. With a large step, she then crossed the wall she had breached, and threw herself out of the Crimson Lapis Castle without hesitation.

Subaru and Medium leapt into the blue sky, intertwined with each other; the sensation of rising through the air caused by the jump disappeared in an instant, only for them to be thrown into a falling trajectory a second later.

Subaru: “Uh, kyaaaa—!”

With a high-pitched scream, Subaru pulled Medium close into him and then felt around his own waist. Following that, he pulled out the familiar feeling in his hand and held up his weapon—a whip, while in midair.

Had he simply jumped without any preparation, it would merely amount to an act of suicide.

Albeit the preparations performed towards their odds of success had not been many, Yorna’s provocation, their declaration of war on Vincent, plus the offense and defense with Kafma and Olbart, had all been a series of gambles.

He had barely picked up everything that was there, so he just had to trust that he could pick up the very last one as well.

Subaru: “Don’t miiiss!!”

While hugging Medium’s thin waist, Subaru swung his arm and unleashed the whip. The tip of the whip extended not into the void, but towards one of the beams that stretched throughout all parts of the Demon City—stretching like a spider's web all throughout the city, reaching likewise one of the outer walls of the Crimson Lapis Castle.

Hooking the whip onto that place, and utilizing it as a stepping stone to get out of the castle grounds. That was the best move Subaru could come up with amidst the chaos of the hall.

Subaru: "—Hk!"

Feeling the tug on his arm, Subaru wrapped the whip around his wrist with all his strength. He thought that this would support his body even if his grip were not strong enough; at worst, the damage would shatter the bones in his wrist.

And then—

Subaru: "Al is… Gyahk!"

Al: "My bad!"

The moment the whip came taut, Al came crashing upon Subaru's back. Apparently he had been able to jump out of the castle, just like Subaru and Medium.

As a result of having crashed into each other in midair, the three of them clung to each other and hung down, entrusting nearly one hundred and fifty kilograms of weight to a single arm of Subaru's.

Subaru: "G-Guaaahhhh—!"

The bodies of Subaru and the others arced around one of the beams outside the Crimson Lapis Castle, using it as a pivot, while the screams of his arm and wrist, elbow and shoulder, of his entire right arm, were replaced by real screams.

As it was, the best thing to do was to wait for the recoil to subside, and have everyone climb up the whip and return to the beam one-by-one. Subaru clenched his molars, as he compared the time it would take to get there to the time it would take his right arm to necrotize—

Al & Medium: “—Ah.”

And just as he was about to exert all his strength, Al and Medium’s voices overlapped.

Before he could see what was up, the burden on Subaru’s right arm vanished. —No, to be precise, the burden had not vanished, but the beam onto which the whip was attached had snapped.

By the thorns extending from the breached walls of the keep, by their fierce mass.

Subaru: “Uh, AHHHHH—!”

With screams trailing behind them, Subaru’s group of three flew through the air in a tangled heap. Their bodies flew in a parabola, recoiling from the whip on the beam.

Even though it was better than jumping from the castle tower, Subaru and Al, as ordinary people, would not be able to survive being knocked down a height of more than twenty meters.

As he searched a way out of the situation, while screaming his head off, the faces of Emilia, of Beatrice, and of Rem popped up one after another in Subaru's mind—

Everyone: "…"

—With a ferocious crash, the three of them crashed through the roof and into the castle stables, entangled with one another atop haystacks.

Chapter 39:
Vicious

1

Taking a look outside through the large hole in the saloon wall, Kafma twisted his lips in disgust.

Under him, in the raging wind, smoke lingered. He strained his eyes towards the building into which the three of them had disappeared to, having successfully escaped the hall. —He could not see the fugitives anywhere.

Kafma: "…"

The beam that had developed a crack crumbled with a loud sound, but as it was too far away, to hope that its debris would crush that insolent group would be folly.

But—

Kafma: "I will not let you escape. I will do whatever it takes to avenge your disrespect towards His Excellency…"

Olbart: "No, no, we can't do that. They bet their every card on this opportunity ta escape, didn't they? If we chase 'em now, wouldn't we make it pointless?"

Kafma: "Master Olbart!"

Having been stopped from pursuing the fugitives, Kafma turned around, his teeth chattering. Receiving that gaze, the diminutive old man voiced a "Oh, scary", and made himself smaller.

Seeing his reaction, Kafma's eyes grew even sharper and angrier,

Kafma: "Why did you let those girls go in the first place? If it's you, Master, you should have been able to seize them in the blink of an eye!"

Olbart: “Oh? I could tell ya the same thing. And I didn’t cut corners too much either. That young fellow with the helmet, he’s got some strange tricks up his sleeve.”

Kafma: “…Young fellow, I got the impression that he really was not that young.”

Olbart: “That’s not really important. Most of ya look like waddlin’ kids to me, actually. I’ve been an old man since ya were born.”

Twisting his wrinkled face into a smile, Olbart pointed at himself. Kafma was about to point out this light-hearted attitude of his yet again, but Olbart continued with “And”,

Olbart: “Ya may’ve forgotten, but I got ta keep an eye on that foxgirl over there, don’t I? Ya never know when she might turn on Your Excellency.”

Kafma: “General First-Class Yorna… Indeed, I have been rash.”

Olbart: “Kakakakka, as long as ya understand.”

Once that was mentioned, Kafma sagged down as if ashamed of himself for losing his cool. At the exchange between the young man and the old man, Yorna, having been designated as a dangerous person, put her hand over her eyes and spoke,

Yorna: “That’s quite rude of you. How dare you speak of a delicate woman such as I as you’d speak of a dangerous animal… I’ve never been so humiliated in my life.”

Kafma: “Who do you think you…!”

She mocked them while faking tears, and Kafma’s anger was directed at Yorna. But Yorna cleared her throat while bathed in his gaze, then gently lowered her hand to touch her eyes.

As she did so, she brought her kiseru to her mouth, filled her lungs with purple smoke, and deeply exhaled, letting out a large plume of smoke. —The smoke slightly wavered as it made its way to the big hole in the wall.

Once the fluttering purple smoke reached it, an astonishing change was born.

In nature very much like that of a hallucination, the demolished wall was mended in a spectacle.

The wood used in the areas where the collapsed walls of the Crimson Lapis Castle had been damaged, wriggled and mended akin to a creature's wounds being healed. It was a building being repaired, but a strange and unearthly one; the impression it gave was more of a living being, rather than something inorganic.

That unrealistic scene caused Kafma, standing by the wall while tensing his cheeks, to retreat, and look back at Yorna.

Yorna: "With this, everything's back to normal now… So if you could as well, please fix your mood."

Kafma: "This is, General Yorna's…"

Vincent: "This is why one cannot mess with the Demon City without proper care… But that is not the sole danger posed by this woman."

After she finished repairing the outer wall, Kafma gasped towards Yorna, who produced a supple smile.

His shiver was complemented by Vincent, who had not even twitched during the earlier commotion. The man at the top of the Empire glanced at the wall, then focused on Yorna,

Vincent: "They have exited the castle. The conditions set forth by you and I have been met."

Yorna: "So, if that's the case, it'd be somewhat unseemly for us to deny their efforts. I hope you understand that, Your Excellency."

Vincent: "…"

Yorna: "Of course, you've got your own ideas, Your Excellency. I respect that. But don't forget."

The Lord of the Demon City, Yorna Mishigure, who had not made an effort to correct her posture against the Emperor from beginning to end, smiled as she looked at the silent Vincent.

Yorna: “This is the Demon City, my city. —Even that blue youngster’s sword cannot reach me.”

Albeit that declaration was appropriate for the Lord of the Demon City, it was inappropriate to announce it to the Emperor.

For the Emperor of Vollachia, who carried out his rule across the entire Empire, for Yorna to act as if her control over even a single city was superior was more than just disrespectful.

However, the words of Yorna Mishigure could not be denied.

Because everyone knew it veracious, regardless of whether she was right or wrong to speak them.

In this Demon City of Chaosflame, Yorna Mishigure possessed absolute power.

Therefore—

Vincent: “I shall give you one night.”

To consider it a defeat for the Vollachian Emperor would disregard that very Emperor’s foresight and deep thinking. However, it was not easy for even those close to the Emperor to discern the intrigues the Emperor held within the depths of his dark eyes.

They must only believe that Vincent’s words were not unreasonable nor erroneous.

Yorna: “Thank you. Then I’ll take my time to examine the reply to the letter.”

And so answered Yorna to Vincent’s permission, and while her words were spirited on the surface, her attitude and face did not display any gentleness at all.

Both of Vincent’s guards, Kafma and Olbart, had their own opinions regarding Yorna’s attitude. But the reason as to why they allowed that from Yorna was their own guilt for letting those three escape.

With Vincent's admission, there was nothing to be gained from backtracking.

Kafma: "But your attitude is inexcusable. I will continue to repeat this."

Yorna: "Kuhu. If you look at me with such scary eyes I won't stop shivering. Master Olbart, could you do something about it for me?"

Olbart: "You're goin' ta spring this on me? I'm an ol' man with a short life ahead of me, it's the duty of young'uns ta be kind to the older generation. Wait, maybe I've found the best idea ta get goodwill from most people? Is my era comin'?"

Kafma: "Master Olbart!"

Kafma raised his voice in anger at Olbart's mischievous remark.

Watching it with a smile, Yorna shook the smoke fluttering from her kiseru. Squinting at the appearance of these Generals, Vincent gave a light snort of his nose.

Then turning, the Emperor regarded the final person accompanying him—the one who, contrary to Kafma and Olbart, had not moved any more than Vincent.

Vincent: "You have been talking very little. It is unlike you."

???: "…It is, isn't it? Well, it'd be complicated if I were to meet some people."

The voice of a young man donning a wry smile responded.

The young man was wearing a blue robe over his head, which prevented his face from being seen by others. That in itself was a normal thing for him, but the fact that he had tightened the neck of the robe even more than usual apparently had something to do with the guests previously present.

The man sighed, and shrugged while being in the line of sight of the silent Emperor,

???: “I thought I had to clam up in this Demon City. —The stars, too, seem to want that.”

Vincent: “Is that what the stars want? Nonsense.”

???: “I’d prefer if you didn’t call it nonsense.”

Shrugging, the man grinned at Vincent’s words of disregard.

With this bitter smile, he continued.

???: “If Your Excellency were serious and took heed of the stars’ desires, you wouldn’t have come all the way out here, would you?”

Vincent: “You fool, do you believe you know what lays within my heart?”

???: “Please don’t be absurd.”

The man’s shoulders shrunk as Vincent folded his arms and lowered his voice one note.

Vincent then looked away from the man—from the Stargazer, and narrowed his eyes at the sky into which the three rebels had disappeared, beyond the wall that had already closed.

And then—

Vincent: “—The wishes of the stars are nonsense.”

That murmur that no one was capable of hearing remained as a whisper to himself, then vanished.

2

Subaru: “Coughk! Kahk! Atchoo!”

Coughing into the thick cloud of dust, he desperately worked his lungs.

His back aching from the impact, Subaru ran his hand over the affected area to check for injuries. He fearfully retrieved his hand to see it not stained by blood; it seemed it was merely a bruise. It was a miracle.

The probability that the building materials from the destroyed building or the pieces of the collapsed beams could have pierced him or tore his vitals was high. Just how much luck had he?

Subaru: “We don’t have time for this… Medium-san! Al!”

???: “I-I’m here… Ouchouch.”

Shaking his head, he quickly called out the names of the two people he was supposed to be with. And hearing a reply originated from beneath the rubble at his side, Subaru moved to push aside the debris in a hurry, as to search for those people.

The buried Medium coughed, then blinked her eyes.

Medium: “Uwah, I thought I was gonna die! Are you okay Natsumi-chan?”

Subaru: “I managed somehow, thanks to Medium-san’s and Al’s protection… Medium-san, are you hurt? Does it hurt anywhere?”

Medium: “Uhyahyahya, that tickles~! It’s okay, it’s okay! I’m fine!”

Checking Medium’s shoulders and back, she wriggled and pushed back against Subaru’s chest.

It was no bluff nor lie; it appeared she had no noticeable injuries either. It would seem that both of them had been blessed with a tremendous amount of luck.

Subaru: “Al’s—”

Looking for Al, who did not respond, Subaru scanned his surroundings.

As the clouds of dust finally settled, Subaru noticed that he and the others had jumped into an empty stable. The building beside the Crimson Lapis Castle was apparently a warehouse where hay for Galewind Horses was stored.

The reason as to why Subaru's party had been saved from their helpless fall off a great height was said hay, which had acted as a cushion. Had it not been for the hay, at a minimum Subaru would have died a horrible death; being crushed like a tomato.

In Vollachia, where healing magic was rare, Rem not included, there was a high possibility that those with serious injuries would not be saved. In that sense, the environment of the Empire was much more conducive to death than Lugunica.

Of course, it could be said that the Empire's notion of survival of the fittest was what had caused all this danger in the first place.

Medium: "There he is! Al-chin!"

And then, as Subaru looked around the dimly-lit room, Medium next to him moved as if to jump out.

She bent down beside a cart that had been overturned by the impact of the fall. Under the heavy pile of hay the three had fallen upon entangled with one another, something had begun to stir.

Subaru hurriedly rushed over, and the two of them, him and Medium, shoveled through the hay. Eventually, a listless thick arm appeared from under the hay, and they pulled it up.

And then—

Al: "Yeoch! My right arm's gonna come off as well!"

Subaru: "That's not funny!"

Medium: "But Al-chin's alive too! That's amazing!"

Subaru scolded Al for his unfunny joke, but was relieved by Medium's words.

Al was pulled out of the haystack; his body was in a terrible state. Unlike Subaru and Medium who had miraculously escaped with only a few bruises and scratches, Al's body had numerous lacerations and bruises all over.

He had fended off Kafma's thorns and, if only temporarily, Olbart as well. As of his jump onto Subaru and Medium at the very end, he was in a position in which he could easily be pursued by the enemy.

—Each of the wounds he had received, were wounds that were supposedly Subaru and Medium's to receive, originally.

Subaru: "…"

Al: "What's the matter, bro… You got a depressing look on your face."

Subaru: "Well, it's…"

Al: "It's a miracle that we all survived the no-rope bungee. Looking at me like that won't make me feel better about the scars on my back, though. It's a shame for a swordsman, you know?"

Turning his shoulders in a languid manner, Al ran his mouth, as to encourage Subaru.

That attitude caused Subaru to choke up, but he then nodded quickly, "I guess so".

Al tried to act aloof and as if everything were someone else's problem, but his efforts in the offense and defense so far were all due to his sincerity to Subaru.

He sympathized with Subaru's goals, and promised to assist him.

To that end, the man who was even willing to fight for Subaru's life, was Al.

Subaru: "I was wrong about you…"

Al: "Huh?"

Subaru: "I thought you were always aloof and irresponsible, unreliable and unserious about everything."

Al: “Oi oi.”

Subaru: “But you risked your life for me. —I won’t forget that.”

Putting his hand on his fake chest, he spoke of his genuine resolution to Al.

Without him, Natsuki Subaru, would not be alive, at this moment. Therefore, from now on, Natsuki Subaru would fight without forgetting the favor he received from Al.

Even if his life could come to an end the next moment—

Medium: “Natsumi-chan, Al-chin, if you two mess around too much…”

Subaru: “Yes, I know, I know. Let’s get out of here as soon as possible. Otherwise, Al’s sacrifice will have been in vain.”

Al: “It ain’t a sacrifice!”

At Medium’s urging, Subaru wiped his face with his sleeve and gave a strong reply.

It was fortuitous that all three of them had survived, however it was still too early to be relieved. The conditions proposed by Yorna and Vincent had been met, at least, but whether Kafma and Olbart would back off was uncertain.

Until he knew that for sure, they would have to survive.

Subaru: “We need to leave now. Hide ourselves and get the answers over there at…”

???: “—No need to worry about that.”

Subaru: “—Hk?!”

He was about to walk out while lending his shoulder to Al, when a voice called out to him.

Surprised by this, he abruptly moved his hands away, and Al, who was leaning on his shoulder, tipped over and screamed, “Guoh!”. But he did not have the leisure to worry about him.

A confrontation had begun between Subaru’s group, and this new figure at the entrance of the stable.

Subaru: “You’re…”

???: “My apologies for the delay in greeting you. A servant of Yorna Mishigure-sama I am, called Tanza.”

The person to speak these words with a respectful bow of her head, was a person with a distinctive kimono and deer antlers—the deergirl who had been beside Yorna.

The girl who called herself Tanza slowly looked up and faced Medium, who stood in front of her as if protecting Subaru and Al, and shook her head.

Tanza: “Do not be alarmed, all is fine. I mean you all no harm.”

Medium: “Really? But we broke the walls of both this place and your master’s castle, didn’t we?”

Tanza: “The castle and the stables will be fixed by Yorna-sama. — Yorna-sama has accepted you as messengers. No one will interfere with you again.”

Medium’s anxiety was dispelled by the words Tanza had added at the end. That line caused Medium’s eyebrows to lower in relief, but Subaru’s impression was the complete opposite.

Aside from Yorna going to fix the walls and stables, the question was more, what would happen afterward?

Subaru: “To say that no one will interfere with us, is a big deal. We know His Majesty the Emperor was there, you know?”

Subaru stood behind Medium, protected by her, not worrying about looking good. Tanza’s gray eyes stared at Subaru as he stepped forward.

In spite of her pretty face, she was a girl whose emotions did not show. Amiability was supposed to be a crucial part of a kamuro, but her behavior reminded him of a doll.

Subaru: “At the very least, we are those who’d hurt His Majesty the Emperor… and you’ll all overlook that? Is that what Lady Yorna said?”

Tanza: “Yes. No one can stand against Yorna-sama here in the Demon City. I believe Vincent-sama too is aware of that.”

Subaru: “Oh…”

Tanza’s answer was matter-of-fact, but with absolute certainty. Hearing this, Subaru was taken aback, swallowing down the words he was about to continue with.

Following that, Subaru and the others looked up at the ceiling of the stables they had just broken through and confirmed that there was no movement in the Crimson Lapis Castle. Based on his short impression, Kafma would have followed them right away.

Subaru: “Not even that’s happening… Apparently, you’re to be believed.”

Tanza: “Vincent-sama will return as well. Your letter will be answered tomorrow.”

Subaru: “…I understand.”

Tanza: “Then, have a safe trip back.”

Tanza bowed in response to Subaru’s sigh, and turned her back on the three of them.

She had performed the minimal amount of work precisely, and was now seemingly returning to Yorna’s company. Suddenly as her back departed, Subaru called her out to stop her with “Tanza-san”.

Tanza stopped and turned around; As he stared back at that motionless, doll-like expression on her face, Subaru: “What kind of person is Yorna-sama to you?”

The pretext for that inquiry was because Subaru had too many inner impressions of Yorna.

As long as she remained unknowing that Vincent was a fake, the way she treated him should be the same as the way she treated Abel, the Emperor.

He did not believe it fair to overlook her disrespectful and rude behavior only because of the pretense that she was a powerful woman, but it was unclear to him as to why she was acting in such a manner.

What was it that Yorna had for Abel, affection or hostility?

Combined with the fact that she had encouraged Subaru and the others to struggle, the depths of her heart were almost unreadable.

Therefore—

Subaru: “I would like to hear it from someone who’s beside her. Their impressions of Yorna Mishigure-sama.”

Tanza: “She is a loving woman. Loves her allies and hates her enemies. —Lover of all things that reside in the Demon City.”

Subaru: “…”

Tanza replied without hesitation, and for the first time a hint of emotion flashed through her eyes.

It disappeared in a flash, but to Subaru’s eyes, it seemed to be filled with a faint passion, and he was unable to say anything else.

Unable to follow up, he could only watch the girl’s back as she walked away.

If asked if he had obtained the answers he desired, he would have to say that he had not.

Instead, the mysterious impression he had of Yorna had only been deepened. He could not detect falsehood in Tanza's words. But it was difficult to believe that that woman was a loving person.

Ever since they had arrived at the Demon City, Subaru and the others had been toyed with at her mercy.

Al: "Good grief, she's gone… What are we gonna do?"

Subaru: "… There's nothing we can do but go back. For now, we have to trust Tanza-san's word and wait for a reply tomorrow."

In the stables from which Tanza had disappeared, Subaru again lent a shoulder to Al, who had fallen on his butt.

While supporting his weight, Subaru looked up at the Crimson Lapis Castle once more.

Subaru: "A showy, eye-catching castle… Is this what "flamboyant" had been referring to?"

While he muttered to himself, Subaru realized that Tanza's words had been true.

This strange castle that edged between blue and red was devoid of the hole that he and the others had created. No matter how much he strained his eyes, it was nowhere to be found, not even a shadow remained.

3

Abel: "I see, so he came, huh."

Subaru: "Do you have something to say? Maybe along the lines of I'm sorry, or I apologize, or please forgive me?"

After scrambling back to the inn, Abel received a report of the incident regarding the delivery of the letter. Frowning heavily at his first remarks, Subaru's face filled with hatred, as he pressed for an answer.

Despite this, Abel, donning the oni mask, pushed Subaru's forehead with his palm with annoyance, Abel: “Why must I apologize? You guys did well. I was just about to praise you on a job well done.”

Subaru: “Praise?! Praise, you say?! Don’t give me that condescending attitude together with that phrasing! You don’t have to praise me, I’m just doing what needs to be done. Hey, you two!”

Al: “Don’t get me involved.”

Subaru stuck his tongue out at the dissatisfied Abel while protesting furiously, calling for backup. Al, however, sprawled his feet on the floor and waved his hand saying, “Gimme a break”.

By net content, Al was the one to display the hardest work of the job. Leaving the first aid of his body with injuries all over to Taritta, his body started to resemble a mummy from all the bandages.

With the combination of his black helmet and the bandages all over his body, the surrealness of his appearance was incredible.

Taritta: “I’m glad that Natsumi and Medium are okay. I really should have gone with you, I was so worried.”

Subaru: “Hey, hear that? This is the correct response. As Emperor, why don’t you follow the example of Taritta-san, who’s taking over as the Chieftain?”

Taritta: “Please stop, I’ll die…”

Having been appraised as a good role model by Subaru, the latter currently explaining what should be the mindset of someone of higher position, Taritta, shook her head, her face turning pale.

Even though her attitude was fearful, Subaru could not help but feel disappointed. Was there nobody out there capable of punishing Abel?

At times like this, he felt ashamed that he had no choice but to take advantage of someone’s vulnerability.

Louis: “Uu! Auu!”

Medium: “Ah! Louis-chan, you can’t do that! You see, Natsumi-chan and the others are in the middle of an important conversation!”

Louis: “Uu! Uu!”

And then, Subaru’s thoughts were disturbed by a high-pitched scream coming from the adjacent room.

Taking a glance at the doorway to the neighboring room, he saw that Louis and Medium were having a scuffle with each other. Of course, there was no way Louis could resist Medium, so it resembled a sumo wrestling match between an adult and a child.

Soon after, Louis was carried away and her figure once again disappeared into the other room.

Louis: “Aauu!”

Subaru: “…Sheesh, what the hell’s going on there? Ever since I came back, she’s been trying to jump at me.”

Al: “For some reason, she seems to be attached to you the most, bro. She doesn’t even look at me. Not that I want her to be attached to me.”

Hearing Subaru’s sighs, Al let out a grumble in his final form, which looked like a cheap Halloween costume. Next to him, Taritta wiped her forehead with satisfaction, her aesthetic sense not too bad.

Subaru had found someone who would compete with Emilia and Beatrice, making him miss them all over again. —No, it was not just the two of them that he missed, but everyone on the other side of the border.

Soon, it would be twenty days since Subaru was sent to Vollachia.

As long as Beatrice and Ram were around, they should be aware of Subaru and Rem’s safety, but that was all; that they would not be able to convey any information beyond that made it even more frustrating.

He wished to find a way to meet up with Emilia and the others as soon as possible.

Subaru: “And yet, this masked man keeps leaving all the important bits out…”

Abel: “Hmm, you can point at me and say I am the masked one? If I am masked, what are you? A fool and a clown, perhaps?”

Al: “I’d say we’re all wearing cheap Halloween costumes, ain’t we?”

Al’s words had guessed Subaru’s innermost thoughts from just a moment before, and that expression, coupled with Abel’s point, caused Subaru to gnash his back teeth with a “Grr”.

In fact, Subaru, dressed as a woman, Abel, donning his oni mask, and Al, as a man wrapped in bandages and wearing a helmet, all looked like participants in a costume party. It somewhat mirrored Chaosflame; in this place where many different races were mingled, it seemed as if they were all trying to keep their individuality from being buried.

Of course, Subaru’s crossdressing was for practical purposes, that it was something that could not be avoided.

Subaru: “Anyway! I was able to meet Yorna-san at the castle, but I also ran into the Emperor’s entourage… That was your body double, correct?”

Clapping his hands, Subaru corrected the flow of conversation by force.

He was careful to keep his voice low to avoid being overheard, but he wanted those in front of him to hear exactly what needed to be heard.

In response, Abel nodded his head sporting the oni mask with a “Yeah”,

Abel: “Even if there are many who may resemble my appearance, there is merely a single person in a position able to perform an impersonation of me. —Chisha Gold.”

Subaru: “Chisha Gold… One of the Nine Divine Generals. If I remember correctly, the White Spider, right?”

Abel: “That is correct. Quite wise, and excellent at commanding a large army. And…”

Al: “The first person who betrayed Abel-chan.”

Following Al’s last comment, Abel, his arms crossed while sitting on the bed, silently affirmed it.

He had been the first one among the treacherous Nine Divine Generals, a person who Abel must have trusted very much. That was Abel’s substitute—no, rather than a substitute, he was now in the seat of the Emperor.

Subaru: “Chisha… Why do you think the fake Emperor came to the Demon City?”

Abel: “He understands the conditions of victory in a battle against me.”

Subaru: “The one with more Nine Divine Generals on their side wins.”

Securing the Nine Divine Generals, the symbol of strength in the Vollachian Empire, was the decisive key to victory.

To obtain this key, Subaru and the others had taken the trouble to go to Chaosflame. However, based on Abel’s current answer, there was only one possible purpose.

Subaru: “So, are they also trying to get Yorna Mishigure on their side?”

Abel: “That is difficult to imagine. Yorna Mishigure… He is not reckless enough to believe that she would listen to persuasion or negotiation.”

Subaru: “—? Then what are they doing here?”

Abel: “That much is obvious. —He knew that I would come to the Demon City.”

After hearing Abel’s answer and being unable to comprehend it, a question mark popped up above Subaru’s head.

Equally puzzled, Al raised his hand voicing an “Abel-chan”,

Al: “Are you really saying that fake Emperor was able to predict that Abel-chan was gonna come to Chaosflame? If that’s for real, ain’t we in trouble?”

Abel: “He can follow my thoughts with considerable accuracy. After all, starting with where I would show up after having left the throne and the capture of the Fortress City, plus the arrangement of the Nine Divine Generals… Naturally, the Demon City would be narrowed down as a critical location.”

Subaru: “Knowing that… No, no way!”

Subaru widened his eyes as he processed Abel’s nonchalant words. Then he pointed at Abel, who looked at him quietly, with a trembling finger.

Subaru: “You were expecting us to run into the fake Emperor, weren’t you? To avoid running into each other in person, you stayed at the inn by yourself…”

Abel: “Fool. What is the point in doing such a thing? If you have the number of pieces under your control reduced without resistance, you shall spoil the path to victory even in an already-won match of Shatranj.”

Subaru: “…Well, I guess that’s true, but.”

The only point that did not make sense, was that Abel would make a move detrimental to himself.

The only problem was that he could not disprove it; and as long as that was the case, Subaru’s conspiracy theory that Abel was a malevolent mastermind would end up being labeled as quite literally just a conspiracy theory.

In any rate—

Subaru: “Anyway! Back to the point, what do you mean? That the false Emperor knew that he couldn’t convince Yorna-san to join his side. Yet, he still showed up at the Demon City because you’re coming…”

Abel: “He will take the initiative, and ruin the relationship between Vincent Vollachia and Yorna Mishigure. Do you think it would be so easy for me to reach the top of the tower of the Crimson Lapis Castle after such an event?”

Al: “Oh, that’s kinda… What a devious guy, oy!”

Once Al nodded his head in agreement, Subaru became annoyed and agreed as well.

At last, Subaru understood what Abel intended to say. In other words, Vincent’s goal was to make Yorna neither friend nor foe, but to keep her cut off as an invalid vote.

To do so, he had personally gone to the castle and had planned a decisive breakdown of the negotiations with the Emperor.

Subaru: “…So, if we had arrived one day later.”

Abel: “Their plan would have been in place. Hence why I stated it. That it was a job well done.”

Subaru: “…”

Motionless with surveying eyes, Subaru stared at Abel without blinking.

In other words, the previous exchange had been his way of displaying appreciation. If that was the case, a boss could only be so bad at praising his subordinates.

Even patting himself on the back would be more effective than the compliment from Abel.

Subaru: “Well done, me… Al and Medium-san too!”

Al: “Oh? Oh, yeah, well done, us.”

Medium: “Yeaaah~. Natsumi-chan’s cutting remarks were awesome!”

The three of them, who had overcome death together and become more united, praised each other. Unlike Abel, Subaru felt pity for Taritta, the latter feeling lonely for having been left out of the group.

Subaru: “But there are many things I wish you’d told me beforehand. For example, the fact that Yorna-san has feelings for you.”

Al: “Oh, that’s something I’ve been meaning to say as well. I’m begging you Abel-chan. It can’t be helped that you’re a lady-killer by nature, but in that cast you gotta pay the ikemen tax.”

Abel: “I really do not understand what you are talking about, clown. Furthermore, you too misunderstand.”

Al: “What do you mean misunderstand? I’m just looking at the actual interaction.”

Despite saying “actual”, it was Yorna and Vincent’s interaction, but the fact that she was directing flirtatious glances at Abel was true.

However, Abel heaved a deep sigh upon Subaru and Al’s persistence,

Abel: “I am not one towards whom Yorna Mishigure’s thoughts are being directed at. It is the Emperor of Vollachia.”

Subaru: “…So that’s you, right? You’re not going to tell me now that you’re actually the fake, and the other Emperor’s the real one, are you?”

For a moment, the suspicions born in him back at the Crimson Lapis Castle were rekindled, and Subaru glared at him as if he were telling a joke. However, Abel dismissed him with a “Preposterous”,

Abel: “Do not take it at face value. It is true that I am the Emperor of Vollachia, however, “Emperor of Vollachia” does not refer to solely me. There have been Emperors of Vollachia in the past, and there will be Emperors of Vollachia in the future.”

Subaru: “That’s…”

Subaru rolled his eyes after digesting Abel’s concise explanation. Next to him, Al let out a dumb-sounding “Huuuh~?”,

Al: “So you’re saying that Yorna-chan’s goal’s Abel-chan’s wealth or status?”

Abel: “I shall not delve into the details, but I am pretty certain that is what it is about. What she desires is the pinnacle of the Empire… to be the most favored mistress of the Emperor of Vollachia. It does not necessarily mean me.”

Subaru: “…I kind of feel sorry for you.”

Abel: “Do not pity me based off your own advancing narratives.”

In a sense, it was a clearly-defined prerequisite for love.

The Emperor’s most favored mistress—In other words, Yorna’s goal appeared to lay in becoming the Emperor’s wife. Certainly, in that position, she could rule the Empire both in terms of power and financial strength without becoming the Emperor.

To rule the Demon City of Chaosflame was not enough to satisfy the greed of that beautiful foxwoman.

Taritta: “Now that you mention it, what did you write in your letter?”

Al: “Well, maybe that he’ll take her as a wife if she comes to us or something. I think that’s the quickest way to do it, and she’s so beautiful.”

Subaru: “I wonder if her beauty’s enough to make up for the fact that she was so difficult to handle…”

Subaru believed that it was possible to tolerate some selfishness and bad character provided it was a beautiful woman, but only up to a point.

Priscilla and Yorna were undoubtedly beautiful, but Subaru would not take either as his wife. No matter how many lives he had, he could not handle living in a state of constant anxiety like that.

Abel: “I have no intention of revealing the contents of the missive. However, it shan’t disappoint your expectations. I can assure you of that.”

Subaru: “Guarantees can only be established when there’s trust… Oh no, let’s not go there. There’s no point in saying it. Stop, stop!”

Clapping his hands together, Subaru forced the topic to end there.

Abel looked at him disapprovingly upon witnessing that unsatisfying conclusion, but Subaru, looking at Al and prefacing with “By the way”, continued with a new topic of conversation,

Subaru: “A Divine General was there, you called him Olbart. Vicious Old Man, was it?”

Al: “Yeah, he was there. That old man’s bad news. I’ve met a lotta guys in my time, but he’s on a class of his own among those I’ve come across.”

Subaru: “Do you think that old man’s already been recruited by our opponent? If that’s the case, then Arakiya, Chisha, and a third person have already been taken.”

To have the majority of the Nine Divine Generals, five must be held.

But whereas Subaru and the others were still struggling to recruit the first one, there were already three Nine Divine Generals on the opposing side.

Al: “By the way, from what I heard before, that old man’s ranked Third. They also got the Second, Lil’ Miss Arakiya, and the Fourth, Chisha.”

Subaru: “They’ve got the biggest numbers pretty much covered!”

Upon hearing Al's bleak report, Subaru shouted aloud.

If the ranks were in order of strength, the difference in strength seemed hopeless already. Since Yorna held the rank of Seventh, Subaru's distress was to be expected.

Abel: "Do not bellow… It is likely that Olbart has not allied himself with the other faction. Currently, he is merely obeying the orders of the Emperor as a Divine General."

Subaru: "…And your basis for that is?"

Abel: "Olbart Dunklekenn is too, a man whose following plays cannot be read. If one wishes to shift the current situation, the path to victory must be rectified. Influencing Arakiya might be trivial, but Olbart is not as easy to ensnare."

Subaru: "So what you're saying, is that the Nine Divine Generals can't be controlled completely after all…?"

In other words, since he had been unable to hold the reins of power, the body double who had taken his place would be unable to hold the reins of power either.

It was a conversation that he believed there was nothing to be happy about, one that made him feel uneasy about the future to come.

Taritta: "Then, the old man named Olbart has room to be on our side."

Abel: "Naturally, adequate leverage must be brought to the negotiation table. He is a crafty old man with needs and expectations. Once the situation becomes clearer, we can decide what to bring."

Subaru: "…Oh, by the way, you knew him Al, didn't you? What's your relationship with him?"

If they wished to negotiate with Olbart, Subaru believed Al to be the best choice.

The conversation between Al and Olbart at the castle tower had revealed this possibility.

Subaru: “Gladiator Island, was it? So you played a role in resolving a case that happened there…”

Al: “Oh, yeah. There ain’t much to add, though? Eight years ago, when I was still a gladiator in Vollachia, I got caught up in a rebellion on the island. Gladiators from the island took a High Countess hostage during a deathmatch, and gave demands for his release.”

Subaru: “That sounds like a major incident to me… And you solved it, Al?”

Al: “To be exact, it was me and Lil’ Miss Arakiya when she was still a loli. And then there’s the High Countess who was supposedly being held hostage… We can talk about those details later.”

Clouding the second half of the story, Al scratched his neck awkwardly. It seemed to be something difficult to speak of, but even without the hidden details, the gist of it could be understood.

Al had resolved an incident in the Empire and eight years later sought a reward for his achievement. That had permitted Subaru and the others to fulfill their purpose and return with their lives.

Subaru: “Did you really want to use it that way?”

Al: “I don’t think I’d ever have a chance to use it anywhere but there, so why not? To be honest, I didn’t think it’d be such amazing foreshadowing. I wanna thank the lethargic me of the time.”

Al gave a cheerful chuckle, apparently wishing to avoid making Subaru feel any more self-conscious.

At the same time Subaru felt grateful for his concern, Abel, voicing an “Is that so”, nodded his head in assent.

Plucking the chin of his oni mask and gently flipping it upward, Abel exposed his bare face to Al, and, Abel: “I had gotten word that a gladiator of the Gladiator Island had labored in the turmoil immediately after my accession. I too had heard that he had requested no reward… Would that be you, clown?”

Al: “Seems like it was. I’m more surprised that it reached the Emperor’s ears and that he was able to remember it. Feels like he’s also gonna remember later all the frivolous talks we had during our travels.”

Abel: “It was a great deed. —I shall reward you for your service. No matter what happens.”

Al: “Oh…”

Abel’s words were grave and adorned with an unmovable sincerity as he showed his true face.

Abel’s creed of “definite punishment or reward” once again gave him the appearance of an Emperor. Abel’s upbringing as an Emperor would not overlook those who did not seek rewards for their achievements.

Al too, would not be able to escape this time without receiving a reward.

Abel: “Whatever the case, now that the missive is in her hands, we cannot avoid waiting for tomorrow’s response.”

Subaru: “That’s right, isn’t it? There’s nothing more we can do… In the meantime, Yorna-san’s attendant girl said that the fake Emperor’s group would not lay a finger on us.”

Abel: “If that is what Yorna Mishigure said, there is no reason to cast doubt onto it.”

Abel accepted Tanza’s assurance of safety without hesitation. It seemed that there was something hidden there that Abel had yet to tell, something that had not been conveyed to Subaru and the others.

However—

Subaru: “Even if I told you to tell me about it…”

Abel: “I am the one who shall choose what information to relay to you. The information you shall get is what you are capable of handling. —At least for the time being.”

Subaru: “At least for the time being… Huh.”

For a moment, Subaru’s manner of speaking returned to its original form, and he admonished himself for the discord that had formed in his heart.

It would be easy to dismiss this as uncooperative from Abel. But, he himself wished not to be defeated. Just like Subaru was doing his utmost, Abel too was doing his utmost.

That approach might be something desired by Subaru, but he was still not in step with Abel.

Al: “So, that’s it for today, huh? Fortunately, we were able to save our lives and be able to connect them to tomorrow. In addition, we’ve thwarted our opponent’s goals, so I’d say we’ve done well.”

Al spoke in a loud voice, breaking the delicate atmosphere between Subaru and Abel.

Taking this into consideration, Subaru nodded and said, “I guess so”.

Despite the unusual circumstances, the first step toward winning over Yorna Mishigure had been taken, thanks to Al and Medium.

There was no option but to wait for Yorna’s response the following day.

Subaru: “…As expected, I’m very tired.”

As soon as he concluded that there was nothing else to do today, his body became heavy.

The tension must have dissipated, and so his body had become aware of his fatigue. From having to go up the castle right after their arduous journey, to meeting with Yorna and encountering the false Emperor, it was the conclusion of an important bout.

His right arm was sore from the strain he had put on it, and he had to take care of his whip, which had been utilized quite recklessly.

After the completion of a large task, it was important to maintain your body and tools.

Subaru: "Nevertheless, I'm sleepy…"

Holding his wobbly head, Subaru muttered to himself in a daze.

Seeing Subaru's condition, Taritta supported him while saying, "Natsumi",

Taritta: "You've finished an important mission. I'll take care of your equipment, so please rest early tonight. I'll also take care of the night watch."

Subaru: "Being wary of night attacks in the city's so post-apocalyptic…"

With a small smile at Taritta's concern, Subaru decided to take her word for it.

Exhaling deeply, he went to his assigned room. However, as he did so—

???: "Uu!"

Subaru: "It's you again…"

Louis, who was supposed to have been separated from him in the adjacent room, jumped on Subaru as if she had been waiting for him. At Louis's behavior of grabbing onto Subaru's arm, Subaru put his hands on her head, utterly fed up.

Were it not Louis, he would not have minded the childish pleas for attention. However, it was hard to let his guard down considering it was Louis, particularly so when he was tired.

Wordlessly putting his finger on Louis's forehead, Subaru flicked her white forehead prompting an “Ua” from her.

Subaru: “I don't have time for you. Now, please step aside.”

Louis: “Aa, uaa!”

???: “Oh, she's out of bed again! I'm sorry, Natsumi-chan. Hey, Louis-chan, come here! You're with me!”

Louis's body, as she clutched her forehead, was carried by Medium's arms stretching out from behind her. After that, Louis continued to flap her legs, struggling to jump towards Subaru.

Her figure disappeared behind the door again, and this time Louis's misdeeds came to a definite end.

Subaru: “Sheesh, what was that…”

Al: “She's gotten even more attached to you, bro. Ain't that it? Even if she hasn't followed the story, she feels that you almost died.”

Subaru: “…”

If Al's point was right, then Louis's attitude was out of concern for Subaru.

It was hard for Subaru to accept that, emotionally. Louis was acting like an innocent child, but deep down, an evil and unforgivable malice was present.

Stubbornly believing this was the basic premise of the relationship between Subaru and Louis.

Subaru: “Abel, I'm going to go to my room to rest. You can…”

Abel: “Do not bother. You being present would not be of much use to us in a crisis.”

Subaru: “Don't just leave it to Taritta-san. Be on the lookout for night raids all night.”

Upon obtaining a response devoid of any concern, Subaru replied with a scathing remark.

He was sorry that Taritta, who had to mediate all this, was in a panic, but for the time being, he was relieved that everything that had to be done before he went to rest, was now over.

Subaru: “I’m going to take off my makeup, undress… and sleep like a log.”

Returning to the room he had been assigned to, Subaru bobbed his head as he undressed.

Now that he had left the Shudraqian village, it was not possible to repair his wig easily. It needed to be treated with great care and attention, so the process was very delicate.

He washed the wig by pressing it into a fine mesh net, then carefully washed his clothes and shoes after taking them off.

After the minimal treatment, Subaru sunk into bed.

Closing his eyes, he slowly drifted away from consciousness.

Subaru: “Tomorrow, then…”

The circumstances had evolved again.

If the situation changed, what he saw would change. If what he saw changed, a path would open. If a path would open, he could get closer to his goal. That was where everyone he had been separated from was.

Subaru: “Rem, Beako… Emilia, tan…”

With an ache in his heart, Subaru called out the name of his loved ones in another country.

As he dreamed of his loved ones’ names and his reunion with them, his consciousness faded—

???: “…”

At a slow pace, the awakening of his consciousness came, and Subaru opened his eyelids atop the bunk.

He was not one to fall asleep easily, usually, but last night he had been so tired that he slept very well. So deeply that he did not even remember having dreamt.

He’d thought that would have been enough to rid him of much of his fatigue, but—

Subaru: “What?”

However, it was not sufficient rest that prompted Subaru’s awakening, but a noisy presence.

In the bedroom where Subaru slept, some kind of lively voice and presence came from the other side of the door. This had served as an alarm, having pulled Subaru out of sleep.

—A noisy atmosphere upon waking, was never a good sign.

Outside the window, the morning sun was leaking through the closed curtains, indicating that it was a little too early in the morning.

Feeling the already-noisy atmosphere of the Demon City, Subaru looked at the wig drying in the shade, at a loss what to do with it.

Considering what he had done so far, he should dress like a woman with his Natsumi Schwartz persona.

But if the situation on the other side of the door was dire, there was no time for crossdressing. Mulling it over for a moment, he decided that first priority went to finding out what was occurring.

There was a high likelihood that he was jumping into the wrong conclusion. If it was indeed important, Al, Medium, Taritta, or someone other than Abel would have woken Subaru up.

Therefore—

Subaru: “Ah?!”

With this thought in mind, Subaru attempted to get out of bed, and fell from his shoulders to the floor.

The impact sent sparks flying in front of his eyes, causing Subaru astonishment at what had happened to him. It was not that he was sick, or that he had stepped on the clothes he had taken off.

It was, however, that his foot had missed the floor entirely as if he had misjudged the height.

—Subaru’s legs had been unable to cover the distance from the bed to the floor.

Subaru: “That’s ridiculous…”

Subaru, too, was troubled by the fact that his legs were short, but not to the extent that it interfered with his daily life in any way. Even with his short legs, he had been with his body for eighteen years.

He sat up, only to realize that he could not have messed up that badly.

—Strangely, compared to last night, everything in the room looked bigger.

Subaru: “Hey, heyhey, what kind of joke’s this…”

His cheeks tensed and his voice quivered, as Subaru touched his face. Gasping at the loud sound of his heartbeat, he crawled, his arms and legs clutched by his bulky clothes.

Just like that, Subaru headed for the mirror in his bag. A mirror was essential for fixing his makeup and getting dressed, so he reflected himself in it to see what had happened and—

Subaru: “What the hell is this…?”

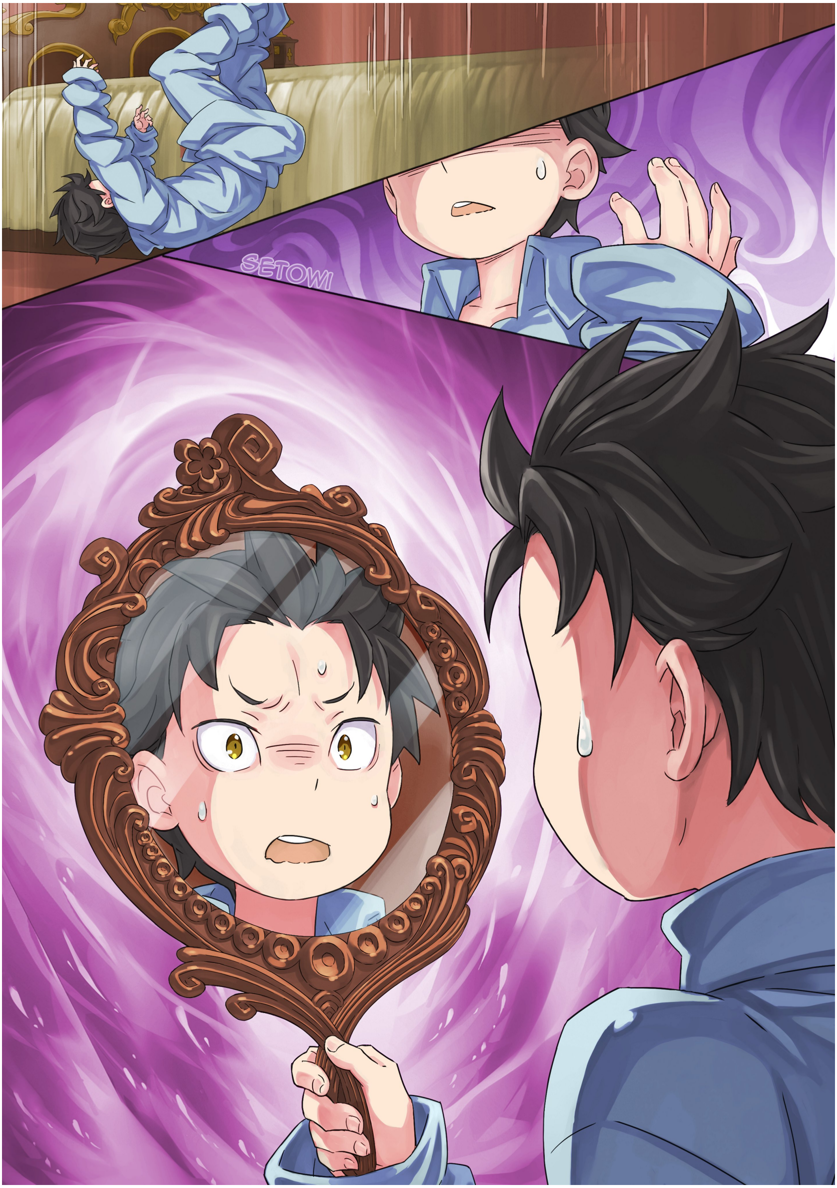
Looking at what was reflected by the mirror, Subaru muttered in dismay.

The mirror trembling in his hand, its reflection was none other than Natsuki Subaru.

However—

Subaru: “…”

—However, there he was, young Natsuki Subaru, as a boy around ten years old.



SETOWI

Bonus Short Stories

The Land of Wolves:
Death unto the Weak, No Mercy III

1

She was drawn in by the crackling of burning firewood, causing her consciousness to slowly surface up.

???: “…”

The first thing that leapt out to her after she woke up was the starry sky.

The stars were shimmering between the gaps left by the specks of cloud, and a chilly breeze brushed against her bare skin. Like that, caressed by the wind and hampered by the chill, there came a pain in her back that pierced her mind…

???: “…Gha.”

A quivering groan escaped her lips as she felt this searing pain from her back. However, what escaped from her had its origin in the thoughts about the cause of her pain, rather than the pain itself.

Who had given her this wound? And by what means had she gotten it?

Well, that was…

???: “…General First-Class Arakiya, it looks like you’re awake?”

A voice rang out, and with that, the agony that tore at her mind and body immediately dispersed. What took seed in her instead was caution; however, she promptly dismissed it, deeming it a pointless worry. The person who had called out to her was garbed in the red and black uniform that typified a Soldier of the Empire—something she was all too accustomed to seeing.

After all, she was also part of the Military, just like that Imperial Soldier.

Arakiya: “Where…am I…?”

Imperial Soldier: “We’re currently in the mountains, after fleeing west from the Fortress City. I feared we’d be pursued if we took the main road, so I gave priority on being safe over being quick.”

Arakiya: “Fortress…City. Pursued…”

She received a clear answer to her hoarse question, and from it, she began to pick up some words she knew.

What had happened in the Fortress City, her standoff with a foe she despised, and finally her reunion with scintillating flame. In the end, her actions had been in vain, going through sheer misery and getting the wound on her back…

Arakiya: “You… helped me?”

Imperial Soldier: “Yes ma’am. But not just by my own strength. There was someone else who acted as a decoy so we could rescue you, General First-Class. —If you please, do keep their devotion in mind.”

Arakiya: “…Mhm… alright.”

She looked for signs of people around, but she could not sense anyone other than the soldier in front of her. Furthermore, she could tell from the flow of the wind and the clear star-studded sky that they were a long way away from any human habitation like cities and villages.

There were no lies in the words of the soldier. She had been rescued, and sacrifices had been made to achieve that.

Therefore…

Arakiya: “I’ll…respond to all your hard work… What is your name?”

Imperial Soldier: “Right away ma’am! The one who acted as the decoy was Private First-Class, Jamal Aurélie.”

Arakiya: “…Yeah, of course, him too.”

She cast her eye down at the soldier. He had placed his hand against his chest in salute and answered her clearly. The individual who had ended up as the decoy must have been someone the soldier had been close with. She could see that from the eager way he wanted to leave behind his great deed, even if but a trifle.

Arakiya: “What I’d like to hear… right now… is your name.”

Bearing that in mind, she asked for the name of the soldier right in front of her.

The one who, after losing his comrade in arms, had resolutely brought her out of the perilous Fortress City.

His eyes grew wide as he realized what she had meant by her question.

Imperial Soldier: “…It’s Private First-Class, Todd Fang, General First-Class Arakiya.”

And so he replied to Arakiya’s question.

2

Todd: “This is going to sting a bit, General First-Class.”

Arakiya: “Nh…!”

She felt something cold on her back, followed by throbbing pain coming from her wound.

Arakiya surrendered her body to Todd, looking over at the flickering flames of the campfire as he applied some ointment on her back.

The fire lit up the place they had set up camp at, shrouded by the darkness of dusk. Usually it would be a complete no-go to have fires, since there was the worry that beasts and bandits could be invited to attack. However, in cases in which someone’s wounds had to be patched up, there was probably enough leeway to bend the rules.

First things first, there was no way that beasts were going to approach them, with Arakiya here. And if any bandits showed up, they would be simply made to regret it. —Her back stung in pain as she thought about that.

Arakiya: "…"

She could not see her own back, but according to Todd, the slash wound she had received had been burnt, and appeared to be in quite the state.

She didn't really care much about having scars, but as she had been ordered to not mar her soft skin with wounds, she had exercised as much care as she could to not get any.

But then again…

Arakiya: "Princess…"

The one who had wounded Arakiya's back was the very same mistress who had once given her this command.

Todd: "All done, General First-Class. The ointment's my own kind of blend, but I can assure you it'll work."

Arakiya: "Thanks so much for all the help… Todd."

Todd: "Hey, don't sweat it."

After Todd finished patching her up and spoke those words, Arakiya slowly lowered her raised arms.

The bandages he'd used to close up the wound on her back were wrapped tightly, however, they didn't impede her movement. The soldier was an extremely well-prepared one, familiar with medical treatment and his own ointments.

Todd: "I've always been the sort to get injured, so I got into the habit of keeping myself prepared for one thing or another."

Arakiya: “…I didn’t say anything about that though.”

Todd: “Oh right, I apologize if I was off the mark. It’s just that, I felt like you were thinking to yourself, “This guy sure is well prepared”, so my mistake.”

Arakiya: “…”

Todd deftly tidied up his belongings as Arakiya remained speechless at how good his guess had been.

In fact, she was impressed that he’d been looking at her so closely. Yet at the same time, she didn’t really think it was great that he could guess her innermost thoughts. That went double for them, given one was a warrior, and the other a soldier.

Todd: “After all, reading what’s in someone’s mind is like reading what they hold in their hands, huh.”

Arakiya: “…”

Todd: “…Just a bad habit of mine. One which I also think isn’t that great…”

Todd placed his hand against his forehead as he once again guessed her innermost thoughts, as if he couldn’t help himself. He then swiftly continued his words with a “However…”

Todd: “A foot soldier like myself has to be quick on his feet. You’re a General First-Class, so you should get it, that I’m not that skilled. The preparations I make ahead of time are mere tricks to make up for what I lack.”

Arakiya looked back at Todd as he jabbered away giving his explanation and deemed he was telling the truth.

He had a lithe, well-built body, thus she could see he was above the norm in ability for a soldier of the Empire. However, compared to Arakiya—No, compared to the fighters who were called “Generals”, his inferiority was plain and clear.

Naturally, he was no match for Arakiya.

She could literally tear Todd into little pieces in mere seconds with her power.

And yet, despite having such power…

Arakiya: "I… was abandoned…"

By my Princess.

By my Princess. By my Princess. By my Princess.

By my Princess. By my Princess. By my Princess. By my Princess. By my Princess. By my Princess. By my Princess. By my Princess. By my Princess. By my Princess…

Todd: "…Jamal served as the decoy, however, he was such a huge dumbass."

All of a sudden, another voice interjected her own, bleaching over her thoughts.

Arakiya quickly looked up. In front of her, Todd gazed at the crackling fire next to them, his eyes looking like they were staring off into space, as if wishing for memories to vanish off into the great yonder.

Todd: "It's already been six years since I first met Jamal. It was around the time I took part in the campaign in the Fortress City of Garkla."

Arakiya: "Garkla…"

Todd: "The city that was destroyed by a Sin Archbishop, the place where Eight Arms met his demise. It's been completely rebuilt now, but it used to be under reconstruction back then, and bandits had joined forces across factions to attack it each day."

You could really feel the grandiosity coming from Todd's memories, in stark contrast to the calm way he recited it.

The Fortress City of Garkla was one of the most prominent cities in the Vollachian Empire. However, around ten-odd years ago, back when Arakiya was still young, records showed that miscreants had acted out violently against the Empire.

From what they stated, back then, a man of the multi-arm tribe, who had been hailed as a hero some decades prior, had defended the Fortress City. The hero had bought enough time for the people of the city to escape, dying majestically in battle.

And from then on, the Fortress City was deeply ravaged by the after-effects of that. Its reconstruction began, but plodded along slowly, partially thanks to repeated assaults by bandits who were active in the vicinity. It was pretty much like Todd had stated, Garkla had only become seen as a city again in the past one or two years; they'd kept hearing about it as being a dangerous place that hadn't gotten any better for so long.

Todd: "The city kept being attacked over and over again by bandits, there were many who thought about abandoning it. However, one of the key figures who broke the deadlock was Jamal."

Arakiya: "He… you know…?"

Todd: "He slew one of the leaders of the bandits, killing the enemy's morale. After that, the soldiers of the Empire pressed in right away and wiped them out… He managed to get that victory at the cost of one of his eyes."

Todd clenched his fist, looking as if the results his friend had brought were something to take pride in.

Even Arakiya could tell he'd definitely accomplished something great. However…

Arakiya: "I've never… heard of them."

Todd: "As I said, he was a huge dumbass. He seemed to think it was cool to not go around talking about it, even though what he accomplished was exceptional. And because of that, he didn't covet any prizes for his work. To think that he could have been a General if he'd felt like it."

Arakiya: "…"

Todd: "That's the kind of guy he was, so I couldn't just leave him to his own devices. I wanted to make him into a General eventually, even though he kept saying we could become one."

Todd's voice grew small as he spoke, and before he knew it, he had his face buried in his hands.

He had lost the one he'd accumulated so much history with, he had lost the one he'd envisioned a big future with, and yet here he was, still alive.

The situation Todd was left in was one Arakiya could painfully empathize with.

And at the same time, Arakiya remembered the individual who had brought this throbbing pain in her back…

Todd: "My fiancée is in the Imperial Capital. Jamal's little sister."

Arakiya: "Huh…"

Todd: "She's got various physical ailments, so she needs someone to help her. But Jamal isn't here anymore, so that's why I have to be there for her."

As he said those words, Todd lowered his hands where he'd had his face buried in, and burning there in his eyes, was determination.

He had a strong sense of duty. And to add to that, a determination that encompassed not just his own, but that of his fallen friend.

And with that still alit in his eyes, Todd called out to her.

Todd: "Arakiya. The same applies for you. Enough with that hopeless look in your eye."

Arakiya: "…Ah."

Todd: "Neither of us have the time for this. You cherish them, right? If that's the case, never let go of them. Don't let her be taken away from you. —Living in the Vollachian Empire, that is our right, THAT IS OUR DUTY."

Baring his teeth, Todd leaned forward, zeal amidst his words as he fiercely urged Arakiya.

Don’t let go of the one you cherish, he’d said; don’t accept losing her, he’d said.

Arakiya’s single eye widened in response as she gawked back at Todd.

Todd: “Oh… Y-You have my apologies! I got fired up without even realizing…”

Right then, Todd realized the tone he was speaking in had grown wild. All in a fluster, he went back to using keigo. However, Arakiya shook her head at him, caught in his apology, and said “It’s okay,”

Arakiya: “If talking… that way makes it easier… Then it’s okay… Todd.”

Todd: “General First-Class?”

Arakiya: “—I shall go back… to the Imperial Capital. Come along with me.”

Arakiya declared this as she looked directly into Todd’s eyes.

She had thought everything was over, despairing. However, as she’d been told by Todd, she’d been rescued thanks to this fine individual called Jamal giving his life away. And thus she realized it was too early to end everything.

If she was going to end things here due to what happened, then she might as well have ended everything eight years ago from today.

The one who had chosen not to do that had been Arakiya herself, after she’d gulped down the cup of poisoned liquor.

Todd: “…”

Todd’s eyes grew wide open seeing the look in Arakiya’s eye. She had vowed in her next act, that she was not going to give up.

And following that, the corners of his lips slowly curved up, faced with Arakiya's slightly anxious look.

Todd: "Yeah, alright. Please allow me to accompany you, Arakiya."

And so he replied, a fierce-looking smile on his face, ever-so reminiscent of the Sword Wolf of the Vollachian Empire.

3

Todd gazed at Arakiya, her crimson eyes now full of strength again. She'd fallen fast asleep until morning as soon as she'd gone to take some rest. As he gazed at her, he thought quietly to himself, stoking the fire with a branch.

Todd: "…I can kill her whenever I want, huh."

And that was not because she was sleeping so defenselessly.

It was because she wasn't so desperate for survival, despite being so overwhelmingly strong. Todd could take advantage of these thoughts, and by that, he deemed that the means he had available to kill her were far too much to count.

Naturally though, he didn't have any great reason to kill her, so it wasn't like he was going to act so barbarically.

Todd: "What I told her about Jamal seems to really have struck a chord with her, after all."

Jamal had acted as the decoy in the Fortress City to buy time for Todd and Arakiya's escape. Knowing what he was like, he must have died in a blaze of glory, still he was glad he had a friend who'd proven useful even in death.

In fact, he hadn't lied about what happened in Garkla. Jamal had indeed lopped off the bandit chief's head, leading the city to victory, as well as meeting Todd for the first time there.

However, Todd hadn't been part of the Imperial Forces then, instead he'd been one of the chiefs of the bandits, who'd allied with each other.

His plan had been to round up all of their leaders once the alliance had grown enough and join the soldiers of the Empire having performed that great deed. However, Jamal's heroic actions had made it all come to naught.

But even then…

Todd: "It was thanks to him that I could meet Katya. He has my gratitude for that, even now."

He wouldn't have been able to tie himself together with Katya, Jamal's younger sister, if not for his reckless actions. And it was also thanks to Jamal's efforts that he'd been able to rescue Arakiya like this.

At the very least, Todd keeping Katya and Arakiya safe would serve as Jamal's farewell gift.

Todd: "Luckily, it seems she'll let me bring her back safely to the Imperial Capital."

Persuading Arakiya had been uncharted waters, a challenge which he'd been prepared to put monumental effort into. However, she'd grown fearful of the deteriorating relationship she had with her "Princess" or whatever, thus she was in such a fragile state, in contrast to her peerless fighting strength.

If he presumed this Princess was the woman in red he saw back at Guaral's city hall, then the unnatural defeat that happened in Arakiya's self also somewhat made sense.

Following that logic, if he set up the narrative keeping in mind the reaction Arakiya had, everything was as he could see.

Todd: "Katya…"

Placing her name on the tip of his tongue, he envisioned the figure of a woman in his mind.

She didn't look anything like her older brother, to whom she was related by blood. She was alone in the Imperial Capital, waiting for Todd and Jamal to come back. —He would need to tell her that her older brother was never going to come back again.

The thought of her grief made Todd feel down. But, at the same time, he also took some dark delight at the fact that only he could love such a weak woman who'd been abandoned by pretty much everyone.

Arakiya: "Princess…"

Arakiya's breathing, as she slept weakly, was intermingled with the crackle of the fire as it burnt through its kindling.

Giving a quick look towards her sleeping body, Todd commanded himself to take care of that girl, with such a slender back, with respect. From here on out, she would be the one who supported Todd, now that Jamal was dead.

He would ever so respectfully feed her, let her fatten herself up, thus guiding her towards his desires, and…

Todd: "Don't you ever become a hindrance to me, Arakiya."

Todd took out his axe, which he had holstered at his waist, and let out this warning to the sleeping Arakiya as he chopped the branches he'd gathered in two.

Everything would be fine, so long as she didn't become his enemy. He would take good care of her, so long as she didn't become a hindrance to him.

And if sometime, someday, she died without being a threat to Todd…

Todd: "Just like with Jamal, I will finally be able to stick along with you with ease if you become a corpse."

If she ended up in a position where she could never threaten him, he could stick along with her with open arms.

END

Provisional Rem's Paranoia: A Metal Bat for an Oni

1

—Rem's life in the walled city was extremely busy.

She would help with cooking and laundry in the morning, after that she would perform a round checking on the condition of the injured people. She would take time to look after their recovery with healing magic, and, when appropriate, she interacted with many people, striving to find her missing memories.

Doing that, a whole day had passed by in the blink of an eye, with no time to sit idle and ruminate on her many troubles. —For that, Rem was currently grateful.

Since troubling over things she could do nothing about, was something she believed to be very unhealthy.

Even so, the moment she had even a sliver of free time—

"…I wonder if Rui-chan, is doing alright with that person."

Only then did such a worry rear its neck and make Rem's chest hurt in gloom.

"…"

Everybody who had headed to the Magic City of Chaosflame—When Rem's thoughts happened upon Rui who had gone with the group headed by Subaru and Abel, she felt uneasy.

She had heard the Magic City, their objective, was a dangerous land, and there was also Rui and Subaru's relationship. To begin with, it was ridiculous that Subaru was so persistently wary of Rui like that.

Of course, Rem had also greatly renewed her impression of Subaru these past few days.

She had many things to say about his actions and attitude, and there was also the fact that, sometimes, when he was out of sight for a moment he'd come back with a gruesome stench on him, but she couldn't doubt that earnestness of his.

—However, it wasn't like there wasn't also a part of her, which wanted to doubt that part of his as well.

"But, in my eyes Rui-chan being suspicious-."

She just couldn't see it, much less guess what it could be.

It wasn't just her, the "People of Shudrak" with them all were the same. Even they, who should have a better eye for this than Rem, couldn't see a single questionable thing about Rui.

That was to say, Subaru's reason for being overly afraid of Rui, was something that only he could see.

Which is precisely why it was scary that he could no longer be stopped without Rem.

"Medium-san and Taritta-san are with him, so they should attempt to stop him if he does try to do anything horrible to Rui-chan but…"

The cheerful Medium and the serious Taritta, they were the last line of defense for Rui.

From Rem's point of view, the men accompanying them aside from Subaru—Abel and Al both couldn't be trusted. Abel wouldn't prioritize Rui over his objective, and Al.

"…He seemed, like he hated me."

He hadn't said anything to her directly, or try to injure her in any way. It was just that, on the inside of that black metal helmet, Rem could feel that the gaze watching her held something dark.

While he seemed friendly to Subaru, that wasn't reason enough to re-evaluate him. Still, she could only say that Rui's safety is riding on top of Medium and Taritta's shoulders.

“What’s wrong, Rem. Why the long face.”

Thus, such a voice called out from behind to Rem, who’d stopped still and was looking up to the sky.

At the edge of her vision as she turned around, was Mizelda waving at Rem, the latter standing in a plaza in front of the city town hall. With her now short hair dyed back to red, she possessed a wide smile, her eyes filled with strength.

Seeing Mizelda’s figure, Rem’s eyes went wide with an “Ah”and rushed to offer her cane.

“Mizelda-san, you can’t just.”

“Hmph. Don’t treat me like a casualty. You act like I’m seriously injured.”

“I believe if you’re injured to the point you’re missing a leg, you are pretty seriously injured.”

Replying to the cross-armed Mizelda, Rem drew near until reaching her immediate front.

Having gotten used to using her impaired legs, she had become able to move at quite a speed while using a cane. Which was why, Rem could move without burdening Mizelda.

Although, having that done for her seemed to have made Mizelda dissatisfied.

“Good grief. You keep treating me like I’m fragile, and my other leg will shrivel up and fall off on it’s own.”

“Mizelda-san…!”

“I get it, I get it.”

Being glared at intently by Rem’s upturned eyes, Mizelda gave a strained laugh as she submitted.

Below the missing bit of Mizelda’s right leg, a wooden stick had been fitted, and so she walked around quite skillfully, by putting the tip of that stick to the ground. While in terms of her body and her recovery, it would be better if she took it easy, the fact she turned a deaf ear to it was Mizelda's own fault.

Even though as a result of losing her leg, she had been forced to hand over the role of chieftain to her younger sister, Taritta.

"If you're that healthy, you didn't need to rush and hand over your duty…"

"No, that could not be."

Mizelda so sharply stated to Rem's whisper, as she admired Mizelda's adaptability. The gentle light disappeared from her eyes and she continued with the gaze of the Shudrak, of those who had to live in a tough world.

"Someone who cannot fulfill the role of chieftain continuing to be in position, must not be prolonged for even a single second. Those who cannot draw a bow, must end their hunt unsullied."

"…"

Rem, who had meant to elaborate on her honest opinion, turned her face in embarrassment upon Mizelda's answer.

Again, she had spoken as if she knew anything while lacking in experience. Even though Mizelda herself, more than anyone else, would have thought about her own course of action.

Despite the fact that she had obviously noticed how anxious Taritta had appeared, having been bestowed with the role of chieftain.

"Don't make such a gloomy face, Rem. It's clear to me you're anxious about Taritta… About Subaru and Rui."

"To me, it seems like you do not understand a single thing…"

"If you say so, then I think I'll also not say anything too strongly."

"…Yes."

That indication, as if trying to hide the discomfort, did not fool the eyes of Mizelda who had led the Shudrak as chief.

Mizelda shrugged her shoulders, at the pleased Rem, who feebly nodded.

“Despite appearances Taritta has, ability to rival my own. What Taritta lacks is confidence and, the experience tied to that confidence. That, she should earn with this journey.”

“Confidence and experience, is it?”

“It would seem, that is something that could be said for Rem as well.”

Being looked down on by the tall Mizelda, Rem was slightly at a loss for words

That was in reality, because Rem had realized just how much that had struck the mark. Being given a great responsibility, seemingly about to be crushed by anxiety, Rem saw herself in Taritta’s shoes.

Of course, Rem understood that the great responsibility of chieftain that Taritta shouldered, and the personal issue of “My past self” that she shouldered, were rude to even compare to each other.

Regardless—

“I don’t feel Taritta’s issue as someone else’s… Might be because I, have heard that I also have an older sister.”

“Rem’s sister? I’m sure she is a very noble, excellent woman..”

“Is that, so…? It would be nice, if that is the case.”

Her yet-to-be-seen twin elder sister, her existence, despite only coming from Subaru’s words, she wholly believed in it, strangely.

Certainly, she must have a sister who was her other half. Subaru doing everything to protect Rem, must also be because his desire to have her reunite with her sister was strong.

There was a longing thought within that as well. It was simply that, on the other hand, she also held doubts.

To push through those doubts—

"—First, start by finding a Self to believe in."

That was sure to be connected to the logic behind the Confidence and Experience that Mizelda mentioned.

"Lady Mizelda! So this is where you were."

"Hmph."

Then, there was a voice calling out to Mizelda as she was talking to Rem, and so she raised her face. And when dragged by that, Rem also moved her line of sight, and a silhouette waving at them from within the city town hall came into view.

Plentiful unruly hair arranged in a round manner, a personage which gave a round and stout impression. However, in truth, he was a male possessing unusually excellent ability and humanity—Zikr.

Being entrusted with this city by Abel, he was presently acting as Rem and Mizelda's group's commander. With that charming countenance of his, his round eyebrows frowning,

"When I heard you were walking about, my blood ran cold. You are still in the middle of recovering from your injuries, you ought to be resting."

Like so, he walked closer while giving words of worry for Mizelda's body. However, as Zikr's words were the same as Rem's, sure enough, Mizelda's face adopted a displeased frown.

"So you would say the same, Zikr. I am sick, and tired of hearing that."

"Even if you say you are tired of it, I will continue to say it until it gets through. Should you have some spare time left over, I would like it if you could counsel me."

“Counsel, you say?”

“Yes, about the stationing of the Shudrak people.”

Though already handed over, it didn’t change the fact that Mizelda was the former chieftain of the People of Shudrak.

In Taritta’s absence, the one qualified as an advisor would be Mizelda. This way, rather than treating her as a casualty, her opinion being sought after would be more proactive.

“Can’t be helped. What Kuna and Holly lack, I must answer for.”

“Of course, I would prefer them to be present as well. For the defense of the walled city, is not a foreign matter to your people nor to us. —What will Lady Rem do? .”

Once Mizelda displayed willingness to give advice, Zikr moved the spotlight to Rem.

It was likely that he was likely aware that Rem would indulge in anxieties and worry her head if she had free time on her hands. For that mindfulness, and consideration of Zikr’s, she admired him.

“Thank you very much, Zikr-san. But, I’ve been called already.”

“Was that the case? I suppose, that person would be…”

Not taking any offence, Zikr very naturally retracted his proposal. Then, as he inquired further, Rem bowed. “Indeed,” she said. “I have an appointment, with Miss Priscilla.”

2

“—When it comes down to it, Beautifulness is the proof of excellence. Do you understand it as such, Rem?”

“Umm…”

“I must say, Beautifulness is not something limited to just appearances. It is not separate from your conduct, poise, or your way of thinking. For Beautifulness, is what lies within such essence..”

Saying such, she took that arm extended straight in her hands. Rem savored the feeling of her soft supple skin, and the paralyzing numbing feeling of her beautiful voice violently penetrating through her skull.

In front of Rem, sporting bathwear, Priscilla with her pale stretched-out arm was exposing her stark-naked body.

The place they were in was a bathing room, so, as they were in the middle of bathing, it was only natural. But overwhelmed by that white skin and body with bountiful charm being displayed freely, Rem could not even feel uncomfortable being there.

When Priscilla had first invited her to the bathing room, she had even wondered what for.

“Bathing, is also one of my favorite things.”

“…That’s the reason, for the biggest mansion in town?”

“…Why I requisitioned it? If that’s what you are inquiring, then yes. A cramped lodging, or a place such as the barracks where the soldiers rest at, do you think I would lay there? Who do you take me for.”

“…Miss Priscilla Barielle, in fact.”

“From now on, I must have you add ‘Lady’ there.”

With one eye closed, Priscilla looked at her with that crimson gaze of hers. While being scorched by the heat of that gaze, Rem ran a soft cloth through her nude body, and respectfully washed her.

As she had declared she’d keep her close, Priscilla used Rem as if she was her own attendant.

Preparing meals, attending to clothing, as well as helping with bathing this way, all were part of that. Frankly, she could say she had been chosen as an appropriate servant in this situation.

However—

“So then, can you now see that which you are missing, Rem?”

“…”

Washing down her body, hearing the soaked Priscilla’s query, Rem remembered the dry feeling in her throat.

That gaze and those words, showed in truth that her intentions for inviting Rem were not purely arbitrary. Soon enough, she recalled Priscilla’s previous words.

That beauty laid in the essence, she took time to understand the truth of why she had been told that.

“…”

Priscilla silently wrapped her nude body in bathwear, and gazed at the pondering Rem.

One might end up feeling dizzy if they took too long in the baths. However, with that at the edge of her thoughts, Rem did not feel pressured by Priscilla.

And without pressure, Rem slowly churned her thoughts、

“If beauty lies in the essence… Then does my healing magic, also qualify as Beautifulness?”

“By and large, such understanding is correct.”

Hearing Rem’s reply slowly surface, Priscilla lowered her shapely jaw.

However, before Rem could be relieved by that reaction, she resumed speaking. “Most importantly,” she began. “If I had to say, I could not bear to watch your healing technique. Your understanding of healing arts, circulating of mana, and way of circulating… they are all most careless.”

“Careless…”

“If that is to become something worth seeing, by necessity, we must fill your gaps.”

“…While I understand, what you’re saying.”

What she understood, was only really the superficial aspects of it.

If in Priscilla’s logic, she could understand that in what one excelled there was a kind of Beautifulness. In such a case, then in covering the gaps in Rem’s healing technique there would be a search for Beautifulness.

However, even if she understood the means through which she could acquire that, the effort to was—

“Foolish, for which reason do you believe I invited you to this bathing room.”

“Eh?—a.”

As she raised a sudden voice, her consciousness blanked out, and the next moment, her field of vision revolved.

She immediately attempted to hold onto her cane; however she had not brought it to the bathing room. With nothing to rely on, Rem’s body was thrown headfirst into the hot water.

“Puha… Miss Priscilla, what are y-…!”

“Silence. Simply, silently float.”

“…”

“You, are a part of the world. First, become aware of such.”

Not minding the protests of Rem, who had raised her body inside the bathtub, Priscilla quietly decided so. Taking that in, Rem had her forehead pushed by Priscilla’s slender finger, as she held her breath.

Her body fell backwards, and, just like how Priscilla had spoken, Rem’s body floated within the warm water.

She hadn't folded to Priscilla's pressure, she just naturally believed that it should be so.

"Irregardless of your memories being there or not, as you are here now, you are you. Lose sight of the world or curse yourself, the truth shall not falter. That, you must take in for what it is."

"…"

"Cast down your eyes, search within your cast down figure for an admirable part; what you seek is not my protection, but the cane with which you shall walk on your own."

Into the floating Rem's earlobe, Priscilla's words warmly permeated.

Clearly and concisely, was not how the road towards excelling in healing magic had been laid out for her. Perhaps some would've even dismissed it as a white lie to make one feel better.

However, within the not even roughly 20 days' worth of memories that Rem possessed, there were no recollections of ever having met a human being more beautiful than Priscilla. The People of Shudrak all, and Mizelda specially, could be felt to have a similar sort of Beauty. However, Priscilla was a stand out among even them.

"From your limbs, to even individual strands of hair, flow your self through, Rem. If you do so,, you might be able to naturally slip through the influence held in the Observer's hands, even.."

Eyes closed, slowly, the meaning of Priscilla's words, and her own heartbeat matched, and spread throughout.

Remembering the far-away Subaru who had promised to return, and Rui who had gone together with him—Rem, who'd simply, quietly become one with the world, had her heart no longer disturbed by that.

END

The Dragon Kingdom: Missing Child Search Chronicle III

"…As much as I try to understand, the only conclusion I can come to is that Mister Natsuki is cursed."

"Cursed? You mean, sorcery? How terrible… How could that happen to Subaru?"

"Oh, no, I mean, because of his surroundings… Ah, what a puzzling person he is!"

Otto sighed as he put his hand to his forehead, causing Emilia to tilt her head.

In the dining room of the Roswaal Estate, a room too spacious for the few people present, Emilia searched inside her mind eagerly, hoping to find a good idea, while a slight frown appeared on her face.

Two days after coming back from the Pleiades Watchtower, Emilia's group had returned Otto and Garfiel, who were convalescing in the Watergate City Priestella, to the Roswaal Estate, thus allowing the faction to assemble like they did before.

However, the one who was the subject of this conversation was nowhere to be seen…

"You're worried about Subaru too, aren't you, Otto?"

"Actually, I am more worried about what Mister Natsuki may do to those around him than about his situation. Mister Natsuki can probably find a way to fix his own situation anyway, so…Ouch!"

"Hey! Mister Otto, that's not a very nice thing to say."

When Petra heard Otto's honest response to Emilia, she delivered a sharp blow from her palm onto his shoulder, making him cry out.

The charming girl of rosy cheeks, clad in a servant uniform, pouted with unease and irritation.

“We’re all worried about Mister Subaru, including me and Lady Emilia. We thought everything was going to be fine after you came back, Mister Otto…”

“Your expectations of me are way too high! Look, I will admit I should have worded that differently…”

“Too late.”

Receiving Petra’s scolding, Otto held his head as he apologized. Despite that, Petra crossed her arms and turned her face away, keeping her anger visible.

“Kuhaha, Otto-bro, ya’re always gettin’ destroyed by Petra’s glare!”

“…You cannot judge me, Garfiel. As if anyone here really stood a chance against Petra.”

With a click of his fangs, Garfiel teased Otto as he cowered.

Garfiel, who had come back from the Watergate City along with Otto, laughed cheerfully at his adoptive brother’s dispiritedness, and then he broached a new subject:

“Man, I’ve read tha letter, but I just can’t believe it. Like, whatcha mean the ‘Divine Dragon’ is at tha top of tha tower, tha ‘Sage’ Shaula ain’t what ya expected, and even tha Sin Archbishop of ‘Gluttony’ was there?”

“…And to top it off, Subaru and Rem were engulfed by shadows and blown far away, I suppose. There were enough unexpected things to make my head explode, in fact.”

“Beatrice…”

Beatrice complemented Garfiel’s words with a disheartened expression. Emilia sensed tiredness and anxiety from her profile, so she came closer to the girl’s small shoulders.

“It’s been a while since we lost track of Subaru, but will your body be fine at least, Beatrice?”

“…I’m currently saving energy, so it won’t be a huge problem for now, I suppose. However, Betty’s heart requires its subaruline dose, in fact.”

“What even is a ‘subaruline’?”

“That’s the tranquilizer Betty’s heart receives when Subaru is around, I suppose.”

“What has Mister Natsuki done to you…?”

Beatrice answered, her countenance sad, and Otto covered his face with his palm.

Emilia felt really concerned about Beatrice’s despondent look; she wished to be able to get that ‘subaruline’ for her, but that would be difficult without Subaru present.

“I want to see Beatrice happy again soon, but I’m also worried about Subaru himself. Beatrice isn’t the only one who’ll be in danger if they’re not together.”

“Captain’s got a broken gate, ain’t he. The whole ‘Agrizeli going downhill’ thing’s spreadin’ to us, it ain’t even funny.”

“…I hope Mister Subaru is all right.”

Garfiel scratched his head, Petra cast her eyes down, both anxious about Subaru’s safety.

“I hope so too,” said Emilia with a nod, watching the youngest ones fret.

They were concerned about Subaru’s physical condition…but, as Otto said, Subaru was quite stubborn, so it was unlikely that he would immediately stumble upon serious trouble, even in the empire. Beatrice, as Subaru’s contractor, could guarantee that too.

The problem was Subaru’s peculiar constitution as a spirit user.

"Like Garfiel said, Mister Natsuki's gate is broken, so he cannot eject the mana created by his od. Thus, he depends on Beatrice to do so."

"Yes, in fact. Betty can only receive mana from the object of her contract, which means Subaru and I are a match made in heaven… He's my fave partner, I suppose."

"But now you're all shaky because you can't be together…Or could it be that Subaru is in bad condition too?"

That was one of the perils that Subaru was certain to encounter, and a cause for concern.

They were confident that, whether he was in a cruel empire or not, Subaru had what it took to survive. Nevertheless, his limitations as a spirit user were a major issue, and Emilia, being one herself, was well aware of it.

"Actually, I have rarely ever thought of Mister Natsuki and Beatrice possibly being apart, so, what would happen in that case?"

"First, Betty'd be extinguished, in fact."

"…! No, don't disappear, Beatrice, please!"

"Grrr!"

When Beatrice replied to Otto's question, Petra clung to her and squeezed her with teary eyes, making her growl.

Emilia found that intense affection lovely.

"I think it's likely to turn into a 'release period,' just like Puck's. However, Subaru's mana amount is sooo small compared to Puck's…"

"So the damage would be small-scale…Does that mean Mister Natsuki will explode or something?"

"Otto-bro, Petra's givin' ya tha glare again."

“Sorry, sorry, sorry!”

Condemned by Petra’s glare for his negative assumption, Otto apologized again, repeatedly.

Otto’s conjecture was not completely mistaken, though. Still, it was not like Subaru’s body would suddenly blow up into pieces and scatter everywhere.

“It’s actually not impossible for something similar to happen in the end, I suppose.”

“…That is what I get for trying to joke a little.”

“The first phenomenon to occur will be something like mana poisoning, in fact. That happens when one is constantly accumulating more mana than they can handle, I suppose. After that, his body will reach an abnormal condition and become unable to move…And finally, what lies beyond his broken gate will be left exposed, in fact.”

“Beyond his gate…?”

“The od. In other words, the soul, I suppose.”

Everyone turned to look at each other after hearing Beatrice’s straightforward explanation.

The od, soul, or whatever one might call it, was undoubtedly recognized as a ‘very important thing.’ No one wanted to have it exposed, nor to lose the ability to move.

Even Emilia understood how dangerous the situation was.

“We have to go get Subaru as soon as possible then…!”

Emilia pressed her lips tightly and clenched her fist as she made up her mind.

Subaru was far away, in a foreign land, all alone…No, he was with Rem. Ram had already told them about a certain possible problem, but for now it was safe to assume that Subaru and Rem were together.

To travel while carrying the sleeping Rem was no ordinary task. Going to find Subaru was more realistic than expecting him to return to Lugunica by himself.

Besides, Emilia yearned for one more second of seeing Subaru's face, of hearing his voice.

Ever since Subaru had disappeared from the Pleiades Watchtower, a confusing disquiet had seized Emilia's heart and never let go.

"I'm with Lady Emilia on this, but…How're we gonna do that?"

"Uh…It looks sooo hard. Vollachia made the security of its borders stricter a while ago, so we can't go in just like that."

"Lady Anastasia, who came to the mansion, seems to be endeavoring to help, too."

Emilia kept growing impatient, but the circumstances did not show her any mercy.

As she told Garfiel, crossing the border between the Kingdom of Lugunica and the Empire of Vollachia was currently forbidden, and therefore one could not enter or exit so easily.

Anastasia, who had returned from the Pleiades Watchtower with them, was apparently trying to use the Hoshin Company's contacts and find a way to enter the empire.

"But, in that case, we'll have to go through Kararagi to arrive in the empire, and that'll take even more time than heading there directly."

"…I see, that is quite problematic."

"Tch, tha Captain's probably in danger and I can't even use my claws or fangs ta help. This shit ain't funny at all, dammit."

The way Garfiel clicked his tongue proved that everybody was, ironically, sharing this dilemma.

They had reached a complete standstill, with no means to go to the empire and confirm if Subaru and Rem were safe after being sent there…

"…"

Bitter silence spread gradually within the vast dining room.

No matter how much thought they put into it, they could not come with a breakthrough plan at this tough moment. If a problem could be solved by pure brawn, Emilia would tackle it boldly.

Yet, the moment she had to use her brain, she was completely out of options.

"I'm sure…Subaru would've already come up with something if he was here…"

With no means to help the aforementioned Subaru in sight, she was close to giving up.

However, just as Emilia started to despair…

"Mister Otto? Did you get an idea?" asked Petra, staring fixedly at Otto's face.

In response to the young girl's inquiry, Otto shook his head sideways.

"Well, it is not that great of an idea, and I do not believe it will fulfill your expectations either. But anyway, if relying on Lady Anastasia's Hoshin Company is currently our best bet…How about we try something venturous?"

"Venturous? What do you mean?"

"We'll do anything to get Subaru back, so stop with the big words and tell us already, in fact!"

"C-Calm down! Let me explain it then!"

Feeling the pressure from Emilia and Beatrice, Otto put his hands out, flustered. Then, Otto looked at the girls who restrained him and continued:

“Listen closely. I do think relying on the Hoshin Company is one of our most convenient choices. However, like Lady Emilia said, it will take too much time to arrive in Vollachia that way.”

“Yes. Even if we use a trade route, it might take around a month.”

Nearly two weeks had already passed since Subaru’s disappearance. Naturally, they could not help but hesitate to opt for a method that would add more days to that total.

“Gotta say it: a whole ‘nother month’s a huge no for us, sorry.”

“I know. Of course, it would be ideal to cross the border directly from Lugunica to Vollachia.”

“Way too ideal, I suppose. If we’re being idealistic, then I might as well suggest connecting Betty’s ‘Door Crossing’ to the empire and appearing in front of Subaru right now, in fact.”

“You can do that?!”

“I’d have done it long ago if I could, I suppose!”

Beatrice stamped her foot on the ground, and Emilia hung her head, disillusioned.

Emilia was regretting thinking that Beatrice could save them and becoming excited without thinking twice. Even though Beatrice had done nothing wrong, Emilia made her feel guilty.

After this interaction between Emilia and Beatrice, Otto gave a small sigh.

“Well, it is not impossible to turn those ideas into more than a mere fantasy.”

“…! Really?!”

“…Yes. The circumstances are a little complicated, though.”

When she heard Otto's unexpected claim, Emilia's eyes blinked expectantly.

Emilia was not the only one surprised, for Beatrice, Garfiel, and Petra were too. Especially Petra, who put her hand on her mouth and spoke:

"And here I was thinking Mister Otto wouldn't be of much help…"

"I was trying my very best to match all of your expectations, you know?!"

"S-Sorry. But that was impressive coming from you, Mister Otto."

"I cannot be glad to hear that, knowing it has a hidden meaning."

Hearing Petra praise him, her expression going from surprised to respectful, Otto smiled awkwardly. Emilia and Garfiel tilted their heads and looked at each other.

"Hey, what's wrong, Otto? You don't look very happy…"

"Yeah, Otto-bro, ya gotta be prouder. And now tell us what's the deal. How're we gonna go straight from Lugunica into Vollachia?"

"…Through Piqtat."

Otto's short reply was like a surprise attack, as if he was trying to generate more questions.

"Huh?" Emilia asked, not having caught well what he said.

In response, Otto's brow furrowed with visible discomfort.

"Piqtat, a city located south of Lugunica, also known as the Commercial City…If we go there, we might finally find a way to enter Vollachia."

"Piqtat…"

When Otto added that explanation, Emilia uttered the city's name again.

The Commercial City Piqtat took first place when ranking the five biggest cities in the Kingdom of Lugunica, excluding the Capital. Like the Watergate City Priestella and the Industrial City Costuul, which was close to the Roswaal Estate, it was considered one of the five major cities.

Therefore, it was not strange for Emilia, a Royal Selection candidate, to know its name. However, the cause of Emilia's surprise was not the name.

"If I remember right, Piqtat is also your hometown, right, Otto?"

"…Oh, you remembered. Yes, that is true. Piqtat is my hometown, and the Suwen Company, my home, is there."

"So, Otto-bro, ya mean yer family are expert smugglers?"

"Are you trying to insult me?!" Otto snapped powerfully against Garfiel's comment.

Ignoring the banter between those two, Emilia engrossed herself in the hope that she had just seen arise.

The city of Piqtat, location of Otto's home, was literally beside the border with the Empire of Vollachia. Therefore, if they were to find a way to cross the border from the Commercial City, they would have the shortest path to Subaru's whereabouts…

"Let's go to Piqtat, everyone. We have to tell Anastasia and Julius too."

"Everyone…Wait, Lady Emilia!"

Emilia clenched her fist tightly and prepared to seize the light before her eyes. But when Otto heard Emilia's declaration, he put his hands up with a nervous expression.

"Lady Emilia, do you intend to go to Vollachia personally? I cannot let you do that! A candidate in Lugunica's Royal Selection should not be in Vollachia, with how things are now…"

"I know it might be dangerous. But…"

"But what?"

"I want to be the one who finds Subaru, before anyone else. Though I don't know why."

Not understanding why she felt that so strongly, Emilia's speech faltered at the end.

Yet, the moment he heard that, Otto's mouth opened wide in shock. Garfiel patted Otto's shoulder violently from behind.

"Ya heard her, Otto-bro. We've got no choice but ta do our best."

"I always knew it was a bad idea to make a plan I know will make me suffer…"

Otto held his head, his face paling at the thought of the upcoming hardships.

"Sorry," Emilia told him, putting her hands together.

But even if she apologized, she was not going to take her words back.

"Of course, Betty approves, in fact. We'll find Subaru, no matter the cost, I suppose."

"Yes, we will. Subaru might be about to cry over there."

Imagining Subaru trembling out of loneliness and fear, Emilia felt her heart heat up.

Maybe she had found the method that she needed. Now, all that she had to focus on was putting her utmost effort into this.

"I'm sooo good at that anyway."

Once she knew what had to be done, Emilia did not dither. She was not going to stop.

Thus, Emilia raised her head, motivated and ready to save her best knight from the hazards of the empire.

END

Volume 29

Chapters 40-54

Chapter 40:
Nachuki Shubaru

Subaru: “…”

Subaru’s throat froze upon regarding his own face reflected in the mirror.

It was a face he recognized, but a face he felt reluctant to say he was used to seeing—which came as no surprise, as his face reflected in the mirror was a relic of the past, no more than a fading memory.

—For that which was reflected there, was the face of a young Natsuki Subaru.

Subaru: “What, is, this…”

The hand grasping the mirror trembled, the pale face of the young boy rocking minutely and repeatedly.

His other hand, the one not holding the mirror, reached for his face as if to check it, and fingers that were smaller than those in his recollections, ones befitting the young face, came into view through the mirror.

Judging from the facial features and height, that was a roughly ten-years-old Natsuki Subaru.

Subaru was a mischievous boy whose stature was slightly over average, having reached the average height for a Japanese person only once his limbs had fully developed; with certainty, he had been a pipsqueak back then, at the time of elementary school.

To speak of his perspective at the time, he had wished to grow up as fast as he could—

Subaru: “What the hell is this—Hk?!”

In the mirror, his lips and eyes appeared to shake, and not just because his hands were trembling.

It was also a clear sign that his soul was rejecting the abnormal situation reflected in his eyes.

It was a sight worth being dubbed a nightmare.

Were this simply “rejuvenation”, then more than a few people who dreamed of such a thing existed. Unfortunately, Subaru, as a flowering teenager, had nothing to do with such desires.

Even if it was a great wish of his, however, he would probably attach the condition that he wants to choose the right time and place.

That was how absurd this state of emergency was.

Subaru: “I-I can’t stay like this… Hk.”

After a long time, Subaru came to himself and rushed to his bedroom door.

By no means would the inn’s lodgings have a perk such as “rejuvenation”. It was natural to think that this was an attack from someone hostile.

He had to hurry and share the information with his friends staying at the same inn, to come up with a plan to overcome this obstacle—

Subaru: “Guys, we’re in trouble! You may be surprised by the suddenness of this…”

???: “Oh, I knew it, Subaru-chin got smaller too!”

Subaru: “Wha?”

The moment he twisted the doorknob, which felt as if it were higher and heavier than usual, and opened the door with great force, he was greeted by an unexpected sight—Nay, it was a sight he should have expected.

Outside his bedroom, in the living room where several people had gathered, Subaru was greeted by a girl with a lovely face and a cheerful smile, waving her hand.

Her clear blue eyes and golden hair with its characteristic weave—her unmistakable sunny clarity allowed Subaru to connect the girl to the woman in his recollections.

Subaru: “M-Medium-san…?”

Medium: “That’s right~! When I woke up, I was so surprised to see how tiny I was! But I’m relieved to see Subaru-chin’s tiny too. Buddies, buddies!”

The one who spoke these words with her hands in the air in jubilation, was a girl of about twelve or thirteen years of age, wearing a thin cloth wrapped around her bare skin—she had declared herself to be Medium O’Connell.

Albeit she was quite tall for a woman, having been caught up by the same phenomenon as Subaru, her size had shrunk considerably. However, she was still half a head taller than the shrunken Subaru.

Anyhow—

Subaru: “Not a situation in which you can simply be happy that you’ve found a buddy… Uwah?!”

???: “Uuk!”

As Subaru tried to swallow his initial shock, his body was blown away by an impact to his side, and someone pressed down on his upturned chest.

At the feeling of pressure, Subaru unconsciously raised a shriek like that of a squashed frog.

Medium: “Ahh! Louis-chan, you can’t do that! Because Subaru-chin’s so tiny!”

Louis: “Aa, uu!”

Medium: “Kya! I can’t lift Louis-chan because I’m too tiny~.”

Medium desperately tried to pull away the fierce beast flailing on Subaru's chest. However, her shrunken arms were not enough to stop the savagery of this evil and tyrannical being.

With that, the young Natsuki Subaru was about to be laid waste to, with no way to do anything about it—

???: "Louis, don't! Subaru's going to be crushed!"

Louis: "Aahk."

Along with a sharp reprimanding voice, the heavy monster on his chest was removed. When he looked, Louis, now away from Subaru laying on his back, for some reason had a sad look on her face.

The one to put her hands under Louis's armpits and lift her up was Taritta—her appearance, with her blue-dyed black hair, was no different from what Subaru knew.

Medium: "Haa~, Taritta-chan, thanks! I wasn't strong enough~."

Taritta: "N-no, it wasn't much… Subaru, are you okay?"

Subaru: "Oh, yeah, you saved me… I'm so glad you're the same, Taritta-san. And…"

He took the hand that Medium offered him and raised himself up, then looked at the back of the room.

There, sitting on the sofa, silently observing the flurry of events that had just taken place, was the dark-haired man whose face was covered by an oni mask—Abel.

Subaru was relieved to see him unchanged, but he also had a few thoughts on how he had not tried to help at all.

Subaru: "Nothing happened to Abel…"

His appearance, the fact that he was hiding his face included, had not changed since yesterday.

Whether it should be called a blessing or not could not be gauged at this point.

However, the fact that Abel, whose face he could not see, did not welcome this situation could be seen from the displeased air that came through the oni mask without a hitch.

In fact, as proof of his unsettled state of mind, he turned his gaze to Subaru and said,

Abel: “This is a disgrace.”

And with a mere sentence, he was able to disregard the situation.

Subaru: “…I think I’m rather cute and charming.”

Having received a blunt remark, Subaru’s gut reaction was to spit out a retort. However, Subaru himself knew very well that this was nothing more than a sarcastic remark.

The abnormal situation that had befallen him and Medium, which did not seem to affect Abel, Taritta, and Louis—

Subaru: “If that’s the case, the other one’s…”

???: “—Oh, I’m glad you’re paying attention, bro. I was afraid you’d forgotten about me.”

Subaru: “—Hk!”

Just as Subaru was wondering about the last of his companions staying at the inn, the answer was presented to him.

Eyes wide open, Subaru turned around to see a dark-haired figure in front of him, one that had come out of another bedroom. He was a boy around the same age as Subaru, around ten years old—his strange appearance was quite eye-catching.

After all, the boy was wearing a suitably torn cloth wrapped around his face, as to hide his appearance.

Subaru: “Al, right…? What’s with the covering?”

Al: “…My helmet doesn’t fit anymore. The only thing I could think of was to wrap a cloth around my head instead. Don’t mind it too much.”

Subaru: “Even if you tell me not to mind it, it’s going to be on my mind…”

Then the young Al, his face hidden, waved his right hand at Subaru.

Because less was covered compared to the helmet he usually wore, his tied black hair, habitually hidden, was exposed. It reminded Subaru of the way Abel used to conceal his face with a piece of cloth before sporting the oni mask, but the way Al had wrapped his was looser.

He looked just like a cheap-looking killer in a movie.

Subaru: “…I know you can’t wear your helmet, but do you have to cover your face?”

Al: “Oh, that’s a statement without delicacy, bro. I ain’t wearing the helmet for style or as a whim, but as the manifestation of a complex. Even if I’m now a child in appearance with the intellect of an adult, it doesn’t make it any less real. —It ain’t like my arm’s grown back. That means the scars on my face haven’t disappeared either. It’s the same for you bro, right?”

Subaru: “That’s…”

As Al said this, he showed his left arm—which was unchanged, his upper arm still in a state of having been lopped off, proving that Al’s perception of the current situation was correct.

Those three people, made up of Subaru and Al, as well as Medium, were unintentionally rejuvenated. It was not that time had rewound, however, it was a clear change in their bodies.

Subaru: “…”

In response to Al’s words, Subaru also flipped up his own loose-fitting shirt, and confirmed that the old scars all over his body had not vanished. His small child body was covered with all sorts of scars that made him want to look away. —The years he had spent in this other world had not disappeared.

He had never really thought that there would be a day when he would be relieved by the existence of those scars.

Despite that, the scars had taught him something. That this was a situation in which his limbs had simply shrunk.

However—

Al: “A misfortunate destiny such as having our limbs shrunken doesn’t just happen at random.”

Medium: “Right~. Hmm, this might mean I’m not gonna be able to help big bro with his work. He’s way too weak, so this is a big problem!”

Subaru: “It’s definitely true that it’s a big blow to the O’Connell siblings’ business, but…”

It spelt trouble for long-term business plans for sure, however there was certainly also a heap of troubles short-term.

Currently, Subaru’s problem was that, due to him being misshapen, he did not have any clothes that fit. Such was not the case for Al and Medium, though.

Subaru: “Al, you mentioned that your helmet doesn’t fit, what about your weapons?”

Al: “Good catch. I can’t wield one with my cute lil’ arm.”

Medium: “It might be hard for me to hold both of them. But I should be able to manage one… Ah!”

Subaru: “Watch it!”

Medium drew one of her twin swords from the scabbards at her side, but the blade slipped through her grip and nearly sliced Subaru’s knee.

Albeit barely, the tip of the blade almost grazed Subaru then stabbed into the floor, bringing him horror.

Medium: “Wow, Subaru-chin, I’m sorry…”

Subaru: “I-it didn’t cut me, so… but that’s pretty bad.”

With a sullen sigh, Medium pulled out the stuck sword and carefully put it back in its sheath.

The weapons she had been able to use so freely just the previous day were now in a wholly unusable state. To Medium, whose expected active role was that of a fighter, this was a crisis that shook her to her core.

The same could be said for Al, though not in terms of his military prowess.

Subaru: “This means that Taritta-san’s the only one with any legitimate fighting strength at the moment, right?”

Medium: “What? I’ll do my best even if I’m small, you know?!”

Subaru: “I appreciate the spirit, but you don’t meet the labor standards…”

Medium’s undampened attitude was nice, but a realistic view of the situation was also required.

With both Al and Medium in this state, the only one able to fight properly was Taritta. —And even if she was assured of her abilities, it would be a lonely endeavor amidst enemy territory.

Taritta: “It’s only me…?”

In fact, Taritta was evidently accepting the pressure herself.

The reason for this was that the roles that would otherwise have been shared could no longer be divided, and must now be carried on her two shoulders.

He felt guilty to her for that, but—

Subaru: “It’s going to be quite a burden. But what do we do from here? It seems like they’d have eyes on us, but should we escape from Chaosflame?”

Al: “…So, you think it was that sexy lady castle owner who did this, bro?”

Subaru: “The three of us were the only ones affected.”

Having been asked that by Al, Subaru quietly nodded his head.

It went without saying that Subaru, Al, and Medium had a single thing in common: all of them had gone to the Crimson Lapis Castle as messengers the previous day. That being the case, it was perfectly legitimate to suspect Yorna’s involvement in the circumstances of their shrunken limbs.

Abel: “It seems that you are not as distraught as I had expected.”

Abel, who had been quietly ruminating about the contents of Subaru and Al’s conversation, interrupted them.

Sure, Subaru had been quite distraught right after waking up, but now that he had run into Al and Medium in the same situation, his agitation had lessened considerably.

In a way, it was possible to say that “buddies”, as Medium had put it, truly existed.

And yet—

Subaru: “Perhaps I just missed the timing to be surprised and panicked. Maybe after I find more inconvenient things with this body then I’ll realize the importance of my lost height and weight.”

Abel: “Even though you have shrunk, you are a man who always feels the need to talk.”

Subaru: “Adaptability and cleverness are two of my few selling points, that’s why.”

He was being increasingly scorned for ceaseless chatter, but Subaru still retorted without regard. Sure enough, Abel's gaze from behind the oni mask became sharper, and he muttered with visible exasperation, "You talk too much".

However, he did not stop at that, and resumed his words.

Abel: "You can discard your suspicions about Yorna Mishigure. Your transformations differ from the principle of the techniques employed by that thing."

Subaru: "Are you sure…?"

Abel: "As far as I can surmise, yes. It is up to you to decide whether this is worth believing."

Abel directly denied the suspicions held by Subaru just before.

However, it seemed that the basis for this denial lay only within Abel. Subaru's mouth curved in frustration as he was told that he was free to decide whether it was to be trusted or not.

Despite this, it did not take him long to mull it over.

Subaru: "—. I understand. But if it wasn't Yorna, then who was it?"

Abel: "Perhaps it was Olbart Dunkelkenn who caused it."

Subaru: "Olbart… That old man from yesterday?!"

Abel mentioned the name of the architect of this situation to Subaru, who, swallowing his dissatisfaction, placed trust in his speculation.

What had come from his mouth, was the name of the false Emperor's companion they had run into at the Crimson Lapis Castle the previous day, a diminutive old man who was said to be one of the Nine Divine Generals.

Among the Empire's strongest and labelled a General First-Class, he was a person who had been bestowed with the third rank from the top. Naturally, Subaru had anticipated him to be a man possessing might which was not to be taken as trivial, but—

Subaru: “I didn’t expect him to be such a freaky person who can bring about such nonsensical situations…”

Abel: “I know not the depths of his abilities. But you cannot deny what has happened… There are other possibilities aside from Olbart when it comes to forging one’s external appearance.”

Subaru: “…Unfortunately, it doesn’t look like a hallucination or anything.”

He had already tried pinching his cheeks and waking up from what seemed like a dream.

The possibility that magic or drugs were messing with his perception and making him hallucinate was null. The fact that his arms and legs were actually short, and that he had been unable to push back against Louis’s strength and weight, posed as pretty good evidence.

The physical effects on the body, such as the size of Subaru’s clothing and Al’s helmet, could not be overlooked.

Abel was probably also regarding it as unlikely. As he had not made any special effort to object to Subaru’s insistence that it had an actual, real effect.

Subaru: “First of all, it’s good that we don’t have to run away with our tails between our legs… How troublesome. Even the Emperor, Abel, doesn’t know how that old man fights? Who the hell is he?”

Abel: “He is the head of a group that has mastered a special technique called “Shinobi”.”

Subaru: “Shinobi… A ninja?”

Abel: “—. What is that?”

Abel questioned Subaru while raising his eyebrows, the latter having blurted something out unintentionally.

When one heard of the word “shinobi”, their first reflex would be to think of “ninja”, which had the same meaning. However, it appeared that the latter word sounded new or strange to Abel.

But to Subaru, much like when he had first learned about Kararagi dialect and Wafuu-style architecture, he thought it seemed to be knowledge of the world Subaru knew, or felt like a slight remnant of it.

Subaru: “These shinobi, do they use ninjutsu, or do they go undercover in the darkness of night to spy on or assassinate people?”

Abel: “I have never heard of ninjutsu, but you understand the main function of the shinobi… That too, is not supposed to be information that reaches the public easily.”

Subaru: “There’s something similar in my homeland, they’re called ninjas. Right, Al?”

Al: “Hmm? Yeah, right. They’re a quartet of turtles with a great sense of humor.”

Perhaps he felt the same tug as Subaru, but Al’s answer was a bit off the mark as Subaru thought about it. They were characters from a popular cartoon of yesteryear, though Subaru did not dislike them.

Anyway, even if he explained the details, Abel would not comprehend it; and it seemed the latter viewed it as a pointless topic to delve into as he did not make any attempt to ask him about the details.

Instead, Medium let out a “Oh!” with her big eyes open wide,

Medium: “If it was that Gramps of yesterday who did it, it could be that! You know, when we escaped from the Castle…”

Subaru: “When we escaped…? Ah.”

Medium: “When me and you were both struck in the chest!”

Medium’s cry was a bit misleading, but Subaru had an inkling of what was up.

It had come to pass the previous day, during their escape from the Crimson Lapis Castle—in the middle of the life-threatening battle to fulfill Yorna's nasty conditions.

Subaru and his group had escaped from the false Emperor's bodyguard Kafma's thorns, and broken through the walls of the Castle in an attempt to escape, only for each of them to be pierced by the blow of the pursuing Olbart.

However, that Divine General's attack had not caused any damage to Subaru's group.

—At that time, that had gone alright. But it could not have been harmless.

Subaru: "That said, it's normal that something like this couldn't have been predicted…! I mean, that explains me and Medium-san, but Al? Why did you shrink?"

Al: "Sorry, bro. I had a few run-ins with the old man before I jumped out. It wouldn't be surprising if he'd hit me at some point. I figured that if the wound didn't kill me, it'd be a no-count."

In a low tone—or, at least, in as much of a low tone as a boy whose voice had yet to drop could muster, Al blamed himself for his lapse with a grumble.

But it was wrong for Al to blame himself. Al had done his part and allowed Subaru and Medium to survive in that desperate situation. The same can be said for Medium.

So, it was Subaru who should have known.

If he could not be of use in a battle, he should have been aware of every eventuality.

The result of failing to do so was this "disgrace", as Abel had said.

Subaru: "I can't let Rem see me like this… If I'm the same size as Beako, Emilia will treat me like I'm younger than she is even more."

Al: "Even if I've been shrunken down, I don't think it likely that the Princess'll treat me affectionately like she does Schult-chan, so I wonder who benefits from this development."

Taritta: "I'm surprised that everyone is so calm… I'm still confused…"

A pale Taritta revealed her innermost thoughts, as Subaru and Al discussed their shrunken bodies.

With Louis flopping in her arms, Taritta's bewilderment was palpable, due to being the sole remaining fighting force. It was almost as if she felt guilty for having escaped harm.

Of course, Taritta was the one who was physically and mentally normal in this situation.

Subaru: "Honestly, I feel like I'd start screaming if I didn't joke about it a bit."

Taritta: "I-is that so?"

Subaru: "Yeah… It's that revolting."

It was not his young body.

His own body had been unintentionally remade. The disintegration of the definition of the self was sickening.

Subaru: "…"

Subaru was rather proud of himself for having faced a variety of experiences in this other world thus far.

Although the experience of death was the most extreme, it was quite possible to say that the dense experiences of the past year and a half were incomparably richer in color, taste, and density than that of an ordinary person.

Compared to any of these experiences, the inexpressible disgust that came with the feeling of being remade stuck out.

Subaru: "This is what it feels like, to be one of Lust's victims…"

The sound of wings echoed in Subaru's mind as he hugged his thin, small shoulders and clenched his teeth.

It was the sound of the wings of those who had fallen victim to the Authority of the Sin Archbishop of Lust in the Watergate City—the memory of the victims whose bodies had been morphed into that of flies, and were still waiting to be saved.

The tragedy of these people, who had been transformed into something else, easily transcended Subaru's flimsy understanding of their situation.

The very act that had compelled such a sensation was—

Abel: "—Vicious, I would state."

With arms crossed, Abel accurately guessed Subaru's innermost thoughts, causing the latter's breathing to hitch.

Meeting Subaru's unsteady gaze with his own,

Abel: "Olbart's nickname is Vicious Old Man… And as befits his name, he makes use of the shinobi arts to carry out all kinds of special tasks, vicious and otherwise."

Al: "Special operations, huh? So does he get ridiculous requests like go make the target into a baby?"

Abel: "What kind of absurd instructions are those? —But witnessing this disastrous scene, I would guess that would not be impossible."

Al: "…"

Abel's response to Al, however, had a weight to it that could not be laughed off as a joke.

As a matter of fact, since Subaru, Al, and Medium were made this young, it was impossible to even guess the capabilities of Olbart's techniques, and their extent.

And with that as their grasp of the situation, the thing that made them most anxious at the moment would be—

Subaru: “This can be undone, right…?”

Abel: “I cannot state with certainty, but I believe it reasonable to assume a way to return you to normal exists.”

Subaru: “Wh-What makes you say that?”

Abel: “The only pretext for poisoning someone and not have them die immediately, is to negotiate with them.”

Hearing Abel’s speculation and their justification, Subaru was also convinced with no further words.

This phenomenon—which may be called “infantilization” for the sake of convenience, could be likened to the act of poisoning, and the other party’s intention would be to avoid immediate death.

This was a strategy to extract some kind of concession.

Taritta: “Then, if there’s some kind of contact from the other party…”

Abel: “I shall reiterate. I cannot state it with certainty. But—”

Abel looked over at Taritta, who was holding her breath, and said that her high hopes were poisonous. And just as Abel was about to resume speaking.

—From outside, there was a knock on the door of the room.

Subaru: “—Hk.”

Because of the previous conversation, everyone’s attention and tension turned to the door.

Subaru also stiffened, thinking of it as a possible sign of contact from Olbart, who had brought about the “infantilization”. However—

???: “—My apologies for disturbing you this morning. I am Yorna Mishigure-sama’s messenger.”

The voice that came through the door was a disappointing one at this point in time.

That disappointment was the reason as to why the tension that had been building up loosened at a sluggish pace. On the other hand, Subaru belatedly understood that a messenger from Yorna signified a reply to yesterday's letter.

In addition to that, he also noticed the owner of the voice bringing the reply.

Medium: "This voice's that of the deergirl from yesterday, isn't it? See, it's Tanza-chan."

Subaru: "Looks like it. Good. Then I can let her come in… right?"

With a nod to Medium, who held up a finger, Subaru asked Abel if he wanted her to enter the room. At Subaru's gaze, Abel paused for a moment, then nodded slowly.

Having received this cue, Subaru turned to go to the door and greet his visitor.

Taritta: "No, I will."

Interrupting Subaru, Taritta took the initiative and stepped forth. She left Louis in Medium's hands and ushered Subaru and the others back, away from the door.

As far as this matter was concerned, it must be said that Subaru was the one who lacked a sense of danger. Even if it had not passed his mind, he could not just open the door devoid of any protection.

And currently, the shrunken Subaru's vigilance was no different from being defenseless.

Tanza: "My apologies for disturbing you. I have come to deliver the words of Yorna-sama."

The one to bow and step over the doorsill to reveal herself was, just as they had thought, Tanza, the deergirl.

Just like yesterday, once the kimono-clad girl stepped into the room, she met the gazes of those greeting her and paused.

It was unclear what the expressionless girl thought of the unusually large number of children in the room. However, it should be noted that her gaze had lingered the longest on the suspicious man wearing an oni mask.

Anyway, after the girl surveyed the room,

Tanza: "What happened to the messengers from yesterday?"

Subaru: "Uh… They've left for a bit, should I go get them?"

Tanza: "—. No, if you could tell them later."

On and off, Tanza's attention would be drawn to Abel at the back of the room.

He thought she, as a child, was too good a servant, but there were some unexpectedly cute aspects to her, like the way she could not take her eyes off something interesting.

Nevertheless, the report she brought would have a tremendous impact on the future of Subaru and the others.

With quiet tension, they waited for Tanza's words.

And then—

Tanza: "After reading the letter, Yorna-sama will reply formally. Therefore, I would like to request you all to report to the Crimson Lapis Castle."

Subaru: "She read it…?"

Subaru felt relieved after Tanza had spoken so with a bow.

Albeit rude, after everything that had passed, he suspected that Yorna tearing up the letter on a whim was not an impossible outcome.

It could be said to be the same sense of insecurity as dealing with a high-strung cat, or Priscilla. As if he could not find the precise approach, that was the impression he got.

Al: “I ain’t denying that the Princess is hard to deal with, but even she discerns TPO… Well, I ain’t too sure about that actually.”

Reading Subaru’s inner thoughts from his expression, Al tried to defend Priscilla, but gave up halfway through. It was a sign that he, too, was having a hard time dealing with Priscilla, whom he had known for a long time.

Anyway, he was relieved that one side of the impending situation seemed to be going smoothly.

With this, the only major problem at hand was the infantilization of Subaru and the others—

Tanza: “I hope that the Master who wrote the letter and all the messengers from yesterday will come to the castle tower.”

Subaru: “—Gueh.”

Tanza: “—?”

Hearing the unintentional moan that spilled out, Tanza lowered her round eyebrows and tilted her head.

In order not to allow her to notice his inner turmoil, Subaru smiled amiably and shook his head, “Nothing, nothing”, forcibly deceiving Tanza’s suspicions.

Whether she was satisfied or not, Tanza straightened her tilted head and said,

Tanza: “We will be waiting for you at the Crimson Lapis Castle, at the time the bell of Fire Time rings.”

Abel: “I understand the details. Well done. You may leave.”

Tanza: “—. Yes, excuse me.”

The time specified—the bell of Fire Time, could be taken to mean roughly noon.

After informing them of the setting of the meeting with Yorna, Tanza performed a curtsy, and turned away to leave the room. “Excuse me”, Subaru called out towards her back,

Tanza: “Yes, what is it?”

Subaru: “I want to make sure just in case, but the main person invited is the person who wrote the letter, and the messengers from yesterday are an extra, right? In other words, if the messengers are unable to attend due to various circumstances…”

Tanza: “Yorna-sama has said to invite the messengers as well.”

Subaru: “…”

Tanza: “I hope that in this Demon City, you will not fail to follow Yorna-sama’s words.”

Tanza’s voice was plain, but it was a reminder of her absolute and unshakable will.

Leaving that behind, he watched the departing messenger girl and shut the door. After doing that, Subaru took a deep breath and turned around.

And then—

Subaru: “…Do you think we, in this state, meet the conditions she just mentioned?”

He stretched out his changed arms, and posed that question.

Chapter 41:
A Chat Over Tea

1

Subaru: "—Strategy meeting!"

In a room so quiet a pin being dropped could be heard, Subaru raised his short arm along with this suggestion.

There was no rebuttal to that remark. They all felt the need to discuss their situation.

The topic of discussion was, of course, the matter of making an appearance at the Crimson Lapis Castle.

Subaru: "Abel, who wrote the letter, and us, who went to the Castle yesterday, are indispensable…"

Looking down at his clothes with their sleeves and hems wrinkled, Subaru ruminated on the request from Yorna that had been left behind by Tanza, who had come as an envoy; a frown formed between his brows.

He was willing to accept the risk of sending Abel directly to the Castle, but his biggest concern was the condition that he should be accompanied by the messengers from the previous day.

Would Yorna appreciate it if he took along the shrunken Subaru, Al and Medium, he wondered. Worst-case scenario, there was a good chance that it would be considered a prank.

Alternatively, there was the option of telling Yorna all about their situation and appealing to her heart with sincerity, but—

Abel: "It is completely devoid of reason to show your hand when you do not know the future actions of your opponent."

Subaru: "I see… I can't say for sure Yorna'd even listen to me either, considering yesterday's exchange…"

Abel refused to reveal all his cards, and Subaru agreed with him on that point.

Although he had avoided saying so yesterday, if Subaru wished to describe the impression he had of Yorna, the expression "evil woman" would be a valid choice. The way she spoke and acted like a courtesan seemed to Subaru to be that of a temptress with excellent skills in toying with men in the palm of her hand.

The danger posed by Yorna went without saying, as, in addition to her position as the Lord of the Demon City, she possessed the aptness to be bestowed the title of Divine General.

She was the one they had first set their sights on as a potential ally among all of the Nine Divine Generals, however, as Abel had warned, she was not the kind of person to whom they could easily disclose their situation to.

Al: "If we spammed her full with our circumstances and she then asked about you, we'd be screwed. Considering the cross-dressing and all that, what should we do if she asks something like "You dare lie to me?"."

Subaru: "I don't want to think I'll be blamed like that, but if that's the case, why don't I just pretend to be Natsumi Schwartz in loli form…?"

Taritta: "Wait, please wait. I'm afraid I'll get more and more confused too…"

The dilemma of making up a lie to cover up another one was a common one, but the dilemma of having to cover up cross-dressing by still crossdressing after being "infantilized" would probably be unprecedented.

Unlike Al's helmet, the size of the wig could be adjusted, so cross-dressing itself was possible, but whether it was necessary to go that far depended on how the story proceeded.

Medium: "So, what are we gonna do? The bell of Fire Time's in about three hours, remember?"

Subaru: "…Pretty sure we should go to the Crimson Lapis Castle."

Medium tilted her head and asked, having hold Louis in her arms while listening.

While the two of them were the same size, and Louis was tilting her head to match Medium's, Subaru had to consult with his inner scales.

Taritta: "First of all, we don't have the option of not accepting Yorna's invitation, do we?"

Al: "Well, we went to a lotta trouble to have the letter read. If we don't accept it, the meaning of yesterday's hard work and us here having been shrunken would all disappear."

Taritta: "If anything, all that'd be left would be the damage incurred…"

Nodding at Al and Taritta's words, Subaru believed that retreat was not out of the question.

Not returning home until the money spent was recouped; this kind of mindset was a cliché for people losing everything through gambling. Cutting one's losses would be important, in some cases.

However, what would be lost in this "loss-cutting", was Subaru and the others' statures.

Subaru: "Should we see this as serious or trivial…?"

???: "Gettin' younger's better than growin' ol'. Isn't that like the secret to eternal life?"

Subaru: "Yeah, for sure—"

In a sense, "rejuvenation" meant an increase in chances, just like Return By Death.

If one could return to their childhood holding the knowledge and experience of an adult, they would be capable of training their physique in the most fitting way possible over time, and so, would be able to retry achieving the goals once given up on.

With those as the circumstances, it seemed like they'd found some situations which could be leveraged as an advantage, however—

???: "—That'd be what you'd think, right? But it's not that simple, is it? It's not something that ya can easily use, ya know?"

At that moment, a third party interrupted the discussion, and Subaru's breath stopped.

—No, Subaru's was not the only to stop. Everyone present in that room went rigid, unable to move at that moment, and froze at the presence of the owner of the voice.

However, the person in question was unconcerned about the growing tension in the room,

???: "I've taken the liberty of makin' tea for myself, does anyone else want some?"

With that question made in a casual tone, he lifted his steamy teacup.

SETOWI

Taritta: “—Hk!”

Immediately after, Taritta moved with a bouncing motion, like a spring-loaded doll.

She drew her bow in an instant and aimed her arrow at the person who had just appeared—Olbart Dunkelkenn.

Her target was extremely close, there was zero chance she would miss or that he could dodge.

But Olbart shrugged his shoulders with a nonchalant, “Whoa, whoa”.

Olbart: “Don’t do it, don’t do it. I don’t like havin’ pointy things aimed at me. Ya know, ol’ people go ta the bathroom more often than not, and ya wanna scare ‘em into pissin’ their pants? I’m shakin’ in my boots here, yeah?”

Taritta: “You’re kidding me…! Who are you…”

Abel: “—Olbart Dunkelkenn.”

Taritta: “…”

The old man’s hostile but unconcerned stature made Taritta’s face flush with anger. Yet, in response to her question, the man in the oni mask, the one who had called out Olbart’s name, as if to reign her in.

The only one who had not moved at all, Abel, sitting on the sofa while donning his oni mask, exchanged glances with the man. To this, Olbart narrowed his eyes hidden by his thick eyebrows.

Olbart: “Well, I already confirmed yesterday that I’m a celebrity, so I’m not surprised, but ya got a pretty impressive face, ya know. Where’s that souvenir from?”

Abel: “Spare me the nonsense, old tree. What are you here for?”

Olbart: “It’s lonely these days ‘cause young people don’t wanna listen to ol’ people’s idle chatter. The people in my village are gettin’ better and better at ignorin’ me every day… Kakakakka!”

As he talked about the lonely circumstances of his old age, Olbart opened his big mouth and smiled cheerfully.

At the dialogue between Abel and Olbart, the confusion of Subaru and the others on the sidelines slowly melted away. However, it was impossible for them to completely let their guard down.

Medium: “But, Gramps, how did you get in here? It’s not like we weren’t keeping watch…”

Olbart: “Oh, doesn’t this lil’ thing look just like the dancer from yesterday. So if Gramps has ta answer, that’s just how it is. Ya let the deergirl thro’, right? And I came in with her.”

Medium: “Together? With Tanza-chan?”

Olbart: “Kakakakka! How I got in here’s a secret. Shinobi arts are like my tools of the trade.”

Medium’s simple query was laughed off by Olbart with the purpose of confounding them.

It was uncertain how serious he was about this, but in any case, the word “shinobi” had been mentioned by him himself, and he seemed to have no intention of hiding his true identity.

In that case, asking him directly about his true intentions for coming to their camp alone would be faster compared to probing him.

Subaru: “So…”

Olbart: “Hmm?”

Subaru: “So, what are you really doing here?”

Olbart’s gaze turned to Subaru after the latter asked the purpose of his visit. With that, the old man wrinkled his brow as if thinking for a while,

Olbart: “Ah, ya, was that’cha? Were ya the girl in red from yesterday? I couldn’t possibly mistake the dancer-like girl and the one-armed man, so I was really worried.”

So he confessed, he’d had a hard time figuring out who Subaru was.

Hearing this, Subaru look, and Al, casually repositioning himself, sneered. He cleared his throat through his mask, his voice more hushed than usual,

Al: “…That’s my bro. Even the shinobi head honcho didn’t know who you were.”

Olbart: “Oh, how impressive, how impressive! I wish the people in my village could learn from that transformation. How ‘bout bein’ a lecturer? You’d be welcome.”

Subaru: “Unfortunately, Natsumi Schwartz’s schedule’s quite full… Maybe I could make some time for you, though.”

Olbart: “Hoho, what’cha mean, “maybe”?”

He moistened his lips at how cross-dressing had unexpectedly landed quite the catch, and then, noticing the sensation of thirst in his throat, Subaru narrowed his eyes.

Regardless of how much he believed in this nonsense, he had to take full advantage of the opportunity to speak directly with Olbart. For the time being, about the abnormal situation that had befallen Subaru and the others.

As per Abel’s guess, the mastermind behind this phenomenon was none other than the old man in front of him.

Subaru: “If you got any idea who’s the reason we’re like this, be honest…”

Olbart: “Oh, that. I’ve done that myself. They’re interesting, aren’t they, the shinobi arts?”

Subaru: "…"

Without any bargaining, Olbart admitted that he had been the one to do it.

His statement drowning out the rest of his words, Subaru took a small gulp. And the old man laughed viciously as he watched Subaru stiffen,

Olbart: "If I killed'cha by accident, I wouldn't be able ta hear anythin' ya got ta say, and I'd be left with a lotta trouble, ya know? That bein' the case, there are many ways to squeeze info outta someone without killin'. —Interestin', isn't it?"

Olbart bluntly spoke those words, and sipped his warm tea.

2

—The "infantilization" that had struck Subaru, Al, and Medium.

From the testimony of the one acquainted with the Nine Divine Generals, Abel, it was almost certain that the offender was Olbart.

However, for it to be affirmed directly by the person himself was a different kind of surprise. Especially if the other party was not offended at all and was proud of it.

Everyone: "…"

Olbart: "Oioi, we shouldn't look at each other all scary. Didn't'cha learn that ol' people are to be cared for, not tortured?"

The tension in the room was rising again, and both Al and Medium, as well as Taritta, who had not lowered her bow from the onset, were gradually changing their positions.

In particular, Al was prepared to block the entrance door and obstruct Olbart's escape route.

However, Al, with his shrunken body, could not handle his cherished sword at will, and so could not aspire to go far in stopping the shinobi head honcho that was always on the prowl.

Louis: “Uu…”

Olbart: “You’re a lil’ girl who’s got nothin’ ta do with me, aren’t’cha? Then ya lookin’ at me like that’s kinda hurtful. Don’t’cha like the sweet smell of ol’ men?”

Abel: “Do not play games with me, Olbart. I shall ask you once more. What brings you here?”

Abel hurled a few words at the side of Olbart, who was trying to win over the snarling Louis. Taking a glance at Olbart, the latter looking over his shoulder, Abel expressed a sharp spirit that could be transmitted even through the oni mask,

Abel: “You have heard the thoughts of Yorna Mishigure, Lord of this Demon City. She recognized them as envoys. She has made it clear that they shall not be touched.”

Subaru: “Th-That’s right! Don’t touch us, that’s what yesterday’s game was about! We were risking our lives too! And yet, this treatment’s different from what was promised to us!”

Olbart: “Oioi, you’re gettin’ all excited and mixed up, ya know.”

Taking advantage of Abel’s aggressive move, Subaru also reiterated Yorna’s statement from the previous day. It was as Olbart had said, Subaru had gone as far as to even return to the state of mind of yesterday; regardless, that still did not change the truth.

Yorna had recognized Subaru’s group as messengers, and Tanza had made it clear that she would not allow anyone to interfere with them.

To disregard that, was to express hostility toward Yorna.

Abel: “Of course, if your intent is to destroy the Demon City, you shall not give that the slightest consideration.”

Subaru: “…Now that you mention it.”

With Abel’s additional words, Subaru’s heated blood ran cold.

In fact, the fake Emperor's faction, to whom Olbart belonged, had given up the right to negotiate with Yorna to Subaru and his party. Should they view it as a bad move, to just flip the table out of anger was also within their possibilities.

In that case, it would be inevitable that he would clash head-on with Yorna, who was esteemed as one of the Nine Divine Generals, in several senses of the meaning—

Abel: "If you are to challenge it with the intent of destroying it, you shall avoid destruction. Of course, you shall come out of it with some damage."

Olbart: "…Well, that foxgirl can be tricky ta deal with. However, it's no fun ta have that masked young'un see right through ya."

Subaru: "Masked, young'un…"

Olbart scratched his chin with his fingers and pretended to be in pain. Overhearing some of his words, Subaru looked at Abel out of the corner of his eye.

Abel's attitude was unchanged, but Subaru was on the edge of his seat at every step of this exchange. —After all, Olbart was one of the Nine Divine Generals.

Of course, they must have seen Vincent Vollachia, aka Abel, many times.

Even though he was hiding his face with a mask, if Olbart were to exchange words with Abel, who had not changed his speech or tone of voice, it would not be surprising for the former to realize his true identity.

Olbart: "…"

However, Abel, who responded in a dignified manner, did not display any such anxiety.

Olbart, too, showed no signs of having perceived Abel's true identity. With that as the case, Subaru was unable to identify him, and had no choice but to act by hiding his inner fears.

Anyway—

Subaru: “I still don’t have your answer, Olbart-san.”

Olbart: “—. Feels like I’m bein’ treated better like this, compared to bein’ just called an ol’ man. So I’ll let’cha off the hook for pretendin’ ta be a girl.”

Subaru: “Olbart-san!”

Subaru’s gaze sharpened on the old man, who had lost his nerve and dodged the question. Seeing this, Olbart raises his hands and says, “Okay, okay”,

Olbart: “The rewards for yer actions are just as ya said. The foxgirl and His Excellency both have told me ta stay out of it.”

Subaru: “If that’s the case…”

Olbart: “It’s just that, ya know. I poked ya folks before yesterday’s game was over, right? Then ya know what? If ya can’t complain ‘bout dyin’ from a sword wound ya got while fightin’, ya can’t complain ‘bout a shrinkin’ technique ya got hit with while fightin’ me.”

Subaru: “That’s quibbling…!”

Olbart: “Well, is it really quibbling? —But ya can’t change it, can ya?”

Raising an eyebrow at Olbart, who was laughing at his own cunning, Subaru was at a loss for words.

Olbart’s argument was quibbling, as he himself had admitted. But on the other hand, his argument was correct as well.

Even if someone lost their life because of a wound inflicted during battle, were the wound inflicted before the negotiation of a ceasefire, it would make no sense to hold someone responsible for the tragedy after the ceasefire began.

However, Subaru had the impression that there was a large difference between a wound, and “infantilization”.

Olbart: “That’s why I think that bringin’ ya back and the foxgirl’s order are two different things. Do ya get me?”

Subaru: “…”

Olbart: “Kakakakka! Don’t look so stern. Yer cute face’s ruined… That pretty face was just a sham made with cosmetics! Ya got me there, hook, line and sinker.”

Olbart played with the teacup with his fingertips and showed some acrobatic skills to keep the contents from spilling. His words themselves could not be easily fought off; they had been chosen with deliberate care attained by experience.

However, even if Taritta, who was becoming more and more nervous, and Al and the others, attempting to block the escape route, were to fight their best, subjugating Olbart by force was nowhere in sight.

If there was someone here capable of defeating this cunning, it would be—

Abel: “Do not get carried away, Olbart.”

Indeed, only the man donning the oni mask tried to cut through his brimming ambition and cunning.

Abel, without changing his posture, shot Olbart with a look even sharper and colder, and made him stop playing with his teacup.

Abel: “I have already inquired you as to your purpose. How many more times must I ask until you feel like doing it?”

Olbart: “Whenever there’s a young’un whose expression I can’t see, I can’t help but wanna see the wrinkles between their eyes. I hope ya don’t mind.”

With one eye closed, Olbart mischievously responded to Abel’s domineering spirit. The old man scratched his head and voiced, “You’re a man with no time to spare”, Olbart: "The foxgirl aside, His Excellency also told me not ta lay a hand on ya folks, so I didn't come here to deal with'cha. But if we're gonna be yer enemies anyway, it wouldn't hurt ta weaken ya a wee bit, would it?"

Al: "…That may have been the reason as to why you shrunk us, but you didn't come all the way here to drink tea."

Olbart: "Looks like you're havin' a hard time now that yer helmet doesn't fit anymore, boy. Anyhow, guess you're right about that. Ah well, the reason I'm here's that I'm here ta listen ta what ya got ta say, honestly."

Subaru: "…What we got to say?"

While fiddling with his ear with the hand not holding the teacup, Olbart nodded to Subaru as the latter ruminated over the question, then spoke, "That's right".

With that, he then pointed out the window using the same finger that had been picking at his ear,

Olbart: "That performance at the castle yesterday, darn it if it didn't make me giddy. But there are a lotta people who've tried ta mess with His Excellency, and so far, they've all failed. So, I'd like ta ask ya why ya decided ta cross that dangerous bridge as well."

Subaru: "…What are you going to do once you hear it?"

Olbart: "Oh? Obviously I'll make a decision after hearin' it. And I'm gonna do somethin' ta make sure ya can't lie."

With Olbart's mouth open wide as he sent saliva flying along with his hearty laugh, Subaru's scrunched up into a scowl.

It was easy to dismiss his attitude, as was heard just a while ago, as just bad taste. But it was clear that the conversation could not just be shut down on him.

He was one of the Nine Divine Generals required to help Abel regain the throne, or to dispel the shinobi technique that had infantilized Subaru and the others.

Rather—

Subaru: "…A chance, is it?"

The position of the Nine Divine Generals was such that it was difficult to even contact them, nevertheless to get them on their side.

But presently, for whatever reason, Chaosflame was occupied not only by its Lord, Yorna, but also by Olbart in front of him, and Chisha, who seemed to be posing as a false Emperor.

Of course, even if cajoling the opposition posed by Chisha, who had taken the initiative, was an impossibility—

Subaru: "If Abel's reasoning from yesterday was correct, it doesn't mean that Olbart-san's confirmed as an enemy."

Abel's view was that hope remained regarding Olbart, who stood as one of the Divine Generals considered to already be the enemy's pawns. At the moment, Subaru had to say that Abel's judgment was a correct one, as he had managed to get to the point of negotiating with Yorna.

If they were to believe his speculation, there should be room for negotiating Olbart's position.

However, in order to get Olbart on their side here—

Subaru: "…"

In silence, Subaru glanced at Abel's profile.

Revealing the identity of the man sporting the oni mask and keeping his dignified stance, Abel—That was the absolute most important piece of information that they must disclose in order to conquer Olbart.

And frankly, Subaru did not have any further information that could resonate with Olbart.

Subaru: "…"

The oni-masked Abel did not even wince, as he met Subaru's gaze towards his side.

His face was hidden behind a mask, making it impossible to observe any of his emotions. However, there was no way that the intelligent man could not have thought of what Subaru had come up with.

At this juncture, just how much of his own heart could he bare to the other party, Olbart?

Subaru's thought was that this would be the focal point, but since Abel had not stirred, was he premature in his thinking? Or was he waiting to see what came to pass?

In any case, if they could get Olbart on their side, they would find a way to solve the problem of Subaru's "infantilization", their lack of strength, and the battle for the Nine Divine Generals.

Then, this would be the right time to play—

Olbart: "—Ya know, funny thing is, people's faces do say more than you'd expect, don't they?"

Subaru: "Hmm…?"

Olbart: "Yer gaze, the way yer face tenses up, the way yer muscles contract just a little… Ya don't actually gotta move yer mouth ta talk a lot."

Thumping his two fingers against his temples, Olbart spoke. The old man nodded as his gaze fell on Subaru, whose breath had been taken.

Olbart: "For example, the girl who looks like a dancer relies on the girl usin' the bow. The young'un with the cloth wrapped 'round his head and the wee one rely on ya. And, as for the one usin' the bow and ya… Well, both of ya rely on that masked young'un."

Subaru: "—Hk."

Olbart: "Ya can see the general direction of each pair of eyes. — When you're weak, it's even more obvious, isn't it?"

The words of Olbart, who flashed his white teeth as he said them, pierced Subaru's mind.

And Subaru belatedly realized that he had greatly misjudged Olbart's fundamental nature, a man who had even appeared seemed to be a good-natured old man.

Olbart had made it clear that he was the one who had "infantilized" them, and that he had done so in order to talk to Subaru and the others.

—He had never stated that it was to "negotiate" with Subaru and the others.

Subaru: "Didn't you come here to, talk…"

Olbart: "Comin' here ta "talk" and comin' here ta "listen" are similar but slightly different, aren't they? I don't mind chattin' like this, ya know? But…"

Subaru: "…"

Olbart: "Ya see, I'm also the shinobi head honcho, and I spend my time actin' as a representative of the people of my village. That's why… I can't trust the words of someone I haven't even tortured, 'cause it's too dangerous."

Without losing the air of an old man with an understanding of what he spoke about, Olbart expressed his thoughts in accordance with the shinobi's unwritten rules.

The bleakness and harshness of this world were certainly similar to that of the "ninja" world known to Subaru.

However, the feeling of enjoying it as a fiction was very unlike the feeling of being exposed to it first-hand in such a manner.

And—

Olbart: "So, with his uppity attitude of havin' no one to rely on, the masked young'un's the leader, right? Lemme ask ya, what was it that made ya come ta seduce that foxgirl."

Abel: “—. If that does not work, what will?”

Olbart: “Then you’ll just have ta find another way, won’t’cha? But since I’m forced ta stay out of it, there’s not much I can do ‘bout it.”

Olbart shrugged his shoulders, his gaze and attention were turned towards Abel. Of course, it was hardly believable that Olbart, the head honcho of the shinobi, would not be paying attention to the others.

Even if his head was not turned, his attention had not been diverted from Al nor Taritta.

However, even though a bow was being pointed towards him, to display any intention of attacking Olbart would be unwise for Subaru and the others surrounding him.

As per Yorna’s command, they were to be welcomed into Chaosflame as messengers.

Whether this would still apply after causing a disturbance in Chaosflame, and how she would deal with ill-mannered visitors, was a complete unknown.

In other words, the situation here was a stalemate for both Subaru and Olbart.

Both had no choice but to stare each other down, declaring their readiness to do harm.

And in such an extreme limbo—

Subaru: “…But, on the other hand, in these conditions, where can I even prepare it?”

Reflecting on the established situation, Subaru once again cast a question to the white space that had been born within his mind.

And once again, the thought arose, “Isn’t this an opportunity?”.

Bound by Yorna and the false Emperor, Olbart was unable to take any additional actions of hostility.

Subaru was judging which side Olbart was leaning; Supposing he was closer to the enemy's side, they would have to act on this timing, they would not get any other situation like the one they had here.

Everyone: "…"

At a slow pace, time progressed.

Along with this tense situation, there was also the matter of the time at which the bell of Fire Time would ring, as presented by Yorna.

Time was precious. —The more he wasted, the more his life diminished.

In silence, Taritta's fingers trembled as she gripped her bow, and Al and Medium too muffled their breaths. Even Louis miraculously was only letting out growls, perhaps instinctively sensing the danger posed by Olbart.

Perhaps they could not decide to stir. If someone could, it would be —

Subaru: "—Abel."

Abel: "…"

Quietly, Subaru called out Abel's name.

It was visible that his consciousness had turned towards him through the oni mask, upon hearing it. His eyes were invisible, as the oni mask blocked his gaze, but his attention was directed at Subaru.

The feelings there could not be seen. —However, Subaru could guess its intent, as he had felt it.

Subaru: "This is the Emperor, Vincent Vollachia."

Olbart: "…Ahhn?"

In reply to Abel's gaze, Subaru made that assertion, prompting Olbart to raise an eyebrow.

His eyes hidden by his long, rich eyebrows went open wide, as the old man was suspicious of Subaru's words. It was a natural reaction, but it was far from the reaction he was looking for.

So, in order to elicit the desired response, they would go deeper.

Subaru: "You want to know who's the faceless young'un, and what we're here for. Why did we come to see Yorna? The answer is…"

Olbart: "Oioi, that's not very funny, is it?"

Subaru: "I wasn't trying to be funny. —Abel."

At a loss for words for an instance, Olbart's voice was laced with a hint of surprise.

Perceiving that with clarity, Subaru called out to Abel at the back of the room. This far in the game, Abel did not try to refute Subaru's words and actions.

Just inaudibly, his gentle fingers reached for his face. And then—

Olbart: "—This is one hell of a thing."

A concealed visage was revealed in front of Olbart, the latter letting out a voice of astonishment. Before his eyes, the one gazing back at Olbart as his face was tense, was a dark-haired beauty—none other than the Emperor, Vincent Vollachia.

Olbart: "Your Excellency? But that's too weird, isn't it? But then, who'd I come wi—"

Abel: "Let your old wits run wild, Olbart Dunkelkenn. You possess the answers. All that remains is to draw them out."

Olbart: "With the face of Your Excellency, sayin' things that sound like Your Excellency… Ah, so that's it."

At first he had been taken aback, but the old shinobi soon regained his composure.

Having revealed his face, Abel passed an order as the Emperor, and doing as he had said, Olbart seemed to come to a conclusion of the situation he was in with the information he had.

Olbart put his hand on his chin, and,

Olbart: “Then that’d be Chisha. He’s got it all under control… There’s another matter, tho’. It’s not like ya, Your Excellency, ta let somethin’ like that happen ta ya, is it?

Abel: “You think your eyes can peer into the depths of my mind?”

Olbart: “Oh, very scary, very scary.”

Waving both his hands in the air, he let out a parched sound at Abel’s answer.

In fact, as Olbart had stated, Abel’s situation was definitely a groggy one, but his overwhelming bluff did not show any of that.

Upon seeing the change in Olbart’s expression, however, the tension left Subaru’s shoulders as well.

Olbart understood the situation.

Abel had been ousted from his position as Emperor, and Vincent, the man he was accompanying, was a false Emperor.

Olbart: “A lotta things that’d been confusin’ me have become clear. No, I was wondering why ya suddenly came ta see the foxgirl in person.”

Subaru: “All of that… was to stifle the actions of our side.”

Olbart: “Hahaa, it’s hard for ol’ people ta keep up with the ideas of ya smart folks, actually. Young, smart, good lookin’, I guess that’s bein’ super-greedy. Don’t’cha think so, too? Don’t’cha think? Since you’re also so young. Oh, that’s because of what I did! Kakakakka.”

Olbart roared with laughter, trying to get a laugh out of them with what he had said, even though it was not funny.

Subaru's cheeks tightened at the sight, and he exhaled a long breath, suddenly looking at Taritta.

The Shudraq warrior still kept a wary eye, her bow trained on Olbart. He was attempting to get her to break her battle stance, and regain control of the situation.

Subaru: "Taritta-san, you can put your bow down now. Olbart-san's…"

Olbart: "Oh? No, ya don't have ta put it down, do ya? I think it's impossible for that girl ta lower her guard in front of someone she's not sure isn't an enemy."

Subaru: "Huh?"

Olbart himself, the target of Taritta's bow, was the one to halt Subaru's effort to get her to lower her guard and talk to him.

The old man took Taritta's caution as something natural, furthermore he did not do anything to try to deny the "naturalness" that was incomprehensible for Subaru. —In other words, the danger stemming from himself had not lessened.

However, then it would be as if—

Subaru: "Let's talk about this…"

Olbart: "Didn't'cha hear me? I said I'd make a decision after I listened ta ya. And I did."

Subaru: "…"

Subaru's throat clogged up, yet, faced with that, Olbart's attitude did not alter.

There was merely a quiet click of the tongue, and,

Abel: "This was one of those cards I did not know which way it would tend towards, but that is what you have decided, huh."

Olbart: “That doesn’t sound like ya, Your Excellency. No, it’s fatal that you’re seriously outta cards ta play… And ta boot, ya weren’t lucky on the draw here. Ya know, I’ve always wanted ta try it.”

Abel: “Ho, and that would be?”

Olbart’s plan was set, and the shinobi head honcho laughed at the words of the ousted Emperor.

A laugh, suitable for the man holding the title of “Vicious Old Man”,

Olbart: “With me being an ol’ man with not long left ta live, I’ve always wholeheartedly wanted ta try and kill the Emperor, ta have a glorious death.”

Everyone: “—Hk.”

The moment that vicious wish was spoken, movement occurred amidst that highly-strung environment.

That very moment, Taritta, Al, and Medium all moved to frustrate Olbart’s purpose, overriding the “no fighting” rule given to each one of them.

However—

Olbart: “Yesterday, I couldn’t understand what trick ya were usin’, one-armed one. But it stopped workin’ since ya turned little, didn’t it?”

Al: “Ka… Hk.”

Olbart: “Can’t use the skills ya learned at a later age when you’re young.”

Having spoken those words, Olbart twisted his neck and swung his hands.

Blood splattered from his fingertips, and a tragedy unfolded in Subaru’s field of vision, his eyes open to their utmost.

Medium and Al, who had stepped in and tried to subdue Olbart, had their necks gouged out and blood spouted out. The blood scattered within the room like a fountain, making a person wonder where had so much blood flowed within a small child's body.

Al: "Tch, ah… Hk"

Olbart: "Judgin' from this, looks like ya aren't able ta use yer last ray of hope. Still, I ended up doin' ya in before finding out how yer trick works, that's how it was, huh. I messed up, I messed up."

Al crouched there, holding the gushing wound. Medium's eyes went blank and she fell backward, motionless.

It was obvious that what they had suffered, was a fatal wound that could not be recovered from.

And Taritta, the only one ready to take on Olbart head-on—

Subaru: "—Ah."

Subaru had been wondering why a shot had not been loosened from the bow.

However, the suspicion that the attack that was supposed to take place did not, made Subaru direct his gaze in that direction.

Taritta was pinned to the wall.

Tall for a woman, Taritta's slender frame was rested against the wall, her body pinned in place. The reason for her immobilization was a throwing weapon protruding from the center of her cleavage —a shuriken.

As if some kind of joke, the star-shaped projectile had pierced Taritta's chest, skewering her back and pinning her to the wall. Her heart had been destroyed, it was clear she had perished instantly.

Abel: "—Even though you were told not to interfere, you could not help yourself."

Suddenly, a man's voice echoed in that room rife with death.

It had come from Abel, standing in a room that had become full of corpses terrifyingly fast. Having left his seat, the man looked down with a penetrating gaze at Olbart, the architect of all this death.

Bathed in that glare, Olbart wiped the blood splattered on his cheek with his finger,

Olbart: “Yeah. I wanna set off some big fireworks before I die. I’d be completely satisfied ta murder the greatest Emperor of all time, and be executed for it.”

Abel: “I couldn’t read your destructive tastes. My oversight.”

Olbart: “Kakakakka! No, no, no, if my dreams of growin’ old were known, I’d be so ashamed that I wouldn’t be able ta live.”

Al had ceased moving, and Medium and Taritta had stopped breathing.

Under such circumstances, that conversation between Emperor and vassal seemed, to Subaru, to be something from another world. However, it was not another world. It was real. Real, overwhelming reality.

This was the reality that Subaru had arrived at, after making the wrong choice.

Olbart: “Once I’m done with Your Excellency, I’ll go back ta Chisha. I’m sure he’ll be able ta handle my death just fine.”

Subaru: “I’m… Hk.”

Olbart: “Oh? Oh, you’re still there.”

To Subaru, who had spoken up too late, Olbart turned around, the latter plunging into the atmosphere that marked finality.

The old man turned his neck with a snap to keep Subaru, his own face rigid, in check. Then, pointing to those fallen, Al, Medium and Taritta in turn,

Olbart: “That’s that. These guys tried ta kill me, so I killed ‘em back, but there really isn't a reason for ya ta die, right? I don't have the intention ta become a fugitive, so there's no reason ta silence ya as well."

Subaru: "Da, ah…"

Olbart: "Oh, guess I went ahead and spoke a lot again. It's obvious that ya got somethin' to say, so open yer mouth. I'm an ol' man with a short life ahead of me, so I can't wait that long tho', ya know?"

As Olbart continued to speak leisurely at his own pace, Subaru's thoughts turned white. —No, his thoughts were being dyed a bright-red. Whether it was anger or the color of the blood that Al and the others had shed, even Subaru himself could not tell.

But even so, whatever, at any rate, never, here—

Abel: "—Fool."

And so, those contemptuous words came from Abel.

Currently, his gaze must be piercing the back of Subaru's head. Feeling the pressure of his sharp gaze, Subaru was made keenly aware of the accuracy of his words.

There was no point in standing up for Abel now, with this.

If he had been able to act in such a manner before Al, Medium and Taritta had fallen, perhaps it would have been possible to change something,

Louis: "Uu…!"

Olbart: "Oioi, you're even usin' a lil' girl that's got no connection to me? Your Excellency's method of doin' things must have been somethin' that women and young children hated for sure."

In front of Olbart, who was putting his hand on his forehand, stood Louis. —No, Louis was not standing in front of Olbart, but in front of Subaru.

Subaru was shielding Abel, and Louis was shielding Subaru, the three of them standing in a straight line.

It was just some absurd form of a meat shield.

Olbart: “I thought Your Excellency was supposed ta die alone.”

Abel: “—. Not everything goes according to one’s calculations.”

Olbart: “Kakakakka!”

Abel’s inability to keep his mouth shut at this point was met with a sneer and a loud laugh from Olbart.

Within the eyes of the elderly shinobi, neither Subaru’s nor Louis’s presence were reflected. But he was not so kind as to overlook those who stood before him with hostility.

Henceforth—

Subaru: “—I’ll never forgive you.”

Natsuki Subaru’s young body spurted blood and sank into a cold pool of blood, searing into his mind the face of the shinobi as the latter guffawed viciously during his attempt to satisfy his ambition.

And so—

3

Blood flowed and a hot sensation gushed from the wound.

The hotness that overflowed endlessly, however, instantly drained the heat from his body.

That which had flowed out rapidly swallowed him, drowned him, rendered him invisible, and then, after he had sunk to the depths of the ocean, he would, he would—

Subaru: “…”

Instantly, the lost blood coursed through Subaru’s body, producing a loud noise in his ears.

Accompanying the sensation of having his hearing sharpened to the extreme, came the cacophony of blood flowing through him in a quiet space. While being struck by it over his whole body, Subaru let out a ragged exhalation.

With violence he bit his back teeth, his vision flickering on and off due to the distant pain and sense of loss.

He wished to find out where he had returned to—

???: “I’ve taken the liberty of makin’ tea for myself, does anyone else want some?”

A moment later, a vicious, unforgettable voice announced the overture of a new battle for Natsuki Subaru.

Chapter 42:
Beast Of Ambition

1

Olbart: “I’ve taken the liberty of makin’ tea for myself, does anyone else want some?”

The moment he heard the shrill old voice, the blood flow in Subaru’s body began flowing backwards.

His skin covered in goosebumps started aching, the air he had taken in froze over within his lungs. As if a heavy, sharp object had been buried deep in his chest, Subaru’s soul was urged to awaken.

—Return by Death had activated, and he had been thrust into this most terrible of situations.

Taritta: “—Hk!”

A moment later, before Subaru could react in any way, Taritta took aim with her bow.

The target was, of course, the uninvited visitor who had suddenly appeared in the room—Olbart Dunkelkenn. One of the Nine Divine Generals, and the old man who had murdered Subaru and the others just ten seconds ago.

Even without knowing the circumstances, the unmannered way in which he broke the ice would make one wary.

Nevertheless, in the same room, Olbart, while having an arrow pointed at him from ultra-point-blank range, as if to ridicule the caution displayed by Subaru and the rest, shrugged his shoulders and,

Olbart: “Whoa, whoa, don’t do it, don’t do it. I don’t like havin’ pointy things aimed at me. Ya know, ol’ people go ta the bathroom more often than not, and ya wanna scare them into pissin’ their pants? I'm shakin' in my boots here, yeah?"

Taritta: "You're kidding me…! Who are you…"

Abel: "—Olbart Dunkelkenn."

Taritta's face flushed with anger as Olbart ignored her piercing hostility. But it was the man with the oni mask, Abel, who drew the attention to him as if to interrupt her, calling out the old man's name.

Unphased by his appearance, Olbart's gaze turned to the man concealing his face, the one who had spoken his name.

And so it began, a gut-wrenching battle that left him with an awfully thirsty impression—

Subaru: "…"

While keeping the conversation between Olbart and Abel on the perimeter of his consciousness, Subaru matched the unchanging scenes of this world to that of his own memories. Just before, the events of around merely ten minutes prior. —In those was where he must search for a breakthrough in fate.

???: "Can you do it?"

Subaru: "—Hk."

While in those thoughts wishful of a breakthrough, a cold voice wedged itself in, catching him off-guard. Born of impatience and frustration, it was none other than the feeble voice of Natsuki Subaru himself.

Subaru: "Can you do it? He wiped out all your friends just a moment ago, ending in that mess."

The more he tried to remember what had just happened, the more the voice whispered to Subaru devoid of mercy.

Subaru's failure, his blunder, his irreparable mistake.

This second chance granted by Return by Death was not to make up for his mistakes.

The mistakes he had performed were irreversible. The only thing granted to Subaru was atonement which he could not really atone for. Because that was the sole product of the Authority in Natsuki Subaru's possession—

Subaru: "—Hk!"

Olbart: "Oh! What's up with'cha all of a sudden?"

Medium: "Whoa! What, what, what?"

Louis: "Uu?! Aa, uu!"

He slapped his cheeks as hard as he could with both hands, trying to shake off the snide remarks that had been whispered in his ear.

A dry sound echoed through the room. Olbart, Medium and Louis screamed at Subaru's sudden action.

Although they had not raised their voices, Al and Taritta were just as surprised.

Of course they would be. It was unfortunate, but it just was necessary.

Subaru: "…"

Once Subaru opened his closed eyelids, his vision, which had seemed wobbly and unsteady, became clearer. Within his field of view, in the midst of the people who had been surprised by Subaru's strange behavior, a single gaze was trained on him in silence.

Only the oni mask-wearing Abel was as unfazed and composed as he had been at the time of Olbart's first appearance. —What lay within his heart, was wholly unknown.

Subaru: "Sorry for surprising you… I had to motivate myself."

Olbart: "A lil' kid with red cheeks and a big smile on his face, how nice… Hmm? Aren't'cha that one? Aren't'cha perhaps the girl in red from yesterday? Ya startled me."

Detecting the eccentric-behaving Subaru's real identity, Olbart raised his thick eyebrows in interest.

Just like in the previous loop, Olbart had again now made the connection between Subaru and Natsumi for the first time. Going along this line, having confirmed that Olbart was the mastermind behind the "infantilization", it was possible to bring about negotiations.

However, they would be committing the same mistake, then. —Olbart was a dangerous man.

At the very least, Abel's circumstances could not be relayed as to get Olbart on their side.

As soon as he found out that Abel was the real Emperor, that Abel was Vincent Vollachia, he would disclose his own long-held ambitions and make an attempt on his life. —He was a potential enemy already.

The rest—

Al: "…That's my bro. Even the shinobi head honcho didn't know who you were."

Olbart: "Oh, how impressive, how impressive! I wish the people in my village could learn from that transformation. How 'bout bein' a lecturer? You'd be welcome."

Subaru: "…"

Olbart: "Guess it's impossible ta talk peacefully. Seems I've put'cha on yer guard a tad too much and made a tad too grand an entrance. I messed up, I messed up."

Olbart stuck out his tongue and admitted he had made a mistake.

However, the situation in which this would warm up or soften the atmosphere had long passed. Subaru had not the slightest intention of relaxing his vigilance toward the old man.

—Prior to his assault, Olbart had stated that human faces said a lot.

Probably, the combination of his good-natured attitude and casual behavior, as well as the surprise produced by his silent intrusion into the unprotected room, were all techniques to elicit the other party's true reaction.

If the shinobi of this world and Subaru's perception of "ninjas" were of the same nature, then the entirety of Olbart's conduct should consist of traps, poison and all kinds of ninjutsu.

He would spare no effort to achieve his goal.

Olbart: "Ya best not take me lightly 'cause I'm an ol' man with a short life ahead of me and all that, tho'. Gonna have ta get a lil' rough, takin' into account how much time I got left in me."

Taritta: "Rough… Are you going to fight us in this situation?"

Olbart: "Kakakakka! Well, it's true I might get a lil' jumpy with a bow pointed at me, don't'cha think? But fightin' isn't the only method for me ta get my way, is it?"

Medium: "Weeell~, what do you mean? What are you trying to say, Gramps?"

Taritta and Medium cast a question towards the sincerely-muttering Olbart, who shrunk his small body even further. The old man's cheeks twisted into a smile at the pair's questions, their height difference had been flipped around.

Then, with his hand, he pointed at Medium and then at Al, the two trying to block his exit route,

Olbart: "It's hard ta do this and that havin' been shrunken, isn't it? I did that. It's a kind of shinobi technique. Strange and interestin', right?"

Al: "Old man…!"

Olbart: “Don’t be angry, one-armed young’un. In fact, ya can thank me. I’d be miffed if I killed ya by accident before I could’ve asked ya any, so I just shrunk ya.”

With Al closing in on him for an answer, Olbart spoke and stopped his advance.

Upon understanding that the words spoken to him were indeed true, Al’s breath caught, and he fell silent.

Indeed, this statement of Olbart’s was both true and factual.

Had he so desired, he could have killed Subaru’s group during the battle of the previous day, at the Crimson Lapis Castle. He could have pierced their hearts with a simple thrust of his hand, instead of this infantilization technique.

The fact that Subaru and the others were still alive, even after becoming small, came down to nothing more than the whim of the old man.

So Subaru thought, but—

Olbart: “Well, even if I’d tried ta kill ya for real, you’d’ve blocked all my attempts at doin’ it, so I just did it outta desperation, ya know? Right, young’un?”

Al: “…I wonder what you’re talking about.”

Olbart: “Kakakakka! Ya won’t tell me ‘bout yer trick? I can’t really blame ya. If I could tho’, I’d ask ya how ta do it in detail and leave it in my book of secrets.”

Al: “It doesn’t matter how many times you say it. —I wonder what you’re talking about.”

His face covered by a piece of cloth, Al answered in a muffled voice.

That response should not match his expectations, yet Olbart nodded with a “Is that so, is that so”, seemingly enjoying Al’s reaction.

Subaru: "—?"

On the other hand, Subaru had no idea what could be the meaning of the current exchange between the two.

During that fierce battle in the castle tower of Crimson Lapis Castle, Al had done the work of several people to save the lives of Subaru and Medium. Or perhaps the one who had squared off against Al there, Olbart, had noticed something shimmering in his fighting style.

However, even if Olbart's words were true, Al's technique, influenced by the "infantilization", would not work on the shinobi.

Subaru had already been witness to the results of that, with his very eyes.

And derived from that, came about an absolute truth.

—That would be: under no circumstances whatsoever should they ever wage battle against Olbart. It was that simple.

Everyone: "…"

Olbart was lazily playing with his teacup using both hands. Taritta trained her bow and arrow on him, and Al and Medium likewise were ready for battle—but they would be killed helplessly.

There was a tremendous gap in strength between Subaru's group and Olbart.

If they fought Olbart, they would be annihilated. —No, even if they attempted to escape, one or two people may be able to escape, but the chances of that were incredibly small.

They needed to get Olbart to leave peacefully, at all costs. However, there was no time to have a discussion regarding that.

Subaru: "Why…?"

He could not help but lament that he had been forcefully returned to this moment.

He was aware of it being a thought terribly filled with pride and selfishness, as he had been granted a second opportunity by Return by Death. Had he at least returned before Olbart's appearance, he would have been able to consult with his companions at least.

Most recently, he had Returned by Death repeatedly when facing Todd in the Fortress City of Guaral with little time to deal with him; remembering this brought Subaru much suffering.

At that time, he'd had to restart while already being in the sight of the threat.

Currently, while the circumstances were different, the conditions were similar. In other words, the restart point had placed him in the same cage as the bloodthirsty beast.

Originally, the time traveled by Return by Death had not been consistent, but this was quite serious.

Or, perhaps, the Authority that had been bestowed upon Subaru had been compromised in some manner—

Subaru: "—Let's put that aside for now."

He should not curse the lack of time, and commit the folly of wasting what little time he had.

Subaru would not be the only one to pay for his own stupidity.

Subaru: "Olbart-san. You're…"

Abel: "—. You claimed your technique shrunk these people."

Subaru: "Oh…"

Subaru forced himself to change his mind and attempted to call out to Olbart.

In order to get out of this situation, he had to be careful about every word he said, every action he performed. He wanted time to discern the best choice of words or to put it another way, so he had spoken with the intent of buying time.

However, Abel interrupted him, covering Subaru's voice with his own.

His words discouraged Subaru at the outset. Now in an embarrassed state, Subaru looked at the man donning the oni mask, and then came to realize his aim. Abel did not even glance back; his real intention was to substitute for Subaru's role. —That would be, to give Subaru the time required, and draw Olbart's attention.

Olbart: "Oh, that's right, that's right. I forgot we gotta talk 'bout that too. Ol' people always go off on tangents. It puts a strain on my flesh and bones."

Abel: "You? Cease with the droll humor. If you claim your old age is weakening you, you should relinquish the rank of General First-Class as soon as possible. If you do not, you have already made up your mind."

Olbart: "Well, ya got a point. The mask makes it hard for ya ta see my body, but ya can peer into my thoughts just fine."

Abel: "Of course."

Devoid of hesitation, Abel nodded, and Olbart's eyes took on a curious look.

There was no longer any doubt that Abel's true intention was not to expose Olbart's true nature, but to buy time, considering his posture of dragging the conversation.

Subaru did not know how Abel had realized that he needed time, but—

Subaru: "This isn't the time to be distracted."

Putting aside his displeasure at having been seen through, Subaru thought about what to do.

If Olbart came to know of Abel's true identity, he would fulfill his ambition to murder the Emperor. Therefore, he could not disclose his hand to Olbart.

However, there was no way he would leave without seeing what they had to offer.

Abel: “You are a General First-Class, your rank presently that of Third, so it may be said that you rest at the top of the Empire. However, your nature is a greedy one. Even that position is far from satisfactory.”

Olbart: “Well, bein’ treated as a witherin’ ol’ man isn’t quite that bad, but I get the feelin’ bein’ called a greedy ol’ man isn’t all that nice. Kakakakka!”

Abel spoke of Olbart’s character, as seen through his own eyes.

Olbart listened happily, wearing a broad smile, but the darkness hidden in the depths of the shinobi was something that Abel, of all people, had misjudged.

—No, it would be more appropriate to say that he had not obtained an accurate reading.

Olbart: “So? What does a disgruntled man like me want?”

Abel: “—The seat of First.”

Olbart: “…”

Abel’s words were uttered in a quiet yet unwavering voice.

As soon as he heard this, the sound of Olbart’s breath disappeared, like dead leaves rubbing together. The old man’s eyes narrowed under his long, thick eyebrows, as he locked gazes with Abel.

Subaru did not know what was going through the shinobi’s mind, but he was sure what Abel had pointed out had made Olbart’s thoughts buzz.

But that—

Olbart: “One-armed young’un, don’t make any strange moves. Ya too, archer girl, you’re also makin’ it obvious ‘cause of yer breathin’.”

—Did not mean that Olbart's attention had been diverted, or that any chance had been created.

With Olbart's face still turned toward Abel as he spoke, Al and Taritta gulped.

They had been most likely searching for a faint opportunity the moment Olbart focused on Abel. But even that probing gesture did not go unnoticed by the seasoned observational prowess held by Olbart.

Al: "—Hk, you've got eyes in the back of your head?"

Olbart: "What I'm sayin' isn't that you're not diligent enough. Difference's in experience, experience. But from my point of view, most people are inexperienced. It's an ol' man's theory that cannot be beaten."

While displaying a toothy grin in response to Al's groaning, Olbart's gaze never left Abel's.

He could deal with any of Al and Taritta's tricks without even looking. —Even if he did not say it in actual fact, from this transcendental being's posture, it was clear that he was thinking it.

Moreover, they currently did not possess the ability nor the cards in their hands to overturn that.

Subaru: "Al."

Giving a shake of his head, Subaru advised Al to stay out of it.

Although Subaru did not have a complete grasp of Al's abilities and skills, he was probably a skilled fighter who specialized in defense. As showcased by the battle with Arakiya, and the previous day at the castle tower, his ability to survive the enemy's attacks despite being on the defensive was something that even Subaru had to admire.

And yet, in this state of having been "infantilized", he would not be able to wield it to the fullest and would end up being killed.

Olbart: "Ya surprised me by tellin' me I was aimin' for First, tho'. Why are ya blurtin' out somethin' that crazy, masked young'un?"

Abel: "It is evident. Your ambition is not so shallow that it shall dry up just because of your old age. —The shinobi push their bodies and minds to the extreme, and merely a scant few can reach such states. Goes without mention that you are their leader… And the hour upon which you are complete shall not come till the day you die."

Olbart: "Hmm."

Crossing his arms, Olbart nodded briefly at Abel's words.

It could be taken as missing the point, but the lack of response only made its credibility stronger.

In actual fact, Subaru knew that Abel's point was incorrect.

Olbart's true intentions, and the ultimate goal of the shinobi head honcho, was to "murder the Emperor". Different from rising to the top of the Nine Divine Generals.

However, Olbart's reaction was proof that Abel's point was not far off the mark.

Ultimately, what Abel was pointing out, was the "thirst" within Olbart.

What Abel had speculated as a way to fulfill that craving was to take the title of First, the absolute most important rank in the Nine Divine Generals, of which Olbart was a part of as well. —But it was not unreasonable.

He was a General First-Class, with plenty underlings as the shinobi head honcho, having lived a long, long life, now burdened with the typical fetters of old age—How had he come to notice that desire, of having his name go down in history as the shinobi who had murdered his own liege the Emperor, even if it meant abandoning everything he had gained in life?

Abel was arrogant and self-centered and had zero consideration for others, nevertheless he was the Emperor of Vollachia—as an existence upon the Imperial throne, the preservation of his own life held precedence.

He possessed the self-awareness to know that, with his loss, the Empire would become greatly unstable.

That was the inevitable awareness that possessed by the Vollachian Emperor, by Abel. And on the other hand, that should be a sense of responsibility held by everyone, even if not as strong as his.

—This was, that which Olbart Dunkelkenn did not have.

He did not mind dying, if so fulfilled his ambition. Even if it meant bringing trouble upon the people around him as a result, that did not matter.

That extraordinary thought of destruction was Olbart's darkness, and that which Abel had not been able to read.

However—

Subaru: "—Olbart-san, you're not after the seat of First, what you're after is the Emperor, isn't it?"

—Natsuki Subaru did know, the darkness of Olbart Dunkelkenn.

2

—A moment later, the color, smell, and feel of the air changed.

Olbart: "…"

Olbart did not even turn his line of sight towards Al and Taritta, whose hostility was accompanied by their ability to get things done. Olbart's gaze reacted to the infantilized Subaru's words.

While holding a teacup in one hand and stroking his chin with the other hand, the old man turned to look at Subaru.

That was because he could not allow what Subaru had just said pass by.

Olbart: “Boy, you’ve come outta nowhere again, I’m surprised.”

Subaru: “Are you surprised because I spoke up suddenly? Or was it…?”

Olbart: “Are you askin’ me if I’m surprised ya guessed right? If that were true, I’d be a very dangerous guy, kakakakka!”

Subaru: “…”

Opening his mouth wide, Olbart tried to laugh off Subaru’s words with gusto. However, Subaru was convinced that his inner thoughts were not as calm as they seemed.

Subaru had done nothing else but to recite to him his own long-held ambition.

In addition, this was a darkness that even Abel’s eyes had not been able to see through until the moment it was about to be acted upon.

Al: “Aiming for the Emperor and killing him? Bro, that’s a leap, even for you.”

Subaru: “It doesn’t make sense. Yeah, I know that. There’s no merit other than notoriety, isn’t that right?”

Olbart: “Well, can’t say I don’t understand the idea of bein’ infamous over not bein’ known. Like the one-armed young’un said, that idea’s a bit of a leap.”

Subaru: “But you’re not denying it outright, Olbart-san.”

Olbart agreed with Al’s doubting voice, but Subaru pressed Olbart on.

Honestly, he knew that he would be jumping into the danger zone, but even then he couldn’t not do so.

Abel had prolonged his conversation with Olbart, while Subaru had pondered it over.

As long as Olbart’s ambition was to murder his own liege, the Emperor, Abel's true identity could not be disclosed, nor could he be told that the Emperor was Chisha, a fake. It was inevitable that this bargaining chip of theirs had disappeared.

Once this happened, in order to prevent Olbart's hands from unmasking Abel, Subaru had come up with a method of warfare that diametrically opposed the original "negotiation"— —Namely, forgoing the disclosure of their own hand, but instead disclosing Olbart's own.

Subaru: "Our objective is as I told you yesterday in the castle tower. We're going to overthrow Emperor Vincent Vollachia, who currently sits on the throne of the Emperor. This should also align with your goal."

Olbart: "Wait wait, don't make me out ta be some kinda traitor! This is treadin' on thin ice, boy, you're makin' me so scared that I'm 'boutta piss myself."

Subaru: "But you aren't denying it nor stopping me from saying it for real. You're one of the Emperor's Generals of the First-Class."

With that future possibility caught with just his fingertips, Subaru moved forward in an attempt to fully reach it.

Of course, that did not mean that the threat posed by Olbart had diminished, nor that the danger had lessened. He was fully aware that with one wrong move, this place would become a bloodbath.

But Subaru was convinced that this was the kind of talk that was possible as of now.

Only after Abel's true identity had been revealed had Olbart decided to take action.

It was akin to some sort of suicide mission for Olbart, in which killing Abel would fulfill his life's purpose.

Without that conviction, Olbart would not be quick-tempered during the negotiations.

Even if he was a beast of ambition, devoid of the slightest sense of responsibility or loyalty, he would play the role of a Divine General who faithfully obeyed the order of “no interference” given by the false Emperor.

Olbart: “That’s, His Excellency’s ordered me ta stay out of it even tho’ you’ve declared war right ta his face. I’m not like Kafma, who gets mad all the time when it comes ta the Emperor. Not wise ta turn the foxgirl into an enemy, in this city.”

As expected, despite Olbart hearing Subaru’s appeal that could have just as well been derogatory, he nevertheless did not attempt to use force.

However, he did not take kindly to Subaru’s insistence, and his attitude naturally made Abel, Al and the others put into question whether the shinobi’s absurd ambitions were true, or not.

And—

Abel: “—So would that be the ulterior motive dwelling within your heart that I was unable to conjecture?”

Olbart: “Good grief, these guys just don’t get it. At this rate, I’ll just have ta give up and acknowledge it’s no use talkin’ ta ‘em.”

Among those who were skeptical, Abel was the first to accept the unbelievable details.

Pierced by the glint in his eyes, Olbart blurted out some excuse as if he didn’t feel like it. There had been no reason for Olbart to open his heart to Subaru and the others in earnest at this juncture from the get-go.

Naturally, Al and the rest of the fighters were getting more tense due to Olbart’s attitude—

Olbart: “Stop it, stop it, you’ll only end up losin’ if ya start a fight. I’m tellin’ ya, the reason I won’t use violent methods with’cha isn’t ‘cause I’m nice, it’s ‘cause I was told not to, aight? I’m prepared ta get even with’cha if ya folks make a move on me first.”

Taritta: “Guh… That may be true…”

They hadn’t fought yet, but they’d be back at square one if they tried to start something. Taritta’s cheeks tightened at Olbart’s warning, her narrowed eyes darting a glance at Subaru and Medium.

Seeing this, Olbart nodded his head as if to speak affirmatively,

Olbart: “Bring back the shrunken ones, ya say. That’s a tad greedy, don’t’cha think? I’m thinkin’ of leavin’ without doin’ anythin’, okay?”

Medium: “But Gramps, you made us small, didn’t you? Or is there anyone else besides Gramps who can bring us back to normal?”

Olbart: “I’ve never really thought ‘bout it… Girl, how old are ya, really?”

Medium: “Me? I’m what, twenty?”

Olbart: “Then maybe if ya wait ten years, you’ll go back ta normal? Dunno, tho’.”

Medium raised her hand and asked a question, her cheeks reddening at his blunt answer. Albeit it was just Olbart’s bewildering attitude, his answer was troubling for Subaru and the others.

But it was a fact that there was no way to get answers out of him by force, and no other method to undo what had been done.

And yet—

Subaru: “You know you can’t just pack up and go home. Olbart-san, I’m going to have to ask you to stay with us a little longer…”

Olbart: “I don’t wanna, tho’. Since you’re treatin’ me like an ol’ man and all that. I’m an ol’ man with a short life ahead of me, and I got the right ta choose who I talk ta with the lil’ time I got.”

Abel: “—Then, I shall present you with the opportunity to kill the Emperor.”

Immediately after that, Subaru gasped at yet another change in atmosphere, and gazed the one who had spoken, Abel.

Abel had done nothing else than put his own life on the scales, that statement causing Olbart to scratch his head with an “Oioi”,

Olbart: “How many times do I gotta tell ya folks that yer premise’s wrong? Isn’t it pretty bad if ya can’t remember things better than me?”

Abel: “If your goal is the Emperor’s life, you have had many opportunities in the past. But you have not actualized it. —Because the Flame of the Yang Sword protects the Emperor.”

Olbart: “Oh…”

Abel: “I can divulge how to overcome the Flame.”

Olbart’s expression underwent a shift, becoming distinctly different from the facade he had held up until that point.

The old man raised his eyebrows and stared at the oni mask-wearing Abel with clear surprise. Abel, on the other hand, had risen from his chair, standing there majestically.

Subaru: “The Flame, of the Yang Sword…”

What that meant, Subaru did not know for certain.

However, it was true that for Olbart, the shock was such that it made it possible to see through to the other side, breaking through the ostensible emotions that he had put up to this point.

Based on the conversation, it was some sort of secret that protected the Emperor of Vollachia, and it was because of this that Olbart’s ambition had not come to fruition thus far.

A method to remove those fetters and overcome them, that was what Abel had claimed.

Olbart: "—. I thought all ya did was hide yer face and not care for the elderly, who the hell are ya? Ya shouldn't joke 'round 'bout such things."

Abel: "Is your belief really that someone who weaves sophistry and jokes in a place like this can raise a rebellion against this mighty Empire? If so, they would have to be either a madman bereft of sanity, or a great man with a lot of nerve."

Olbart: "You're neither of those things, are ya?"

Abel: "Naturally."

Consisely, Abel responded to Olbart's question.

Whether it was serious or just sophistry, Subaru could not decide. Or perhaps the man named Abel was the real deal, a madman, a great man, or all of those simultaneously.

Olbart: "…"

In reaction to Abel's reply, Olbart fell silent for a moment.

He raised his bushy eyebrows and brought his now utterly cold cup of tea to his lips. Then, once he gently placed the empty teacup on the desk beside him,

Olbart: "I believe you were talking about the bell of Fire Time."

Subaru: "Huh?"

With that sudden question, Subaru let out a stupid-sounding voice.

However, the one to reply immediately with "That's right~" and a nod was Medium. Her body now smaller, she pointed out the window, indicating the majesty of the Crimson Lapis Castle,

Medium: "Yorna-chan's calling us, so we'll be in trouble if we stay small."

Olbart: "Yorna-chan! Kakakakka! You've got real balls, lass."

Medium: “—?”

He tilted his head, amazed by Medium’s boldness in addressing Yorna with “chan”.

At the same time, Olbart did the same, now calmed down, gazing towards the Crimson Lapis Castle, pointed to by Medium, as he muttered “Right”,

Olbart: “Putting aside the topic of whether I’m aimin’ for His Excellency’s life or not, I sure am curious ‘bout how ta get past the Yang Sword that protects the Emperor of Vollachia.”

Subaru: “—Hk! If that’s the case…”

Olbart: “Oh, com’on, it’s too early ta tell. I’m the one who got yer hopes up, but I got a lotta things on my mind. —So, why don’t we play a game?”

Subaru: “…A game?”

Olbart: “Yes, a game. Ya like that, don’t’cha? Boy.”

Thrusting his finger right in front of Subaru’s nose as the latter leaned forward, Olbart so declared.

As his eyes had been wholly unable to fellow that movement, Subaru went stiff, stuck in place.

Olbart presented some kind of condition, or a “game”, as he called it as a preface.

Subaru was not sure if this was the way he wanted to avoid complete annihilation and improve this stagnant situation, but—

Subaru: “What if I said no?”

Olbart: “Then ya won’t be able to get anythin’ ya want.”

Subaru: “…”

Olbart: “By the way, since ya folks got what’cha think I want, the shinobi's techniques'll be comin' down on ya folks without relent."

As if it were an obvious answer, Olbart made that ruthless announcement.

The old man was smiling; the sight of the dark emotions stirring in the depths of his pale, cloudy eyes brought chills.

He may be having a peaceful and harmonious conversation on the surface, but under it, he was concealing a shinobi style of mercilessly reaping others' lives.

Abel: "What shall the game be?"

Avoiding a bout with Olbart had been made impossible once he presented his conditions. Abel had sensed the same thing, and made his question in Subaru's stead, the latter unable to open his mouth.

Olbart nodded his head to that appeal, and said, "Right",

Olbart: "We don't have much time before the fox girl calls ya, and I've been told not ta mess with'cha folks, so I'm in a bit of a pickle… Oh, that one's perfect."

Subaru: "Perfect for who, Olbart-san? For us?"

Olbart: "For both of us, me and ya."

With a toothy grin at Subaru's drawn-out question, Olbart showed his hands.

Then turning to Subaru and the others bracing themselves, he spoke,

Olbart: "—Tag."

Everyone: "…"

Olbart: "I'm used ta playin' it with the young peeps from my village. Easy ta understand, isn't it?"

Chapter 43:
Hidden Behind Your Eyelids

1

—That proposal spun by the hoarse voice greatly befuddled Subaru and the others.

Everyone: "…"

The "infantilization" that had assailed Subaru's group, and its mastermind, Olbart Dunkelkenn.

Subaru and the others, who sought to negotiate with Olbart in order to get him to release his infantilization off them, were presented a condition that was befitting of the old man—no, befitting of the monstrous old man who was toying with their bodies and minds alike; a strange condition, which would lead one's heart astray upon being heard.

After all—

Subaru: "Playing, tag…?"

Subaru, who had been dreading what kind of unreasonable request was going to be posed, ruminated on the words he had just been told.

At the sound of Subaru's voice, Olbart, his hands up in the air, frowned quizzically.

Olbart: "What's with the question mark? You're not gonna tell me ya dunno how ta play tag, are ya?"

Subaru: "Of course I know what it is. It's just that, it's not a word that should come up in this situation."

No matter how it was framed, it was merely a child's game of "tag".

It was hard to imagine that there was another meaning to it.

Although, since it would be the kind of game of tag played in a shinobi village, there was a good chance that it would have a unique set of rules.

For example, something like—

Subaru: "“Killin’ isn’t against the rules while playin’, tho’", something like that."

Olbart: "Kakakakka! Of course not. If that kinda nonsense were popular, the shinobi’d be extinct in no time flat. And that by my hands, with me bein’ their leader. That’d be bad, wouldn’t it?"

Although Olbart denied Subaru’s concerns, Subaru believed him to be a man willing to stain his own hands with the blood of his own people if necessary, taking into account his violent behavior and the things he had said and done so far.

To be honest, he would not have been that surprised if that shinobi village of his had already been destroyed.

Abel: "—That tag thing, how does it function?"

Rather than Subaru, who was burning with suspicion, it was Abel who urged him to go ahead.

His cheeks twisting into a smile, Olbart let out an "Oh",

Olbart: "You seem ta be more enthusiastic than I’d expected, masked young’un."

Abel: "Foolishness. We have already passed the point of not getting into this game, as soon as we divulged that we possess the information you covet."

Olbart: "Kakakakka! Well, guess you’re right."

Opening his mouth so wide that it looked like his jaw was about to come off, Olbart gave a hearty laugh without reservations.

In fact, Abel’s point was correct. Olbart’s idea was vicious. Regardless of whether he won or lost this game of tag, Olbart would obtain the information he desired.

The purpose of this game of tag was to allow them to choose how they wished to give up that information, whether after negotiations, or after torture.

Olbart: “So, there’s nothin’ really special about how “tag” works. One side runs away, and the other side catches the other… Oh, it’d be better if I were the one runnin’ away. Ya know, since chasin’ a large group of people ‘round’s too much for an ol’ man’s stamina.”

Medium: “So, if we catch Gramps running away, we win? That’s easy to understand.”

Taritta: “It’s easy to understand, but…”

To Olbart’s explanation of the rules, Medium reacted optimistically, and Taritta pessimistically.

Subaru’s opinion was also leaning more towards Taritta’s. Indeed, the rules were simple and there was no room for uncertainty to interfere. —In other words, it was all up to one’s ability.

And on the topic of ability, the total sum of the ability of Subaru’s group was nowhere near that of Olbart’s.

Olbart: “Well, might be hard with all the lil’ ones. Then we can loosen the conditions a tad.”

Taritta: “And the person who did it, doesn’t even feel guilty…!”

Olbart: “Don’t get so upset, ya know. If yer finger comes off the bowstring, I’ll have a good reason ta defend myself, and it’ll all become a lot easier.”

Taritta: “…”

As Olbart glanced at the faces in the room and shrugged his shoulders, Taritta clacked her molars together.

It was as the monstrous old man had pointed out; Taritta’s bow still remained trained on Olbart. However, the person in question, Olbart, ignored it with a straight face, and rather used it as a bargaining chip.

One could only imagine the mental turmoil Taritta was feeling. But the priority right now was—

Subaru: “What do you mean, loosen the conditions?”

Olbart: “Talkin’ ‘bout the way we’ll be playin’ tag, here. How ‘bout, ya don’t have ta catch me, but instead, if ya find me, ya win. But you’d have to do it thrice.”

Subaru: “Thrice…”

Olbart: “I’ll hide thrice. Ya folks’re gonna have ta try and find me three times. If ya can’t, ya lose. In this case, it’s no game of tag, it’s a game of seek… which sounds kinda weird.”

“It don’t sound quite right”, said Olbart, cocking his head in puzzlement.

Taking in the old man’s suggestion, the words that came from within Subaru, were—

Subaru: “—Hide-and-seek?”

Olbart: “Oh yeah, that’s a good name. We’ll just use that.”

With a snap of his fingers, Olbart clicked at the sound of “hide-and-seek”.

As he did so, Olbart held up one finger on each of his outstretched hands, and flashed them to the left and right on the spot for all to see.

Olbart: “In tag, ya only gotta catch me once. In hide-and-seek, ya gotta find me thrice. —I don’t think I need ta tell ya which one you’ve got a better chance of winnin’, do I?”

Once Olbart posed that question, shutting one eye, Subaru let out a gasp.

Olbart was right, this was a question that required no further thought. —Given Olbart's ability as someone transcendental, something Subaru was already aware of, there was no reason for them to opt for a game of tag.

There shouldn't, yet—

Al: "Ain't that so kind of you. Can't help but wonder if there's more to it, since you went to the trouble of suggesting a method that'd give us a better chance of winning."

With Olbart attempting to pass on the odds of victory to them, Al snapped at him.

As a substitute for the helmet he had taken off, Al now had a cloth wrapped around his face. His voice, now high in pitch as he had become younger, was a bit muffled through the cloth, albeit not to the point that it was difficult to understand.

Olbart, having listened to Al's words, shrugged his shoulders.

Olbart: "Oioi, don't make the mistake of thinkin' that I'm an ol' man who wants ta win at all costs, young'un. As far as I'm concerned, it'd be better if ya folks win, okay? I'm doin' this 'cause I wanna know if ya folks're worth listenin' to."

Al: "…"

Olbart: "As for me, I'm quite interested in what ya folks have ta say. But is it wrong for me ta be worried 'bout my retirement savings if I'm caught in some random lie and my loyalty to His Excellency's questioned? Ta prevent that from happenin', I'm usin' my sluggish brain ta come up with this plan."

Waving his left and right indexes, Olbart answered Al aloofly.

Hearing that answer did not dispel Al's suspicions. But it was a reasonable answer, and he seemed hesitant to pursue the matter further.

Subaru was not so easy-going as to believe that Olbart was being truthful.

However, there was too little time and not enough information to uncover what was within the mind of this accomplished shinobi mastermind.

During all of this, the time limit that Yorna had given was fast approaching, second-by-second.

With Olbart's two inconvenient choices—neither of which was the best option, the chances of coming up with a way to recover from this were close to zero.

To put it another way, Subaru had done everything in his power and still arrived at this situation.

Abel: "—If we are to take you up on your offer, we shall need to be clear about some matters."

Olbart: "Oh, whaddya mean?"

Abel: "You yourself have said so. If you wish to give us a higher chance at victory, you should not leave too much room for pointless exertions—What is desired from one another must be made clear."

Olbart: "—. Kakakakka."

Seemingly having reached the same conclusion earlier, Abel proceeded, one eye trained on Olbart.

Clarification of the rules of the game—what laid behind the demand for clarification was clear. It served as a sign that the decision was to accept the game, and its content.

Abel nodded, staring back at Olbart, who gave a low chuckle, his eyes bright and blazing.

And then finally—

Abel: "—Hide-and-seek it is."

2

—Following that, there were three major agreements made between the two sides.

The first commitment was, “do no harm to each other”.

Olbart was capable of murdering everyone if he wished so, to begin with. What discouraged him from doing so were the false Emperor’s orders and his wariness towards Yorna.

But this assurance was essential, because he would break this ban if the situation warranted it.

The second was, “limit the places of hiding to the city’s boundaries”.

If they were to believe in the pretense of leaving the odds in their favor, limiting the area was also essential to maintain fairness. Of course, even if it were limited to the city, the play area was quite large.

However, the conditions that Subaru had made him accept should do the job in this regard.

The third was, “clarify the conditions for victory”.

They had opted to play hide-and-seek because they believed that meant a better chance of winning. Then, no one would be able to say that it would be wrong to pursue victory.

So—

Subaru: “I know the odds are different for us in tag compared to hide-and-seek, but why three times? Don’t be stingy, can’t we only do this once?”

Olbart: “Kakakakka! That’s a tad greedy, young man. Tell ya what. If it happens once, it’s prolly a fluke. But if it happens thrice, it’s skill.”

Subaru: “Some people think luck’s part of skill, you know?”

Olbart: “Hate to tell ya, but I don’t believe in luck. I mean, that’s what most of the Empire’s people believe. Ya say some darned things, don't'cha?"

It was an unavoidable school of thought, typical of an empire based on the supremacy of merit.

There was no such thing as luck or misfortune, and everything was the result of one's own abilities. This attitude was seemingly suffocating for those unable to live without a refuge.

For example, the Subaru of his days as a truant had no place in the Empire.

Olbart: "In addition, why not do it thrice 'cause there are three among ya who've been shrunken? Sounds reasonable for a technicality I just came up with on the spot."

Abel: "Then, every time we find you, you shall undo the technique on one person?"

Olbart: "Oh, and now you're tryin' ta take advantage of me. Well, let's just forget that technicality."

Waving his hands in the air, Olbart refused to confirm Abel's statement.

Anyhow, with that matter settled, there was presumably nothing else left that required closer examination.

That meant—

Olbart: "Well, let's play."

Subaru: "Olbart-san, just double-checking a small detail… No hiding where we can't physically get to. There's nothing we can do if you're hiding in the middle of nowhere."

Olbart: "You're a real stickler for detail, ya know that? —Well, I would've done it if ya hadn't said that."

Subaru: "…"

Olbart: "Tell ya what, I was serious when I said I don't need ta win at all costs, ya know? Don't forget tho', this is yer test."

In other words, he was looking at them for their adroitness, shrewdness and intelligence too.

Olbart appeared to be generous and easy-going, but he was severe when it came to cutting someone off. Were he to deem someone unworthy of his attention, he would rip their vitals out without mercy.

Even now, if Subaru had not butted in, he would have done so in earnest.

But—

Olbart: "—I didn't think the masked young'un would've overlooked that."

Indicating Abel by cocking his chin, Olbart displayed him a cunning smile that did not hide his elderly age.

Despite this annoyance, Subaru signaled Abel and Al with his eyes, and once he made sure of their assent, he prepared himself to throw down the gauntlet.

Subaru: "If we win, I'll have you put us back to normal."

Olbart: "If I win, you'll have ta wait ten years ta get back ta normal. Well, if His Excellency and the foxgirl get any second thoughts, I'll go ask ya for yer secrets my own way."

That would be, a shinobi technique passed down in his shinobi village—Subaru felt a surge of fear as he regarded Olbart's dark eyes, feeling that the method the old man had suggested could lead to torture.

Then, before the old man headed to his first hiding place, he would ask a question,

Subaru: "—So what's the first hint?"

It was a question that would be dismissed as ridiculous if this were a serious game.

However, Olbart did not laugh at this. Because this was a condition for victory that Subaru had forced Olbart to accept for their game of hide-and-seek.

Now that Subaru had been “infantilized”, Olbart wanted to evaluate them not in terms of their fighting prowess or physical abilities, but in terms of their mindset and creativity, as mentioned before.

To put it simply, it was none other than the natural feeling called “not wanting to deal with idiots”.

Olbart: “First of all, a tryout… Near this inn, I’m gonna hide “behind the eyelids”.”

Subaru: “—Behind, the eyelids.”

Olbart: “Well, hang in there, young man. Let this ol’ man have some fun in what’s left of his short life, at least.”

With a fluttering wave of his hand, Olbart turned his back to Subaru and the others. —At that moment, Subaru felt the tension in the room rise as the man walked away leisurely.

Everyone: “…”

Who among them had not wished that they could pounce on Olbart and solve the problems of the “hide-and-seek” and the “infantilization” at once, in that very moment?

But nobody carried out that reckless act. And it was the right thing to do.

Olbart: “Kakakakka.”

Just before the door closed, Olbart laughed because he knew what Subaru’s hesitation was about.

His behavior lived up to the title of “Vicious Old Man”, his shrill laugh included, right to the end.

And so, once Olbart exited the room, and it was once again occupied only by Subaru and his allies—

Abel: “Taritta, lower your bow. There is no one to point it at anymore.”

Taritta: “…Okay.”

After the enemy had left the room, Abel had Taritta lower her bow.

Taritta’s face, as she followed the instructions, was filled with shame. Naturally so. Olbart had kept a cool face as she pointed her bow at him.

As one of the Shudraq—No, as someone who had already been entrusted with the role of being the next Chieftain, for Taritta, the old man’s attitude was a mockery of the power of the Shudraqians.

Subaru had allowed Olbart to underestimate the People of Shudraq.

This too, was due to his own lack of strength.

Originally, Taritta had accompanied Subaru to the Demon City to seek a pillar of support for her resolve to take over as Chieftain.

—This would only have the opposite effect, rather than her gaining the needed confidence.

Al: “Are you seriously gonna play along with that old man’s games, bro?”

And so, Al spoke up towards Subaru, who could not find any words to say to Taritta.

Al was wearing a face covering that did not quite fit, and his tone was filled with frustration and disapproval at this interaction with Olbart. He always had the impression of accepting everything rather easily, and of letting things go, so it was surprising to see him react that way.

However, since Olbart keeps outmaneuvering them, it was understandable as to why he would be frustrated.

Subaru: "I don't feel good about being put through the wringer like that either. But we left some possibilities open at the last minute, right?"

Al: "Possibilities, you mean…"

Medium: "There's a chance our original bodies can be restored, right? Subaru-chin."

Medium was sitting on the floor, holding Louis down as she struggled. She was restraining Louis, the latter's size now almost the same as hers, with her skills, not her arm strength.

Perhaps it was a skill she had developed at the orphanage where she had grown up.

As she calmed Louis, Subaru looked into her blue eyes and nodded, "Yes",

Subaru: "If we got him in a bad mood, our bodies would stay small… And that isn't something we can afford considering future plans, and our current course. It's a must that we return to normal."

Al: "…Well, that's exactly what we could've done, we could've surrounded the old man and beaten him."

Subaru: "Don't be stupid. The only reason we didn't die is because Olbart-san was intending to follow the Emperor's orders. We wouldn't be able to do anything about it if he felt like it."

Al: "—. You say that like you've seen it before."

Looking away from Subaru, Al sounded like he wanted to say that that should be impossible.

Al's remark was not off the mark, since Subaru's insight was because of a cheat transcending worlds. He had indeed seen it with his own eyes.

Events that he had thought to be impossible had happened, even if he wished not to admit it.

Nevertheless—

Al: “…”

Averting his gaze, Al did not argue further.

Due to the previous day’s visit to the castle keep, Al had also grasped a part of Olbart’s strength. Naturally, he would know that the old man had not been serious back then, and that the odds of victory would be slim were he to demonstrate his true ability.

That was why Al had made the decision to keep watching Olbart’s back as he left.

Subaru: “Whatever, we don’t have much time. If we’re going to meet with Yorna, I need time to do my makeup. I need thirty minutes for everything, so… the grace period’s a little over two hours.”

Taritta: “Is it really necessary to wear women’s clothes…”

Subaru: “It is, because the three of us from yesterday are being requested, too. And…”

As he said this, Subaru looked at Abel, who was silent.

As long as he did not interfere, Subaru guessed that he had the same basic policy as himself. Subaru did not believe he was getting lost in the emotions of having gone through a deadly situation.

Or maybe—

Subaru: “Shocked that Olbart-san’s trying to kill the Emperor, huh?”

Abel: “Nonsense. I knew he had ambitions beyond his size. Albeit, I did not think it would be the Emperor’s head. I thought there was nothing to be gained by such an attempt. But what he really seeks is a final sense of accomplishment and the posthumous notoriety.”

Abel shrugged his thin shoulders as if to say he couldn’t fully grasp it.

Regardless of even having been forced out of his position as Emperor and being driven into the most unfavorable situation, Abel never knew when to give up.

From his point of view, it was incomprehensible to give up his own life and seek posthumous fame, as it would be best for him to return to the throne alive.

On this point, Subaru agreed with him, though it was a very mixed bag of feelings. He did not want to be praised after death.

Subaru wished to be forgotten by his remaining loved ones after he passed away.

It was in Subaru's nature that he would rather be made a memory of and forgotten about in the moment of his death, than for everyone to grieve or suffer for it.

However, he had no intent to share that feeling with Abel.

Subaru: "…But Olbart-san's a bit of an outcast, isn't he? He's got all that ambition, but he doesn't even realize who you are in front of him."

Therefore, Subaru deceptively changed the subject.

But as soon as he heard that, however, Abel's eyes showed a suspicion that was clearly visible even through the oni mask.

Abel: "—. What in the world are you talking about?"

Subaru: "Huh?"

Abel: "I am wearing this mask. Hence why Olbart's reaction is justified."

Tracing the oni mask's cheek with his finger, Abel made that declaration nonchalantly.

Subaru raised an eyebrow at his words, his expression showing that he did not understand. Promptly, Abel's puzzlement turned into disappointment visible through his oni mask.

With that look in his eyes, Abel sighed deeply, and,

Abel: "This mask has the effect of distorting the perceptions of others. It is an effect that conceals the true identity of the wearer."

Subaru: "—! Is that really "cognitive disruption"? But that mask was originally supposed to be from the Shudraqian's village…"

Taritta: "Yes yes, that's right. It's said that in the past, when the Emperor and Shudraq formed friendly ties, the Emperor used it to visit the Jungle without being recognized."

Subaru: "That mask has actual history…?"

With the revelation of that surprising fact, Subaru's mouth was left agape. To that shocked Subaru, Abel's disappointment still lasted,

Abel: "You, did you really believe that I have been wearing this mask all this time for show, or due to madness?"

Subaru: "…"

Abel: "At last, your stupidity has reached its pinnacle. In the first place, there is plenty good reason to conceal my face. I believe we did not come to the Demon City for tourism."

Subaru: "You didn't have to say it like that, you could have just explained that at the start…!"

Certainly, it was Subaru's fault for thinking it was part of Abel's odd behavior and not asking anything, but Abel was also at fault for thinking it would be understood without explaining anything.

Thanks to that, he had to unnecessarily embarrass himself, and to worry himself without it being needed.

Anyway, he was now aware of the mechanism as to why Olbart had not realized Abel's true identity.

Abel had no intention of covering up his pompous speech and arrogant attitude, so Subaru's fears that he would reveal himself were unfounded.

Medium: “Heyhey, Al-chin, Al-chin. That’s what Abel-chin’s reason is, but is there a reason why Al-chin’s hiding his face?”

Al: “In my case, I have a complex about my facial scars… But let’s not talk about me. Hide-and-seek’s already begun. We gotta get a move on.”

As he said this, Al pointed out the window to the streets of the Demon City.

Chaosflame was one of the largest cities in the Empire, amounting to probably five times the size of the Fortress City of Guaral.

To find the shinobi head honcho hidden among all that was no easy task.

Find him three times, in just two hours and with only six people.

Al: “I know he said he was gonna do a tryout first, but there are a lotta possible hiding places just around the inn, man. Bro, do you or Abel-chan have some kind of plan?”

Subaru: “It’s not much of a plan, but…”

At least, there were some things Subaru had thought of that he wanted to try.

A “hide-and-seek” tryout—unsurprisingly, he’d had the same idea Olbart did. An idea that should be tried at least once to gauge the mindset of their opponent, the old man.

Just as Subaru thought that, Abel crossed his arms and nodded, “Of course”,

Abel: “There are a few possible moves. Although, my idea is probably different from that of the clown here.”

Subaru: “You’re demoting me from a military strategist to clown, you’re too uptight about that mask thing from earlier… No, it’s not like I cared about being your military strategist or anything.”

Subaru could only curve his lips in a snarl at the sound of Abel’s cold voice. It was as if the fact that Subaru had treated the oni mask's disguise as an oddity was really upsetting the latter.

Anyway, throughout that discussion here, time was being wasted.

Subaru: “I've got to get moving before I forget what having long limbs felt like.”

Al: “Well, dunno if there was ever a time when me and you had long legs, bro…”

Subaru: “I meant compared to the current situation.”

The group pushed aside Al as he teased that they were all short-legged, and prepared the minimum amount of gear.

Al carried his Blue Dragon Sword in its sheath on his back, Medium carried only one of her twin swords on her hip. For now, Subaru would also carry his whip. However, he was not confident he could handle it in all honesty.

All that was left was Abel and Taritta, who were in top condition, plus—

???: “Aa, uu!”

Medium: “Oh, Louis-chan, you're so motivated! Alright, let's work hard and find Gramps!”

Louis: “Uu!”

Medium raised a small fist at the sound of Louis's voice, not wanting to leave her behind.

In the end, Louis was likely to slow everyone down. Olbart had been forbidden to change his hiding place in the meantime, so they would like to believe that, even if he sensed the approach of the noisy Louis, he probably would not do anything of the sort.

Al: “Isn't it possible that he'll change his hiding places from time to time and claim that he's been hiding in one place the whole time?”

Abel: “I already corrected you on that, but Olbart’s goal is not his own victory. The reason he is performing such a roundabout move is to measure our capabilities through this game.”

Al: “Measuring our capabilities? That means…”

Abel: “He wishes to know if I am capable of making such a big claim to the Emperor’s throne.”

Abel made it clear to Al, who doubted Olbart’s true intentions.

Subaru also saw no falsehood there. It was hard to believe Olbart’s own words, but since his goal was the Emperor’s life, being able to believe the aim of Subaru’s group, and the information in their hands being the real deal would be convenient.

Olbart wanted to be convinced by their party’s demonstration of capabilities.

And for that reason—

Subaru: “I didn’t ask before, but what was that about the Flame of the Yang Sword…?”

Abel: “I am afraid I do not have the leisure to give a lengthy lecture on the history of the Emperors of Vollachia. Your shallow wisdom notwithstanding, my plan is not something that can be set in motion in a room at an inn.”

Subaru: “Tch, okay.”

Subaru clucked his tongue at this manner of saying that he did not want to reveal anything.

Nevertheless, if the exchange with Olbart were indeed true, it seemed to him that the Emperor of Vollachia, or rather Abel, had some kind of protection. As long as he did, no harm would befall him.

Subaru: “On second thought…”

So far, Subaru had never seen Abel lose his life with his own eyes.

Since arriving in the Vollachian Empire, Subaru's life had been threatened quite frequently, having actually lost his life and Returned by Death. However, Abel's death was an event that had never occurred. —Although Subaru had been in situations which seemed like they should have resulted in Abel's death.

When Olbart revealed his true nature the very previous loop, or when Todd had the Buddheim Jungle burnt down, Shudraqian village included, the life of the imprisoned Abel should have been lost.

But that was only because of the circumstances, not because Subaru had directly confirmed his death. —So, he wanted to confirm one thing.

Subaru: "That thing called the Flame of the Yang Sword, is it still protecting you?"

Abel: "How insistent. Will you perhaps turn against me as well, if you do not hear it?"

Subaru: "…There's no merit in me doing that."

His cheeks contorting due to that mocking remark, Subaru gave up the pursuit this time.

Then, Subaru looked around at the faces of his companions as they prepared to leave the inn,

Subaru: "Unexpectedly, we have to play a game. But if the condition is that we just need to find a person, then we should be able to compete even in a situation where half of our members have shrunk. In fact, since it's a game of hide-and-seek, that we've returned to our childlike minds and bodies might even be better for us in this game."

Taritta: "Wh-What's the logic behind that…?"

Abel: "Ignore him. It is nonsense, meaningless to listen to."

In fact, that was right, since it was nothing more than banter, but he just expressed his regret with a wrinkle between his eyebrows.

After doing that, Subaru shouted “Anyway!”, louder than he should have.

Subaru: “I want everyone to pay maximum attention to their surroundings. —Ok then, let’s go!”

Medium: “Oh!”

Louis: “Auu!”

Al: “…You’re really into this, bro.”

The enthusiastic Subaru was dressed in the clothes he had on hand, his figure looking quite unsightly. Al sighed as Medium and Louis followed Subaru’s lead, pumping their fists in the air.

On the other hand, Taritta, who had become the strongest fighter, had nervousness and anxiety in her eyes, while Abel was as irreverent as ever, with no expression behind his oni mask and no thing in his hands.

All of their members left the inn together.

First item of order, was to locate Olbart’s first hiding place. Full of eagerness, Subaru slammed the door with a loud bang and stepped out with great vigor—

Subaru: “—Then, we’ll return right away.”

Al: “Huh?”

With a hard step, he kicked the floor directly with his foot, and Subaru’s body made a half-turn. Al let out a dumb-sounding voice upon seeing the other side of door he had just gone out of.

With this in mind, Subaru pushed open the door of the room with force.

Then Subaru pointed into the room from which he and the others had just left—

Subaru: “—Found yooou∼, Olbart-san.”

???: “Kakakakka! Oioi, com’on, don’t’cha have a bad personality, for ya ta notice this right away? I’m blushin’ here, bein’ spotted this right outta the blue, it’s so embarrassin’!”

And Olbart, who had snuck into the room in Subaru and the others’ stead, laughed heartily at Subaru’s first declaration, as the latter pointed at himself.

3

Al: “Seriously, bro…!”

Al was surprised to see Olbart in the room, who was about to refill his cup with cold tea.

Much to his surprise, Medium and Louis followed suit, with an “Oh, it’s Gramps!” and an “Aa!”, respectively. Taritta widened her eyes, having peeked into the room as well.

Delayed by those reactions, Abel narrowed his eyes once Olbart’s figure finally came into view.

Abel: ““Behind the eyelids”, I see.”

He looked down at Subaru’s young profile and muttered.

Abel: “Did you know from the start that this was the place?”

Subaru: “The expression “behind the eyelids” and the surroundings of the inn made this the first place I thought of. The type of person who offers you this kind of game’s definitely going to try to do this at least once.”

A distant, nostalgic memory came to Subaru’s mind with that answer—the memory of his first meeting with Beatrice, at the old Roswaal Mansion.

Beatrice had attempted to have Subaru endlessly walk in the same space by creating a looping corridor using her magical ability. Unfortunately for Beatrice, Subaru had seen through her scheme at a glance and quickly figured out that the starting point was also the goal.

Now that Subaru thought about it, he was sorry that he had not gone along with the cute Beatrice’s ruse. But his opponent now was not the mischievous Beatrice, he was a monstrous old man, now wasn’t the time for holding back.

Therefore, he would distort his young face into a big grin and boast of his victory mercilessly.

Subaru: “Honestly, I saw right through you, Vicious Old Man.”

Olbart: “Oioi, don’t kick me while I’m down. This is an embarrassment I can’t let the young people of my village see at all. Why don’t’cha call yerself the Vicious Lil’ Boy?”

Subaru: “I’ll pass on that. I haven’t done anything to be called vicious, after all.”

Olbart: “Well, that’s just bein’ humble. —Ya even went ta the trouble of speakin’ in a loud voice for me ta hear as ya left the inn. It was some great actin’.”

Subaru scratched his cheek at Olbart, who raised one eyebrow and sneered at him.

As expected, his intentions could be seen through after such an exaggerated act. However, even if he had been able to notice Subaru’s true intentions, Olbart had no way to change his hiding place.

That was because this game was played by determining the hiding place they used first, and then giving clues accordingly.

Subaru: “I know it’s really early in the first round to be discovered, but you’re going to count it as one, right? You’re not going to be in a bad mood just because I refused to take on the name “Vicious”, are you?”

He wanted to avoid being dismissed “because these were anticlimactic results”, or something like that.

To Subaru’s request for confirmation born out of concern, Olbart closed one eye and said, “Of course”,

Olbart: “My fault that the results were brought in so quickly. It’s a bit unreasonable ta expect ya folks ta mop up my mess. Twice more, as agreed.”

Medium: “Oh~! You did it, Subaru-chin! We got the first win in about ten seconds!”

Subaru: “Yeah, it’s good news.”

With Medium to his side overjoyed, Subaru patted his chest in relief.

For now, this concluded the first riddle from Olbart—indeed, it was a trial of sorts, borrowing the name “hide-and-seek”. It could be said that they were being asked to solve a problem on a test.

They were being tested to see if they were worthy of Olbart’s attention.

Subaru: “All of it is because of Beako’s…”

Help, he was about to say, as Subaru attempted to picture the adorable girl in his mind.

However, for a moment, that thought was bleached white, coming to a full stop.

Subaru: “…”

A feeling of slight discomfort and a slight tugging created a ripple in his heart.

Before he could pursue a definitive answer to what it was—

Olbart: “Well, I gotta redeem myself, so I’ll hurry ta the second hidin’ place.”

Subaru: “Oh, yeah, you’re right. So, what’s the next hint?”

Olbart: “Hmm… The next hidin’ place’s gonna be somethin’ like…”

Folding his hands behind his back, Olbart leaned his head and body in thought. However, he did not spend much time pondering, and so the old man contorted his cheeks.

Olbart: “…”An abyss with a great view”, ya might say.”

Al: “An abyss…”

Taritta: “With a great view?”

The words of Taritta and Al completed each other, as they ruminated on the bizarre hint left regarding the next hiding place.

But Olbart had no intention of leaving any further hints.

Olbart: “Ya were better than expected the first time ‘round, but the real game’s ‘bout ta begin.”

The old man smiled, his white teeth in full view, and then leapt backwards nimbly and gallantly. With that, Olbart opened the room’s window and put his foot on the windowsill without a care in the world.

Then, right before Subaru and the others looking on with eyes open wide, he jumped outside.

Olbart: “Next time, I’ll be sure ta hide a lil’ better!”

Al: “Wait, old man…! Shit, he’s gone!”

With haste and a yell, Al rushed to the window and looked around outside as he held his covered head.

In fact, it would be difficult to catch Olbart when he was dedicated to escape. His overwhelming ability to run away convinced Subaru that changing the game from “tag” to “hide-and-seek” had been the right call.

Anyway—

Taritta: “Subaru, that man’s next hiding place…”

Medium: “Hmhm, Subaru-chin, did you understand? Do you know what it is?”

Subaru: “Uhh… That’s…”

Taritta and Medium turned to look at him expectantly, yet Subaru was at a loss for words.

As for the second hiding place's hint, "an abyss with a great view", Subaru honestly found no clue that could lead to an answer.

Subaru: "Sorry. Can't think of anything right away. It's not like I can read minds or anything, I just can read the situation."

Medium: "I see~, I'm sorry! We can't keep just relying on you! We'll figure it out together!"

Taritta: "Yes, you're right. I'm not very good at using my head, but I'll keep thinking about it."

Subaru bowed due to his uselessness, to which Medium and Taritta responded.

The initial hiding place could also be called the starting point, a typical development of sorts that had been realized.

Even if that had been off the mark, they could have easily tried it out in part because it was a location so close that there was almost no time loss. However, from here on—

Subaru: "It's simply going to be a race against time."

Al: "—. Bro also doesn't have an idea of where he's gonna hide next. Well, it isn't anything surprising though."

Subaru: "That's right… Maybe I can't be depended on, but it's depressing to be told that in such a clear way."

At the start of the real game of "hide-and-seek", his allies stabbed him in the back.

Of course, Subaru took that as a fair assessment, but he really wished he would have been a bit less direct. Even close friends have some sense of consideration.

However, in response to Subaru's words, Al waved his hand and said, "Oh, that's not it", Al: “Well it isn’t unreasonable for you to not get it, bro. After all, I’m here with you.”

Subaru: “Hmm? I really don’t know what you’re talking about. Is it something like, my IQ goes down when you’re around, Al? What kind of system is that?”

Al: “That ain’t what I’m talking about, but it’s hard to explain… right?”

Subaru: “Even if you ask me to agree, I still won’t get it.”

As he spoke, Al’s way of speaking, holding neither confidence nor certainty, was curious.

He put Al aside, who was tilting his head, as he did not see how this topic could go any further in a constructive direction. The highest priority right now, was to figure out the “abyss with a great view” clue Olbart had left them with.

Subaru: ““Behind the eyelids” was the room where we started. “An abyss with a great view”, another way to phrase it would be…”

Taritta: ““With a great view” means it’s probably considered a high place, no?”

Medium: “But an abyss is a hole, right? If it’s a hole, wouldn’t it be in the ground?”

Alternatively, it was possible that there was a spot in Chaosflame described as such.

In any case, it was unlikely that they would be able to reach the answer with the amount of information they could get from their room at the inn. At last, they would have to go into the city.

Al: “…I can’t get my head around this. Which reminds me, what’s Abel-chan’s plan?”

Abel: “It is not something that can proceed here, as I have told you. It would be convenient to have as many people as possible… And in addition to that, a place where outsiders come and go.”

Al: “You mean a place where strangers come and go? I wonder where in this city…”

The implementation of Abel’s plan caused Al to tilt his head.

The true meaning behind the idea of looking for a place where outsiders entered and exited was unknown to Subaru, but there was a good chance that Abel would not tell him even if he asked him to until they actually reached the execution phase. It could not be called an act that benefited their opponent, but it was difficult to deal with.

Of course, he was a man who would even discard the cards in his hand without a second thought for the sake of winning.

Subaru: “If it’s a place with a lot of people coming and going, that should be… a place to drink.”

Taritta: “A tavern?”

Subaru: “Yeah, there. I think we should try to go there or somewhere similar.”

It was debatable whether it was more beneficial to search for Olbart without taking any detours or to help Abel’s plan come to fruition, but for now, it seemed like a good idea to prioritize Abel first.

With that in mind, Subaru and the others headed out of the inn with a renewed spirit.

Abel: “Attracting the attention of the public with this crowd of children is not ideal.”

Subaru: “Don’t complain because four-sixths of us are children. In the first place, you’re not one to talk about public perception because of that oni mask you’re wearing. Or maybe, the perception… Uhh, does the effect of the mask make it look like it has a different face?”

Abel: “The mask does not alter its appearance from an oni’s face, it merely hides my identity.”

Subaru: “Then you’ll definitely stand out…”

With a small shrug of his shoulders, Subaru sighed, parrying aside Abel’s misguided frustration.

After greeting the shopkeeper at the entrance of the inn and asking them about the locations of some taverns, they went into the street. With that, they all walked towards a tavern to accomplish Abel’s aim.

And suddenly, in the middle of it all,

Subaru: “Instead of having all of us going to the tavern, wouldn’t it be better if we split up? One group goes to look for Olbart-san, and the other goes to the tavern with Abel—”

It happened just as he was about to suggest that they split up.

Subaru: “—Huh?”

Suddenly, a scarlet light scattered at the edge of his field of vision, dazzling Subaru’s eyes.

And then—

4

???: “Oh yeah, that’s a good name. We’ll just use that.”

Subaru: “Ueh?”

An unexpected voice struck Subaru’s eardrums as he blinked, his eyes simmering from the vermilion light.

The sound and its suddenness made a silly voice leak out, and a giggle broke out right in front of Subaru. A low chuckle it was, causing Subaru’s eyes to widen at its sound.

???: “Kakakakka! What’s with the dumb voice? I was just complimentin’ ya on the good name.”

Subaru: “…Olbart, san?”

An old man stood in front of him, clearing his throat and shaking his thin shoulders as he laughed.

It had happened so suddenly that Subaru had to blink his eyes a few times, unable to understand it. Then, he swallowed his saliva, and said what he had to declare,

Subaru: “Oh, found you, Olbart-san.”

Olbart: “—? Why’s that? Ya already feelin’ like you’re playin’ the game?”

Subaru: “Huh…?”

He noticed a sense of incongruity upon taking that chance at the unexpected second discovery.

Olbart’s attitude as he tilted his head and spoke that, coupled most of all with the discomfort regarding the scene around him—he was supposed to be out in the streets of the Demon City, but Subaru was in a room somewhere else.

—No, not in some room.

Subaru: “…No way.”

Subaru was in a room at an inn. —The same lodgings they had just come out of.

And finally, there was the fact that Subaru was there, facing Olbart and talking to him.

Subaru: “…”

He had no choice but to accept that he had Returned by Death in contradiction to the rule that should have prevented that.

Chapter 44:
Shrinking Vision

1

—The incomprehensible situation overwhelmed Natsuki Subaru's small brain.

The situation was that shocking, it couldn't be said in any other way.

Without being aware of his death, Subaru had returned to the time of the rule bantering with Olbart—even if he did not want to admit it, he had to.

Subaru had lost his life, and had Returned by Death back to this moment.

Even so—

Subaru: "…It was in the middle of a game of hide-and-seek, in which death shouldn't happen."

Covering his mouth with his small palm, Subaru struggled desperately to recall what had happened.

The game of "hide-and-seek" with Olbart had begun, and, overcoming the monstrous old man's predisposition for wickedness, within the first room—there, he had succeeded in finding the shinobi hidden "behind their eyelids".

Going off that momentum, Subaru and the others had stepped out of the inn to identify the next hiding place of the mysterious old man. And then, suddenly, the world went dark.

The next thing he knew, he was back in this place.

Subaru: "…"

Abel: "—If we are to take up on your offer, we shall need to be clear about some matters.”

Olbart: “Oh, whaddya mean?”

Abel: “You yourself have said so. If you wish to give us a higher chance at victory, you should not leave too much room for pointless exertions—What is desired from one another must be made clear.”

Olbart: “—. Kakakakka.”

While Subaru was having those thoughts, the negotiations with Olbart continued on to the next step one their own.

The next step in the conversation between Abel and Olbart would be the selection of the game, and after that was the premise of the rules. In other words—

Abel: “—Hide-and-seek it is.”

And so, Abel once again declared that.

2

—After that, the terms of the “hide-and-seek” game were exchanged with Olbart.

It also ended up being exactly as Subaru knew it would be. No new conditions were added, and no necessary details were cut. Inevitably, it stayed the same.

Although—

Subaru: “Just to be completely sure, you’re only hiding, Olbart-san. You’re not going to sneak around and try to attack us…”

Olbart: “Oh, com’on now, you’re worryin’ too much, boy. Lemme tell ya, what I wanna test ya on’s yer quick thinkin’ and cleverness. If I wanted ta test yer strength, I could’ve done so yesterday at the castle tower.”

Subaru: “…”

Olbart's words had the intention to reassure him, but he could not accept them as honest ones.

As a matter of fact, there was no doubt that Subaru had lost his life and Returned by Death. And the most immediate threat to Subaru's group was none other than the one in front of them, Olbart.

Had he perhaps broken the rule that forbid him from interfering, and targeted Subaru and the others?

Olbart: "Good grief, you're suspectin' me plenty, aren't'cha?"

Al: "You're in no position to be trusted, old man. That's rather impertinent of you."

Olbart: "Kakakakka! That's a good point. We got along so well eight years ago, and now you're so cold."

Having sensed a strong sense of caution in Subaru's silence, Olbart shrugged. After that, he gave a toothy grin at Al's remark, followed up by a smug retort.

Naturally, Al seemed to be dissatisfied with the way Olbart was talking to him, and fell silent.

Anyhow—

Abel: "Olbart, this goes without saying, but there your hiding place is senseless if we cannot physically reach it. Do not attempt any of your petty tricks."

Olbart: "I gotcha, I gotcha. They're a wee bunch, aren't they? I wouldn't've done it even if ya hadn't told me."

Abel pointed out the same thing Subaru had in the previous loop. With Olbart's agreement on that, the start of the game was declared again.

In other words, the hint for the first hiding place would be presented.

Al: "So, where are you gonna hide first, old man?"

Olbart: “First of all, a tryout… Near this inn, I’m gonna hide “behind the eyelids”.”

For a moment, Subaru felt an unpleasant tension in his heart, but it ended up being unneeded.

He feared that Olbart would designate a hiding place different from last time’s, but that did not happen. After that, the flow of events was followed to a T, including the fact that Taritta and Al resisted the urge to pounce on Olbart, his dignified back turned to them. They could not do anything other than just seeing him off.

And so—

Al: “What’s up, bro? You’re looking a little pale.”

Taritta lowered her bow at Abel’s instruction, and in between studying her profile, Al called out to him. Those statements followed a slightly different flow compared to the previous loop.

Originally, he would have complained about the frustration of competing against Olbart, but this time he seemed to be concerned about Subaru’s complexion—Or rather, it seemed to be concerned about Subaru’s lack of talking.

That was only natural. Subaru himself was still confused and disoriented.

Since he himself was unable to recover from that sudden Return by Death and its psychological shock.

Subaru: “No, my bad. During that talk, I suddenly felt… really tired.”

Al: “Oioi, get a grip, please. Mine and Medium-chan’s abilities were halved because we were shrunken, but unlike ours, your strong points should still be intact despite being small, right bro?”

Subaru: “My strengths…”

Medium: “Of course! The great thing about Subaru-chin’s that he’s smart! Big bro’s amazing, but isn’t Subaru-chin amazing too? It’s all fine and dandy even if your boobies are small!”

Following Al’s encouragement, Medium also joined in with good spirits.

While holding Louis in her arms, she patted her chest, her own breasts now gone. Observing the state of those two, Subaru then let out a long sigh.

Those two people who had encouraged him were right.

There were almost no situations in which Subaru would be physically useful to begin with, regardless of whether he had been made smaller. Because of that, Subaru was the one least affected by having been made smaller.

This was not the time for Subaru to be dragging out his mental exhaustion on and on.

Subaru: “…I’ve told you already, don’t look at me like that. If you’re going to show off the full effect of the oni mask, that “cognitive disruption” feature alone should be enough.”

Abel: “You have regained some of your good judgment. But you have surprised me beyond my expectations. I took you as a fool on whom the effects of this mask had gone unnoticed for certain.”

Subaru: “…I wouldn’t have been surprised if you were just wearing the mask because of your eccentric behavior though.”

Encouraged by Al and Medium, Subaru raised his face and sent a retort straight back to Abel.

Abel, who had been patronizing him and regarded him as a useless man, saw that Subaru had regained the strength to raise his head, which seemingly made him refrain to use any further sarcasm.

The fact that he felt this was a concession led one to believe that Abel’s communication skills were not up to snuff, but there was no time to discuss it at this point.

Al: “So. I know he said he was gonna do a tryout first, but there are a lotta possible hiding places just around the inn, man. Bro, do you or Abel-chan have some kinda plan?”

With the purpose of moving the state of affairs along, Al turned his focus to Subaru and Abel.

As an answer to this, Subaru could present Olbart’s first hiding place—the very room they were talking in at the moment was where the old man would return to, in fact.

Given that the hint left by Olbart was the same, there was no need to worry about that having changed.

The problem was that after they found Olbart, they would have to go outside the inn.

Subaru: “It’s not a plan per say, but I can guess where “behind the eyelids” is referring to.”

Al: “Oh, seriously? That’s awesome, bro.”

Subaru: “…It’s just that there’s a good chance that another problem’s turned up besides this “behind the eyelids”.”

Some sort of threat had assailed Subaru—No, not just Subaru, it had affected their entire group. And it was necessary to share it with Al, Abel, and the others who were unaware of it.

However, Subaru himself had gotten so little information that he did not have many reliable ideas to share. If there was something could say with certainty, that would be—

Subaru: “The agreement we made with Olbart-san… that he would not interfere, is there any chance that he’d break it?”

Abel: “Oh? Oh? Are you trying to say that, since the beginning, he was planning on violating the preconditions?”

Subaru: “Yeah, I’m thinking it’s possible…”

Abel: “—No, that is impossible.”

Due to the fact that he had been attacked as soon as he left the inn, Subaru tried to draw the attention of his friends to Olbart. However, that was denied by a very adamant Abel.

Once Subaru's eyes widened at his reaction, Abel folded his thin arms, and,

Abel: "Olbart would have nothing to gain with such a deed. Henceforth, that is impossible."

Subaru: "B-but Olbart-san had even been thinking about killing the Emperor! Even you said you had not imagined that at all… If so!"

Abel: "What you speak of, is the fact that the notion of posthumous fame is something I do not possess. But I do comprehend that such a thing does exist. And that there are those who desire it. However, this and that are two different stories."

Being shot with a sharp gaze through the oni mask, Subaru felt like his internal organs had been paralyzed by fear.

It was not as if Abel was emitting a special energy, one sharper than before. In spite of this, the feeling of being targeted did not disappear, and Subaru's breathing was disturbed.

While Subaru was struggling with this feeling, Abel continued with "May I?".

Abel: "It is as you yourself have spotted, and as per the rebuttal to that masked clown, there is no reason for Olbart Dunkelkenn to harm us himself. If his target is the Emperor's head, then he shall desire the intelligence I possess desperately. There is no basis for any such hypothesis whatsoever."

Al: "Ah, I'm with Abel-chan, bro. The old man's been ordered by the Emperor to leave us alone. If he was gonna break that promise, whether he does it inside or outside of the inn doesn't matter. Right?"

Subaru: "Uhh, does it…?"

Al: "Bro?"

Subaru: “Oh! No, you’re right! Yeah, I think so too. That’s for sure.”

Abel and Al’s continued talk caused Subaru’s comprehension to fall behind for a few seconds.

However, once explained in a solid argument, it was something that Subaru could agree with.

Abel and the others were unaware of it, but Olbart had a history of killing Subaru and the others.

Nevertheless, Olbart’s act was one that was driven by a logical train of thought for him, so Subaru was able to agree with the general argument presented by them. In that place, the only thing that had gone wrong had been the timing.

With that as the basis—that Subaru and the others had been killed as soon as they had left the inn was certainly strange according to the game rules Olbart had agreed to.

According to Al, if Olbart intended to kill them no matter what, it would have been better to murder them before they even left the inn, so that it would not be seen. Maybe he had a desire to kill them in a public place, but that would not make sense either.

Perhaps, though, he thought Subaru’s group would be in for a more painful surprise were he to kill them once they obtained some peace of mind due to his intent to not kill them.

Subaru: “If that was the case, then he’d make more of an appearance, right?”

If Olbart was aiming to disrupt Subaru and the others’ moods because of the badness of his character, would not he want to see their disappointment and despair with his own eyes?

Aside from that, he could not think of any reason for Olbart to kill everyone outside the inn.

Meaning—

Subaru: “What’s this supposed to mean…?”

Medium: “Hey, hey, Subaru-chin, what are you worried about? Are you worried about going outside?”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Then, Medium peered into Subaru’s face, who had fallen silent in his haste to sort out the situation.

Right in front of him was a pair of round blue eyes, and Subaru involuntarily turned away with a “Whoa!”. As an immediate reaction to his own, Medium let out a “Wow!”, and quickly grabbed his hand.

And so—

Medium: “There there, Subaru-chin, calm down, calm down.”

Subaru: “—Ah.”

Medium then pulled his hand, and held Subaru’s head to her chest.

As she slowly stroked his back, he could feel the beating of her heart on his forehead and cheeks. Her heart beat in a steady rhythm, tenderly smashing Subaru’s frozen consciousness.

Medium: “When my head gets all messed up, I ask big bro to do this for me too~. Big bro also used to have people do this for him.”

Subaru: “…It calms me down, I can feel it.”

Medium: “Yeahyeah, good! So, we can stay like this and you can tell me what’s going on, ok? What’s Subaru-chin worried about outside?”

Medium’s voice, coming down from directly above him, did not rush Subaru to answer.

Subaru wished to be spoiled by Medium’s generosity and kindness that did not change even though she had been made younger. But he knew that the current time would not allow that.

So, as a trade-off, while having his head held by Medium like that, with difficulty he developed a thought.

Subaru: “It’s just that… I feel, like there’s a dangerous situation, outside the inn…”

Medium: “Is it dangerous out there?”

Subaru: “Yeah, that’s right. I think, someone’s trying, to kill us…”

Nodding her head, Medium listened to Subaru’s overly vague idea. To be honest, even he could notice that the statement was too unconvincing and unfounded.

Without being able to better word himself, he would never be able to convince Abel and Al, Medium regardless. Like, as an example—

Subaru: “Actually, if we go outside the in, that’s where we die—”

—At that moment, the world stood still.

Subaru: “…”

The clear, audible pulse of Medium faded into eternity, and her face and breathing, which were right in front of him, went out of reach.

Anything and everything, was faraway.

Color was lost, sound was lost, the flow of time was lost, the freedom to move was lost.

He could not move. He did not move. He was not moved. He was not allowed to move.

And then, with his voice, his breathing and even his eyes prohibited of freewill, something repulsive, terrifying, frightening slowly loomed towards the edge of Subaru’s consciousness.

Why, was he violating the Taboo; as if it were lamenting that, the sable shadow crept closer towards him.

Why, did he forget this; slender dark-pigmented fingers slid into his chest without effort.

Why, would he repeat this so many times; the voice of the Witch arrived, blotting out anything and everything.

???: “I love you.”

A voice that had not been heard in a very, very long time, dragged Subaru to hell.

His heart was gripped, and a tremendous pain tore Subaru’s motionless body to shreds. It tormented him. It violated him. Humiliated him. —Marked him, so he would never forget it again.

And then—

Subaru: “—Hk.”

Medium: “Subaru-chin?”

@ddukae

Suddenly, sound, color, the flow of time returned, and he felt the fierce flow of blood throughout his body.

His head remained pressed against Medium's chest, but what he picked up was not her tender heartbeat, but the resumption of his own blood flow and his own unusual, frightened, racing heartbeat.

The Witch's anger at having broken the Taboo was immense, to the point of losing his voice, to the point of breaking his understanding, to the point of violating his soul. Subaru cursed himself.

Why, had he put himself through so much pain and suffering, he wondered.

By no means, could he confide in others about Return by Death.

He could not even inadvertently speak of it in something like an analogy.

If he attempted to convey those intentions of his to anyone, that dark-colored evil hand—that of the Witch of Envy, would overcome any obstacle and reach for Subaru's heart.

Not to mention—

Subaru: "That was a close one…"

Muttering so, Subaru checked the presence of the one holding him, Medium, and that of the ones surrounding him, Abel, Al, Taritta and Louis.

The feeling of heat rising in the corner of his eyes was one of relief that they had not been harmed. —The confession of Return by Death carried alongside a risk utmost feared by Subaru.

That was, the possibility that the evil hand would lay harm on someone other than Subaru and that, unlike the threat Subaru faced, it would not dispel its power until it severed their thread of life.

If that possibility were not actualized, and the only one to suffer were Subaru, that would be the next best outcome.

Of course, it was undeniable that the optimal would have been if Subaru had not been subjected to any pain.

Subaru: “Medium, san… Thank you, I’m okay now.”

Medium: “Really? Like, you look even more pained than before…”

Subaru: “If I’m the only one feeling miserable, that’d seriously be the best thing in this situation.”

Raising his face towards her, Subaru was released from Medium’s embrace. Although Medium looked somewhat hesitant about it, she was unable to say anything more at Subaru’s insistence.

As much as her concern was appreciated, the situation did not allow for it. And without exaggeration, the fact remained that Medium had helped a lot.

Subaru: “I’m sorry if I sound weird and unsettling. But I really feel it’s… dangerous outside. So.”

Al: “Don’t go out there, you say? But then we wouldn’t play the game with Olbart. Of course, there’s always the option of not playing the game with him.”

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “In that case, we shall have no choice but to cancel our negotiations with Yorna Mishigure. This trip has been a long one, and you, the clown, and Medium have all shrunk as a result.”

Al: “Well, some people might desire the result of being rejuvenated for the rest of their lives, you know?”

He followed up Abel’s cold-hearted statement with an impotent tease; Al’s point, however, was squarely contradicted by Olbart’s statement.

Albeit the details were unknown, it seemed that the "infantilization" that had befallen Subaru and the others had some disadvantages. It was not just simple rejuvenation, it seemed.

In other words, this "infantilization" was, without a doubt, a bomb.

Al: "In any case, I can't stay small. Since we chose not to surround the old man and beat him, we gotta win the game of hide-and-seek."

Subaru: "I know. I'm not going to forfeit the game. It's just that it's really dangerous out there. So…"

Abel: "And so?"

Subaru: "Well, I want to be careful if we go out there. Also, I want you to believe me when I say very strange things."

Abel: "…"

Subaru appealed, looking straight ahead and up at the man standing before him.

He could see Abel's eyes narrowing through the oni mask at the off-hand remark. He could tell that Al was also subtly baffled, as well.

Certainly he was not persuasive, and he lacked the trial-and-error of trying to persuade them.

Taritta: "Nevertheless, Subaru does speak some truth. We've been caught in an enemy trap, and this is a place that should be considered enemy territory. So, there's no harm in raising our guard."

Medium: "Yesyes, I agree with Taritta-chan! Let's be careful! If I get any smaller, I won't be able to stop Louis-chan."

Louis: "Auu."

However, Taritta and Medium agreed with Subaru's opinion. It was unclear what Louis's intentions were as of her shout at the end, but it appeared that there had been no hostility towards Subaru there.

Taritta and the others who were in tune with him were not talking about anything difficult. They were just trying to increase their own awareness of the need to be careful, because there was no such thing as too much caution.

Subaru could not think of any reason for Abel's reluctance, aside from the fact Abel just didn't like him.

Subaru: "If you don't accept it, well then, I'll show you some proof."

Abel: "Proof, is it?"

Subaru: "Proof that my ideas shouldn't be ignored. I'll tell you where Olbart-san is. I'll tell you where he's hiding, where that "behind the eyelids" is."

Abel: "Do you believe that to be enough of a bargaining chip? One way or another, you must reveal it. It is you who shall suffer the disadvantage of concealing it."

Subaru: "Ugh…"

However, stubborn as he was, Abel refuted Subaru's opinion, which provoked a spontaneous groan from the latter, lost for words. Before he could say anything else, Al interrupted with "Now now",

Al: "Abel-chan, bro said he's gonna give us something to base a decision out of. In fact, what he said was so outta nowhere, that I can't get rid of the question mark over my head. But it's not the first time he's said something outrageous. Right?"

Abel: "…"

Al: "If you ain't listening to bro's opinion here, there's no point in bringing him along. And if you're still gonna say you'll disrespect him, well, then you're just gonna ruin my mood too."

Abel: "Ho."

As Al tried to cover Subaru with his back they changed positions, Al's voice, as he confronted Abel, dropped in tone.

Even though it was a deep voice at the level of a young boy, it was low enough to change the mood. Abel's gaze, looking down on him, also turned cold, causing Subaru to gulp.

Abel's relationship with Al was much more fragile than Subaru had expected, although he had not paid much attention to it so far.

Originally, Al had accompanied Subaru to the Demon City with the intention of going along with him. And, like Subaru, he was a human being belonging to the Kingdom of Lugunica, so he was not too concerned about Abel's return to the throne.

In blunt terms, it was the desire of Al's master, Priscilla.

Therefore, Al personally had no reason to support either Abel's cause or Abel himself.

Here it was manifesting itself as a distinct crack in their relationship.

Physically, Al had shrunk to a ten-year-old him, but could Abel really beat Al? Al's true capabilities in this state were unknown to him, and there was no benefit in letting this stare-off continue for long.

So—

Subaru: "Stop fighting! All right, I lost! I give up!"

Wrapping around his protector, Al, to put himself in front, Subaru raised his voice.

There was nothing good to be gained here in a disagreement among allies. It would be much better for Subaru to become the bad guy, than to continue such a useless struggle.

Besides, either way, he had been able to warn them.

Taritta, Medium, and even Al must have heard Subaru's plea. They would be very careful once they left the inn.

The problem would be, when death loomed in a way that made caution scarce.

At that point, Subaru would have to put his body on the line and do something about it.

Subaru: “We can’t be wasting time here! Everyone, ready up!”

Abel: “—. So, where do you believe “behind the eyelids” is?”

Subaru: “It’s…”

At any rate, Subaru insisted that they should avoid wasting time in this place. Abel finally responded positively to Subaru’s words.

The fact that this alone led to relief spoke volumes about the flawed people skills His Excellency the Emperor had.

Anyway, Subaru decided to answer with honesty.

Olbart’s first hiding place, that would be—

3

Olbart: “Next time, I’ll be sure to hide a lil’ better!”

Al: “Wait, old man…! Shit, he’s gone!”

Opening the room’s window, Olbart jumped out of the inn.

Al hurriedly followed the nimble-footed old man, but by the time he reached the window, the skilled shinobi had long since disappeared into the hustle and bustle of the city.

The speed with which he escaped was peerless, you could only be amazed by it or utterly frustrated.

Taritta: “Subaru, that man’s next hiding place…”

Medium: “Hmhm, Subaru-chin, did you understand? Do you know what it is?”

Everything has developed as it had before; with Subaru having found Olbart’s first hiding place without trouble, Taritta and

Medium both looked at him with expectation.

However, unfortunately, the second hiding place—the answer to "abyss with a great view", was unknown.

He was unable to give them a suitable answer, and Medium and the others slumped their shoulders, although they collected themselves again, following the same flow as last time.

Al: "So, how's it going, Abel-chan? Bro did a great job guessing right where that old man was, didn't he?"

Abel: "He deserves credit for his accomplishments."

Al: "…That's all?"

Abel: "As usual, we have no time to spare. We must uncover Olbart's whereabouts twice more. What else is there?"

Al: "…Is that so."

Perhaps because of the earlier conversation, Al, prodding Abel, drooped his shoulders due to the latter's answer.

Al's sentiment was nice, but that Abel would react like so was predictable. Subaru did not recall getting any comments on the results or anything in particular from Abel the last time around.

In fact, it was difficult to imagine him praising others, not just Subaru, honestly.

This time, it was just another act that did not betray Abel's character.

Taritta: ""With a great view" means it's probably considered a high place, no?"

Medium: ""But an abyss" is a hole, right? If it's a hole, wouldn't it be in the ground?"

Subaru: "I think you're both on the right track. To answer that question… Abel, I believe you wanted to go to a place with a lot of people?”

Abel: “…”

Taritta and Medium speculated on Olbart’s next hiding place.

To move that discussion forward, Subaru wanted to implement the plan from Abel that had not come to pass in the previous loop. As per his memories, Abel had originally planned to go to a crowded tavern.

As soon as they left the inn, a sudden “death” had befallen Subaru and the others amidst the street.

Putting it in another way, the moment in question was fast approaching.

Subaru: “Oi, Abel?”

Abel: “—. Your thoughts are not erroneous. A location with many people coming and going… It would also be preferable to be in a place with a lot of people.”

Al: “A place where people come and go…”

Subaru: “A place to drink… A tavern, was it?”

The conversation proceeded at a brisk pace, and Abel nodded in agreement once Subaru used that word.

And so, once they were all settled on leaving the inn and head for a tavern—

Abel: “We shall avoid the front, and leave using the inn’s backdoor.”

And it was Abel, of all people, to speak so.

Subaru let out a dumbfounded “What?” to that change in opinions. Al and Taritta raised their eyes, as well.

Medium: “Huh? Abel-chin, does that mean you believe what Subaru-chin said?”

Abel: “There is nothing better than staying vigilant. Now that we have pinpointed Olbart’s whereabouts, there is room for consideration. What I am saying is nothing more, yes?”

Subaru: “…You, really are a piece of work.”

To those words laced with resentment from Subaru, Abel merely responded with a snort from his nose.

However, his haughty attitude aside, Abel’s decision was helpful to Subaru. Subaru was similarly hoping to somehow lead everyone to the backdoor.

Al: “I think, that means he has the intention to properly give you credit, bro.”

Subaru: “…Looks like it. Rather, that’s the way it’s always been.”

Somehow, he also doubted Abel’s attitude of “definite punishment or reward”.

If he could understand that aspect, it should help him to get a rough idea of a way to deal with Abel; Subaru himself was already supposed to start grasping him this way.

It was as if he were learning how to deal with Abel all over again.

Al: “But I’m still stunned that you were able to guess the old man’s location. I dunno how you did it. —It’s like, you read a strategy guide for this.”

Subaru: “A strategy guide, that sounds so damn nostalgic. Well, it’d be useful to have something like that, but that’s not remotely it. That was just experience coming into play.”

Al: “Experience? Of playing hide-and-seek?”

Subaru: “It’s similar, you know. Like before… Like before?”

As he responded to his achievement of finding Olbart being probed, Subaru's thoughts ground to a halt.

One of the reasons as to why Subaru had been able to tell that Olbart was hiding in the starting room, was because that was a typical development for the kind of behavior a person like him would have.

Still, someone must have done something similar to that predictable event before Olbart.

So, Subaru should remember it clearly.

Al: "Forgetting things? Forgetfulness's something old people do. Funny that, contrary to what you'd expect, although you're young now, you're forgetful too, bro."

Subaru: "Forgetful…"

Al: "That's it, isn't it? If it was someone else, it was someone close to you, bro. It shouldn't be the silver-haired girl, maybe the loli that was always with you…"

Subaru: "—Beatrice!"

Al: "Whoa."

Al's shoulders trembled as Subaru looked up and gave a powerful shout.

But Subaru had no time to deal with Al's surprise. Of course not.

Subaru: "Stop joking…"

No matter what he made of it, it was strange.

It was Beatrice, Beatrice. Subaru's partner, a Great Spirit both pretty and sweet. The clue to finding Olbart had been the first prank she played on Subaru.

If there was anyone that could take credit for that, it should be earned by Subaru and Beatrice.

And yet, it was impossible that he'd just let that slip away.

It was something that shouldn't have happened.

Taritta: "Subaru, Al, please come here!"

Suddenly, Taritta's sharp voice called out to the stunned Subaru.

Looking up at her in reflex, he saw Taritta at the back door of the inn, peeking out the crack of the slightly-open door to the outside. Her face, seen from the side, had a look of intense alarm.

The reason for this alertness was probably nothing other than the death that had struck Subaru and the others—

Taritta: "—We're already surrounded. There's probably close to a hundred of them."

Chapter 45: Konkon

1

—Tiger at the front gate, wolf at the back gate.

Strictly speaking, his situation was different, but it was a saying that crossed Subaru's mind.

The fact that it had taken him a while to come up with even that saying really showed the difficulty of Subaru's circumstances.

Al: "Nearly a hundred enemies?!"

Looking out the back door of the inn, Al's voice cracked as Taritta told them the startling news.

In response, Taritta nodded quietly saying,

Taritta: "Yes. We're surrounded. It seems more likely out of caution than hostility…"

Abel: "Sure, merely one or two people would be one thing, but it is difficult to ignore when they number close to a hundred."

Keeping his voice low, Abel spoke to Taritta, who shut the back door.

As Taritta lowered her chin at his words, Abel's gaze turned from her towards Subaru. His black eyes narrowed through the oni mask, his sharp glare pinning down Subaru's heart.

And then—

Abel: "—You have problems aside from being surrounded, do you not?"

Subaru: "—Ah."

Abel: “Against all reason, your limbs have shrunk. Anything could happen.”

Mixed with a faint sigh, Abel spelled that out, having guessed the abnormality with Subaru.

Because of his words, Subaru felt his cheeks become warm with shame. From the knowledge that Abel had been able to notice his disorder, and also from the awareness that he was holding them back.

He would rather even pretend that there was nothing wrong with himself.

However—

Medium: “Subaru-chin, are you okay?”

The voice of Medium, which had comforted the troubled Subaru just before, made him stop.

Being stubborn in this situation would not solve anything. In addition, not only Subaru, but also his friends, Medium included, would suffer the consequences of his stubbornness.

So—

Subaru: “Actually, I feel like… My memory’s getting weird. I’m having trouble remembering things that I should remember, and that’s probably not good.”

Al: “…That’s why you were so strange a moment ago, huh?”

Subaru swallowed his frustration and frankly spoke to Al, who was struck speechless.

Al, too, must have felt there was something strange about Subaru’s earlier behavior. Talking about the details made him feel uneasy as well.

What had happened to Subaru was no stranger to Al.

Abel: "—. Anything specific?"

Subaru: "…I couldn't remember the name of an important family member. No! Uh, it's just that it took a while before I could recall it."

Al: "Bro, this ain't the time to pretend you're fine…"

Subaru: "I'm not trying to pretend I'm…"

Subaru was about to reflexively answer, "Fine", but then he stopped himself, wondering whether he was or not.

He really didn't want to say it so plainly that he'd forgotten the name of someone so important. Subaru remembered Beatrice, remembered Emilia, and remembered Rem.

He also remembered the friends he had left behind at the mansion.

Subaru: "So it's not like I was trying to…"

Abel: "Tell me exactly what your condition is."

Subaru: "Huh?"

Abel: "Have you forgotten? Or does it take you a long time to remember? Which is it?"

Upon being asked this question, Subaru clammed up.

Abel's question, as he neared one step closer to him, was firm, and had a sharpness that did not allow for lies.

There was a numbing sensation in his brain, and he was unable to pull his consciousness away from the man in front of him. As Subaru fell silent, Abel asked again, "Which is it?",

Abel: "You cannot see what is occurring in your environs, and now you cannot see what is occurring inside your own head."

Subaru: "—N-no! It's not that I forgot, it's just that I'm having trouble remembering! That's right, just because I can't recall quickly, doesn't mean I forgot!"

Abel: "…It takes a while to remember, huh?"

Subaru quickly responded to the cruel inquiry, and Abel quietly accepted his answer.

It was an explanation that Subaru himself didn't know what to make of. So it was surprising that Abel did not outright dismiss it.

In fact, annoyed with Abel's behavior, Al intervened with "Hey",

Al: "What's the difference? Why's that a big deal to you in this situation?"

Abel: "There is a big difference. There is a world of difference between forgetting and having difficulty remembering."

Al: "Huh?"

Al grumbled in displeasure, but Abel did not answer any further.

He looked back at Taritta listening to what was happening outside, leaving the bewildered Subaru and Al to their own thoughts.

Abel: "What is happening outside? They have yet to move, correct?"

Taritta: "For now, they're just concealing their breath. Even though their encirclement should be complete by now."

Abel: "Then that signifies we have not met their requirements."

Taritta: "Requirements, is it…?"

Abel stroked his chin thoughtfully, without responding to Taritta's puzzled look, and then looked back at Subaru once more.

Unable to keep up with the speed of his thoughts, Subaru flinched as Abel turned back. Closing the distance between him and the one taken aback, Abel put his face close to Subaru's and asked,

Abel: "—What do we do for those outside to attack us?"

Subaru: “Eh…”

Abel: “Answer. The conditions for those outside to attack us are…”

Subaru: “Th-That, even if you ask me…”

The question was repeated through the oni mask, and Subaru caught his breath, tensing up.

“I don’t understand it, even if you ask me”, he thought. At any rate, even if he remembered what had happened before he Returned by Death, it had been such a sudden and unexpected death that he could not comprehend it at all.

If only he had more information, he’d be able to give Abel a better idea of what to do—.

Abel: “Answer.”

However, Abel trampled on Subaru’s hesitation and confusion, directing him a question. With Subaru unable to answer, the man donning the oni mask grabbed him by his young shoulders in a fit of rage.

Abel: “Answer! Natsuki Subaru!”

Subaru: “I-I don’t know! A-as soon as we go outside, they’ll attack us! That’s all I know!”

Replying upon being threatened, Subaru opened his eyes and clutched his chest.

Once again, he impulsively revealed the information he had obtained through Return by Death. He was afraid that the penalty for violating the Taboo might come back to haunt him. But nothing happened.

Neither the stoppage of time around him, nor the evil hand that made him pay for his stupidity, manifested.

But instead—

Louis: “Uu!”

Having gotten between Subaru and Abel with a snarl, Louis protected Subaru with her back towards him as she glared directly at Abel, who had adopted a hardline attitude.

Abel’s arm was forced away from Subaru’s shoulder by Louis, sending her a disapproving look. However, Louis was soon joined by a reassuring ally, Medium.

Medium: “Abel-chin! Don’t bully Subaru-chin! I’ll tell big bro!”

Abel: “…What should I do, being told that? In the first place, he just gave me necessary information. —Going outside is the trigger, huh?”

Abel shrugged his shoulders at Medium’s reproachful glare, without even feeling remorse.

His thoughtful expression caused Medium to say, “Geez!” as she put her hands on her hips, directing her eyes at Subaru rather than Abel.

Medium: “Subaru-chin, are you okay? Abel was scary, wasn’t he~?”

Subaru: “It’s not like I was scared. I was just a little surprised… Yeah.”

Medium: “Really? I hope so. You’re a strong boy, a strong boy, Subaru-chin.”

As she said this, Medium’s hand stroked Subaru’s black hair with gentleness.

The kindness of her touch, and the fact that he was being praised as a “strong boy”, made him feel ashamed once again. But in fact, he couldn’t deny that his racing heart was slowly calming down.

He thought he really was losing it.

The relief he felt at being comforted by Medium aside, more troubling were the unspeakable feelings of reluctance and fear he felt towards Abel.

He couldn't resist Abel's will, and so, he kept getting pushed around.

It was like—

Al: "It's like a child and an adult. And I'm not just talking about looks."

Subaru: "Ugh…"

Al's voice came from beside the downcast face of Subaru, as the latter gripped his chest.

Subaru's face tightened as he felt he was being judged by Al, whose tone of voice was harsh, still reeling from his earlier conversation with Abel.

Because of his words, "a child and an adult", Subaru's doubts were cleared up.

Yes, Al was right, that was the appropriate way to describe it. In fact, the current interaction between Subaru and Abel was similar to the power dynamic between a child and an adult.

Not just in appearances, but also in mind, as if the latter were being pulled along by the former.

Abel: "—Listen. I think I know who we are up against."

Taritta: "D-do you really…?!"

While Subaru was experiencing an unfathomable sense of dread, Abel spoke in a low voice.

Abel's words made Taritta's eyes widen in surprise. It was not only her who was surprised, but also everyone else present. To be more precise, everyone except Louis, who was not following the conversation.

At any rate, Abel got everyone's attention and nodded with a "Yes".

Abel: “From the conditions presented by Olbart, and the hundred enemies identified by Taritta… If we exclude those possibilities that cannot be, we can, naturally, narrow down the options.”

Al: “So, what do you think, oh clever Abel-chan? Who’s after us?”

Abel: “—It is Chaosflame”

Al & Medium: “Chaosflame… this city?”

In response to Al and Medium’s question, Abel nodded grimly.

He then looked over at Subaru and the rest, whose expressions showed that they still hadn’t put his answer together, and continued,

Abel: “Chaosflame… That is, the residents of the Demon City. Those standing outside poised to attack, I am sure they are the very people residing in this city.”

2

—Abel made a clear statement that the inhabitants of Chaosflame were the enemy.

Subaru: “…”

At Abel’s declaration, Subaru opened and closed his mouth in disbelief. —No, not only Subaru, but Al and the others had their own reactions of astonishment as well.

That would be natural. Considering they had suddenly been told that the people of the city had turned against them.

Al: “Are you sure, that can’t be right. What gave you that idea?”

Abel: “It is quite the natural thought. In the first place, there are only a limited number of people capable of mobilizing a force of a hundred men to surround the inn. At this point, there are only two choices… The Emperor’s group, and the Demon City’s forces. However, Chisha is disguised as me. Furthermore, he does not possess the leeway to do what I would not do.”

Al: “So that others won’t find out he’s not Abel-chan. So, what wouldn’t you do?”

Abel: “Brazenly sending my forces to the Demon City.”

Subaru nearly nodded at the conclusive statement, but he couldn’t decide if it was definitive information or not. If a hundred soldiers accompanied the king, would that be too many or too few?

He did not believe it strange at all, if that many were present.

Medium: “I dunno much about it, but how many soldiers are there at Abel-chin’s castle?”

Abel: “Are you inquiring about the number of troops at the Imperial Capital? If so…”

When Medium raised her hand to ask a question, Abel glanced at Subaru. He was unable to understand the meaning of his gaze; Abel touched the forehead of his oni mask, and after a moment of contemplation said,

Abel: “Some insignificant thirty-thousand. But this talk is not about the forces at his command. Whether or not the Emperor would allow them to accompany him, is the topic of this conversation. And —”

Taritta: “The real Emperor would never do such a thing.”

Abel: “That is what I meant.”

Abel nodded his head. He denied the possibility of the false Emperor making such a careless decision.

Subaru felt that there was a possibility that the other party could have been careless, but he kept his mouth shut. He would not be listened to, even if he had said it.

In any case—

Abel: “The Emperor declared it forbidden to touch us, and Olbart displayed an approach that adhered to that order. With that case as valid, dispatching a force at us would make no sense.”

Al: “…What about a theory like, he didn’t do it himself, or something like that?”

Abel: “Now, I shall ask you, do you believe I would ever allow that line of reasoning?”

Taritta: “I don’t think so.”

Synchronized with Taritta’s answer, Al similarly denied it with a shake of his masked head.

As long as the fake Emperor was disguised as Abel, his lines of thought must be the same as Abel’s as an Emperor. In other words, what Abel would not allow, the fake Emperor could not allow.

And so, the false Emperor would have to continue a pretense of being very narrow-minded.

Abel: “Kafma Irulux would not permit it, even if an attempt was made to reason with him. He is inflexible. And therefore, he is a valuable asset, but I am certain General Second-Class Kafma would not condone this crooked interpretation.”

Subaru: “Kafma… Would that be the straight-laced guy we saw yesterday?”

Abel: “He might be meek towards the Emperor, but he shall opine without hesitation even against a General First-Class. Even Olbart’s cunning shall be unable to bend Kafma’s principles.”

Al: “That lil’ bro’s got that much power?”

Abel: “At one time, he was approached for a promotion to Divine General. For a variety of reasons, he passed up on it.”

As a response to Abel’s answer, Al let out a frustrated “Ugh”.

If this was true, then two Divine General-class people had been present in the Castle yesterday—Nay, three, since the fake Emperor was one of them.

That may indeed be more reliable manpower compared to bringing in unskilled troops.

Subaru: "But if the false Emperor's not the enemy, then …"

Naturally, the conjecture that Abel had proposed became more and more realistic.

In other words, the inhabitants of the Demon City of Chaosflame were the ones waiting for them outside, and the leader who had made them move was—

Medium: "Are you saying Yorna-chan's making them attack us?"

Al: "…It's hard to think of anyone else, isn't it? There's no one else who knows about us and has a good reason to target us to begin with."

Subaru: "—. What does Abel think?"

Someone within the Demon City of Chaosflame who could move its inhabitants as pawns; naturally, the first person that came to mind was Yorna Mishigure, the ruler of the Demon City.

However, was it possible that she, being as unpredictable as Olbart—No, perhaps even harder to predict, was the mastermind behind the whole situation?

In response to Subaru's suspicion, Abel tapped his finger on the forehead of his oni mask,

Abel: "That is asinine."

And his reply was brief.

Subaru: "Asinine? Errr, does that mean you don't agree? Why?"

Abel: "It would be pride to believe that if you ask, you shall receive an answer for everything. —The missive."

Subaru: "The missive?"

Abel replied to Subaru's question while adding an unnecessary sentence.

The missive was the letter they had delivered to Yorna the previous day. Delivering that letter had been the purpose of the previous day's visit and was bound to be the reason for the current day's summons.

Abel had not told them in detail what he had written in the letter, though.

Abel: "In the missive, I wrote that I would reward her with that which she desires."

Al: "The thing that lady wants… In other words, the position of Empress?"

Medium: "To be your wife?"

Once Abel mentioned the contents of the missive, Al and Medium spoke in quick succession.

As they had been told the prior day, Yorna wanted the Emperor. Not necessarily Abel, but the Emperor's status.

So if it were true that he had written that he would give Yorna what she coveted, it should be like that.

Subaru: "How the heck did you decide to convey something like that in a letter?"

Abel: "Do not trivialize the problem using your own standards. Whatever it is, she shall achieve what she desires. Hence why we were summoned to the Castle. It is illogical for her to send her forces against us in spite of that."

Al: "Ahhh~, what if she hates being Abel-chan's wife so much that she wants to kill him…"

Or perhaps, the letter was so rude that she wanted to kill them.

Subaru thought that there was a very good chance that he would be treating the person he was going to marry in a pompous manner, because he behaved that way in person.

But Abel scoffed at the idea Subaru and the rest had.

Abel: “What she must do, she shall. Emotions are secondary. She is not like Priscilla.”

Al: “I did think that lady was just as troublesome as the Princess!”

Subaru agreed to that. Priscilla and Yorna were both scary.

He was afraid of Priscilla and Yorna both, but he felt that Abel had a point because it had been stated with such conviction. —Also, he recalled his memories of Yorna from the previous day.

Yorna: “As the Lord of the Demon City, I won’t speak lies in front of my attendants.”

So Yorna had said, her words spoken with a bewitching smile regarding the matter of the letter that Subaru and the others had present her with, a promise that she would not throw it away without reading it.

Subaru and the others fell into the stables afterwards, and then, Tanza, Yorna’s attendant, had declared that Yorna had recognized Subaru and his companions.

At the very least, Subaru did not take her as a woman who would change her previous statements at will.

He did not, so he wished to believe what Abel had said.

Taritta: “In any case, those outside should be getting impatient right about now. What should we do?”

Keeping an eye on the outside, Taritta questioned them about their next move.

Abel had spoken of a trigger for an assault—as in, the conditions that would make the other party attack them, but, so far, they could only guess that it would be them going outside. But with the other side prepared to attack them, they did not know when they may force their way in.

In addition, Subaru and the rest were in the middle of a game of hide-and-seek.

Subaru: “Even if we know the people outside are coming in, we can’t just not leave, right?”

Al: “Well, unless the old man outplayed our outplaying, and hid in the inn for a second time… Just in case, should we take another look at the room?”

Abel: “I would have considered that if we did not have the clue, “an abyss with a great view”.”

So Abel dismissed him, and Al hung his head in disappointment.

In fact, Subaru’d had the thought that Olbart would be hiding in the first room once more as well. But no matter how much he thought about it, he could not connect it to “an abyss with a great view”. So he had not touched on it.

In the meantime, their group’s course of action was being finalized.

Of course, there was no other choice for them but to make their debut. The question was, what kind of strategy should they use to make that option work?

Abel: “—Taritta, draw their attention.”

Subaru: “Abel?!”

A moment later, Abel gave what seemed to be the cruelest instruction of all.

Hearing this, Taritta’s cheeks hardened, and Subaru criticized Abel in a shrill voice. But Abel ignored Subaru’s voice, keeping his gaze on Taritta, and continued,

Abel: “Make a great ruckus and capture the attention of those outside. Meanwhile, we shall sneak out.”

Al: “Abel-chan, a better, understandable plan would be…”

Abel: “There is none. This is the best we can muster with the cards in our possession. If you had not been shrunken, we might have been able to find another method.”

Subaru: “That’s going too far!”

Louis: “Auu!”

Abel dismissed Al’s concern for Taritta’s safety.

Along with Subaru snapping at him for his cruelty, Louis voiced her righteous indignation as well. However, as a reaction to Subaru and the others—

Taritta: “Yes, understood. I’ll draw the attention of the group outside.”

Subaru: “Taritta-san! No matter how you look at it…”

Shaking her head sideways, Taritta was prepared to accept Abel’s reckless instructions.

Subaru wanted to find a better method that could ensure her safety, somehow. However, the only two things that came to Subaru’s mind at this moment were caution and anxiety towards the very dangerous enemies outside.

Abel: “Taritta, hand me that package. We shall need it later.”

Taritta: “Here it is. Once I have their full attention, please take advantage of the opportunity and escape. However, I don’t think I’ll have a chance to give you a signal…”

Abel: “I shall allow Medium to decide that.”

Medium: “Eh, me?”

Abel received the package Taritta was carrying, his slender form shouldering the bag. As Abel continued with the preparations, Medium, having been designated by name, widened her eyes.

Turning to face her, Abel nodded, together with a “Yes”,

Abel: “Shrunken or not, you still have eyes to watch for an opportunity. Out of everyone, you are the most competent.”

Medium: “Hmmm, gotcha. I’ll watch carefully! So be careful, Taritta-chan.”

Taritta: “Yes.”

The discussion was moving along at breakneck pace, leaving Subaru behind.

Putting Abel aside, Taritta and Medium had nerves of steel. Especially Taritta, who was being entrusted with the most dangerous role.

Taritta: “So, I’m off.”

Clutching her bow, Taritta put her hand on the back door. Facing her back, Subaru couldn’t help but shout, “Taritta-san!”,

Subaru: “Um, d-don’t die…!”

Taritta: “…”

He was disgusted with himself for saying something so obvious and discouraging. If he was unable to offer any useful opinions or winning strategies, he should at least say something that would boost Taritta’s morale.

And yet, all he could offer was a quavering plea. —But Taritta’s eyes relaxed slightly and,

Taritta: “Yeah, I’ll see you guys later.”

With a thin smile, Taritta’s body flew outward like a bullet.

Just before that, Abel hurled his final words towards Taritta’s back, as she headed for enemy territory.

Those were—

Abel: “Taritta, there is no need to hold back. Spare no quarter. —No matter who they are, no person in this city is easy to kill.”

It was ominous advice, which could not be called either encouragement nor a winning strategy.

3

—The moment she stepped outside, hostility swelled mightily quickly.

Tasting it on her brown skin, Taritta’s narrowed eyes scanned left to right over the entire area in one go.

For the People of Shudraq, who lived as hunters in the jungle, understanding the terrain and situation at a moment’s notice was an essential skill. Taritta was no exception.

—No, Mizelda, her sister, had entrusted Taritta with the role of chieftain.

Therefore, Taritta must excel in these skills, more so than her fellow Shudraqians. And indeed, she did.

Taritta: “—Ah.”

With a light gasp born at the back of her throat, Taritta assessed the number of hostile forces directed at her.

Around her, there were about a hundred people with the will to fight, but less than twenty of them had seized their hostility onto Taritta, who had rushed out the back door.

In addition, the number of those able to move quickly among them would be even smaller.

First thing would be to get the feet of those who turned around to—

Taritta: “—No good.”

Her mind flashed back to the advice given by Abel just before she had taken off, to spare no quarter.

Abel was a prideful, good-looking man. He met all the requirements of Mizelda’s taste in men, and Taritta was not good at dealing with him. She was weak to pressure and went along with the flow without resistance. Plus, when confronted with someone with a nature like that of her sister or Abel, she would be rendered unable to express any of her opinions.

That was why Taritta preferred someone who would listen to her. Particularly because she would take time to settle on an opinion, and would reel at being rushed.

From that perspective, Flop, who had stayed behind at Guaral, was quite—

Taritta: “—Hk, what am I thinking?”

Blushing red with momentary shame, Taritta drew her bowstring as if to vent.

A moment later, arrows were released from the bow—three, at the same time. Taritta’s archery skills manifested, with each arrow aiming at a different prey.

One flew straight and two flew in a curve, as they cut the wind along the alleyway outside the inn, and pierced their targets.

Three men who had turned to face the rushing Taritta and made an attempt to step towards her, were shot in the neck and chest respectively, instantly robbing them of their fighting power.

Taritta: “Hunting is comfortable.”

It suited Taritta, because she was not required to talk to anyone.

The prey did not expect Taritta to speak, nor did she want to communicate with them. The only dialogue that occurred was that of her arrows and their meeting the enemy.

Even so, the result dubbed life and death need not be produced at the end of a conversation.

???: “—ROHH!”

With a roar, several shadows rushed into the alley, replacing the men who had been shot through.

The first thing that entered Taritta's field of vision was an oxman; his body so massive that, to gaze upon it all, she had to look up. A man with short, thick horns at the top of his head was ferociously using his frame to charge, all while unleashing a battle cry.

A direct frontal hit would pulverize every bone in Taritta's thin body.

However, there was no way to escape to her back, or to her side. Even if she jumped upwards, there was a good chance she would be grabbed by the legs.

With that in mind, Taritta lowered herself and darted forward.

Oxman: "Wha—?!"

Perhaps because those actions were unexpected, the oxman's eyes widened and his throat tightened. Taritta extended her legs towards the oxman's face and used it as a foothold, punting him in the snout.

Bending her knees to stifle her momentum, Taritta's body revolved with ease in midair, using the face of the oxman, spewing blood from his nose, as a foothold. Then performing a half-turn, she adopted an upside-down position while airborne.

Taritta: "…"

As she spun around, she secured a three-sixty-degree view, including the area behind her, which she had not been able to see previously. She was able to assess the shadows of buildings, the rooftops and scaffolding present in the city, and even those attempting to attack her from these positions.

Taritta: "These won't be enough arrows."

As she said this, she pulled out the arrows from the quiver on her back, put them on her bow at a dizzying pace, and repeatedly fired three shots in rapid succession to reduce her enemies.

The number of arrows was disproportionate to the number of enemies she had assessed. With no choice but to cut down the enemies with the highest priority, Taritta used her intuition of many years to target the ones with the most ability.

Ignoring the uncomfortable feeling she felt at the sight of those who entered her field of vision—

???: “Woaaa—?!”

The raging arrows glided through the air akin to a tempest, and those pierced through were blown away by the impact.

Following Abel’s advice, Taritta attacked about thirty enemies with merciless attacks to the vitals, aiming for everyone’s chest and neck, and the eyes and mouth of those she could, hoping to inflict a fatal wound.

After this first engagement, however, she had already run out of arrows.

The only thing she could do now, to retrieve the arrows that had been utilized, and to continue serving as a decoy as long as possible —

Taritta: “…Well this is, a bit unexpected.”

As she moved to retrieve the arrow from the downed enemy, Taritta stopped in her tracks.

Taritta, as a warrior of Shudraq, had killed countless beasts in her life. Even if the beast’s shape was slightly different, the creature’s feedback to having its vital point pierced could be witnessed at the moment of her bow firing.

And based on that experience, she was confident that she had sowed the lives of those she had shot through.

???: “Guhgu…”

And yet, none of those who groaned and rose to their feet had lost their lives.

Even if they had not flat-out perished, they should have been on the verge of death. However, those that stood up stared at Taritta with eyes that were not bereft of the will to fight, let alone on the verge of death.

In those eyes that gazed at Taritta, a change occurred.

Taritta: “What, in the world is that?”

Taritta frowned and questioned the oxman as he stood up. The man did not reply, but the change that had occurred to him was so alien that it seized her attention.

—A scarlet flame was covering his right eye.

Oxman: “…”

Those whose pupils were ablaze were not restricted to just the oxman.

All those who had fallen after being shot by Taritta regarded her with a scarlet flame in one of their eyes, be it the right or the left one.

Those whose eyes were burning were not restricted to just those who had been shot by Taritta.

Those who had come to the scene later to surround Taritta had scarlet flames in their eyes as well. Flickering flames that burnt, all the while scattering sparks.

And amazingly, flames similar to those burned away and healed the wounds of the oxman.

The kicked and smashed nose of the oxman, and the arrow wounds of those who had been shot through, had all been undone, completely.

Taritta: “…A few words were not enough, Abel.”

The scene and Abel’s earlier advice came together, and Taritta let out a sigh.

Although she did not know for certain, her belief was that Abel had thoroughly anticipated this situation. If that were the case, he should have endeavored to make his words more understandable.

And beyond that, her head pounded with the desire for purely convenient thoughts, as she was not good with someone who hurried the conversation forward.

However—

Taritta: “My role is to be a decoy, not to annihilate the enemy.”

Hence, in terms of focusing on her role, it was safe to say that it was working well.

And then—

Taritta: “…They’re breaking the arrows, it seems.”

The arrows that had shot through them were breaking one after another, as they slipped out of their bodies. The arrowheads that she was supposed to retrieve were lost, and Taritta became unable to use her archery skills.

However, it would be a mistake to think that this would leave her with no options.

Taritta: “Both daggers and throwing stones can be used for hunting.”

As she said this, Taritta dropped low and held the dagger she had tucked inside her formal dress and the bow she had lost the arrows to shoot with together.

Taritta’s battle to fulfil her role had only now begun.

4

Subaru: “—Hk, Taritta-san, awesome…!”

Subaru’s voice trembled as he ran, at the sight of the people whose eyes and wounds were ablaze.

Taritta had been sent out for a fierce struggle, but her skill was far beyond Subaru’s imagination.

In all honesty, it was safe to say that Subaru had underestimated Taritta’s ability to be an effective member of Shudraq, given her reserved and quiet nature as a late bloomer.

Just before, he had also seen how helpless she had been against Olbart.

Of course, because Mizelda had nominated her to be the next Chieftain, he knew there would be no gap in ability between her and Kuna or Holly.

But the precision of her aim, the speed of her shots, and the way she was able to take on an overwhelmingly large number of people made it seem like she could be as good as, or even better than, Mizelda.

Subaru: “But still…”

Even evaluating Taritta to have a high level of skill, it was hard to shake off the strangeness of those attackers.

In the first place, their appearance was strange. After all, none of them wore armor, nor did they have any sort of weapons. They were unarmed.

From the looks of it, they were pretty much the same as many of the people they had been passing by since the previous day, in Chaosflame—they were just another citizen of the Demon City with an appearance that stood out somewhat.

These citizens had surrounded Subaru and the others, and after being on the other end of Taritta's transcendental bow-and-arrow technique, they stood up without a hitch despite being mortally wounded.

From a distance, it could be seen that the attackers included women and children, and Taritta must have been disturbed that they were not actually a group of strong warriors.

She had done a great job of attracting attention, and at Medium's signal, Subaru and the others ran out into the city. But should they really escape, and not back up Taritta?

Unsure of what was the right thing to do, those options kept spinning around and around in Subaru's mind.

Next to Subaru, Abel, carrying a bag on his back, witnessed the same scene.

Abel: "So indeed, the entire city is covered by the Soul Marriage Technique."

Al: "Konkon…? Oioi, Abel-chan, the hell's that?"

Abel: "It is the mechanism of the collective that faces Taritta without backing down."

Al, who was running in a daze, asked a question to which Abel gave an inadequate answer.

Although Subaru couldn't quite wrap his head around what was going on, one thing was clear. —Abel had a clue about the relationship between those burning eyes and the attackers.

Subaru: "Abel! Don't keep secrets from us! Tell us everything!"

Abel: "—. It is one of the supposedly lost secret arts spoken of in ancient literature. It is called the Soul Marriage Technique; by sharing a part of one's soul with others, value is added to it."

Al: "I don't get it! The fuck's that supposed to mean?"

Abel: “To put it another way, souls united via the Soul Marriage Technique share a fraction of their power. And in this city, there is merely a single wielder of the Soul Marriage Technique—”

Urged on from both sides by Subaru and Al, Abel gave them the most abridged answer possible.

Despite that, the content was still difficult for Subaru to understand, but, somehow, he managed to pick up its nuance.

In other words—

Abel: “—It means that everything that composes this Demon City shares the power of Yorna Mishigure. Therefore, this city is a land that shall not fall easily, no matter how many armies you dispatch against it.”

Chapter 46:
Childish Recklessness

Subaru: “The people of this city share the same power as Yorna…?!”

While running with effort along the alley, Subaru’s eyes widened at the words Abel spoke.

Subaru had no idea of the power of the foxwoman he had met atop the castle tower of the Crimson Lapis Castle, a woman who seemed to have an unfathomable presence—an existence that could also be called the Empress that ruled over the Demon City.

However, since she had been chosen as one of the Nine Divine Generals, and had been allowed to remain alive, maintaining her life, despite rebelling against the Emperor many times, she was definitely very strong.

Yorna was very strong, and to think that the whole city shared the same amount of power as her.

Subaru: “Just imagining it is scary enough! Soul Marriage Technique, you’ve got to be…”

Abel: “You think I am merely lining up words without pondering them over? Then, how do you explain the events that caused your limbs to shrink? The Kingdom and the Empire are different in the foundation of their techniques and the studies they have cultivated. Of course, there are certain phenomena you cannot possibly imagine. There is no end to the number of techniques that have been lost.”

Subaru: “Even if you say that…”

After all those difficult words, Subaru bit the inside of his cheek in frustration and turned his head.

His feet almost got tangled, nearly causing him to fall, but he held it together so that he wouldn't be left behind by his friends. Because of their shrunken bodies, none of them, Subaru, Al, or Medium, had shoes that fit their feet perfectly. So their feet were wrapped in cloth, like improvised tabi.

Were it to come untied, making him fall, they would have to stop. That'd be no good.

Even if Subaru could not keep up with the conversation, at least his body should keep up.

Abel: "Albeit, while I was thinking of it as a possibility, I thought it was an unlikely one."

Al: "…So you're saying that you didn't know that that lady was a user of the Soul Marriage Technique as well?"

Abel: "Even now, I am doubting if that truly is the case. It is that mad of a deed."

Abel replied, lightly breathing as he ran, his oni mask's gaze directed to their front. Al growled at those words, and Medium's face turned to Abel.

Even though she was smaller, Medium seemed to be the one with the most physical energy. Subaru was still doing fine, but he would probably run out of breath before too long. It was difficult for him to keep running.

Abel: "—Halt. It appears we have managed to shake off the ones around the inn for the moment."

Abel suddenly brought everyone to a stop, though he probably didn't do that, because he cared about their well-being.

With the exit of the alleyway in sight, the five of them ducked behind a collection of scrap wood and caught their breath while keeping a watchful eye on the street.

Medium: "I wonder if Taritta-chan's okay. Although she's a lot more mobile than I thought she'd be."

Subaru: “Eh? Y-yeah she was like jumping and bouncing up and down and shooting her bow and arrows going like “pewpew”…”

Al: “Bro, are you doing that on purpose? Or…”

Subaru: “Doing what on purpose?”

He tilted his head and frowned at Al’s question.

Had he said something strange, he wondered. He was just praising Taritta’s efforts in his own way, to match Medium’s admiration.

In response, Al shook his head and replied with “Never mind” as if it were nothing, and then turned his head towards Abel. And then,

Al: “What did you mean earlier, by calling it “that mad of a deed”?”

Abel: “—. As I stated. The Soul Marriage Technique involves ceding a portion of one’s soul to another. By soul, that would be the very root of one’s self, the Od.”

Al: “Ceding… Od.”

Ruminating on the words, Al’s voice trembled at the realization.

Od was, as Abel had stated, the root of one’s being—the center of not only the body, but also the more spiritual part of the being, the origin of one’s Mana.

In this world, it was often treated as it was the same as the soul. So, perhaps the Soul Marriage Technique could also be called the Od Marriage Technique. Although Subaru wasn’t too sure of this.

Subaru: “But why do souls become stronger when they’re joined together?”

Abel: “A similar example would be the relationship between a Spiritual Arts User and a Spirit. By entering into a contractual relationship, User and Spirit connect to each other’s essence. Thus, those connected can be said to draw power from one another. Physical separation has nothing to do with it. This ought to ring a bell.”

Subaru: “A connection in which they draw power from each other, yeah, I get it, but…”

As he heard Abel speaking of Spiritual Arts Users, Subaru’s chest tightened.

Subaru didn’t have power strong enough to take pride in, but he was still a Spiritual Arts User. He had contracted with a pretty girl in a cute dress—Beatrice, and was able to do many things with her help. Though a bit limited.

And then, there was Emilia too, yes, she was a Spiritual Arts User as well. Although he hadn’t seen that little cat for a while.

Medium: “What’s the matter, Subaru-chin?”

Subaru: “Oh, uhh, it’s just… making promises with Spirits is an awful lot of work, and doing something like that, and with a lot of people! That’s a bit…”

Medium: “Hmhm.”

Subaru: “I-I was just thinking of how difficult it must be.”

Subaru was able to honestly convey his thoughts to Medium, who, as a good listener, did not rush him, hearing what he said with care.

Respecting a Contract with a Spirit was very important, and it was difficult to do the same with many people. At least, Subaru could not do that with anyone but Beatrice.

It wasn’t only down to the fact Beatrice was a girl he held such a promise with from the get-go, but also, even if that was not the case, he wouldn’t have been able to do it.

Hearing Subaru’s doubts, Abel nodded, voicing a “That is correct”,

Abel: “Hence why I claimed it to be that mad of a deed.”

Subaru: “So, the Soul Marriage Technique is dangerous, that’s what you’re saying?”

Abel: “The Soul Marriage Technique itself can be thought as something much like the forging of a contractual relationship with a Spirit. However, it is difficult to believe that it can be performed on an unlimited number of people.”

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “Albeit I stated it was a portion, it is nonetheless the ceding of the soul. It is nothing more than tearing apart the very foundation of one’s being, and handing it over in an indiscriminate manner. Keeping one’s ego intact is not something that can be done, usually. Or rather… No, talking about this will bring us nowhere.”

With a slow shake of his head, Abel spoke of the unusual nature of Yorna’s Soul Marriage Technique.

To be honest, Subaru didn’t understand the situation as clearly as Abel did, but he managed to understand that it was very scary.

For Subaru, it’d be like sharing his soul with a bunch of people other than Beatrice. Of course, there were people with whom Subaru felt he could give away part of his soul as they wouldn’t do any mischief.

He didn’t think that Medium or Al here would do anything wrong. But if someone asked him if he could give it to Abel, his reply would be no.

And aside from that—

Louis: “Uu…”

Subaru: “—Ah.”

She plucked at the bottom of Subaru’s shirt, causing him to be distracted by the owner of that small, groaning voice.

Louis, with her long golden hair tucked behind her head, had been following Subaru and the others in their escape so far without a word. —No, it was not just this far.

Louis was surprisingly good at listening and didn’t even raise her voice, which Subaru had been worried about. She did not attract the attention of the enemy, and did what needed to be done in a timely manner.

And—

Louis: "…"

Even now, she pulled at Subaru's hem, as if looking for a way to help him cope with his anxiety, not to make him deal with her own.

Subaru: "You're…"

A horrible person. A scary person. An unforgivable person.

He had no doubts about it, having thought about that for a long time, more than enough time.

The reason why he couldn't dump her on the spot after being sent to the Vollachian Empire with her was because that girl, Rem, was trying to take care of Louis.

Even now, Subaru didn't want Rem to hate him, and that was the only reason why he stayed with Louis.

And yet—.

Al: "—But hey, doesn't this clear things up?"

Al suddenly said this to a worried Subaru, who did not shake off Louis's hand.

Al's gaze turned to Abel, the two of them, masked and covered in cloth, adult and child, facing each other. As Abel looked down at him, Al pointed his thumb to his own chest,

Al: "The people who attacked us are under the influence of Yorna-neechan's Soul Marriage Technique. Then it must've been Yorna-neechan who made them attack us, and that's a QED."

Abel: "—. That surely is an answer accepting the things at face value."

Al: “I don’t like the way you’re saying that. If these people are using Yorna-neechan’s power, there’s no other option.”

Subaru: “Yeah, that might not be quite right…”

Al: “Huh?”

Al reacted to Subaru’s gentle interruption with a harsh voice. Seeing Subaru’s shoulders tremble at the sound of his voice, Al touched the sheath of Blue Dragon Sword on his back and,

Al: “My bad. Didn’t mean to freak you out… Bro, you’re saying there’s another possibility?”

Subaru: “…Beatrice and I have a Contract, but I’m not connected to her all the time. No, we’re connected, but I don’t know what she’s doing right now or anything, so.”

Al: “So you’re saying someone can just borrow her power and secretly go on a rampage?”

Although reluctantly, Subaru nodded to Al’s blunt statement.

Even though he wasn’t aware of the scope and conditions of the Soul Marriage Technique in full, it was possible that causing such mischief is possible. And if so, it was not possible to say with certainty that Yorna was a bad person, right now.

Abel: “Worst case, if the enemy turns out to be Yorna Mishigure, we shall have no other option but to flee the Demon City. Our competition with Olbart shall not be able to continue.”

Al: “We’re being targeted by the whole city, y’know. I agree with you, but…”

Abel: “—If we capture just one person it would change things.”

Abel muttered to himself as he touched his cheek over the oni mask.

Hearing this, Subaru opened his mouth with a “Oh”.

Subaru: “S-sure! If we can just get one of the people from the other side to talk to us, it’d be a lot clearer! Why didn’t I think of that?!”

Medium: “Oh, it’s true~! Abel-chin, you’re a genius! That’s it, that’s it!”

Subaru: “Right!”

Subaru and Medium jumped for joy at the answer, which seemed to clear the cloudy sky. They clapped their raised hands together and looked back at Abel and the others with great joy.

However, their delight was interrupted by Abel and Al, whose true faces could not be seen.

Directing his gaze at the excited duo, Al slumped his shoulders,

Al: “Well, if we could do that, we wouldn’t have any trouble. But that’s what makes it so hard, y’know. After all, everyone on the other side’s receiving Yorna-neechan’s power.”

Subaru: “Ah, I see…”

Medium: “Um~, we could’ve done it if only Taritta-chan was here.”

Stomping her feet on the ground, Medium was feeling a great sense of regret about her lack of ability.

Subaru also felt frustration at her words. He lacked the information to take this one step further, and he had no means at hand to obtain it.

Subaru: “Something, anything at all…”

Putting a hand over his mouth, Subaru strived hard to remember what he had done so far.

Since arriving in Chaosflame, various events and troubles had occurred in this Demon City. The encounter they had with Yorna and the false Emperor at the Crimson Lapis Castle. Then the next morning, the sudden “infantilization”, the hide-and-seek game proposed by the Vicious Old Man, and the scary people waiting for them—.

They had to find a way out of this while Taritta was stalling for them.

If not, no matter how capable Taritta was, with that many people there, they would catch her and something terrible would happen—

Subaru: "—That."

Medium: "Subaru-chin?"

As he pondered over this and that, Subaru blinked his eyes as he felt something strange. Noticing this, Medium looked into his face.

But he didn't have the time to answer her call. He had to find out just what he'd caught on just now, such was his impatience. He needed to get to the bottom of it.

What he was worried about was Taritta, doing her best. —No, not Taritta herself, but the people who were facing Taritta, the scary hundred people who were after Subaru and the others.

He watched from a distance as the hundred of them fought Taritta. There was something strange about it. It was probably—

Al: "Thing is! I don't understand if it's really the Soul Marriage Technique, or if the enemy's Yorna-neechan or not, or if Old Man Olbart's lying or not, I just don't get anything anymore!"

Subaru: "—Hk."

Subaru was surprised to see Al barking at him, while violently scratching his own neck. However, Al did not seem to notice Subaru's surprise and kicked the wall impatiently.

Al had been getting less and less composed at an alarming pace. His original posture of being like an aloof willow branch that could take anything in stride seemed to be an illusion.

And Al, in his frustration, continued to pester Abel,

Al: “What are you gonna do, Abel-chan? I can’t keep going along if it’s gonna continue like this, y’know. I’m telling you, I got bigger priorities than getting you back on your seat. So…”

Abel: “What you wish interests me not. But there is a method to be certain of it.”

Al: “Be certain of what?”

Abel: “Of whether their strength is due to the Soul Marriage Technique.”

Pointing towards the exit of the alleyway, Abel declared so to Al, who pressed him for an answer.

Outside in the darkness, the sounds of people passing by, footsteps, and talking could be heard from the street. However, it didn’t mean that any of those people had noticed and were looking in.

Just the hustle and bustle, that was all there was.

Subaru: “The street? What are we supposed…”

Abel: “Pick one passerby at random, and harm them. Then we can ascertain if Yorna Mishigure’s Soul Marriage Technique envelops everyone in the city or not.”

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “If the wound heals, then they are under the influence of the Soul Marriage Technique. If they remain wounded or lose their life, they are outside the influence of the technique—Meaning, the assumption they are a user of the Soul Marriage Technique can be dismissed as incorrect.”

Abel continued nonchalantly, pointing to the street.

The content of the speech was so disturbing and outlandish that Subaru could not say anything. His brain was numb, he had given up even thinking.

No one would take such a stupid theory seriously—

Al: “I see… But there’s also the pattern of inhabitants not being eligible, just like us. What if we drew one of them?”

Abel: “You can tell the difference between a resident and an outsider by looking at their footwear. Of course, it is possible that only those surrounding the outside of the inn are under the influence of the Soul Marriage Technique. If such is the case, it shall be proof that Yorna Mishigure has consciously set her sights on us.”

Subaru got that Abel was nodding as if saying that either way they would gain information, as well as Al sinking into silence, as if to say there was still room for more consideration.

That discussion was difficult for Subaru to understand because it was based on complicated logic. However, even amidst the incomprehensible discussion, there were things that he understood.

That was, if things continued like that, someone was going to get hurt.

Subaru: “But that’s just—”

Abel: “—If you reject it, then what? Try presenting an alternative.”

Subaru: “…Hk.”

Abel looked down on Subaru as he anticipated him trying to retort out of reflex.

After feeling that his thoughts were being read, and that he had been called foolish, Subaru’s face grew hot. But he couldn’t be silenced. He didn’t want to just shut up and back down.

Subaru: “Y-you don’t have to hurt anyone else, there are other ways…”

Abel: “If you have one, say it. If it is something that merits consideration, I shall listen. —Although it would be unreasonable to expect that from you, presently.”

Subaru: “Well, that’s!”

Abel: “—You are particularly afraid of sacrifices.”

As if cutting through him, a ruthless voice pierced Subaru as he was getting worked up.

Feeling a pain like that of having been shot through, Subaru gritted his teeth and looked down.

Sacrifice, someone getting hurt or dying.

The less people died or were hurt, the better. This was a matter of course for allies, but he felt the same for enemies. The reason why Subaru thought so was because he was weak, naive and immature.

Subaru: “But why’s that a problem?”

Abel: “That is not a repudiation. It is merely a fact. If you are to obtain what you desire, you shall require either ingenuity or strength. If you lack those, you must compromise by cutting back on the desired results. Such is what occurred with the process and the results brought about by the bloodless siege you spoke of.”

Subaru: “…”

Abel: “If you want neither deaths nor wounded, you must possess the ability to bring about that result. —If you truly desire it, it would be a contradiction to refuse to pay the toll.”

Subaru’s cheeks stiffened, his eyes blinked.

Abel’s intentions were unclear. However, the black eyes looking through the oni mask were fixed on Subaru, attempting to find out the true intentions behind Subaru’s eyes, which had an incomparably weak light in them.

I don’t understand. I don’t understand. I don’t understand.

Really, I don’t understand. What was that supposed to mean, Subaru not willing to pay the toll. Subaru was trying his utmost to use his good-for-nothing brain to think, but nothing came out.

With his short limbs and small lungs, he could not jump or leap as well as Taritta. The whip he had brought with him was too thick and heavy for him to handle.

Still, if he didn't want anyone to get hurt, he should—

Subaru: "—If that's how it is, it'd be better if only I get hurt!"

His head a mess, Subaru shouted at Abel.

He knew very well he wasn't strong enough and that he didn't think things through. But that was a problem that had always existed, even before Subaru had become small.

Something hot came up from behind his closed eyes.

Before that could clearly turn into tears, Subaru turned his back and started running away.

Al: "Bro?!"

Medium: "Subaru-chin!"

Al and Medium let out a scream at the sudden movement.

However, not stopping at the calls of those two, Subaru threw himself out of the alleyway and into the street.

He didn't want anyone to get hurt. He didn't want them to die.

Subaru lacked both the ability and the smarts necessary for that. If something was to be traded to make up for what was missing, it was Subaru himself.

He would find it out. He would bring back information that could change the situation with him at the moment he got himself back.

For that reason—

Subaru: "Come on! I'm here!"

Subaru ran out into the street, arms raised, shouting at the top of his lungs.

A high-pitched child's voice drowned out the noise of the street, drawing the attention of those surprised. Being noticed by a number of wide-open eyes, Subaru felt a pain that made his heart shrink.

Subaru: "—Ah."

Only after having done so, would someone regret doing something prematurely.

The eyes of the people around him, looking at a child doing something stupid, made him feel a sudden sense of shame and fear. With that, Subaru held his breath and thought about going back to the alley.

???: "Wait."

Someone grabbed Subaru's arm as the latter stepped on the ground in a hurry.

His shoulders hitching, Subaru turned around; a short figure was grabbing his arm. It was a short boy with short, curly hair dressed in simple light clothing—no, his hair was not kept short, it only looked short because of the tight curls at its end.

Subaru's eyes widened at the appearance of the boy, who looked about the same age as Subaru currently was. He then tried to open his mouth to ask why he had stopped him,

Boy: "Sorry."

—The next moment, Subaru was flung away by the boy with a burning right eye.

Subaru: "—Eh?"

Overwhelmed by his spinning vision, Subaru had no idea what had happened.

The boy had suddenly thrown Subaru away. With a single upward movement of his arm, he had very easily thrown him into the air.

Subaru: "W-wahhh—?!"

He had run out into the street with enthusiasm so that no one aside from him would get hurt.

Why, how, those questions bounced around in his head, and he felt as if his insides were being wrung.

The ones who had been fighting Taritta had the same burning eyes as the boy. If that was the effect of Soul Marriage Abel had told him about, then Yorna had given him a portion of her power. To confirm this, he had jumped out, saying he would sacrifice himself.

All this was incomprehensible to Subaru, who was spinning and falling into the blue sky.

It was an apparent miracle that his body spinning with unusual force had not hit any of the surrounding buildings or decorations. Subaru didn't even know if the boy hadn't aimed him at anything.

However, Subaru was afraid of the obstacles that were passing by the edge of his vision at an incredible speed, so he fell into the blue sky, praying desperately that he wouldn't hit anything—and then he suddenly stopped.

Slowly, Subaru's thrown body reached maximum height, and was now falling headfirst towards the ground.

Subaru: "Ahhhhh—!"

The voice of the one who had left the ground now echoed, as it approached the ground again.

He didn't know how high he'd reached, but he had to brace himself. But he couldn't remember how to. In the first place, would he be able to manage to brace himself when falling from such a high place? Would he fall to the ground, and die with his whole body broken into pieces, his head crushed, his neck broken—.

—"Death" seemed to be close at hand again.

Medium: "Al-chin!"

Al: "Gotcha!"

Shortly after, mixed in with Subaru's own screams, he heard familiar strained voices.

And just like that, the sound of something stretched being slashed and the sound of several long, thin objects falling down came together, and without knowing what they were, Subaru's body hit the ground—Before that, he was caught.

Subaru: "Wah, wahhh, wahhhhh… Wagh!"

A soft sensation caught him, but his momentum couldn't be stopped, and Subaru's body fell on the softness with quite a bit of force. Once he reached the edge of that soft sensation, his thrown body rolled on the hard ground, causing a moan and the taste of sand to spread in his mouth.

His body ached everywhere. But—

Subaru: "I'm, alive?"

At the fact that he had not died, Subaru let out a dumbfounded voice.

Once he managed to pull himself up, he finally realized what had happened. —Al and Medium had saved Subaru with their quick thinking.

In order to catch Subaru as he was falling from the sky, they had jumped on a tent of a food stall on the street, detached its anchor and stretched it to make an improvised cushion.

Thanks to that, Subaru had not slammed into the ground, and his life had been saved.

However—

Medium: "Ah, ouchhhhh…"

Al: "Ahgh…"

The two people who had worked so hard to catch Subaru were not safe.

Subaru: “Ah, Al! Medium-san!”

As Subaru pulled himself up, within his field of vision were two figures lying in the street.

Of course, Al and Medium, influenced by the “infantilization”, could not perform like they usually would. They had set up a tent to catch the falling Subaru, and had been blown away by the crash.

And the bad news continued on—

Boy: “I was hoping that that would have been the end of it…”

The boy who had thrown Subaru away contorted his face in pain, as he said that.

Surveying Subaru, and then Al and Medium, also collapsed, he covered his face with his palms in anguish. —Unable to completely cover them, the flame was still present in his right eye.

Subaru: “Y, ou…”

Boy: “It’s necessary. Because this city… Because we cannot lose her.”

Subaru: “—?”

Managing to pull himself up, he drew the boy’s attention to himself.

Though determined not to let him lay his hands on Al or Medium—The boy’s answer was outside of Subaru’s imagination and far from his understanding.

It was just that the boy was desperate. And there was something else that made Subaru’s heart sway.

Subaru: “You too…”

It was the same thing that had stuck with him when he had been struggling to think in the alley.

While Taritta was fighting to help Subaru and the others escape, the faces of those facing her, with one eye burning—

—They all seemed to have the same pained look on their faces as the boy did.

Boy: “I’m sorry. I’m not going to ask you to forgive me.”

Shaking his head, the boy slowly stepped in front of Subaru, erasing any trace of hesitation in his eyes and his expression.

Even if he tried to crawl back in an attempt to escape, he could not. His legs wouldn’t move.

So he at least stared at the boy’s face, trying not to look away, and noticed something.

There was something nicely peeking out of the side of the boy’s head, from his curly hair—a small horn.

Seeing his white curly hair and horns, he thought he looked out of place, looked like a sheep.

After that, the boy with the burning eyes gave a large swing of his hand—

Subaru: “…”

Frowning and keeping his eyes open, Subaru watched, trying not to miss the boy’s actions.

???: “Uuu—!!”

A blonde girl cut in front of Subaru, and, with a dull sound and the scattering of red blood, she was sent flying, whirling around much like a leaf.

Chapter 47:
Unperishing ■■

1

Louis: “—~hk.”

Twirling and swirling, a petite frame whirled into the air with a feeble shriek.

The young girl slowly sprung from the ground, her momentum refusing to diminish, as she bounded a number of times towards the street’s edge. Colliding with the frame of the tent whose fabric had come undone, the lurched material crushed the young girl’s body beneath itself with a shrill note.

Subaru witnessed this spectacle, voicelessly.

He could not make excuses such as not being able to comprehend what had occurred in a matter of moments.

Even if it was true that he had not had the time to even stretch his hand out, all of what had transpired in a matter of moments had been definitely captured by these black pupils of his.

His mind utterly boggled, he sprinted towards the hazardous street devoid of thought.

As per usual, he was spotted by the enemy and posed with danger, when Al and Medium sustained wounds in order to save Subaru, and at the same pace—

Subaru: “…Louis.”

Louis, who had stood before Subaru and shielded him with both her arms spread open, had been strummed like a gum ball.

The one responsible was the young sheepman, horns growing amidst his white hair. His arms were slender, not too different from Subaru’s, but had thrown Subaru up to nearly ten meters in the air.

Louis had directly intercepted a single swing of the young boy's arm, subsequently getting blown away. He had noticed her blood scattering, so he could not possibly reckon she was unharmed.

Sheepboy: "Sorry."

Subaru's eyes shadowed Louis who was buried beneath the tent's wreckage. His eardrums quivered due to the enfeebled apology, and reflected in Subaru's wavering field of vision was the figure of the young boy, arms upraised once again.

He couldn't do anything so adroit as to dodge.

To begin with, Subaru's own limbs had been mangled due to falling from a tall height, so he wasn't even able to move his body properly.

Therefore, despite Louis defending him and everything, he rendered it futile as well—

Medium: "—Subaru-chin!!"

Subaru: "Ah."

Medium: "Stand!!"

A shadow leapt towards him with astonishing momentum and hammered her fair legs into the young boy's shoulders.

As the young boy stepped back, his expression one of surprise, the one to have cut into that locus was Medium, her long golden hair fluttering. Her face tinged with a shade of red, she accosted Subaru to stand up.

To Subaru, who had tumbled to the ground, rattling and trembling.

Medium: "Take care of Louis-chan!"

Yet, with no encouragement or consolation, Medium spoke to Subaru, and broke into a sprint.

Wielding the sole sword she had with both of her arms, with movements utterly separate from cool ones that appeared to be a dance, yet with all of her life, she attempted to pursue the young boy.

The young boy too put on a strong expression, seemingly surprised by her spirit rather than her strength.

Subaru: “Ghu, uuu…!”

Whilst Medium persevered, Subaru used his now trembling limbs and did his best to stand up. Afterwards, he dashed towards the tent beneath which Louis was crushed.

Removing the parts of the collapsed structure one by one, he attempted to recover Louis who was trapped beneath the wreckage.

Subaru: “Louis, Louis! A-Are you alive! Hey, Louis!”

Desperately calling, Subaru once again felt warmth well up within his eyes.

That bothersome warmth seemed to have been eagerly awaiting its time to come forth from the interior of Subaru’s countenance since earlier. Ignoring it, hurrying and hastening, he cleared away the scraps.

And—

Louis: “…Uu.”

Subaru: “Louis!”

A frail groan resounded, and Subaru discovered Louis’s form, sullied by dust and debris.

Having gotten buried beneath the broken tent, Louis rolled up within the space created by the fallen brace, and barely managed to not get pulverized underneath.

That was relieving. But immense anxiety instantly followed his relief.

Subaru: “I can’t, move this…”

The fallen brace was about as thick as Subaru’s torso, refusing to move whether pushed or pulled. Even via the use of the 『Principle of Leverage』, he couldn’t find a befitting weight as balance.

And whilst searching for a way to haul Louis out, he came upon something else.

—What was oozily sullying Louis’s white robes was not dust, but blots of red.

Subaru: “…Ah.”

Struck with terror, his limbs turned cold and thoughts froze.

This was what it meant to be deadened. It wasn’t as though he had shed any blood, but he had no clue where the blood flowing within him had gone. Shouldn’t a different spot be warmed by flowing blood.

However, solely his heartbeats, were loud enough to seem as though his heart would detonate.

Louis: “Aaa…”

Still leaking frail groans, the red blots on Louis’s robes spread.

His cold limbs unmoving, rather than assuming effort to remove the debris, he could not even comfort her by doing his best to remove it.

Subaru: “Louis, Louis…”

He continued to call Louis’s name, using his quivering voice.

His voice cracked, and he failed to do even this decently. His tongue went numb—no, Subaru’s heart, was callously rejecting calling her name.

Come to think of it, Subaru had kept even calling Louis’s name to a minimum.

Ever since he had been hurled from the colossal Tower along with Rem, he had always placed Louis beside him. Subaru had always been vigilant towards her, shunned her, maltreated her.

Yet, never even once had Louis done anything harmful or oppressive towards Subaru.

He did not wish for Rem to despise him. He did not wish for his surroundings to dread him.

Fearing these things, Subaru had always refused to come in contact with Louis, and always ultimately deferred deciding what to do with Louis.

Why did he fear Louis so much.

His benumbed brain, his chilly limbs, his parched tongue, his heart verging onto erupting, did not let him understand.

He couldn't remember very well, what Louis had done to him.

It seemed his memories had been befogged, in these moments, he was unable to open the drawer of reminiscences.

However, there was one thing clear to him, without needing to open that drawer.

That Louis had shed blood attempting to shield Subaru.

—That alone was a truth he could not forget, could not avert his eyes from.

Subaru: "Don't, die…"

Louis: "…"

Subaru: "Don't die, Louis! You can't, you can't die…! You can't…!"

Pushing his now small body into the brace's gaps, Subaru knelt beside Louis.

Instead of then hauling Louis out, he simply and unavailingly vocalised. Taking Louis's hand, gripping it tight with both of his palms, he desperately articulated whilst imbuing it with a prayer.

Subaru: "Please don't die…!"

Forgetting to even search for something he could do to prevent her from dying, he voiced an absurd wish.

To this trembling voice of Subaru's, Louis's eyelids faintly opened, and—

Louis: "—Ua, uu."

A weak voice escaped her, as the young girl's pupils regained faint strength.

2

Medium: "Hiya~a~a~a ~hk!"

Waving a single one of her dual swords she had gripped both of her hands, Medium opposed the young boy before her.

Whilst putting up a strong act, the young sheepman, however, easily blocked Medium's strike with his hoisted arm. —Verbatim, intercepted the blade with his arm, and repelled it.

Medium: "A~rgh, so solid! I can't cut through at all! So unfair!"

Since earlier, Medium had been slashing with her sword with the entirety of her might, only to be thwarted by the young boy's burly body on each instance.

His skin, his hair, his fingers, his head, all parts of him were so solid that she had been completely brought to her knees.

Him not sustaining any attacks was also a problem, but aside from that—

Sheepman: "—~hk!"

Medium: "Dangerous!!"

The young boy’s violently swung arm grazed past Medium and crashed into the ground, feeling tremors coming from the ground, a hole larger than the hammered arm was opened in the ground.

The stupendousness of the young boy’s attack power also made her dizzy. The reason why Medium managed to avoid getting wholly smote by the attack was thanks to the interlude in the young boy’s movements.

Medium: “Extremely sturdy, seems very powerful too, but his techniques are poor!”

It was as though he was a newborn who had taken birth into a large body, Medium pondered.

She had never seen a newborn who had taken birth into a large body, so she only contemplated what she sensed yet felt that annotation to be perfectly suited.

For now, all she had to do was to spar with that newborn, but—

Medium: “I need to hurry up, or others will gather here too…”

Attaining a flavor of mud upon licking her lips, Medium was scorched with the impatience to not overstay.

They had coincidentally dashed to a street with not many pursuers, but if they continued to be uproarious they would get immediately noticed and the young boy’s allies would assuredly all gather at this place.

If people bigger than the young boy or people with a good grasp on techniques were to arrive, then she may not be capable of crossing swords anymore.

Had she not been alone, then she could’ve at least had a plan of action, and yet.

Medium: “Al-chin! Are you listening, Al-chin!”

Medium raised her voice, whilst leaping and bouncing to the young boy’s large swings.

Medium was desperately calling for the veiled young boy crouched at the edge of her sight—no, for Al. On one hand, he was a child, in a condition that handling weapons was far worse for him than Medium, but she wished to rely on the possibility that the ways to counter dangerous situations were more than just herself.

Al: "…"

However, he did not respond to Medium's implores.

It wasn't as though he had hit his head and fainted when he got blown off, either. Al was conscious, and once had attempted to sincerely assist in combat.

At present, he had abruptly halted his feet and had knelt down, crestfallen.

Remaining crouched, Al was obstinately staring down upon his right hand through his veil—

Medium: "…Wh, y?"

She whispered with a shudder.

As though he had let go of, or had lost what he was supposed to have kept within his hand's grasp.

Medium: "Al-chin…!"

Gazing sidelong at Al who forbore to stand, diffidence was inserted within Medium's innermost mind.

Those very moments, strength waned from her hands wielding a weapon, and Medium powerfully gritted her teeth.

—This is how it's always been.

Once Medium's own feelings withered, so did the strength in her body companionably. Therefore, Medium always conducted herself as positive, loud, upright.

If her feelings were bright and lively, then Medium could work to her best efforts. The reason why her older brother Flop was always cheering her on with a “Do your best!” was to push her on and support her as well.

However, Flop was not here. Nor anyone who would tell her to do her best.

Everyone had their hands full with their own problems, and Medium had also become small, hence she was unable to wield anything more than one sword, and was on the verge of losing to a tiny boy.

???: “—There they are!!”

Medium: “Ah.”

A voice echoed, further augmenting Medium’s diffidence.

As she dodged the young boy’s waved arm and shifted her positions, Medium widened her eyes. What was reflected within her vision, from the opposite side of the street, appeared enemy reinforcements with flames harboured in one eye.

The ferociously rushing men drew near Al’s rear, who was knelt down. Even if she were to instantaneously rush towards that direction, she must evade the young boy in-between.

—I won’t make it. They’ll die. Al-chin, Subaru-chin, Louis-chan, they all will.

Everyone will die.

Verging on dropping the sword she grasped, Medium desperately called for her older brother within her mind.

If only she once more had her older brother’s voice, cheers, support.

However, the new troops approaching Al were far swifter than the reach of illusionary encouragement.

Al’s small body, was mutilated by the hand stretching from behind—

???: “—Will you yet not move, fool.”

Before those sharp claws could reach Al, a leg stretching from the side kicked his shoulder away. Al’s body toppled sideways, narrowly eluding the attack seeking to gouge his spine out.

And, the one to have undertaken this violent counteraction was a man with his face concealed by an oni mask.

Medium: “Abel-chin?”

His name spilled from her mouth, gaping wide in wonder, and Abel’s senses turned towards her for a brief moment.

Feeling the heat of exchanging a glance in spite of the mask, Medium’s shoulders slightly slumped. Abel, who had left it to Medium and the others to confront the young boy, now stepped forth into the battlefield himself.

He couldn’t stand onlooking anymore, she might get scolded with these words.

She disliked being scolded.

On copious instances in the past she had been scolded and hit. All the more when despite her small stature, Medium used to eat a lot. Getting hit, getting scolded, repeat.

Hence, upon gauging she would get scolded, her body curled up—

Abel: “Medium.”

Her name called, Medium slumped, dreading the reprimand that followed.

However, Abel ignored her fright, and resumed.

Saying—

Abel: “—Brace yourself.”

Medium: “…”

A brusque tone, dilating her eyes to the voice that quaked her eardrums, Medium powerfully grit her now-small teeth. Gritting, distorting her cheeks, making her gold hair flit.

Medium: “Mhm! I’ll do my best—!!”

Her back pushed by force surging to a nearly fictitious extent, Medium smote the young boy before her.

The young boy stepped back, startled by that attack, and she chased him, striking his chin up with her sword’s ridge bounding from below and kicked his defenseless build, trampling his stretched knees, and struck an identical kick to his head.

With Medium suddenly turning the tide, the young boy became one-sidedly defensive.

Whilst judging this to be akin to bullying, Medium brandished her fist and pounded again and again. In the midst of her punches, a voice was resurrected within her mind.

—That’s right. Paying ‘em back twice the fold of what they gave you feels pretty great, right!

Those were the words of the benefactor who had rescued Medium and Flop out of harrowing circumstances.

The benefactor who taught her how to fight, how to live; recalling those words, Medium smiled.

Smiling, she thought “It doesn’t feel good to hit someone much either~!”.

Medium: “Hiya~a~a~a!”

Thinking so, she thwacked a sweep of all her strength into the young boy’s head, and his small body was blown off.

An attack that normally beheaded from the side, was nothing more than a strike for the sturdy young boy. Even so, somehow finishing him off alone, she must head to assist Al and Abel—

???: “You spunky little…!”

Medium: “Auh! Oh no!”

Excessively concentrating on her battle against the young boy, she neglected having caution towards the opponent who drew from behind.

Her hair violently grabbed, Medium’s body was swiftly lifted. Feet suspended in the air, she failed to counterattack at once.

Medium: “Ugh~! A~h, enough!”

Lurching her legs, tearing up from the pain of her hair being pulled, Medium looked back to see the one carrying her was a rhinoman giant larger than Medium’s unshrunk body.

Skin and flesh thicker than that of the young boy, Medium’s kicks amounted to nothing for him.

Medium: “Sorry! I can’t escape!”

Writhing and struggling, Medium inclined her head and earnestly hollered.

Upon looking, the kicked Al remained collapsed on the street’s ground and the one responsible, Abel, had been surrounded by the arrived reinforcements and cornered to a wall.

Medium too was aware it would be impossible for the delicate Abel to finish them all off.

Thus—

Medium: “Abel-chin! Take Al-chin and run away!”

She wished for them to somehow aptly create a window and escape.

Upon Medium’s desperate voice, the men surrounding Abel clogged the escape route as to block his line of sight. With that, one of the men—a middle aged oxman, approached Abel.

Oxman: “I’m sorry but we can’t let you escape. Right here, you all will…”

Abel: “—You are an oxman, the one earlier was a sheepman.”

Oxman: “What?”

Abel: “The ones surrounding the inn were all horned as well… anyone can comprehend upon grasping the conditions until now. It is the horned races that are aiming for us.”

No fright saturated Abel’s voice, who was surrounded and supposedly posed with a predicament. Rather, words transmitted from his overbearing conduct despite being surrounded perturbed the men.

—No, what was perturbing for them was not Abel’s brazen attitude alone, but his remark itself as well.

Medium: “Ho, rned…”

Articulating so, Medium shifted her eyes and gazed at the rhinoman who clutched her hair.

The gigantic rhinoman’s focus too was concentrated on Abel’s comment just now. She discerned the presence of a single, stocky horn above the rhinoman’s large nose.

Now that it was pointed out, she recalled the young sheepman from earlier as well as the multitude of people Taritta had lured back at the inn, all had horns as well.

Medium: “But, what about it!”

Abel: “Fool. —Is that not the principal root of this situation.”

Medium: “Huh?”

Abel replied, as though having heard Medium’s outcry.

However, Medium could not see him from her side, and despite being told that was the reason, she failed to comprehend any of its significance. Rather than properly explaining such that she could understand, she wished for him to resume without her grasp on the matter. If not, at this rate—

Abel: "—You can try."

Oxman: "Eh?"

That was not a response to the outcry of Medium's heart.

For certain, those words, enounced with such solemnity, had been asserted whilst he glared at the oxman standing at the vanguard of the men surrounding him.

The oxman widened his eyes and fixedly glared back at Abel. To the oxman's reaction, Abel once again resumed.

Abel: "You can try, whether you can kill me."

Oxman: "…Will there be anything difficult about chopping your slender neck?"

The man's left eye flared scarlet as he stomped on the ground.

Even without the effects of Yorna's Soul Marriage Technique, it would be a simple matter for the man's bulky arm to shatter Abel's neck.

And, the resolve to kill necessary for fracturing his neck, had already been attained by the men.

Heedless, Abel intrepidly crossed his arms, and pierced the opponent through the black pupils of his oni mask—

Abel: "The answer to whether it is easy or not, lies ahead of action. Thus, you can try. If you have that caliber, flames shall extol you. However—"

Oxman: "H-However?"

Abel: "If you lack that caliber, flames shall scorch even your soul. —Now, what will you act upon."

Oxman: "…"

So asserted Abel, hands crossed, whilst the oxman drowned in silence.

He was losing the psychological battle against the insouciantly standing slender man before his eyes. Of course, it would be the man's victory beyond a smidgen of doubt when it came down to brute force. Yet, what was the deal with his composed attitude.

Was the answer to that not conceived within the seemingly deceptive words avowed just now.

Abel: "You can try. —Whether you can surpass the flames named judgement."

Oxman: "Gh, ugh, u~u~gh…!"

The pressed man quivered his bulky throat and groaned. The man was covered in copious sweat, tension straining his entire body, and not even his comrades reached out to him.

From the point of having seen Abel's eyes, they had been taken off the stage.

The qualification to respond to Abel's speech lay only with the man standing before him and nobody else.

A grating note of gnashed teeth echoed, echoed, echoed—

Oxman: "Agh, A~a~a~argh!!"

With a note of cracking gritted teeth, the man raised both of his arms as though pressed by that ache.

An attack that, rather than breaking his neck, sought to crush Abel's body and life altogether. With a blow from the man's arms, thick like a log, Abel's slender frame would get smashed to a pulp.

Medium floundered in an attempt to escape her constraints, but to absolutely no avail.

Al remained collapsed, paying no heed to Abel’s predicament either.

And Subaru and Louis as well were—

Medium: “—Eh?”

Louis had been buried under the collapsed tent, and Subaru subsequently rushed to rescue her. She could see Subaru crawl into the wreckage, and clasp Louis’s hand.

Seeing, the buried Louis faintly move, and——The next instant, the two’s form abruptly vanished from underneath the tent.

Louis: “Uu!”

That juncture, the vanished Louis shot through from directly below the oxman’s chin, who had both his arms upraised.

3

Subaru seemed to be unknowing of what had occurred.

He had clung to Louis, who had gotten buried under the tent, slowly shedding blood. And struck her with arbitrary words, telling her to not die rather than comforting or rescuing her.

Subaru thought she had moved upon those words, and on the immediately subsequent instant.

Subaru's field of vision altered, as he tasted a sensation of the world being overturned.

Subaru: "Uh, egh."

Not anything like extreme speed or halting time.

Subaru had truly been moved to a separate location in the blink of an eye.

That too—

Abel: "You…"

Abel uttered so, his breath halting ever-so-slightly upon Subaru's arrival before his eyes.

Abel leisurely reclined his spine on the wall, arms crossed; by his being and the presence of the men surrounding their environs, Subaru verged on falling to his feet out of stupefaction.

His tears that had welled up out of disquietude for Louis now retracted, occluding his throat.

And when it came to Louis, who had eluded his mind due to this sudden phenomenon—

Louis: "Aa, uu!"

Oxman: "Goagh?!"

Twirling her body, Louis pranced into the space between the men with the movement and agility of a pinball, striking the vitals of all, such as the head, torso and knees, compelling them to withdraw.

Distending their eyes to her ability and might, the men all simultaneously leaned backward and gaped.

And during the interval opened by the men's astonishment and anguish, Louis mobilized herself onto the subsequent action.

Louis: "Uaau."

Crossing the gap between the men, Louis escaped their encirclement. Her limbs on the ground like an animal, she pulled the ground from both of her hands as is and pared its surface.

An act like that of violently pulling a carpet spread on the floor—of course, a carpet couldn't possibly be spread atop a street in the middle of a town. However, it seemed like the ground shifted.

The men consequently all lost their balance, and tumbled on the spot.

???: "Wha?! What's, this kid…!"

Louis: "Au! Auau!"

???: "Shithead!"

Amidst the disbalanced men, solely a young deerman narrowly managed to stand firm, smacked his lips and then broke into a sprint in an attempt to seize Louis. Louis threw the ground's surface she had pared mere moments ago at the young man. The moment the young man immediately scythed it aside with his arm, the ground frictionlessly returned to its former state.

In other words, became a wall of earth accompanied by befitting mass and texture.

Deerman: "Bugah?!"

Colliding head-on with the wall of earth, the young man inclined backwards after getting a taste of the counterattack.

Subsequently tearing down the ruptured wall of earth, Louis flew outwards and her soles captured the young man’s visage, the young man this time for certain toppled over with a bleeding nose.

???: “You little!”

Louis: “Uaau!”

Uprighting themselves with a delay, the men went over the young man’s fallen body and drew closer to Louis. However, the moment their fingers reached her, Louis erased her form yet again like an illusion.

The following instant, the young girl appeared atop a wall about two meters above, and pulled the wall’s surface identical to what she had done with the ground earlier, and proceeded to return it back.

The wall’s surface came detached together with its mass and solidity, and rained upon the men.

???: “A~a~a~a~argh—!!”

Shrieks and bellows reverberated through the street, as the men endowed with immense strength were made sport of by Louis alone.

Subaru viewed this spectacle, slumped and stupefied.

Subaru: “L-Louis, that’s…”

Raising his arm with a trembling voice, Subaru cowered in terror towards the nightmarish spectacle transpiring before his eyes.

Nightmare, yes, a nightmare. This was, beyond a shadow of the doubt, the nightmare Subaru had feared.

Paring off the ground and wall per her will, teleporting short distances in the blink of an eye, demonstrating combat power on par with rare martial artists, Louis thrashed the men from next to next.

It was evident that was not transcendental might which the young girl possessed by birth—no, Natsuki Subaru was au fait with all up to even that power's origin.

That was, that was, that was the power that mustn't be, the ■■ that must perish—.

Abel: "I had reckoned she was no mere girl, I understand now."

Subaru: "Eh…?"

Beside Subaru, who was yet cowering and capable of naught but watching the circumstance in a daze, so muttered Abel.

As he murmured whilst watching the same scene, Subaru's eyes wavered, unknowing of his true intent. Keeping Subaru's state by the edge of his sight, Abel pointed forward, towards Louis who was one-sidedly thrashing their pursuers,

Abel: "So this is the reason why you had that girl accompany you around."

Subaru: "Y-you're wro…"

He instantly sought to snarl at him in repudiation.

However, if he were to then be asked why he had Louis accompany him around, then he would fail to provide any answer. That was how it had been so far, and that was how it would be now as well.

Rhinoman: "Stop! You better listen or this girl will be—gah?!"

Louis: "Auau!"

Beholding this, the rhinoman raised his voice in an attempt to halt the collapse of his comrades.

He attempted to take Medium, who was clutched within his gigantic arm, as a hostage but Louis's attack reached him before he could communicate his threat.

Louis warped for a few meters in distance, and knocked the man's head from both sides using both her arms with all her strength. His ears pounded by her palms, his eyes whirled and went white as he crumbled.

Medium: “Wah kya~h… L-Louis-chan?”

Louis: “Aaauuu.”

Suddenly released, Medium tumbled to the ground as Louis jumped before her. Patting Louis’s head, she surveyed the environs, staggered.

Within Medium’s vision, all those who had gathered on the street were lying on the ground, collapsed.

Louis, all by herself, had trounced greater than ten enemies.

Abel: “Yours and the clown’s true nature has been exposed. Well, it is no trouble.”

Subaru: “Th-This makes no sense… What the heck’s going on!”

Abel: “Do not create a racket. It shall lure the other men. You go and pick up the clown.”

Abel jerked his chin, devoid of emotion towards having escaped his predicament, and gave his command.

Ahead of where he denoted was an immobile Al crouched on the ground. Fearing if he had sustained a terrible injury whilst they were not looking, Subaru hurriedly rushed to him.

Subaru: “A-Al! Hey, are you alright! Are you wounded…”

Al: “…I’m not, alright.”

Subaru: “—! Are you wounded?! Where? We need to treat it immediately…”

Al: “That’s not what I’m saying!”

Subaru: “—~hk.”

Having rushed to his side, Subaru jolted Al's shoulders, at whom he yelled with a potent voice. His head hanging low, he elevated his shivering hand and tightly clenched his right palm.

Al: "—Useless."

Subaru: "…Th-That's not"

Al: "I'm useless. My present self's, gonna die."

Subaru: "—? What, does that"

Mean, Subaru attempted to ask Al, his voice quivering.

However, Subaru's doubt was intercepted by a distressed voice reaching from behind.

Medium: "Abel-chin! You mustn't do anything cruel!"

Abel: "Remain silent. There are things that must be enquired."

Medium: "But still…"

Medium's emotional voice, to whom answered Abel's calm voice. Turning around, it was to the edge of the street that the two had headed, fallen there was a young sheepman—the young boy who had thrown Subaru up in the air with all his might, when he had first arrived at this street.

The young boy awakened his body, a distinct terror on his countenance.

Understandable. He had not become smaller, but was a kid in accordance with his physicality. Having been utterly overwhelmed by adults, those adults surrounding him from all directions, and on top of that being looked down upon by a man masked with a devil's visage, there was no way he would not feel terrified.

Abel would display no mercy to the horrified young boy.

Seizing Medium's shoulder who attempted to stop him and compelling her to step back, Abel crouched before the young boy.

The distance between their faces shortened, the flames ablaze in the fearful young boy’s eye clouded his vigor.

And, Abel ignored the fearful young boy’s attitude and hurled a question.

A question, concise and straightforward—

Abel: “The mediator of horned races who devised this affair—that girl who named herself Tanza, where is she hiding. Divulge it, swiftly.”

So he enquired.

Chapter 48:
Purposes Entangling in the Demon City

1

Focusing on the sheepboy, Subaru's eyes widened at Abel's relentless questioning.

That was because the name weaved from his mouth was a far too unexpected one.

Subaru: "That young girl, Tanza…?"

The image of a deergirl in a kimono popped up in Subaru's bewildered mind.

What was striking about Yorna's attendant, the girl who'd shown up at the castle tower the previous day, was that she was very composed and unsociable, even though she was still a child.

Abel was asserting that the girl had been the one to plan this.

Subaru: "Th-That doesn't make sense! Why'd she do that to us… Bwha!"

Louis: "Uau!"

Once he raised his voice to hear Abel's thoughts, Subaru was shocked by an impact and flipped over. Looking over at it, Subaru saw a smiling Louis on his back.

In a tremendous rampage, Louis had knocked down nearly ten opponents in the blink of an eye. Involuntarily, Subaru gulped because of the innocent-looking girl.

—Louis's strength, during her rampage, was unmistakably the same thing he had seen at the Tower of Sand.

That power was not originally Louis's, but rather the very power stolen from someone else who had worked hard and honed it. In other words, she had used Gluttony's—.

Subaru: "…G-Get off of me."

Louis: "Au?"

Subaru: "Get the heck off of me!"

Pushing the shoulder of the little girl on his chest, Subaru forcefully raised himself up. And so, his momentum caused Louis to fall onto her butt—and then, coming into his view, was her stomach, covered in white fabric stained red.

Seeing that, he remembered that she was injured,

Subaru: "You're wounded! We need to get you treated…!"

Louis: "Au! Aauu!"

In a hurry, he rolled up the girl's clothes to check the injured area. But, because it felt ticklish to Louis, she lashed out, trying to resist by pushing Subaru's face and neck.

Ignoring her resistance, he somehow managed to roll up her clothes and check the wound. He found no evident wounds, although there was a trace of oozing blood.

Subaru: "It's healed…?"

Certainly, there were traces of bleeding but no wounds.

That stumped him completely, and then Louis violently pushed the dumbfounded Subaru's chest with both hands. The answer to the question of what would happen if Louis struck Subaru for real, however, was demonstrated by the many figures lying on the street.

In any case—

Abel: "—Answer me. Where is Tanza?"

While Subaru was making sure that Louis was okay, Abel's interrogation continued.

The terrifying, high-pressure interview seemed to be working not only thanks to Abel's gaze, but also due to Medium's blade, as she was standing behind him as a threat. Even without the intention of doing anything, just standing behind Abel would have had an effect.

Indeed, as the boy looked between Abel and Medium in turn, he made a sound from his thin throat.

Sheepboy: "Ah…"

Abel: "This makes it the third time. Answer me. Do not presume that there shall be a fourth."

It was a cruel tone of voice, so cold that it was as if it chilled Subaru to the bottom of his heart. Hearing that, the boy's mouth twitched a few times, and then the fire returned to his eyes a little,

Sheepboy: "A-as if you don't know! If it's about where Tanza is, then you guys should…!"

Abel: "…"

Sheepboy: "You guys've done something to Tanza… That's why! We've attacked you because of that!"

Following that biting remark, the boy's arms reached out to Abel in front of him.

With reckless disregard for his own safety, his fingertips tried to grab Abel's throat and crush it. But before he could reach him, a small palm pressed down on the boy's forehead, and—

Louis: "Au!"

Just like that, the back of the boy's head was slammed into the ground, causing him to faint.

Pitifully, a moan leaked out from the boy and he fainted. Rolling over, and he then let go of his consciousness.

Subaru: "L-Louis…"

Yet again, in the blink of an eye, Louis's figure disappeared and reappeared elsewhere.

It was something she had demonstrated many times at the Tower of Sand, the short-distance warping used by Gluttony—watching her mastery of it, Subaru felt as if his heart was going to break.

The fact that she still had that power meant that she was still Louis —Louis Arneb.

The girl from that white world, who had separated Subaru from his heart, and tried to take away his soul completely.

After having mistakenly thought of his Return by Death ability as a blessing, she had dubbed Subaru as a monster.

Abel: "We need to find Olbart immediately."

Without regard to the previous exchange that had nearly taken his life or, conversely, saved his life, Abel muttered while slowly standing up.

—Finding Olbart.

Subaru, of course, generally agreed with this approach.

Just, Subaru didn't know why he had said that once again, at this moment. Plus, it came right after the boy had told them something about Tanza that made no sense.

Medium: "Al-chin, can you stand?"

Al: "…Y-yeah."

Sheathing her weapon, Medium reached out to Al, who was crouching.

Al, his face hidden by a cloth, answered in such a terribly somber voice that, even though Subaru could not make out his expression, he could imagine that he'd gone pale.

Shelving his concern for Al, Subaru finally brushed off the dirt from his butt and stood up. Then he turned his face upward towards Abel,

Subaru: “What did you mean by what you said just now?”

Abel: “What are you asking about?”

Subaru: “That…! That the Tanza girl’s the mastermind, but that we should try to find Olbart-san anyway, and all that stuff! You know what I mean!”

Abel: “Hmm.”

With a tiny snort, Abel touched the cheek of his oni mask in a mocking manner.

Partly out of impatience and partly out of frustration, that gesture really got on Subaru’s nerves. So, Subaru flew into a rage and, taking a nimble leap, ripped the oni mask off Abel’s face.

Then, with a face that had not been exposed in a long time, Abel looked down condescendingly towards Subaru with disapproval.

Abel: “What in the world are you doing?”

Subaru: “That’s what I want to ask you! Don’t just figure it all out by yourself, explain it to me properly! We’re comrades!”

Abel: “—Comrades, you say?”

Subaru: “Uh…”

Subaru’s intensity rapidly decreased, being stared at directly by Abel’s true face.

Although he had called him “comrade” to his face, that expression might have offended Abel. To begin with, Subaru had some qualms about describing Abel as a “comrade”.

He regretted that he’d gone with the flow and spoken that. But he couldn’t voice that reflection, because it would be like apologizing.

Medium: “That’s right, Abel-chin. We’re comrades, so you have to explain it to us.”

Instead of Subaru, the one to speak was the one who’d made Al stand up, Medium.

Putting her hands on her hips, her entire small body was being used to protest against Abel. In response to her straightforward words, Abel’s dark eyes narrowed, and,

Abel: “The assassins at the inn and here, those people are all of horned races.”

Subaru: “Horned… You mean people with horns. And what’s with them?”

Abel: “—. The horned races have a history of persecution. Because the horns resemble those of Witchbeasts, they were shunned in the past.”

Subaru: “Oh…”

Abel’s indifferent narrative caused Subaru to widen his eyes.

Having horns, and a history of being persecuted because of it. — Such prejudice was very close to Subaru’s heart, and therefore unforgivable.

Emilia had also been discriminated against in the past for similar reasons; because her physical characteristics and origin were similar to the Witch’s, many people had harbored hatred for her.

And demi-humans as well as those of the horned races dealt with a similar past.

Subaru: “But why would those people want to attack us? I know people’ve been scared of their horns, but I don’t get it.”

Abel: “You may be a young child, but you are still required to use your head a little. For those with a history of being persecuted for having horns, this city… The way things are in Chaosflame is their salvation.”

Subaru: “Salvation… that means a “safe haven”, right?”

Abel: “—Yorna Mishigure never lets go of what lies within her bosom. She has even revolted for the sake of one dead deergirl.”

Folding his arms, the Emperor, the target of the rebellion itself, spoke of the circumstances behind it.

The reason why Yorna, someone who had revolted many times in the past, had bared her fangs at the Emperor she served—was for the sake of one single person.

What Subaru thought upon being told this, was—

Subaru: “Then, she’s a good person…!”

Abel: “Fool. What a narrow, simple conclusion. —Yorna Mishigure is a woman devoted to those who love her. And she holds no mercy towards those outside that circle.”

Medium: “Really~, but I think it’s normal to be kind to the people you like!”

Subaru: “I think so too.”

Agreeing with Medium’s and Subaru’s view, Louis raised her hands and voiced an “Au!”. Abel took one look at them with cold eyes, then let out a small sigh,

Abel: “What is paramount is the fact that the horned races, with their past history of being persecuted, have found peace in this city. And the existence of Yorna Mishigure is indispensable for maintaining that peace. In other words—”

Subaru: “In other words?”

Tilting his head, he waited for Abel to continue.

But for a moment, Abel looked at Subaru, his head still tilted, while gathering his words. Subaru did not understand the meaning of this, but Abel took several blinks’ worth of time before continuing.

Abel: “In other words, for those of the horned races, our presence is an intolerable enemy that shall rock the very ground on which they stand, as we seek the support of Yorna Mishigure for a full-scale rebellion against the Imperial Capital.”

Subaru: “Oh…”

After those words, Subaru finally understood the true meaning of the sheepboy’s words and actions.

At the time he grabbed Subaru’s arm as he ran out into the street and threw him, the boy had looked pained—no, not only the boy, but all those who were attacking them looked pained.

Those were feelings of guilt for driving Subaru and the others away, and of fear that they would lose their place in the world. That was why the boy had apologized at the time he flung Subaru.

Subaru: “So these people have been putting in their utmost effort too…”

Abel: “Is that sympathy, or is it pity? Either way, you have no leeway for that. Don’t forget the fact that these people have turned their hostility against us. Everything that tries to live and everything alive, both possess their own circumstances.”

Medium: “Sheesh~, Abel-chin! The way you’re talking is awful! Also, I still don’t really get it, why did you ask these people about Tanza-chan? Plus, what about finding Gramps?”

Abel: “…From the way they were talking earlier, it must be true that they are unaware of Tanza’s whereabouts. For some reason, they suspect that we have concealed her location from them. Why would that be?”

Subaru: “Why, that’s… For what reason?”

Looking down at the unconscious boy, Subaru racked his brains over Abel’s question.

Before Louis knocked him out, the boy had snapped at Abel for asking about Tanza’s whereabouts. To Subaru, it seemed like there were no lies in the boy's attitude of fury.

So the boy, as well as his group, must have thought that Subaru's group had done something to Tanza.

Subaru: "So that's why they attacked us?"

Abel: "That is how it goes. But the fact that we have not harmed Tanza remains. Then where did that girl vanish off to? Moreover, where did the hundred-or-so people from the horned races appear from?"

Subaru: "From where? They were waiting outside, right?"

Abel: "On whose orders?"

And with that immediate response, Subaru was at a loss for words.

Letting his head work, he started to assemble a pillar of answers for Abel's questions. But before it could be assembled properly,

Al: "—That lil' miss must've instructed them in advance."

And so, from behind, Al stole the answer.

He had been in a state of being unable to speak just a while before. Subaru turned his head to the direction from which his voice came, calling him out with "Al…". Al's mood seemed like it had not returned to its usual state.

Al: "Sorry, bro, for worrying you… Well, things haven't gotten any better."

Abel: "Your mood has yet to improve? That too must be the effect of Olbart's technique."

Al: "…I don't disagree with that. I'd love to talk about it, but we should finish what we were talking about first. So, let's talk about Lil' Miss Tanza."

Waving his now-small hand, Al answered in a voice that consciously suppressed his emotion.

Al’s condition was worrisome, but he was right, they were in the middle of a conversation. —It was certain that Tanza had gathered all the people outside in advance.

Subaru: “Uhhh, well, so you’re saying that Tanza gathered her horned comrades around the inn ahead of time and was planning on them attacking us? But, if that’s the case…”

Medium: “Where’d Tanza-chan go?”

The question with which Medium completed Subaru’s words was the answer that had not appeared in him just yet.

Tanza had appeared at the inn to deliver the instructions from Yorna, and should’ve gone straight back. Even though he could understand how she had arranged everything, the reaction of her comrades outside was weird.

At least, that Subaru’s group had done something to Tanza was what the sheepboy had believed.

Al: “So her comrades mustn’t have seen her safe and sound… No, they probably didn’t see her come out of the inn in the first place.”

Abel: “That too is reasonable. It could be that they did not attempt any radical measures until we left the inn, in light of the possibility that Tanza was inside talking to us.”

Medium: “But! Where’s Tanza-chan then—”

Medium, with wide eyes and her head in a state of turmoil, let out something resembling a scream.

However, Subaru could understand Abel’s thoughts once they were so carefully ordered. Perhaps, this was what Abel was thinking.

That was—

Subaru: “That girl… If Tanza isn’t outside the inn, she’s hiding somewhere. —And that means Olbart-san’s helping her?!”

—To take back Tanza, a group of people belonging to horned races had attacked Subaru's group.

However, since they had been waiting outside the inn since the start, they must've had a meeting beforehand on what they should do if something happened to Tanza.

And within that inn, the only possible conspirator for Tanza was—

Abel: "—None other than Olbart Dunkelkenn."

Al: "…It's also possible that the inn's employees worked together to hide her, y'know."

Abel: "Naturally, I am not blind to that possibility. But I have firm assurance."

Al: "Firm assurance?"

In response to Al's questioning voice, Abel nodded deeply.

Why was he convinced that Olbart and Tanza were conspiring together? That would be because—

Abel: "He took the trouble to challenge us to a mere child's game of running and hiding. That is the sort of vicious plot the old man is fond of."

Subaru: "Find me if you can~, like that?"

Abel: "Correct."

Subaru couldn't help but make a disgusted face at Abel's affirmation as he corrected his posture.

Abel's guess, based on the badness of Olbart's character, was spot on. Yes, Subaru was also intuitively convinced of the reason for the disgusted look.

The fact that he had suggested "hide-and-seek" was itself a metaphor for hiding Tanza.

Subaru: “But if that’s why we were attacked, then it’s a rule violation!”

Abel: “Are you referring to the rule about not harming each other? He would get away with it by saying, “I did not do anything”. Even more so if Tanza is in league with him.”

Subaru: “Guh… Such an unfair scheme…!”

Abel: “Therefore, the priority shall be to locate Olbart. Then, Tanza’s whereabouts shall be simultaneously disclosed. But if the plan is revealed, the pretext for playing “hide-and-seek” may vanish.”

He had now understood how the fact that Olbart and Tanza could be together had been discovered. But he didn’t understand the part on how that would be the end of the game of “hide-and-seek”.

His eyebrows furrowing, a frown formed on Subaru’s face. Now facing him, Abel snatched the oni mask from Subaru’s hand with violence.

Startled, Subaru exclaimed an “Ah!” as, in front of him, Abel put the oni mask back on,

Abel: “Olbart’s goal is to ascertain if we are worth negotiating with. He is more interested in this than in childish ploys. Therefore, if we can unravel his true intentions, we needn’t go through the trouble of a contrived process.”

Subaru: “Ahh, okay, I think I get it…”

Abel: “—. Is the extent of your intelligence becoming poor in earnest?”

To Subaru, who was barely following his explanation, Abel muttered so with a sigh.

He couldn’t counter Abel’s point. Subaru, too, was aware that his head was clearly out of whack. However, he wasn’t aware of to what extent.

Perhaps his thinking was shoddy, his words didn't come out right, or he just wasn't very smart.

Subaru: "I wasn't even a smart guy to begin with…"

Abel: "As for your case, the issue is that you have lost your ability to comprehend and your creativity. The details of Olbart's technique are unknown, but one theory would be that the body reflects the ups and downs of its own Od."

Subaru: "Th-The Od's ups and downs…?"

Abel: "It means that there is a connection between the Od and the body, their growth and decay. So to speak, we can assume that Olbart has meddled with your… or rather, all of your Ods."

Abel looked over at Subaru, Al, and Medium, whose bodies remained shrunk.

That explanation didn't ring a bell to Subaru. As was the case with his broken Gate, which was used for magic, he had no real sense of the explanation about Mana and Od, whose existence he had originally been unaware of.

That was only true for Subaru, but not for—

Al: "—So, it's because that old man was messing with our bodies."

Subaru was surprised to hear Al grumble so hatefully.

Looking over to him, Al was touching his mask-covered forehead with trembling fingers. That he was clearly showing to be uncontrollably irritated often was evidence that he, too, was having psychological effects.

The mental capacity which they were able to have as adults was being lost as they became more childish.

Al: "That shitty geezer, I'm gonna get you for this…!"

Abel: "To do that, we need to find where this "abyss with a great view" is located."

Subaru: “Yeah… Speaking of which, we were going to head for a tavern.”

With Al boiling with anger beside him, Subaru cut off his words there.

As a result of being forced to stay in the street, Taritta was acting as bait with the rest going separate ways. However, no explanation of the true purpose was given.

Why did Abel want to rush to a tavern?

Abel: “The basis of our hunt is numbers. Ideally, it should be someone that knows the land. However, it is possible that all the inhabitants of this city are siding with Tanza. Consequently, it would be better to utilize outsiders.”

Al: “So you’re targeting a bar where strangers might flock together. Sounds like an idea bro’d have.”

Subaru: “Um, that’s…”

He wanted to continue with “wrong”, but then remembered that he’d looked for a bodyguard in Guaral.

That had happened when a man, Todd, had targeted him; just remembering him made Subaru shudder. Among the many ideas he had considered to save himself, he’d headed to a tavern, planning to hire a strong escort.

Unfortunately, the drunken swordsman he had hired that time was soon killed.

Subaru: “But you need money to get help, don’t you? We can’t find that kind of money just anywhere.”

Abel: “That concern is irrelevant. I have a reward.”

Having said that, Abel shook the bag he was carrying.

As he’d called it necessary when carrying it out of the inn, Subaru was curious about what was inside.

In response to the look in his eyes, Abel did not go as far as to open the mouth of his bag, but said,

Abel: "When leaving Guaral, I had Zikr open the City Hall's treasury. This is the most efficient way to obtain collaborators. Not making use of it will not do."

Al: "…That was a shrewd thing to do."

Subaru: "But walking around with a lot of money while wearing an oni mask's dangerous, and will make you stand out… Oh, I see."

As he was saying this, Abel tapped his finger on the oni mask, reminding Subaru of his misplaced concern.

Since the oni mask had the effect of "cognitive disruption", the idea that it "stood out" was an incorrect way of thinking to begin with. Since it had no effect on Subaru's group, the difference between their actual situation and the reactions of the people around them was confusing.

Al: "So, we ain't changing what we're gonna do? We're all gonna go to a tavern and look for someone to help us find that old dude?"

Abel: "—Yes, that was the original idea. However, things have changed somewhat."

Subaru: "Things have changed, how so?"

Abel: "If Olbart and Tanza were behind this from the onset, they should be able to find a method to increase manpower quickly. While Olbart alone would have no influence in Demon City, Tanza's addition makes it a whole other matter. That girl has the position of attendant to Yorna Mishigure."

As Yorna held the highest position in Chaosflame, being Yorna's attendant would mean that person would be like a secretary. In other words, Tanza was the second most important person in the city, after Yorna.

Or rather, that meant that she could conduct herself as such.

Subaru: “If they really want to keep us reigned in, they’d put people around the taverns.”

Abel: “There is no need to fall into an obvious trap. Though, there may be ways to force our way through.”

During that conversation that made a change of plans necessary, Abel’s gaze turned to the side as he spoke. Subaru followed his line of sight, and his cheeks tensed up.

Louis: “Uau?”

That was because Louis stood, at the place where line of sight of the oni mask was directed too, tilting her head.

Louis, who’d turned the tables on their attackers and at the end mercilessly knocked the sheepboy into unconsciousness, was combing her fingers feverishly through her own blonde hair beside Medium, who’d become attached to her.

Despite her overwhelming fighting power, there was no change in her very attitude of innocence.

This, in turn, sent a cold shiver down Subaru’s spine.

Medium: “Oh, Louis-chan was amazing just now! I’m shocked that you were hiding abilities like that~”

Louis: “Auau.”

Medium: “Hehehe, thanks for saving me.”

In disregard of Subaru’s state of mind, Medium stroked Louis’s head, defenseless. The latter accepted that palm with calm, but Subaru’s heart was pounding.

So Subaru immediately let out a “Wait!”, even grabbing Medium’s wrist.

Medium: “Wah, Subaru-chin?”

Subaru: “Errr, Medium-san, you shouldn’t get close to her…”

Medium: “—? Why? She saved me, right? She even saved you, Subaru-chin.”

Subaru: “Well, that might be true, but… However…”

Subaru was unable to express a reply to Medium’s innocent question.

In fact, her view was honest and correct. Louis had saved Subaru. She had not hesitated in protecting Subaru with her petite body, even at the cost of getting hurt.

Subaru had desperately pleaded, “Don’t die”, as well.

Al: “Come on now, tell us what’s up.”

Seeing Subaru’s clenched teeth, Al spoke in a low voice.

Subaru gasped and looked down at the gloomy eyes through his mask. —He recalled that a few days ago, during the trip to Chaosflame, he’d kept Louis’s circumstances a secret from Al.

At that time, Subaru could not come to a decision on how to treat Louis, so he had put his answer on hold.

However—

Al: “Come on, this isn’t a situation that can be overlooked with a smile anymore. It’s not just my concern, but a concern all of us have.”

Subaru: “…”

Al: “What secret are you keeping about that girl?”

His questioning gaze was so intense that Subaru reflexively sheltered Louis behind him.

It was because he did not know how Louis would react to that gaze, rather than because he was trying to protect Louis—no, Subaru didn’t know if that was true as well.

If there was one thing he could say, however, it was that he couldn't deceive them any longer.

And Subaru's young, deficient brain could not even make up a lie that sounded plausible.

That was why—

Subaru: "She's, Louis is… the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony."

And so, all he could do was to clearly reveal the truth.

3

—The true identity of Louis Arneb.

It was a secret that Subaru had kept from Rem, who had lost her memories, and from everyone else they had met ever since being sent to the Vollachian Empire.

Subaru expected that the trouble that would result from the discovery of Louis's true identity as an Sin Archbishop, both concerning him and others, would be a lot. —No, it was bound to be much worse than he could've expected.

That was why Subaru hid that fact from the world until this very moment—

???: "—Sin… Archbishop."

A faltering voice ruminated on the words, the facts that Subaru had revealed.

It would be no wonder if Al and Abel were astonished by that fact. It was only natural to be alarmed, to want to verify the facts, to shout out how ridiculous all that would be.

However, the one whose voice trembled first was neither that of Al, nor that of Abel.

???: "Louis-chan's, a Sin Archbishop…"

Louis: “Uu?”

Indeed, Medium was the one to let out a shocked voice.

Medium’s blue eyes widened as she gazed motionlessly at Louis. Medium’s gaze caused said Louis to tilt her head and make a silly sound, as if she had no idea what she was talking about.

And that was exactly the reaction that Subaru feared the most.

He’d thought optimistically that perhaps Medium—No, that perhaps the O’Connell siblings would take it in stride and laugh it off as nothing at all.

However, his optimism had been misplaced, as he came to realize that it had only been an idealistic dream.

Medium: “…”

That was the unmistakable and certain “fear” that flashed across Medium’s eyes.

Al: “Bro, that joke ain’t funny.”

Subaru: “I-it’s not a joke…”

Al: “If this ain’t a joke, it’s even less funny!”

Subaru, shocked by Medium’s reaction, could not respond adequately to Al’s words that followed.

Raising his voice, Al drew out the Blue Dragon Sword he was carrying on his back with violence. Of course, it was not something that a single tiny arm of a child could hold with ease, so the sword that had been pulled out had buried its tip in the ground.

Still, if he swung it using all his weight, it could still be used. Loaded with that sharp intent, Al’s gaze turned to Subaru and Louis behind him.

Al: “You can’t be right in the head, carrying a Sin Archbishop around. You haven’t forgotten what happened in Pristella, have you?”

Subaru: “Th-That’s…”

Al: “Me and Priscilla… No harm was done to the Princess, but that’s just happenstance. Your people and acquaintances got put through hell. One of the reasons why is that right there.”

There was no way to argue with the anger in Al’s voice, who leaned against the Blue Dragon Sword stuck in the ground.

Al was completely right. By all accounts, it was Subaru who was in the wrong. He should not have taken Louis with him, nor should he have let Louis run amok.

He should have revealed her true identity, tied her up, and held her captive, depriving her of her freedom.

But Subaru had not done that. Aside from that—

Subaru: “A-Abel…?”

He looked at Abel, wondering if the latter agreed with Al in his silence.

Now that Medium was afraid and Al was angry, Abel’s attitude was the last bastion—and Subaru couldn’t even tell for whom he was a bastion.

However, if everyone at this place chose to be hostile to Louis,

Subaru: “…”

For certain, Subaru could put a stop to this hesitation and start moving.

Abel: “I know not how they are handled in other nations.”

Just before Subaru as he took a gulp, a man in an oni mask carrying a bag met his gaze head-on.

Black eyes met black eyes, and Subaru’s chest was pierced by the cold gaze. His brain started shutting down, as if rejecting the words he should have waited for, and the content that was to follow.

That voice slowly penetrated into that numb brain of his.

That was—

Abel: “In the Empire, those who serve the Witch for any reason whatsoever are executed.”

A definitive declaration from an existence that stood at the pinnacle of the Empire, even though he had been ousted from his throne.

It was a verdict of execution that clearly asserted that they would never be able to see eye-to-eye.

The moment he heard this, Subaru tightly shut his eyes—

Subaru: “—Hk, Louis!”

Medium: “Subaru-chin!”

Just as he emotionally shouted her name, a small pair of hands went around Subaru’s waist.

Immediately after, Medium’s voice echoed like a cry, and Subaru’s legs left the ground and floated up into the air—no, Louis, who was attached to Subaru’s waist, leaped high up with Subaru.

Why, did he call out Louis’s name, what kind of meaning had been in there; Biting his molars, Subaru held back the tears coming to his eyes for some reason.

It just came to his mind.

Louis: “Uau.”

That he should not abandon this girl now, who was clutching him around the waist and was ooh’ing and aah’ing.

It wasn’t that he had returned the favor and saved her life because she had saved him. It wasn’t that Subaru mistakenly felt something like compassion and a need to protect her. It just came to his mind.

With the shrinking of not only his limbs but also the contents of his head, Subaru regretted that he had given an answer about this girl, who he didn't know what to think of.

That was Subaru's problem, something that had nothing to do with Rem or the many people they had met so far.

It was a problem that Natsuki Subaru absolutely had to face with all his might.

Al: "Bro! Get back here! Fucking—!"

Al, looking up, shouted at him, but Louis's feet did not stop as she kicked off the wall and leapt away.

While hugging Subaru's back, Louis kicked the wall of the building facing the street and ascended to the rooftop, then moved on to the next street without any trouble, and the next one after that.

In Chaosflame, a city covered with scaffolding, in which jointed paths could be freely created, Louis's boundless lack of restraint was truly unrivaled.

Subaru: "Bwah!"

After a few more leaps, Subaru dismounted and got down on his hands and knees, taking repeated deep breaths. It was painful, not only to defy gravity so many times, but also to have Louis's slender arms tighten like a vise around his torso.

Louis, the person in question, peeked at Subaru's face from the side. The fact that Louis was so energetic was loathsome.

But, this was not the time for him to loath her face.

Subaru: "Shit, Abel and the others…"

That was the result of his own actions. To say that he'd just strayed from the others would be too obvious of a lie.

But had he stayed in that place, who knew what orders Abel would have given; judging from Al's reaction, he would not have let Louis off peacefully.

He could also say that not much could be expected from Medium's ability to defuse situations.

That said, he blamed his heart for not obeying and handing Louis over to them.

Louis: "Uau?"

Wiping his mouth with his sleeve, Subaru raised his head and saw Louis's blue eyes looking at him innocently.

Subaru's attitude of not caring at all about things such as hostility and fear directed at him made him feel like an idiot, for letting his mind go around in circles like this.

Subaru: "I'm an idiot. No, I am definitely an idiot."

In fact, he was a big idiot.

Abel aside, it was idiotic to leave Medium and Al behind, and run away with Louis.

He had no idea what they were thinking or what they could do.

Subaru: "Still, if I make the decision now, I might regret it. This isn't something a little kid should be deciding."

The life and death of people, and ultimately the future of the Empire, were both very important matters, so he thought.

It was strange that such a big issue should be decided by a child of only about ten years old, subjected to the eyes of a ruthless adult. —It was wrong.

Subaru: "I'm sure the original me could make the right decision. So…"

He must dispel this "infantilization" as soon as possible, and return from being the little boy Natsuki Subaru to the young man Natsuki Subaru.

That way, he would be able to fret over whether or not to deal with Louis, and give a reasonable answer to the decision his companions had reached, and attain a satisfactory conclusion.

To that end—

Subaru: "—Let's find Olbart-san. I'm going to do everything I can, without relying on Abel and the others."

Louis: "Aa, uu!"

Louis raised her head in response to Subaru, lifting both her hands in the air with a cheerful look on her face.

Looking down on the landscape of the Demon City from scaffolding up high, two small children breathed alongside each other, aspiring to find the shinobi head honcho who'd turned against the residents of Chaosflame and the ousted Emperor.

—Unexpectedly, Subaru and Louis were the Oni in the game of "hide-and-seek" and the ones being chased by the Oni in the game of "tag".

Chapter 49: The Stars Aligned

1

Al: “Damn it! I can’t see them anywhere…!”

Looking up at the sky from the street, as his gaze swept over the numerous scaffolds, the masked figure of a boy—no, of Al, yelled as he stomped on the ground.

The unbelievable situation that had just occurred had spurred his frustration and made his heart boil with fury.

Absurd, that was all he could say about that turn of events.

Medium: “Subaru-chin, Louis-chan…”

On the other hand, in contrast to Al, his anger laid bare, Medium muttered so, her face downcast.

The young girl dressed like a dancer rolled herself into a ball, concerned for the two who had fled the scene.

However, the nature of the emotions in her murmur was complicated and confused.

It was difficult to say that it was only out of concern. It was undoubtedly related to the words Subaru had spoken before his disappearance.

Medium: “Louis-chan’s…”

Abel: “—A Sin Archbishop, he said.”

Medium: “—Hk.”

Upon finding the continuation of the words that had unintentionally leaked from her own lips, Medium’s eyes widened.

Disregarding Medium, Abel gazed upwards toward the sky, just like Al. He had put his mask back on and was no longer showing his face, so it was impossible for others to tell what he was thinking.

However, it was clear from his fingers tapping his crossed arms that this situation was not a welcome one, for him.

Medium: “Abel-chin, those two…”

Abel: “—. Our priority is to get this situation under control. Our course of action remains the same. Unfortunately, the number of methods we possess has once more abated by one.”

To Medium’s feeble question, Abel returned an answer in a cold tone.

He did not mention Subaru and Louis explicitly. But it was apparent that Abel did not intend to rejoin them immediately.

Hearing this, Medium felt both anxiety and relief deep in her heart.

There was a feeling of worry regarding those two, as well as a feeling of relief for not having to also confront them.

She also felt horrified that she had been told something that should not even be said in jest, in a situation where it could not be laughed off as a joke.

Al: “You want to leave him alone? Bro, and particularly now, when he’s got the mind of a child!”

Abel: “So what shall we do? The situation we are in will not be any different. I shall warn you, if you and Medium are no longer useful, I shall need to leave you behind.”

Al: “Guh…”

Abel: “Do not presume you alone hold the right to choose who we ally with or not, clown.”

Unable to speak, Al wanted to join up with the stranded Subaru and Louis, but this was coldly rejected by Abel. However, Al’s focus was only Subaru; Louis's existence was secondary.

Al's attitude regarding Louis, whose identity as a bomb had been revealed, was clear.

Al: "I can't leave bro and that brat together…"

As he muttered to himself, cupping his mouth, Al's hostility towards Louis was apparent.

Medium wished to complain about Al's attitude, but she herself could not come to a decision on her attitude toward Louis, and an uncharacteristic deliberation formed in that silence.

Abel: "…"

Abel, glancing sideways towards the two, once again looked up overhead.

Their figures no longer visible, Subaru and Louis had jumped somewhere into the Demon City, as nary a trace remained of them in this jumble of a sight his gaze lay on.

Abel: "Fool."

The single word that escaped his mouth, was a mutter to nobody in particular.

2

—And so, while in this unprecedented situation, Subaru had gone on his own, separate from his friends.

It had been a spur-of-the-moment act, he really couldn't say it was a decision he had arrived at after properly thinking about the future.

Even so, there'd definitely be some regrets about that situation if he did make a decision in a hurry. All he could say with certainty was that he'd taken that action to avoid having regrets.

And now, Subaru was already "regretting" the decision he had made.

Because—

Louis: “Au, uau!”

Subaru: “Stop it, Louis! That’s enough!”

Using a chokehold on Louis’s small body from behind, Subaru pulled her writhing body away. The one he pulled her away from, was a now-unconscious man who had pursued them before being straddled by Louis.

After parting with Abel and the others, they had managed to jump across the scaffolding in the city, and while looking for Olbart to restore the “infantilized” Subaru, the enemy caught up with them.

Apparently, the pursuers were aware of the appearance of the “infantilized” Subaru and of a target who had not visited the castle tower, Louis. It seemed Abel’s guess was correct.

In other words, Olbart and Tanza were accomplices, and the information they held was also passed to their pursuers— those of the horned races.

As a result, Subaru, who was traveling alone with Louis, had been chased and almost caught—

Louis: “Uu!”

Louis’s fighting skills, which she had shown on the street, exploded, and their pursuers were quickly neutralized.

That in itself was a blessing. Even before his limbs had shrunk, Subaru’s fighting ability was a disappointment. He would be no match even against those of the city who didn’t know how to fight, because Yorna had given them a portion of her power through the Soul Marriage Technique.

However, the problem was that Louis would not stop attacking, even after she had neutralized their pursuers.

Louis: “Auu…”

Subaru: “Don’t “auu” me! If you do that, they’ll die! These people are just scared, that’s all. That wouldn’t be good at all!”

Louis: “Uu.”

Her legs flailing, Louis calmed down after hearing Subaru’s warning.

He didn’t know whether she understood what he had just said, but at any rate, she seemed to understand that Subaru was angry. Seeing this, Subaru tended to the fallen opponent.

As he had no first-aid kit, all he could do was to lay his head up high and wipe the bleeding wound.

Subaru: “…These people as well.”

Louis: “Uau?”

Subaru: “They’re desperate. They don’t want their place in the world to be destroyed.”

The young men, a sheepman and a deerman, who had been beaten up by Louis, were still in their late teens or early twenties, not much different from the original Subaru. The people around the inn, and the sheep boy who had thrown Subaru in the street, were all of varying ages, there was nothing that made them seem like friends.

But there was a definite connection. That being, the horns that grew on their heads.

Depending on the person, they could be different for having one or two horns, but a horn was a horn.

The influence it’d had on their lives was not something Subaru, who knew of Emilia’s case, could scoff at.

Subaru: “I’m glad Rem isn’t here, I guess.”

As a member of the oni tribe, Rem had the characteristic horn that grew on her forehead.

Unlike those beastmen, the horns would not be grown out all the time, but as a someone from a horned race, it was possible she was not entirely unrelated to the situations they'd experienced in life.

Not like he'd ever heard something of the sort from Ram or Rem, though.

Subaru: "I don't think Ram'd give a crap of what anyone said about her."

Because Ram was the type to go her own way, no matter what the outside world had to say about her horn, it was certain that she would blow their words off with a snickering "Ha!".

With her strength that was not bound by race nor title, it was certain she would.

—Perhaps, such a girl could keep a level head upon finding out about Louis.

Subaru: "…I'm an idiot."

Louis: "Uau."

Striking his forehead with his fist, Subaru withdrew his shameful and selfish thoughts.

Seeing Subaru's gesture, Louis, who was crouching next to him, tilted her head.

Ram was not present. Emilia, and Beatrice as well, everyone was not present.

Even Rem, who was closest to him, was still in Guaral, far away from here—there was no time to comfort himself by relying on someone not present.

Subaru: "Anyway, it's bad if we stick around standing out. We need to hide quickly."

Honestly, considering his original plan, running and hiding would be a waste of time. Normally, he'd have to chase after the person running away and hiding.

And yet, Subaru had become the one being chased.

Subaru: “Maybe Abel won’t look for us… I guess. He’s probably angry, and might believe that finding Olbart-san’s more important, I guess.”

Louis: “Au.”

Subaru: “Should we join up with Taritta-san? Taritta-san’s being chased by a lot of people in a strange city… No, that’s no good.”

Placing his hand to his head, Subaru put on hold the idea of joining up with the clueless Taritta.

He didn’t feel like he could successfully explain to Taritta why he was not with Abel and the others. He’d have to lie, but lying wouldn’t solve the problem.

Medium was out of the question. Once Taritta found out that Louis was a Sin Archbishop, she would see her as dangerous, and distance herself from her, just as the others did.

Subaru: “I’m worried about Taritta-san, but I think Abel and the others might be looking for her over there.”

Right now, he didn’t want to join up with Abel and the others, from whom he’d just become separated.

Without an answer to how Louis should be handled, he thought it’d be more of the same with Abel and the others. Besides, he didn’t want to be hated by everyone for arguing with them like that again.

The past him, who had been unable to persuade everyone, also didn’t want to become hated.

Subaru: “Louis, let’s go. We need to find Olbart-san at “an abyss with a great view”.”

Louis: “Uau.”

While saying this, Subaru linked hands with Louis and pulled her along to make her walk away.

He had no idea of where to go originally, but after she'd unveiled her power—the Authority of Gluttony, his anxiety became even greater.

Therefore—

Subaru: "If you don't want to die, stay close to me. I don't want you to die either… now."

Louis: "Aa, uu."

Whether she understood or not, Louis nodded her head in acceptance. With that, Subaru let out a deep breath at the girl's smiling face.

Two children, wandering around in a strange city, aimlessly trying to solve a riddle—

Subaru: "This makes me feel like I'm truly a missing child."

That weak mutter was all he could muster.

3

—After that, Subaru and Louis's chase sequence, as well as their escape, was complicated.

Probably because Subaru did not have a good grasp of the city's layout, and because communicating with his companion was difficult, and genuinely because of Subaru's bad luck.

At any rate, he was being chased around inside the Demon City. Unable to find this "abyss with a great view", his time was running out with every moment that went by.

Subaru: "Louis! Stop fighting! Run, run, run, run!"

Louis: "Au! Uh!"

As Louis rushed out, Subaru stopped her by literally bumping her with all his weight.

He hopped onto her tiny back, forcing himself in a position of being carried by piggyback. Louis propped up Subaru's body to keep him from being shaken off as she then leapt high to escape from the ones chasing them.

???: "Don't let them get away!"

And the ones to shout that while chasing after them, were the horned beastmen patrolling the Demon City.

Apparently, their pursuers were really only those with horns. Regarding the inhabitants of Chaosflame, Subaru had seen many demi-humans without horns. It seemed that they had not been given the order to capture Subaru and Louis.

Subaru: "Seems like that Tanza girl doing this of her own free will…"

Tanza was a young deergirl, although she held something like the position of a secretary to Yorna, Subaru supposed there was a limit to how far she could make those under her command move.

As a result, there'd be no way to escape if all the inhabitants of Chaosflame were to become "it". It seemed that the girl was also fighting on the edge of how much she could abuse her power.

Even then, they were being cornered plenty on that edge. From Subaru's point of view, she could have even held back a bit.

Subaru: "Uh… They're coming after us! Louis, don't attack! We gotta get out of here!"

Louis: "Uu?"

Subaru: "Why not! The reason is, everything! Anyhow, this isn't working!"

With Subaru on her back, stepping on window frames of buildings and protruding scaffolds, Louis did not seem happy with this escape decided upon by a single person, as she went bounce-bounce all over the city.

She looked as if she wanted to say that they'd win if she fought; Subaru protested this by tugging on her cheek.

Indeed, if Louis did fight, she might be able to defeat their pursuers.

However, if Louis were to fight, those following them might get killed. Hypothetically, even if she knocked them unconscious, there was no telling if Louis would stop her assault there.

Actually, just a short while ago, if Subaru hadn't stopped her, Louis would've thrown their pursuers off the high scaffolding, dropping them to the ground below.

Louis had not seemed to have lost her almost infant-like innocence.

But, even with that innocence, the power of Gluttony had returned to Louis. Subaru dreaded that, as It seemed to be no different from the rampage of the original "Louis Arneb".

If this Louis ever went back to being "Louis Arneb"—

Subaru: "—That'd mean that Abel and the others' opinion is right."

In that case, there was no need to run away from the street and no need to strain his relationship with Abel and the others.

The existence of the girl known as Louis, was something Subaru was required to worry about, strangely.

Which was why it was no good.

Subaru: "I won't let you kill anyone else, any more."

As long as Natsuki Subaru's eyes were black, he would not let that happen.

Louis: "—Au."

Louis gazed forward quietly as Subaru tightened his hold upon her back.

It seemed she had retracted her complaining attitude from before for the time being, reconsidering doing what Subaru had suggested. For now, Louis tried to shake off the beastmen on their tails; bouncing and skipping repeatedly, she continued to run away as her golden hair whipped about.

However—

Subaru: “So, stubborn…!”

Maybe it was natural, since the only effort they were making to shake them off was running away, but it was difficult to give the beastmen chasing them the slip. In addition to knowing the lay of the land, because of the flame in one of their eyes—because of Yorna’s Soul Marriage Technique, the gap between them was shrinking, rather than growing.

Subaru: “If it goes on like this—”

They would get caught; as such Subaru bit down on teeth that were neither baby nor permanent.

It was at that moment.

???: “—You two, this way.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Louis: “Au?”

Louis kicked off the wall with force, as she tried to trick the eye of their pursuers with sharp movements. Before they could see if what they intended had been fulfilled, a voice reached the two as they landed on the street.

Taking a look at it, a young man with a thin face was beckoning Subaru and Louis to come over. There were no horns to be found on the young man’s head at a quick glance, but that didn’t put Subaru at ease right away.

Subaru: “Y-you’re…”

Young Man: “You’re being chased, aren’t you? From the looks of it, those people seem to be preeettyyy~ serious. This is some friendly advice so it’d be nice if you could be good and hear what I have to say.”

In response to Subaru’s wary look, the young man beckoned to him with a friendly smile. Just like that, he used his hand to point out a cart on the road to Subaru and Louis, the two out of breath.

Specifically, he was indicating a gap between several barrels in the back of said cart,

Young Man: “Since you two have small bodies, you’ll fit in there for sure.”

Subaru: “B-but even if we hide there it doesn’t mean…”

Young Man: “We don’t have any more time. The alignment of the stars changes every moment. It’s up to you, of course, to shun this alignment, or to accept it.”

Subaru: “…”

Young Man: “Hoooweeever~, I think it’s in your best interest to come with me.”

Waving his empty hands in the air, the young man laughed to show that he meant no harm.

Subaru hesitated quite a bit on whether he should trust that smile or not. But he was right, he didn’t have much time to spend hesitating.

Therefore—

4

???: “They must’ve come this way!”

A group of bloodthirsty men appeared, searching for any sign of the missing fugitives. As they went along, they spotted a young man standing near a cart, leaning his back against a wall.

???: “Hey, you there! Did two kids come by here?”

Young Man: “Huh? Umm, you wouldn’t be talking to me, would you? I’m sorry, but I was just taking a break for a sec here…”

???: “Like I said, I was wondering if you’ve seen them during your break… Oh, forget it!”

The oxman, who had approached the cart with noisy footsteps, gave up because of the young man’s dismissive words. But that didn’t mean that the oxman had overlooked the cart near the youth.

He stopped questioning the young man, instead refocusing his attention on the cart.

Oxman: “Say, what’s the cargo?”

Young Man: “Well, what do you think it is? What kinda merchant do I look like?”

Oxman: “Tch.”

At the elusive young man’s words, the oxman clicked his tongue and glared at the cart. Then, grabbing a pile of barrels, he tipped the load effortlessly, his right eye burning.

With a loud bang, the setup of unbalanced cargo was thrown about. The stacked barrels swayed from one side to the other; if anyone had been hiding in the back of the cart, they would have been struck by the weight of the barrels.

Seeing this, the oxman took his hand off the barrel and,

Oxman: “Sorry for disturbing you.”

Leaving behind those words, he walked away from the scene with his companions.

Behind him, the young man called out with “Please fix the barrels!”.

However, as the other part didn't reply, the young man gave a shrug of his thin shoulders

Young Man: "Good griiief~, they were arrogant people, weren't they? I dunno what to think of them."

Talking to himself, the young man approached the cart on the deserted street. He crouched down to look underneath the cart instead of at the load.

There—

Young Man: "You were right not to carelessly hide in the back of the cart. If you had hid there, every bone in your body would've been shattered by now. That would've been very painful, wouldn't it?"

Subaru: "…Don't say such scary things."

Louis: "Uu."

The young man made a dreadful remark in a light-hearted tone, with a smile on his face, as Subaru and Louis crawled out from the cart they had hidden under.

It was natural to think that, given the cart had been loaded with barrels, they'd be hidden there. Subaru, at first, did as he'd been told and tried to hide in the back of the cart, but as he'd had a bad feeling about it, he had decided not to.

Subaru: "But, since there was no time to run, I hid under the back of the cart."

Young Man: "I think it was a very good decision. I'm not very good at lying, and I would've told him right away if he had questioned me a bit too roughly."

Subaru: "…No problem, I wouldn't have expected any different because you're not one of us."

Having been underneath the cart, clinging onto its wheels, Subaru patted the dirt off his hands and clothes, and then patted Louis's equally dirty body.

Apparently, the pursuers had lost sight of Subaru and Louis, so he should be grateful to the young man for his help.

Subaru: “But, why did you help us?”

Young Man: “Why did I help? Hmmmhm, why, huh. Oh, how about the fact that I couldn’t stand to see children being chased?”

Subaru: “If you’re putting it as “How about”, you definitely just made it up…”

Young Man: “Have I been found out?”

Faced by Subaru’s doubtful eyes, the young man stroked his head in an annoyed fashion.

He smiled bitterly, but from what Subaru could tell, he was not a demi-human. Not only did he have no horns, but he also had no animal-like ears, skin, nor claws.

That aside, this human being right now gave off the atmosphere of being from outside of Chaosflame.

Subaru: “You’re…”

Young Man: “Oh, whoops, I’m Ubilk. I can understand why you might wanna doubt me, but there’s not much I can say.”

Subaru: “What do you mean, there’s not much you can say?”

Ubilk: “The only reason I helped you two was because I thought it’d be a good idea.”

Laughing, the young man—Ubilk, ran his fingers through his ashen hair.

His gestures and good looks made Subaru think that Ubilk was a man with a proper job. Even his travel clothes, which appeared to be lightly worn, looked like they had been paid for with a fair amount of money.

Subaru thought that he was surely a merchant, because he was hauling a cart.

Subaru: “Is that what you’d call a merchant’s intuition?”

Ubilk: “A merchant’s… Oh, me? Hahaha, no. I’m no merchant or anything like that. And this cart isn’t mine either.”

Subaru: “Huh?! But, you told those people…”

Ubilk: “I never said I was a merchant. Of course, I also never said that this cart belonged to me. It’s just a cart that happens to be sitting here. It probably belongs to the store right there, doesn’t it?”

After those words, Ubilk pointed to the nearest store and said, “I wonder if it’s that one? Or maybe it could be that one?”. He was kidding, but he didn’t seem to be entirely joking.

In other words, it seemed that he’d really simply bluffed his way out of that pursuit.

Louis: “Uau.”

Subaru: “Ah, yeah, I get it.”

As he kept up with Ubilk’s pace, Louis unexpectedly pulled on his sleeve.

Subaru, who was starting to wonder whether it was alright to stand still, reflected on his own carefree self who was being rushed by Louis.

Their situation hadn’t gotten any better, even though they had shaken off their pursuers.

Subaru: “Well, thank you for your help, Ubilk-san. But you should think and act more seriously next time. I’m sure you’re going to get into a lot of trouble because of this…”

Ubilk: “Whaat’s~ that, are you worried about me? Do I look so unfortunate? I think I’m a pretty worldly man, but you seem to disagree.”

Subaru: “No, not that I’m suspicious of you or anything, but we’re in a hurry.”

To tell the truth, he was suspicious.

In this case, the suspicion wasn’t that Ubilk was necessarily Tanza and Olbart’s spy, but rather that he could be a dangerous adult who was genuinely unrelated to them.

As the two of them, Subaru and Louis both, were just children as of now, dealing with suspicious adults was plenty scary.

If the other party were a dangerous adult, Subaru might not be able to stop Louis from beating him to a pulp. Dealing with dangerous adults was a bridge too far for children to deal with.

Subaru: “Well, we’ve got stuff to do, so let’s keep it at that. Thanks for helping us.”

With that, Subaru pulled Louis by the hand and quickly walked away after an expression of his gratitude.

However—

Ubilk: “Please waaait~ a minute. Don’t be so curt, let’s help one another. I think the spirit of mutual aid’s a wonderful thing.”

As he said this, Ubilk used his long, slender legs to jog around Subaru, cutting him off.

Immediately, Subaru’s Suspicious-and-Dangerous-Adult Index rose, and Ubilk’s standing with him was put into question. Going into details, Louis’s grip on his hand tightened and she voiced an “Uu?”, as she could sense Subaru’s caution towards Ubilk.

A case such as Louis leaping out as soon as she had Subaru’s approval, for her to then beat Ubilk to the ground and stuff him into a barrel, was possible.

Subaru: “Ubilk-san, are you flexible?”

Ubilk: “Me? Well, in my old work experience, the more flexible my body was, the more I could handle, so I was a flexible person. But, what are you asking me?”

Subaru: “No, no, it’s nothing… Helping each other, is there something you want us to help you with?”

Ubilk: “Oh, nooo~, that’s not what I meant. The spirit of mutual aid was just a slip of the tongue, not a request for help. Ahaha.”

Subaru: “…”

Once again, the Suspicious-and-Dangerous-Adult Index had increased.

This time, in addition to that, he felt that a novel Adult Index aside from the Dangerous one, the Adult-He-Didn’t-Want-Anything-To-Do-With Index, had just been newly established.

Anyway, this was not someone he wanted to spend much time with.

Ubilk: “Hahaha… Whaaat’s~ this, the mood’s colder than I expected. This is the same feeling I get when I’m surrounded by everyone. They hate me. Do you hate me?”

Subaru: “If possible, I’d prefer not to…”

Ubilk: “Ohhh~, you’re an honest one. Well then, since you seem to be in a hurry, and since you’re honest, and I like honest people, let’s have a quick serious chat.”

Subaru: “—Hk.”

As Ubilk said this, he bent at the waist and brought his face closer to Subaru. Subaru’s head dropped as he gulped unwittingly, and Louis, stepping forward, put her hand out in front of him in response.

She then pushed on Ubilk’s cheek from the side, threatening him with an “Uu!”.

Ubilk: “Whoooops~, she hates me. I thought I had a good reputation with girls, but I guess it’s different if they’ve already got a companion.”

Subaru: “…Ubilk-san, it’d be best if you don’t make Louis angry. This girl, well, she’s more powerful than she looks.”

Ubilk: “I see, Louis-san’s her name, isn’t it.”

Ubilk nodded his head, and Subaru gulped at his response.

There was no problem with him knowing her name, but he knew that he’d given out information that he shouldn’t have. He didn’t want to give more information to someone without knowing what kind of adult they were.

Subaru: “Ubilk-san! You said it’d be a serious chat, yeah? If there’s nothing else, we should go!”

Ubilk: “—I wasn’t planning on walking about the streets today at all.”

Subaru: “What?”

Ubilk: “Fooor~ some reason though, I found myself wandering around aimlessly, wondering if something was going on, based on a feeling I had. So I came here on a whim, and killed some time next to this cart. And then…”

Placing his fingers on his forehead, he slid them to the gentle corner of his eye, to his clear, white cheeks, then down to his sculpted chin. At the end, Ubilk snapped his fingers.

Subaru was visibly stunned, transfixed by his behavior, and Ubilk, whose smile deepened at his reaction, waved his snapping fingers from side to side,

Ubilk: “You two appeared by nimbly leaping over my head.”

Subaru: “…”

Ubilk: “…Whaat’s~ this, perhaps that didn’t resonate with you?”

Tilting his head, Ubilk looked in turn at Subaru and Louis, both of whom didn’t react.

Louis simply might not have understood what was being said, but not Subaru. After hearing Ubilk’s answer, Subaru just could not speak.

He wondered if there was some grand, far-reaching reason hidden in there.

Subaru: “So you were just out for a walk, resting, and then we came along?”

Ubilk: “Haaa~, you can say it that way too, I guess. Buuut~, I think I can also say it this way. —I think all this is just the stars’ guidance.”

Subaru: “The stars’… fate, or something like that…”

Although it sounded very romantic, Subaru’s shoulders slumped.

It would’ve been romantic had it been spoken at the beginning of a story in which a man and woman met, but here there was a combination of the shrunken Subaru and the originally small Louis. And Ubilk, the weirdo.

This was not romantic at all.

Ubilk: “Are you amazed by me, perchance?”

Subaru: “Well, it’s alright. Even if Ubilk-san’s seriousness isn’t that serious, it doesn’t bother me so much because he’s a person I don’t want to see ever again.”

Ubilk: “You said some pretty harsh and hurtful things to me. That kinda sharpness is similar to that of my old friend’s.”

Subaru: “Ubilk-san, you’ve got a friend…?”

Ubilk: “Ahaha, that hurt!”

He couldn’t help but let out a rude, honest thought, but Ubilk didn’t seem to be offended.

For just a moment, he thought that there some sort of subtle, complicated feeling from Ubilk towards his friend, somewhere in his sentimental, straightforward and unserious attitude.

Ubilk: “Anyway, it’s by some kinda fate that we met here. Hmmm~, that’s it! I’m actually in the business of giving small consultations. What do you think, why don’t you ask me for counselling?”

Subaru: “Finally, there it is! No thanks… No, I heard on TV that way of answering’s convenient for scammers. I don’t want it!”

Ubilk: “I’m not a pushy salesman, and I’m not here to trick you, okay? I just wanna do my assigned role, thooo~.”

Subaru: “Your assigned role?”

Ubilk: “Indeed, there must’ve been a reason as to why I’m here today. It’s probably for the chance for you and Louis-san to consult me.”

Ubilk nodded repeatedly, crossing his thin arms and acting like he was the only one who understood.

Unfortunately, Ubilk’s conviction did not sit well with Subaru. It was simply that the Suspicious and Dangerous Adult Index was gradually increasing in value.

He’d rather just leave Ubilk here and run away if possible. He felt that even though Ubilk had given the slip to their pursuers, he was now entangled with a more troublesome opponent.

Ubilk: “Oh, it’s no use trying to escape. Iiif~ you try to run away…”

Subaru: “Then what?”

Ubilk: “I’ll shout, and tell the people who just came by where you two are. You’d be in trouble, right?”

Subaru: “We’d be in a lot of trouble…!”

If that were to happen however, he was willing to unleash Louis.

Of course, as he didn't want to let Ubilk die, Subaru would do everything in his power to stop Louis's rampage, but he was prepared to use her as his last resort if Ubilk wanted to call out to their pursuers.

Besides—

Subaru: "I'm sorry, but you don't want to know what's going on with us. If you hear about it, you might get involved and I don't think you can do anything about it."

Even if Subaru and Louis did nothing, Tanza and her comrades might hurt Ubilk. If that happened, it'd be Subaru and Louis's fault.

His thoughts were that he couldn't involve Ubilk in such a situation.

However—

Ubilk: "Oh, don't worry about it, I'll be alright. I said I'd give you a consultation, but I'm a consultant who's just fine without hearing any specifics."

Subaru: "There's something like that?!"

Ubilk: "Well, well, if you think you've been lied to, lend me your hand."

Subaru's concern was overshadowed by Ubilk's carefree smile as he gently took Subaru's hand.

Since his right hand was connected to Louis's, the hand taken was his opposite left hand. Surprised by the touch of Ubilk's slender, feminine fingers, Subaru hurriedly glanced at Louis.

Louis: "Uu."

Fortunately, Louis had not a temper short enough as to suddenly attack Ubilk, although she was staring at his movements.

But that meant that he'd have to watch over a situation that was much like a balloon that could burst at any moment, all while having to keep filling it with air.

Subaru: “Umm, Ubilk-san, I don’t have much time, and neither do you… “

Ubilk: “Whaaat’s~ that, you’re suddenly making me nervous too. — But I’m already done.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

While he was anxious about Louis’s line of sight aimed at Ubilk’s thin neck, after urging him on, Subaru’s arm was released from Ubilk’s grasp.

Removing his hand, Ubilk gently turned his palm towards Subaru’s face and,

Ubilk: “—The answer you’re seeking’s already within you.”

Subaru: “…”

Subaru’s eyes widened due to those unexpected words.

At Subaru’s lack of understanding, Ubilk uttered “Ohhh~?”, and tilted his head.

Ubilk: “Maybe that didn’t ring a bell?”

Subaru: “It’s not that it didn’t ring a bell, it’s just that I don’t really understand what it means… “

The answer he was looking for was also vague.

He felt that it was similar to what fortune tellers used to say on TV back at his original world. It was a common phrase used to scam people by saying something that applied to anyone.

Subaru: “I don’t think there are too many people who aren’t looking for answers…”

Ubilk: “Hmmm~, I’m not talking about something as big as life itself. I’m sorry to say that I’m not a person able to see the movement of stars that well.”

Subaru: “Like a horoscope… “

Ubilk: “Maybe it’s the problem in front of you. You see, you were both being chased, right? That’s also a problem, isn’t it? What do you think about that?”

Subaru: “But, I know why those people were after me—”

Perhaps confident in his own ability as a counselor, Ubilk tried to get closer to the right answer by delving into Subaru’s inner thoughts.

He wasn’t sure about it; it felt a bit like a scammer’s trick, but once he took it seriously, there was a slight tug at Subaru’s heart.

Subaru: “…”

That tug seemed to be a very important one.

Of course, he didn’t know just how much of what he felt in his small Subaru head could be believed. However, even if he didn’t believe in the “thoughts” of a small Subaru, there should be room to believe in the “intuition” of a small Subaru, regardless of the size of the body.

The problem that Subaru was facing right now, was—

Subaru: “…”An abyss with a great view”.”

Ubilk had pointed out that the answer was already in Subaru.

He wasn’t trying to probe deeper into the kind of scam it was. But he felt it.

—That tug he felt, if he could rope it in, he should be able to find the answer he was looking for.

Louis: “Uau?”

Subaru: “I think I might’ve figured it out.”

Louis looked into Subaru’s face once he replied to her, whose shapely eyebrows distorted into a frown. With the sound of Subaru's voice, which had slightly regained its strength, Louis widened her blue eyes and then smiled happily.

Seeing the change in Louis's expression from the side, Subaru exhaled, then looked at Ubilk.

Subaru: "The consultation might've worked."

Ubilk: "Ohhh~, I'm glad. I'm relieved, too. If I'm gonna do this, I wanna do my job properly. Then?"

Subaru: "Yeah, I'll hurry. Thank you for everything, Ubilk-san. — Let's go, Louis!"

Louis: "Auau!"

In response to Ubilk, who closed one eye, Subaru pulled Louis's hand and began sprinting.

He started to run as fast as he could, stopping only once. And upon looking back, he saw that Ubilk's eyes were widened, possibly because he hadn't expected Subaru's actions.

Subaru waved his hand at him, and,

Subaru: "Ubilk-san, I won't say anything bad about you, so just go back to your parents'! And so that you don't seem so dangerous, behave yourself, and stop scamming people!"

With gratitude, that was all the self-serving "counsel" Subaru could give him.

5

After that, he watched the boy and girl leave in a hurry.

Ubilk: ""Stop scamming people", that's a bit harsh."

That young man who had been left on his lonesome in the street—Ubilk, smiled and scratched his cheek with his finger.

It had been a strange time, but judging from the boy's appearance at the end, he felt that he had been able to help in some way, which made him feel a tug at his heart.

And then—

Ubilk: "If I don't go back to my room as soon as possible, Kafma-dono'll be very displeased with me, and if something actually happens I'll be in trouble, so I gotta go back. But still…"

Once again, gazing towards the direction the children had left, Ubilk closed one eye.

And—

Ubilk: "—I dunno what the stars desire, even though that comes with the duty of a Stargazer."

Chapter 50:
A “Hole” With a Great View

1

After parting ways with the shady Ubilk, they’d stopped at a couple of small alleyways.

Surveying his surroundings by looking around, Subaru would make sure that no one was around. While he was naturally also carefully checking that that Ubilk wasn’t inadvertently following them,

Subaru: “—The answer’s within me.”

Louis: “Auu.”

Louis tilted her head as Subaru reflected on what Ubilk had told them.

With Ubilk having told them that he was working as an “counselor”, a job he didn’t understand the details of, Subaru’s impression of him as a conman didn’t go away at all, but he felt like his remark was rather on point.

Subaru really didn’t know whether Ubilk could see what he himself wanted or not, but—

Subaru: “…”An abyss with a great view”, I think I’ve figured it out.”

Ubilk’s words, that the answer was within Subaru, had given him a hint.

They did not mean that the missing Olbart was secretly hiding inside Subaru’s body. It was a metaphor, and Olbart’s hint was also a riddle.

The answer to the riddle “behind the eyelids” was the room they’d started in.

So, naturally, the “abyss with a great view” was a riddle as well, and the answer must be in there somewhere.

And the answer Ubilk had given, that it was within Subaru—

Subaru: “My train of thought was that it’s a place I’ve been, but it’s not.”

Louis: “Auau?”

Subaru: “There aren’t many places in this city that I’ve been to. If you leave the inn out, there’s only Yorna’s castle. But it doesn’t feel like an abyss. It’s not that at all.”

Louis: “Uu.”

Subaru: “Something like an abyss, what’s that supposed to mean?”

Olbart had given them the hint of “abyss with a great view”, but the expressions “a great view” and “abyss” were pretty much opposites to begin with.

A great view meant that there’d be a good vantage point. An abyss was a deep hole. Something like a hole with a view just didn’t add up.

So one of them was a lie. And since there was no possible lie in it having a good view, the only lie that could’ve possibly been told was about the abyss.

Subaru: “Things that are like an abyss, but aren’t an abyss…”

There was no such place in Chaosflame to which Subaru had been.

He was sure that the same went for Abel and the others who had not left the inn. —Subaru was unsure of just how much Olbart knew about the Demon City, to begin with.

But he did not believe that Olbart had been able to go around much either. Because his duty was to accompany the false Emperor—Vincent, and to protect him.

So, as it was a city he didn’t know much about, it was a place that definitely was not convoluted.

“An abyss with a great view”, as it’d been called, was not a place that existed only in Chaosflame.

That was—

Subaru: “—Louis, we’re going to higher ground.”

Louis: “Uau?”

Louis was surprised at Subaru, who spoke so after shutting his eyes.

He did not think that what he’d meant had been understood. But as long as he could confirm that Louis, holding his hand, would follow him quietly, he wouldn’t ask for anything more.

There wasn’t much time left. Although he was worried that it might be wrong, there was no choice but to give it a try.

Olbart’s hiding place was “an abyss with a great view”, and the closest place to it—

Subaru: “—We need to get to the closest place to the sky.”

2

Ubilk’s “counselling”, given in a one-sided conversation, had led Subaru to his answer.

“An abyss with a great view” was, put in another way, “a hole with a great view”.

An abyss was not just a hole, it was a deep hole into which one could fall forever and ever. To speak of it further, it was a hole so deep that there seemed to be no limit to its depth.

And, as Ubilk had stated, Subaru had experienced it before.

And that’d happened not too long ago, in real-time.

Subaru: “On that street, when that boy threw me.”

When Subaru had run out, completely out of his mind, a sheepboy had grabbed his arm. Having been hurled away while being apologized to, Subaru'd had a thought over and over again as he rose high towards the sky, spinning around in circles.

—That he was "falling" towards the blue sky.

Of course, taking into account what had happened, that was incorrect.

From the perspective of those around him, the real Subaru had simply been thrown high into the sky. But the person in question, Subaru, who had not known at the time which way was up and which way was down, had thought so.

He had thought he was falling towards the blue sky.

Falling into an endless, blue, bottomless "hole".

Subaru: "That's what the hole with a great view is… So it's the place closest to the sky in this city."

Subaru believed that was the place Olbart had been referring to as "an abyss with a great view".

So the idea was to aim for the highest place, but—

Louis: "Aa, uh!"

Whether she was aware of how Subaru felt or not, Louis, with a broad smile, pointed to a specific place.

As Louis cheerfully waved their joined hands and pointed into the distance with her free hand, Subaru covered his face with his own.

Not because Louis was fooling around, unable to follow what he'd said.

As a matter of fact, this time around was the only one in which Louis had understood Subaru's idea. She was pointing to the building that was nearest to the sky in the city of Chaosflame.

However, that same building was the cause of Subaru's concern.

Louis: "Uh!"

Subaru: "So you're thinking the same thing, too…"

As Louis pulled on his hand with vigor, Subaru looked up towards the building she was pointing to—the Crimson Lapis Castle.

It was the castle of Yorna Mishigure and the tallest building in the Demon City. And, for the still-shrunken Subaru, it was also a place from which he'd certainly be dismissed at the gate.

In the first place, the purpose of playing hide-and-seek with Olbart had been to answer Yorna's request to wait for her at the Castle. —The order for that had been reversed.

Subaru: "But if we keep the badness of Olbart's character in mind, then there's a good chance that is a stunt he'd pull."

Olbart also knew why Subaru and the others wished to go back to how they were before.

Having to go to the Crimson Lapis Castle at least once so that he could return to his original state, was the kind of trick Olbart, known as the "Vicious Old Man", would likely use.

The problem was—

Subaru: "How do we get into the Castle…?"

He could no longer call himself Natsumi Schwartz with his "infantilized" and shrunken appearance. If this option existed in the first place, he would have rather put off the game of hide-and-seek with Olbart.

He couldn't tell Yorna about the situation he was in. Especially because Tanza, Yorna's attendant, was seemingly in cahoots with Olbart.

In that case, it appeared that it would be quite dangerous to approach the Castle.

Louis: “Uau.”

Subaru: “Yeah, I know… if Tanza’s hiding the fact that she’s cooperating with Olbart-san from Yorna-san, then she’s definitely acting of her own volition.”

It seemed to Subaru that there were relatively few of Tanza’s fellow horned demi-humans around the Crimson Lapis Castle.

If there had been a fuss in the Castle’s vicinity, Yorna would find out what was going on, no matter what. That wouldn’t be something to Tanza’s liking either.

Perhaps it would be better to snitch on Tanza for her mischievousness.

Subaru: “Waitwait, that’s too hasty. There’s always the chance that Yorna-san’ll take Tanza’s side. Or rather, it’s much more likely that she will.”

In a situation with two children, one of them beloved, the other one unknown, which one would be believed was a no-brainer.

No matter how he looked at it, the plan of telling Yorna what Tanza was up to, was one that should rather not be acted on.

But Subaru had a hunch that his feeling of the amount of enemies near the Crimson Lapis Castle being small was correct.

Subaru: “Best option’s to sneak into the Castle after all… Now we just have to pray that Olbart-san’s hiding there at the top. Louis, you got a sec?”

Louis: “Aa?”

Subaru: “That, warp of yours… it allowed me to fly with you, right?”

Staring into Louis’s blue eyes, Subaru posed that question.

The first time Louis had gone on a rampage in the street, she’d used a Blink to get out from under the collapsed tent, then teleported to another location as Subaru covered her.

At that moment, he'd felt something like the contents of his stomach being churned around, which was not something he wanted to experience again and again, but needless to say, it was very convenient.

There seemed to be a limit to how far they could fly, though.

Subaru: "With that power, we can get inside the Castle. Can you use it properly?"

Louis: "Au!"

Subaru: "You sure? If it's just "probably", we'll have problems. If you don't know how to use it properly, you and I both will be in danger. So."

Louis: "Uu…"

Louis puffed out her cheeks in frustration as Subaru continued to push her. As she did, she tightened her grip on Subaru's hand, using more force,

Louis: "Uau."

Subaru: "—Hk."

Poof, in the blink of an eye, the scenery around them changed.

Because he had been focusing on Louis in front of him, Louis's appearance did not change. However, the scenery around her quickly changed from a dimly-lit alley to a brightly-lit street, to a room in a building somewhere, then to the roof of a building, and so on.

As if to prove that she had proper control over it.

Subaru: "I-I get it! I get it, enough! That's enough!"

Louis: "Auu."

Subaru: “I lose! I give up, I lose!”

Louis let the air out of her puffy cheeks and relaxed them like she’d won. Kneeling beside her, having gone through that horrifying experience, Subaru felt a chill run down his spine.

While holding hands with Subaru, Louis had performed at least five short-distance warps in a flash. Each time, the scenery around them changed. What a ridiculous experience.

It was entirely akin to a nightmare.

Subaru: “But, this will do… Uh.”

Louis: “Uu?”

Subaru: “Ouehhhhhk!”

As he tried to clench his fists, a surge of gastric juices immediately burned his throat. While still kneeling on the spot, Subaru spewed the contents of his stomach onto the ground in a grand display.

The short-distance warp and the feeling of having his internal organs being churned about were inseparable.

But—

Subaru: “Th-That’s convenient. With this… Ouehk.”

Louis: “Uua.”

Still fighting the acidic urge rising inside him, Subaru glared at the Crimson Lapis Castle.

Next to him, Louis, wrinkling her nose, withdrew her hand for the first time, and waited for Subaru to finish vomiting from a distance.

3

—Pointing in the direction they should fly to, he squeezed Louis’s hand.

That was the signal that Subaru had taught Louis, to sneak into the Crimson Lapis Castle.

It was like training a puppy to do tricks, but in reality, it was not that simple.

He wasn't going to treat Louis like a dog, or a puppy, which would've been much cuter. At least he wouldn't have to be scared of who she might jump on and hurt badly at any moment.

It was necessary to be very careful when dealing with her.

Subaru: "Stop."

Calling out quietly and pulling on her arm, he made Louis stop in place.

Subaru put his finger to his mouth, giving her an instruction with "Shhhh". Louis did the same, putting her finger to her mouth and mimicked an "Uu", then shut her mouth.

After checking the scene, Subaru kept Louis behind him and gently peeked around the corner at the end of the passage. —About ten meters away, there was a strong-looking gatekeeper.

The gatekeeper, sitting dignified in front of the gate with his arms crossed, was a demi-human lizardman, his face resembling that of a lizard. His whole body was covered with blue scales, making him look very tough and cool.

He didn't seem to be taking his job as a gatekeeper very seriously, because Subaru could see from a distance that he was opening his mouth wide, letting out a yawn. But it seemed unlikely that they could avoid him and make it through the gate.

So—

Subaru: "Louis."

He called Louis's name to draw her attention to himself. Then, in front of her, Subaru pointed his finger at the wall for her to see—the stone wall that surrounded the Crimson Lapis Castle.

And with that, he squeezed Louis's hand tightly.

Subaru & Louis: "…"

The next moment, Subaru and Louis's bodies had leaped over the wall of the Castle, and entered the grounds of the Castle.

It was an infiltration that skipped the process of arguing with the gatekeepers and of breaking through them by force—He felt sorry for the guards, since even his childlike mind conscience was aware of it being cheating.

No amount of tight security or vigilance would help in the face of Louis's teleport.

Maybe surveillance cameras could thwart their attempts, but no such thing existed in this other world. In a world where security had to rely on manpower, this instant warp was a complete cheat.

Although—

Subaru: "We can't afford to be seen, we've got to be very careful…"

He could make excuses for anything provided it was outside the Castle or outside its grounds, but if they were found after entering the castle grounds, he wouldn't be able to come up with something.

Louis' short-range warp was also limited to two uses in a row. If used three times or more, it would definitely make the user feel sick to the point of throwing up, or worse, passing out.

What if someone found them, and Subaru passed out while escaping?

Subaru: "No one'd be able to stop this kid."

Louis: "Uu?"

Louis tilted her head innocently and looked at Subaru as it appeared that she didn't understand his concerns.

He would not let her kill anyone else, any more. —That had been

Subaru's vow, after taking Louis and running away.

The shrunken, young Natsuki Subaru could not come to a proper decision about Louis. So at least, he wanted to come to the best conclusion that his current self could.

That was the only way to keep Louis from taking someone's life.

Subaru: "…We can't just grab onto the outer wall and then jump while taking breaks, can we?"

His aim was the "abyss with a great view"; even if that was the top of the Castle, reaching it by solely relying on Louis's warp and climbing up from outside could prove to be difficult.

They would probably slip and fall down at some point, and no matter how stealthy and secluded they were, if they were climbing the castle walls, someone would notice them.

Not to mention that this was Yorna Mishigure's castle.

Subaru: "It'd be the absolute worst if Yorna-san found us."

On their way here, they'd been in many fights against the pursuers who'd taken in a part of Yorna's power via the Soul Marriage Technique.

Even though Louis was a powerful fighter, yet unskilled, they would be no match for Yorna, a member of the Nine Divine Generals.

What would happen to Louis if they were to fight?

If they were forced to fight Yorna, Subaru and the others would not be able to accomplish what they had come to the city for in the first place. It would be a huge blunder. He wouldn't even be able to face Rem.

Subaru: "There's no other option but to zip through the Castle while being careful."

Based on the experience of entering the Castle once the previous day, there were very few people on patrol inside.

Even when there were visitors, they'd been left alone in the waiting room. When no one was around, the security would probably be even more full of holes. The yawn of the gatekeeper was proof of this.

Although Subaru wondered if he could be so careless in the castle of the city's ruler.

Subaru: "—It's no use complaining about it, is it? We're already in here, after all."

Louis: "Uu?"

Subaru: "Yeah, let's go… Let's pray no one's on the other side of the wall."

Since they were castle walls after all, there was no way he'd be able to hear what was on the other side, even if he put an ear to the wall. So it was completely up to luck whether or not people would spot them when passing through the castle walls for the first time.

In his experience thus far, Subaru could not say that he was lucky.

And yet—

Subaru: "…I don't see anyone."

They had not incurred the misfortune of being found all of a sudden in an almost deserted castle.

Subaru: "…"

Looking to the left and then to the right, Subaru shielded Louis behind his back and peeked into a corridor of the Crimson Lapis Castle, which Louis and Subaru had safely slipped into with her short-range warp. He had not paid it any mind the previous day, but when walking on the wooden floor, he had to be very careful of the sound of his footsteps.

Also, if they were to encounter someone in the hallway, there was hardly any place to hide on either side.

If the need arose, they would have to warp into a different room without hesitation.

Subaru: “As long as we don’t use it too many times in a row, we should be fine, I think.”

He himself was unaware of what backlash Louis would bear, but if Subaru were to do one teleport at a time, with some space in between, he could probably tolerate it without throwing up.

In some cases, they should consider using the teleport, not just left and right, but upwards as well. —No, perhaps they should rather actively try to go upwards.

Subaru: “Would that result in less time wandering around here, as opposed to looking carefully for stairs? But if we go up too leisurely, we might be found by someone.”

Of course, if Yorna lived in the Crimson Lapis Castle, she would always be present. And since she presided as the Lord of the Castle, the room in which she resided would be at the top.

Going to the top of the Castle meant getting closer to Yorna.

Subaru didn’t really get it, but there were people in the world experts in sensing the presence of others.

Even with Louis’s teleport, no matter how much he tried to suppress his breathing and footsteps, there were still some things he could not eliminate. How much of a disadvantage it was going to be, would be the coming challenge.

Subaru: “Anyway, we’re going to be as careful as we can. If we’re found—”

???: “—If you’re found, then what?”

That very moment, Subaru’s shoulders hitched in fright due to the bone-chilling voice coming from behind him.

The shock was also felt by the one holding his hand, Louis, her eyes widening in surprise. Subaru and Louis turned around with a snap.

And there, was—

???: “It’s so cute to see children holding hands with each other. I can’t help but feel like my cheeks will form a smile against my will.”

The one person they should not have run into, the beautiful Yorna Mishigure, was standing there.

4

Subaru: “—Ah.”

No one was supposed to be there.

Up until a moment ago, there had been no one in the hallway aside from Subaru and Louis.

Yorna had appeared out of nowhere, even though she had not been there until just a bit ago.

This woman was the sort of being that held the kind of power that ridiculed the caution and care of ordinary people like Subaru, kicking all sorts of thorough preparations to the curb.

—One of this other world’s transcendent beings.

Yorna: “Either of your faces are unfamiliar to me.”

Yorna looked down at Subaru and Louis’s faces, and muttered so, the smoke rising from the kiseru in her hand.

She was dressed in the same glamorous kimono she’d worn at the top of the Castle the previous day. However, having only seen her sitting most of the time, he felt overwhelmed upon being faced with her standing in front of him.

Yorna was taller than him, partly because Subaru had been shrunk. Though she wasn’t quite as tall as Medium, thanks to her tall-soled footwear, her line of sight was probably above that of Abel’s

As he stared into her blue gaze at that height, his throat froze over.

Yorna: “There’s no need to be so frightened. What brings you two to my castle?”

Subaru: “Uh…”

The tone of her voice was soft and flat, and the one being asked cursed himself for his stupidity.

Even though Subaru believed he’d snuck in with plenty of caution, he hadn’t prepared a single excuse in case he was discovered. Short-sighted, that was exactly what he had been.

As expected, Subaru stammered, unable to say anything, and Yorna narrowed her almond-shaped eyes. He’d look suspicious if he went on without saying anything, his heart pumping so hard it was about to explode—

Yorna: “Are you perhaps here for Tanza?”

Subaru: “Huh…?”

Yorna: “The reason that brings you to the Castle.”

Subaru’s frozen throat made a cracking sound as she pointed that out.

It was completely unexpected that she’d be able to see through him to such a degree in the few seconds he had spent unable to say anything. At the same time, Subaru realized that his true identity had been discerned.

In only a single glance, the long journey to the Demon City and everything else had been for nothing. He thought he heard Abel’s voice coldly dismissing him as a “fool”, inside his head.

Subaru’s reckless endeavor ended here, with the illusion that his feet had lost their footing, and that he was plummeting headlong into the depths of regret—

Louis: “Uau.”

The feeling of his hand being squeezed tight stopped his consciousness from falling into complete darkness.

Without thinking, Subaru looked next to him and saw Louis standing beside him, looking at his face. Louis's blue eyes, trembling slightly were conveying that they—that Subaru's instructions had been that she could fly at any time.

The intense look in Louis's eyes was enough to restore Subaru's unsteady spirit.

Once he looked up, he saw that Yorna was quietly waiting for an answer to her question, not even trying to rush Subaru. —It might still be too early to give up.

Yorna had asked if Tanza was the reason for Subaru and Louis's presence in the Castle.

That fit. But only half. To make up the other half, he would have to take a gamble.

Subaru: "Um, Yorna-san… Yorna-sama."

Yorna: "What is it?"

Subaru: "Where's Tanza-chan?"

Yorna narrowed her eyes at Subaru's question, who had now found his resolve.

For a moment that lasted for less than a few seconds, Subaru experienced a state of mind like that of a rat caught by a fox. Most likely, the actual difference in power between him and his opponent was bigger than that of a rat and a fox.

Faced with such an opponent, the few seconds that went by seemed like an eternity. Before the silent Subaru and Louis, Yorna put her kiseru to her mouth and exhaled purple smoke from her lungs, then,

Yorna: "I'm sorry, but Tanza's out on an errand. It should be time for her to return soon…"

Subaru: "…"

With Yorna's answer, Subaru squeezed Louis's hand slightly tighter. This caused Louis to look at Subaru, her eyes wandering to see if he was pointing anywhere.

He felt sorry for Louis's response, as that was not supposed to be her cue to fly. It was just that, the moment Subaru realized he'd won the gamble, he strengthened his grip.

He'd won the gamble, yes, he'd won.

Yorna's previous question was a sign that she hadn't seen through the true nature of Subaru and Louis's goal. Naturally, their true identity had also not been exposed.

It was a much simpler, gentler question.

In fact, after that answer of hers to Subaru, Yorna closed one eye and said, "Really",

Yorna: "I'm also worried about Tanza. Although devoting herself to me is fine, forgetting one's promise to friends isn't a good thing for a subordinate."

Subaru: "F-friends…"

Yorna: "She's a loyal child, isn't she? I've always told her that she can't always focus on me."

Remarking that, Yorna shrugged after giving a comment on Tanza's attitude.

Due to Yorna's words and gestures, Subaru raised his eyebrow in surprise.

The previous day, she was the malicious and unfathomable Empress of the Demon City that had shown herself atop the Castle.

That impression had done a 180, because Yorna's current attitude felt like something completely different. That attitude was one that was more familiar and easier to understand, the feeling of an adult who cared for children.

As if to support this impression, Yorna let out a small exhale followed by a “Hmm”,

Yorna: “Tanza does have some carelessness, but I can’t wait for her to return. —Let’s wait for Tanza’s return in my room.”

With that, Yorna turned her back to them, and walked away slowly.

Despite the thick soles of her shoes, her graceful walk remained silent on the wooden floor, making him not believe his eyes at how sophisticated she was down to her toes.

Then, with Subaru fascinated by the mere sight of her walking, Yorna suddenly came to a stop in front of him,

Yorna: “Come along now. I’ll show you the way.”

Subaru: “Ueh…?! Yorna-sama will?!”

Louis: “Au?”

Yorna’s unexpected kindness stunned Subaru. Louis tilted her head in surprise at Subaru’s surprise, and Yorna, watching the two of them, gently put her hand over her mouth and smiled.

Not a mean one however, just a gentle smile.

Yorna: “This is my castle. Of course, it’s my duty to entertain guests. And now that Tanza is out, there’s no one to keep the two of you company.”

Subaru: “Ah, umm…”

Yorna: “It’s also the first time a friend of that child has come here. Now, come along with me.”

Jerking her chin, Yorna commanded them to follow along. Following her gesture with his eyes, Subaru wondered for a second what he should do.

He suspected that this could be a trap, but quickly dropped the idea.

Because Yorna had no reason to lure Subaru and Louis into a trap. If she wanted to, she could subdue Subaru with a single finger and take out Louis with a couple.

In that case however, it meant that she really had volunteered to be their guide out of the goodness of her heart. That would be completely different from the impression Subaru had of the Yorna from yesterday, though—.

Louis: “Uau.”

As Subaru let the contents of his head whirl around and around, Louis tugged on his hand. Apparently, Louis had no objection to following Yorna.

Louis’s reaction was the final push to get Subaru’s feet moving.

Louis’s ability to perceive danger was probably better than Subaru’s. If Louis wasn’t wary of Yorna, he didn’t have to worry about her doing something to him anytime soon.

Yorna: “Children?”

Subaru: “C-coming!”

In response to Yorna’s reiterated call to Subaru, he responded with a faltering voice and started walking. Yorna’s eyes narrowed as she resumed her steps, keeping up with Subaru’s short strides.

He wasn’t sure if he should take this as good luck or not, but it was much better than being interrogated by her.

Yorna: “You children aren’t from here, are you?”

Subaru: “Eh…”

Yorna: “Faces I haven’t seen. You haven’t received my “love letter”, either.”

Unfamiliar faces, faces she hadn’t seen before, were the words she spoke. The expression “love letter” that followed was something Subaru had no idea about, so he nodded his head with a “Y-yes”, Subaru: “From out of town… with a scary grown-up, that is.”

Yorna: “Scary grown-up… That sounds like a lot of trouble. Why are you with Scary Grown-Up-san?”

Subaru: “I-it’s because…”

Subaru answered Yorna’s question carefully, but with a certain amount of truthfulness.

In reality, the fact that he was working with the scary grown-up—with Abel, was very much a matter of chance. Perhaps it should be in the past tense, as in, “we had been working together”.

It was hard to imagine that Abel would readily forgive Subaru for running away with Louis.

To begin with—

Subaru: “I don’t know if I should be forgiven…”

He didn’t believe it was fair to blame him for not being able to decide on how to handle Louis.

Sure, he was sorry that that he had hidden Louis’s true identity from them. But if this was the result of revealing the truth, then he’d been right to conceal it.

If there was anything to apologize for, it was that he’d been unable to hide it until the very end, and revealing it halfway through.

Yorna: “—. Looks like you’ve got some complex feelings about it.”

Then, Yorna suddenly slowed down and glanced back at him, tapping her finger on her brow. There was nothing wrong with the skin which the white finger was touching. She indicated not her own, but Subaru’s brow.

There were probably wrinkles carved deeply into it, made by unanswerable thoughts.

Yorna: “A child shouldn’t make such a gloomy face. —I’ll spank that scary grown-up for you.”

Subaru: “Spank… Huh, Yorna-sama will?”

Yorna: “Fufu, I’m quite powerful, despite my looks.”

Yorna raised her sleeves and made them flutter about gently; at her words, Subaru had a vision of Abel being spanked and immediately shook his head sideways.

There was a gap in Subaru’s usual impression of Yorna, in that he felt that Yorna’s punishment wouldn’t be as cute as it sounded. Which came as a particularly big surprise.

Subaru: “I’m glad you’re worried about me, but I’m fine! I mean, he’s probably someone who’d see reason once you talked with him…”

Yorna: “Is that so? If he’s someone who’d see reason with just words, it’d be the best. But there are many people in this world who have trouble finding reason in talks, you know.”

Subaru: “—. Yorna-sama.”

Yorna: “Yes?”

He wondered on whether to say anything or not for a moment, cutting his words off. Because of this, Yorna stopped in her tracks.

A mixture of things went through his head. Feeling bad for stopping her so many times, worry that Yorna would get angry if he told her what he wanted to say, his own thoughtlessness for blurting out what he did even though he knew it was a mistake.

Because he was smaller now, he felt that his ability to think and judge things were really decreasing.

However, the biggest problem seemed to be this impatience or lack of restraint, both in bringing Louis along and in sneaking into the Crimson Lapis Castle unprepared.

Although he’d hesitated to say this in that impulsive moment—

Subaru: “Well, Yorna-sama, you really are listening to what we say. It’s just that, I was sure that people of high status were scary…”

Yorna: “Hmmm.”

Realizing that he’d said something very rude, Subaru was unable to look Yorna in the eye while speaking. But upon hearing what Subaru’d said, Yorna giggled a teeny bit,

Yorna: “From the looks of it, you’re not demi-humans either.”

Subaru: “Ummm, yeah, that’s right.”

Yorna: “What does this city look like, from your point of view?”

Subaru: “This place…”

In response to that abrupt question, Subaru turned his gaze to a window in the corridor. The window high up on the wall was too tiny for Subaru to take a look outside through it, given his current height.

But he could tell there was a dim blue sky close-by.

Subaru: “It’s amazing, it’s such a busy city. There are so many sorts of people.”

Choosing his words carefully, Subaru expressed his impressions as honestly as possible.

The impression of a busy city had been there from the very beginning. The appearance of the city as a mishmash of things piled up, as well as the variety of people living in it, all gave this impression.

To his eyes and ears, it gave him a strong impression of a hectic city.

Yorna: “You’re a very honest child. It’s pleasant to hear you say that.”

Having heard Subaru’s thoughts, Yorna’s lips formed into a faint smile.

She then directed her gaze at the same window that Subaru was looking at—likely gazing at the outside view in a different way.

Yorna: “This city’s full of people who have a hard time living in other places. Those that became insignificant outside the city, children with nowhere else to go… children that would go unnoticed, even if they raised their voices.”

Subaru: “Even, if they raised their voices…”

Yorna: “If we don’t lend an ear to the children who’ve reached the last place they can go to, then who will?”

As she spoke so with the kiseru in her mouth, an elegant glow flashed in Yorna’s eyes.

Experiencing a sensation akin to his heart being stabbed, Subaru felt terribly ashamed of himself. —Now, after hearing Yorna’s words, he found that his impression of her had changed drastically.

Tanza: “She is a loving woman. Loves her allies and hates her enemies. —Lover of all things that reside in the Demon City.”

That was what the little deergirl Tanza had said when he asked her about Yorna the previous day.

Subaru’d had no clue whatsoever as to what that meant at the time. Once Abel had told them about the Soul Marriage Technique, he’d wondered if the girl had meant its power.

But perhaps that wasn’t what Tanza had meant, it was truly as she had said.

—It was, the answer to what Yorna Mishigure cherished from her heart.

Subaru: “I’m so sorry, Yorna-san…”

As soon as Subaru thought of this, Subaru couldn’t hold back again and apologized.

Hearing Subaru suddenly apologize, Yorna smiled, exhaling purple smoke,

Yorna: “There’s nothing to be sorry for. The reason why people in high positions always look scary is that if they didn’t, they’d be scared too. There’s also the logic, that people of high status wish to be feared.”

Subaru: “People of high status, wish to be feared…”

What was that? He felt that he’d just been told something he would do well to remember.

And it seemed to be a way of thinking that maybe Yorna was no stranger to.

Yorna: “Don’t worry, I’m not one to do something as disgraceful as to get angry with a child over something like this. By a stroke of luck, I’m in a good mood.”

Louis: “Au?”

Yorna: “Yes, that’s right. —There are signs that I might be about to get what I’ve wanted for a long time.”

Lowering the corners of her eyes, Yorna fluttered her sleeves around once more.

There was no trace of anger in her answer. As she had said herself, it was probably because she wasn’t the kind of person who dealt with children in a mature way, and more so because she was in a really good mood.

Perhaps the reason behind her good mood were the contents of the letter Abel had sent her—

Subaru: “…”

With that in mind, Subaru held back this time and thought carefully.

Yorna’s positive attitude toward the missive, and whether she kept her word or not, depended on whether Abel, Subaru, and the others could safely join her at the Crimson Lapis Castle.

But it was Tanza, Yorna's attendant, who was interfering with Subaru and the others' efforts.

From their earlier exchange, it was clear to him that Yorna really cared about Tanza.

If her own desires clashed with Tanza's, which ones would Yorna choose? —Yorna, who had in the past defied the Emperor for the sake of someone else.

Once Yorna found out the truth about the situation, what would she do?

Yorna: "—You're wrinkling your brow again, aren't you?"

With a tap, Yorna put her finger between her eyebrows and pointed out Subaru's distress. Following Yorna's gesture, Louis also tapped her forehead.

Looking at Yorna and Louis's appearances, Subaru let out a small sigh.

Maybe this too was a hasty idea.

But since he did not have the brains to think properly about whether it was the right or wrong thing to do—

Subaru: "Hey, Yorna-san, I need to ask something…"

5

—Over the roof tiles of the castle tower of the Crimson Lapis Castle, where red and blue brilliance mixed together, he laid his buttocks.

And so, while basking in the clear wind characteristic of this high altitude, he placed the gourd he kept in his breast pocket to his mouth. While quenching his thirst with alcohol, he rested his chin on his hand while the spectacle under his eyes unfolded.

???: “Kakakakka, what a superb view.”

Looking down at the unorganized streets of the city with various styles intermingling, an aged body’s throat rang.

His hoarse laugh was disturbed by the wind, disappearing into nothingness without reaching anyone. It was engulfed by the tumult of the Demon City, vanishing gradually every time the monstrous old man was amused.

He was fond of that which was chaotic.

The chaotic townscape, the melting pot of various races of demi-human, the motifs drifting to the left and right.

Even if something only meant that something else would fall into chaos, it would make him want to support it.

???: “It’s a bad habit of ol’ people ta scramble and eat whatever they can get their hands on. Anyhow—”

After taking a large gulp from his gourd, the old man wiped the alcohol spilling from the corner of his mouth with his sleeves and shrugged his shoulders. And so, still sitting cross-legged, he rotated his hips and turned around, raising an eyebrow.

It was a sight that would make an old man fond of chaos drool—

???: “Even if they reached where I’m at, they’re a way too unpredictable bunch, truly.”

In front of the monstrous old man who thus spoke, three figures were stepping atop the tiles of the roof of the castle tower.

???: “Found yooou~, Olbart-san!”

The one who was pointing at Olbart, was a young boy holding the hand of a young girl with blonde hair.

And standing behind them like a guardian was the Empress, the ruler of the Demon City.

Chapter 51:
The Demon City's Mistress

1

A placid breeze bathed in light gently caressed Subaru's bangs.

While savoring the ticklish feeling, Subaru felt the touch of a girl's hand linked with his, and the breath of the tall, beautiful woman standing to his back.

The location they were in was the top of the Crimson Lapis Castle, above the large room on the top floor. He stepped onto the roof tiles of the Castle, the "place closest to the sky", from which he could now view Chaosflame.

Subaru had led them to the place closest to an "abyss with a great view".

Subaru: "Olbart-san, I think you're a real jerk."

The hand not linked with Louis's beside him, the one that Subaru was pointing with, was being directed at a small old man sitting on the edge of the Castle's roof.

Sitting cross-legged, spinning around on his rear, the monstrous old man—Olbart, put his mouth to the gourd in his hand, gulping down the alcohol within.

And—

Olbart: "No way, boy. You're not hungry, are ya?"

Subaru: "…H-hungry?"

Olbart: "Yeah, that's right, ya hungry? After all, ya just woke up and had no time ta eat, did'cha? Yer hunger's got a lot ta do with both yer brain and yer body's functionin', ya know."

While saying that and setting down his gourd, Olbart pulled out another package from his pocket. Before a slightly alarmed Subaru, Olbart gave a small “kakaka”, and unwrapped the package.

Wrapped in the package was a black, round object the size of a golf ball.

Subaru: “That’s…”

Olbart: “It’s called a ration ball, it’s portable food for us shinobi. One of these’ll last’cha a day and keep yer head and body in shape. Tastes awful, tho’.”

Plucking a ration ball from its wrapper with his fingers, Olbart waved it about as to show it off.

From the way it looked, it felt like it was emergency food made without taste in mind. It might be nutritious, but Subaru didn’t think he’d want to eat it.

Olbart rolled it around in his palm, and said,

Olbart: “I’ve been a shinobi since I was young, so naturally, I’ve been familiar with this since I was a wee lad. And every time I ate it while workin’, I thought ta myself, “Like the great ol’ men of my village, I wish I could just retire and not eat this stuff anymore”.”

Subaru: “…Then, why not do just that? Olbart-san, you said you’re the head honcho of the shinobi village, aren’t you a big shot?”

Olbart: “Oh, you’re right. What I’m sayin’ is that, right now, I’m better and stronger than the ol’ men who used ta work me to death all willy-nilly… But somehow, I’m still eatin’ this stuff.”

With that, Olbart threw the ration ball that he’d been rolling in his palm into his mouth. He chewed and gulped down on his provisions, which the monstrous old man had described as not good.

After that, he opened his mouth to show that he’d eaten it all. Then,

Olbart: “After all, ya can’t break a habit, that’s what I’m sayin’. This mess of food I put together without regard ta taste or appearance’s the best food for me. Doesn't hearin' this make ya cry? No? Kakakakka!"

Olbart showed a toothy grin, causing Subaru to remember something eerie.

Unsure of what he was trying to tell him with the current conversation, Subaru thought this seemed to be something unrelated to his childish youth. However, it seemed it shouldn't be ignored in its entirety.

He felt that maybe it was Olbart's way of praising or complimenting him.

Yorna: "—Old Man Olbart, this is my castle, do you recall?"

After the conversation died down, Yorna Mishigure, the Empress of the Demon City, having come to the roof of the Castle along with Subaru and Louis, spoke up at last.

Staring into Yorna's blue eyes, Olbart stopped laughing and said, "Yeah",

Olbart: "Of course, I know that. To be looked down on by the Lord of the Castle while sittin' on her castle's a nice feelin'. Doin' what'cha love's the secret to a long life."

Yorna: "That's quite the indulgent hobby for a man of your stature. I would've never thought you'd do something like this."

Olbart: "Ho, how's that so?"

Yorna: "It's only natural, isn't it? —It'd be insane to know this secret of longevity and still shorten your own lifespan."

Subaru could feel the heat from Yorna, who smiled seductively while putting her sleeve gently over her mouth. Yorna's anger was contained in her gentle gesture, and of course it was Olbart who it was directed to.

Olbart must have noticed Yorna's anger, but the monstrous old man remained seated on his haunches, throwing the next ration ball into his mouth from the package open on his lap.

Olbart: “So, why are ya three gettin’ along again? A foxgirl and two lil’ kids aren’t friends in any way.”

Yorna: “Unfortunately, unlike the Vicious Old Man Olbart here, I have no taste for teasing children and no reason to torture them. When it comes to children, it’s only natural that I’d treat them with courtesy. What’s more—”

Cutting off her words there, Yorna twirled the golden kiseru around her finger. Then pointing the tip of the kiseru, the part from which smoke trailed, at Olbart, she continued.

Yorna: “If I hear that Old Man Olbart has misled these children and deceived my attendant… as the mistress of this city, I’ll do what I must.”

Olbart: “Hoho, ho.”

Gently stroking his chin, Olbart’s amused eyes turned to Subaru and Louis.

Subaru nodded deeply, sensing the intent of his gaze.

Subaru: “I’m sorry, but I had to tell on you. It’s not really a foul under Olbart-san’s rules. You had us get attacked too anyway.”

Olbart: “Kakakakka! You’re never at a loss for words, boy. But that’s the right answer. I’m the one who sicced ‘em on ya, so ta whine ‘bout it if it’s done ta me’d be pretty pathetic. But…”

Subaru: “But?”

Olbart: “Good work comin’ up with that when yer mind’s gotta be havin’ trouble keepin’ up as well. Are ya mayhaps from the Vollachian Imperial Family? You’re a match for ‘em in underhandedness.”

Subaru: “Don’t say such scary things…”

Considering only the hair color of Subaru and the current Emperor, Abel, they had a lot in common, but there were too many differences in other areas. Their facial structure and the length of their legs were proof of this.

In the first place, to say that his personality was as bad as that of those of the Vollachian Imperial Family would be slander.

For example—

Subaru: "I always say thank you when someone does something nice for me."

Yorna: "And with a smile and a loud voice too. That's what a child should be like. I'm going to tell Tanza to follow your example. Anyway—"

Parting her lips, Yorna gave her evaluation of Subaru's naughtiness, then lowered the tone of her voice. After that her eyes narrowed, and the harmonious atmosphere came to an end.

Because—

Yorna: "I can't rebuke my faithful servant without her being here to respond to me. Now, where did you hide her, Old Man Olbart?"

Yorna's question was the main reason why she'd come along.

Olbart: "…"

Feeling Yorna's tense pressure and its aftershocks directed at Olbart, Subaru firmly bit his lip and checked the sound of his own beating heart.

—Yorna had found Subaru downstairs, just inside the Castle, and after getting to know Yorna's personality, which he did not the previous day, Subaru had taken another big gamble.

He told Yorna as much as he could about their situation and the "hide-and-seek" game that was happening here in Chaosflame.

Of course, Subaru did not mention Abel's true identity, and he didn't tell anyone that he and the others had been "infantilized" by Olbart. What was important was that Subaru and his friends were playing “hide-and-seek” with Olbart, and that Tanza was helping the latter.

In order to appeal to her as sincerely as possible and clear up her suspicions as she listened patiently, Subaru had decided to prepare himself to face the situation with all his might, and confided in Yorna about the situation.

And after hearing Subaru’s appeal, Yorna thought it over for a while—

Yorna: “—I’m not a woman who can determine whether the words of a desperate child are true or false.”

Giving that answer, she then accompanied Subaru and Louis to the top of the Crimson Lapis Castle.

Subaru: “Honestly, I didn’t think she was someone I could talk to so much, but…”

Louis: “Auau.”

Subaru: “Yeah, I know.”

Hearing Subaru’s murmur, Louis shook the hand she was holding and pursed her lips.

In response, Subaru told himself that this was a stroke of luck that had come about from a bunch of coincidences turning up. If any of those factors were missing, this situation couldn’t have been created.

That he had separated from Abel and his sinister designs.

That he had reached the Crimson Lapis Castle with the help of Ubilk’s “counsel”.

That he had been found by Yorna personally rather than by a guard.

That he had been together with Louis, not Al nor Medium.

And finally, that Subaru, the one most affected by the “infantilization”, had taken a gamble.

The main reason why Yorna had listened to Subaru’s words was because she’d seen no lie in them, and took them as a serious appeal from a child.

Just as there were grown-ups who wouldn’t take children’s words seriously and laughed them away.

Other adults would take them seriously because those words came from children, and because of that they would try to meet their expectations.

Subaru had not expected one of the Nine Divine Generals of the bloodthirsty Vollachian Empire to be one of the latter.

Subaru: “Who was it again that said Yorna-san’s crazy…”

Perhaps an argument would be that she was treated that way because she didn’t approve of Vollachia’s mantra of “survival of the fittest”.

At the very least, Subaru had no choice aside from thinking she did not, after being treated so nicely.

Yorna: “Old Man Olbart, I have two requests for you.”

As she said this, Yorna gently held up two fingers.

Subaru couldn’t say anything to step into the conversation between the transcendental beings that disregarded him. All he could do was to be aware of the touch of Louis’s hand so that he could move if something happened.

The only way to escape from the rooftop area would be to teleport downstairs.

Olbart: “Those demands of yers, let’s hear ‘em for the time bein’.”

Yorna: “First, you must return Tanza to me.”

Olbart: “Oh, com’on, that’s a bit unreasonable. I’m sure that girl’s got her own ideas. If she didn’t, she wouldn’t’ve planned somethin’ without tellin’ ya, Your Highness.”

Yorna: “—Silence.”

Olbart admitted that he had an idea where Tanza was somewhere in the middle there, but his mocking voice was cut short by a single, sharp word from Yorna.

The serene power of that word was enough to change the atmosphere.

In fact, even Subaru, who wasn’t the one the word was directed at, held his breath.

So Yorna, having silenced Olbart’s chatter, brought the kiseru she was toying with in her hand to her mouth and slowly filled her lungs with purple smoke.

Yorna: “Unfortunately, I’ve got no intention of hearing Tanza’s complaints or thoughts from anyone other than from her own mouth. And I don’t think I’d be able to bear to hear it after I’ve traced them to the tongue of the Vicious Old Man.”

Olbart: “Kakaka, seems no one likes me here.”

Yorna: “I’m sure down inside you know quite well why would that be, don’t you?”

Yorna smiled aggressively and tilted her head, her hair ornaments swaying noisily. Even the kanzashi stuck in her luxuriously-tied hair and her adorned beauty seemed to Subaru to be Yorna’s weapons.

—People of high status wished to be feared.

Yorna had been the one to tell Subaru about this idea. Maybe it was not only about scaring people, but also about making them feel her beauty.

Yorna: “One more thing, the game you’re playing with these children, you must stop it.”

Olbart: “A game, huh? It’s a game, but a serious one.”

Yorna: “As I said yesterday in the presence of His Excellency the Emperor. —I’d like the messengers to be left alone and, regardless of what His Excellency might do or say, they’ll be protected by me.”

—She would not let anyone touch Subaru’s group.

Unexpectedly, Yorna’s decision had been conveyed by Tanza’s own mouth. And as Yorna herself intended to abide by that decision, she was angered that her wish had been broken.

In conclusion—

Yorna: “Within this Demon City, you wish to make an enemy of me?”

Olbart: “Ohh, scary, scary. You’re a scary lass… Oh, in a way, I didn’t interfere with anyone, let’s say that’s my excuse.”

Yorna: “That is your interpretation, isn’t it, Old Man Olbart? —Whose town do you believe this is, anyway? Do you think I’m a woman so open-minded that I’d laugh and pardon it?”

Subaru felt the air boiling, his entire body covered in goosebumps.

He got that Yorna was getting worked up as she reached the second half of her words. Of course, Yorna was not one to lack the self-discipline as to show that in her tone of voice and facial expressions.

But he understood. Because Subaru had seen many really angry people.

When people were truly angry, with their lives on the line, their emotions would flare. And that much would be visible by just being by their side. There was very, very raw anger there.

Louis: “Uu…”

Feeling similar to Subaru, Louis gave a small growl due to the alarming atmosphere spreading.

On their way here, Louis might have proactively attacked the people who were chasing them, but the two people here were Yorna and Olbart—people who were entirely different in strength from their pursuers.

It was an animal instinct, she probably knew that she couldn’t win if she fought. Maybe she was worried about Subaru getting involved in the fight—

Subaru: “—Hk, Olbart-san!”

For a moment, Subaru felt his thoughts about Louis begin to soften, but he shook them off. With that momentum spurring him on, he called out Olbart’s name as he and Yorna continued their stand-off.

Olbart, still sitting on the roof, deftly kept one eye focused on Yorna and the other on Subaru.

Subaru: “H-how are you doing that…?”

Olbart: “Kakakakka! Body control’s the foundation of the shinobi. Ya can’t be a shinobi unless ya can do different things with yer right hand and left hand, and yer right foot and left foot. What of it?”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Olbart: “Ya called me just now. I’m tellin’ ya, I’m in the middle of the riskiest situation of my life. Ya shouldn’t be sparin’ attention to that.”

It seemed that, even though he hadn’t changed his laidback attitude, Olbart was perfectly aware that this was a critical juncture. If that was really the case, then Subaru was grateful that he’d spare him the attention.

Subaru placed a hand on his chest, took a few deep breaths, and said,

Subaru: “Oh, why don’t we call it even?”

Olbart: “…Mhm?”

Olbart, upon hearing Subaru's suggestion, opened his left eye wide. Drawing the attention of a single eyeball, Subaru raised his voice in frustration, "Like I said!",

Subaru: "We're even, we're even! Olbart-san, you tried to do something against the rules, and I told Yorna-san. Both are just as bad as each other, that's why we should…"

Olbart: "Quietly admit we're both at fault and leave it at, that's what ya wanna say?"

Subaru: "Oh yeah, yesyes! See, not bad, huh? We'll give Olbart-san what he wants, and that'll solve our problems!"

What Olbart desired was a secret of the Emperor, which was in Abel's possession.

Subaru didn't know the specifics, but if he could hand it over, it would make it easier to have Olbart withdraw. Originally, the "hide-and-seek" game was something like a test of wits, to see if the information could be believed.

Subaru: "We agreed on doing it three times, and we've only found you twice so far… Take it easy on us, though, we managed to get up to the top of the Castle."

Olbart: "Hmmm… By the way, you're the one who figured out this was my hidin' place? Not that other one, the oni-masked young'un?"

Subaru: "Y-Yeah, that's right. An idea about the "abyss with a great view" happened to come up in my mind… There was another spot I was thinking of too, though."

Perhaps Abel and the others were on their way there.

Even if they weren't right now, sooner or later, Abel's group would get to the answer and come to the Crimson Lapis Castle. Subaru had cheated with Louis's teleport skill and Ubilk's "counsel".

However, it might be easier to persuade Abel and the others about how to deal with Louis if they pulled off this achievement here. If it proved itself to be difficult, they could try to get Yorna on their side.

How Yorna would react once she found out about Louis's true identity was unknown, though.

Subaru: "Anyway! I wonder, Olbart-san. If you'd be willing to listen to my… No, to our suggestion."

Shaking his head and pushing away any negative thoughts, Subaru looked at Olbart.

The reason why Subaru had used "our", plural, was because he needed Yorna's cooperation in this proposal of reconciliation. If Yorna said she wouldn't forgive Olbart for luring Tanza into a devious scheme, Subaru's proposal, thought up with utmost effort, would be in vain.

However—

Yorna: "…"

With one eye closed and the kiseru in her mouth, Yorna did not object to anything. Subaru thought the fact she hadn't opposed it meant that she respected his opinion.

Subaru was extremely, extremely grateful. He wanted to thank her so much.

He wished to not waste the trust and kindness that Yorna had entrusted to him.

Subaru: "Olbart-san."

Once again, Subaru called out Olbart's name, hoping for a compromise.

In response to Subaru's hopeful black eyes, Olbart picked up the gourd he'd settled down, using his fingers. Putting his mouth to the gourd, he slurped down every last drop of the alcohol therein,

Olbart: "Ya know, boy. I dunno if that's somethin' only the current you could come up with, or if it's somethin' even the past you would've come up with…"

Subaru: "…"

Olbart: "—I don't like the idea of throwin' away a game I've set in motion halfway thro'. —This geezer's a stubborn man, ya know?"

The monstrous old man laughed, and with that, he crushed the gourd in his hand, shattering it to pieces that fell onto the floor.

With a peal the debris danced, causing Subaru to gasp.

Immediately afterwards—

Yorna: "An old man who won't take the hand offered by a child, will mourn his own stubbornness."

Yorna's long legs swung down as she rushed forth, and with a roar, the tower of the Crimson Lapis Castle split in two.

2

Her foot, wearing a thick-soled geta, was raised up high, then slammed straight down at tremendous speed.

A moment later, the castle tower, being hit directly by her heel, bent, cracked, shattered and, after a beat, burst open with a thunderous roar as if it had exploded.

As the blown-off roof tiles flew up in the air and a thick cloud of smoke rose, Yorna, having dished out that immense strike, turned around at the epicenter of the explosion, the hem of her kimono waving gallantly.

In a single breath, Yorna had performed a jump and an axe kick in sequence, the consequence of their immense calamitous force being the partial destruction of the Castle.

A single strike by Yorna's heel had literally caused the keep to collapse, ruining the beautiful scenery of the Crimson Lapis Castle.

Subaru: “Whoaaaa—?!”

Seeing that sublime destructive power, Subaru crouched down with his head in his hands.

He’d not been caught in the destruction of the exploding castle by the skin of his teeth, but the incredible tremors nearly sent him tumbling off the roof.

However, Louis held him by the arm, stopping that from happening.

Louis: “Uau!”

Subaru: “Shit! Why’s this happening…!”

He was pulled up by the tight grip on his arm, as he sat up, Subaru screamed with tears in his eyes.

The dancing cloud of dust had gone into his eyes, and because of that he had teary-eyes. Definitely not because that blockhead Olbart had rejected his proposal.

That also, was also rough obviously—

Subaru: “Yorna-san!!”

Yorna: “Stay back, don’t get swallowed up in this. I’m not very good at holding back, I’m afraid. —Nevertheless.”

Yorna, without looking back, responded to Subaru’s call from behind her.

Cutting off her words there, Yorna pulled her stuck foot off the roof, brushed the dirt from the hem of her kimono, and looked up high—

Yorna: “As expected, he’s a nimble one.”

Directly above Yorna, flying in a whirling motion, blending in with the billowing smoke and debris, was a small shadow—Olbart’s figure.

Basking in Yorna’s gaze, Olbart let out a “Ha!” with a toothy grin, and said,

Olbart: “Thought we were supposed ta leave each other alone… So, anythin’ goes now, right?”

Yorna: “I’m surprised you believe you can beat me in this city. If you’ve gone senile, then I recommend you relinquish your seat in the Nine Divine Generals to the younger generation.”

Olbart: “Kakakakka! Nah, no can do. I’m gonna be the longest livin’ member of the Nine Divine Generals.”

One of them in midair and the other atop the roof, their lines of sight intersected, the pair exchanging their intentions to attack, and prepared themselves to go against each other.

Yorna put the kiseru to her mouth, and Olbart flipped around in midair—she exhaled a plume of purple smoke, into which Olbart kicked the sky and dove with the speed of an arrow.

Olbart: “—Hk!”

His eyes blazing, Olbart’s sidekick collided head-on with the purple smoke Yorna had spread before her.

The smoke from the kiseru, which should be both weightless and not solid, received Olbart’s foot and scattered the impact with a motion as if it was bending.

Seeing this, Olbart’s smile grew,

Olbart: “Ooshyaaaa—!!”

His short legs spun at high speed, and ten, twenty kicks were unleashed with fierce vigor.

The purple smoke diffused the impact of one, two blows, but one after another the force of the kicks scattered it; at last, once the smoke finally cleared, it could no longer serve as a shield or armor.

Of course, that even just this could be done in the first place was completely nonsensical—

Olbart: “Interestin’ thing ya got there. Don’t have that written down in my book of techniques.”

Yorna: “My regrets. It’s a secret technique that can’t be imitated by shinobi who can’t love anyone.”

The moment Olbart broke through the smoke, the figure of Yorna appeared beside him.

Leaping into the air, Yorna waved the fancy-looking kiseru in her hand, aiming for the back of Olbart’s unguarded head.

It was too long and light to be considered a blunt weapon, however Olbart blocked it with an extremely rapid swing of his arm—or rather, with the kunai held in his arm.

Along with a shrill screech, the kunai that Olbart had concealed in his sleeve shattered.

It must have been fashioned from appropriate materials of course, yet the kunai was broken and Yorna’s kiseru was undamaged. What in the world was Yorna’s kiseru made of?

Olbart: “Kakaka, the elderly should be treated with kindness. Don’t’cha dare harass me, lass.”

Yorna: “I don’t deny that there are elders who should be treated with kindness. But, Old Man Olbart, you can’t possibly be one of them. That being the case…”

Olbart: “Oh well, I’ll just treat myself with kindness then.”

While exchanging banter, they hurled lethal attacks back and forth at each other.

Yorna’s slender arms and long legs delivered blows that, despite their beautiful appearance, were mighty enough to bring down even castle walls.

In comparison, Olbart’s attacks were not as flashy, and were generally fending off Yorna’s attacks and throwing in a little interference in between.

However—

Olbart: “Ya don’t need the power to collapse a castle to kill someone. Ultimately, one long needle ta the forehead’ll kill ya.”

Yorna: “If so, give it a try.”

Promptly after Yorna’s quiet provocation, Olbart’s cunning expression melted into the sky. —No, he began moving at tremendous speed, too fast for the eye of a run-of-the-mill human to follow.

There was a famous boxer of yesteryear who was said to float like a butterfly and sting like a bee, and that was exactly what Olbart’s battle style was, the half-demolished castle tower as his stage.

If one had to pick a more apt description for him, saying that he was combining flight like that of a fighter jet and a shot like that of a sniper rifle, might be more accurate.

Yorna: “You’re a personage who flies about quite a lot. You’re too roguish for your years.”

Perhaps due to Olbart’s leg strength, the tiles he stepped on detonated and, in the following moment, Olbart’s figure materialized from somewhere else and dealt a blow to Yorna.

Yorna made good use of her superhuman reflexes to either catch it with her kiseru or dodge it. Both of them were transcendental beings, so much so that the fierce battle made Subaru forget to breathe.

Louis: “Au…!”

Next to Subaru, Louis, who was watching the same spectacle, made herself smaller, curling up her body.

At the beginning of the battle, at a time he could not bear the continued state of the situation, he had been anxious about Louis jumping out.

But, the battle between Yorna and Olbart was no longer of that caliber.

Whichever side won, there would be an enormous amount of devastation.

That too, was an outcome far from ideal for Subaru.

Subaru: “But what can I do? There’s nothing I can do to stop it…!”

With such a flashy battle, and considering the castle tower was being smashed up so violently, people everywhere in the city were most likely aware that something was going on at the Castle.

If so, it was possible that the people of the city, who loved Yorna, would come in droves, or that Olbart’s comrades, the false Emperor and his entourage, would make a move.

If that happened, it would be the beginning of a major war in the whole city.

That’s not what Subaru wanted.

Even if they had come to invite Yorna to enter the great conflict for Abel’s return to the throne, what tragedy would result from a battle brought about without enough preparations?

Olbart: “Shiiihaaaa!!”

Raising a shrill cry, both feet of the spinning monstrous old man pierced the roof in front of Yorna. Immediately after, a shock traveled through the roof, causing an eruption beneath Yorna’s feet and sending her body soaring high into the sky, resulting in a swap of their initial positions, between the one in midair and the one on the ground.

Olbart: “…”

As Yorna rose up into the air, shuriken thrown by Olbart came at her from all sides.

Subaru had no idea of when he had thrown them. Perhaps he had hurled them after Yorna was tossed in the air, or maybe he’d known that she would be flung there beforehand; but either way, there was no escape.

Up in the air, a shuriken made a brutal wound on Yorna's soft, fair skin—No,

Yorna: "You must understand. I am the ruler of this town, the leader of the Demon City."

As Yorna responded, all around her, the revolving blades of the shurikens were stopped in their tracks.

They were not halted by Yorna, who could move at extraordinary speed. Yorna didn't even have to move. What had stopped the shuriken were pieces of roofing tiles that shot upwards.

It was not due to an enormous stroke of luck.

Because, no matter how lucky a person was, more than ten shuriken coming at a person from all directions being blocked by tiles could not happen by chance alone.

Yorna gave a gentle shake of her arms, Subaru and Olbart both holding that within their line of sight, gawking at the scene.

Then, as her arms moved, the tiles that had blocked the shuriken swam in the air and then stopped in midair, forming a spiral staircase around her.

Leisurely, Yorna's thick soles used the tiles as steps, making her way down to the castle tower.

That scene was a display of illusions or perhaps psychokinesis. Of course, it could be called magic in other words, but it differed slightly from the magic Subaru knew.

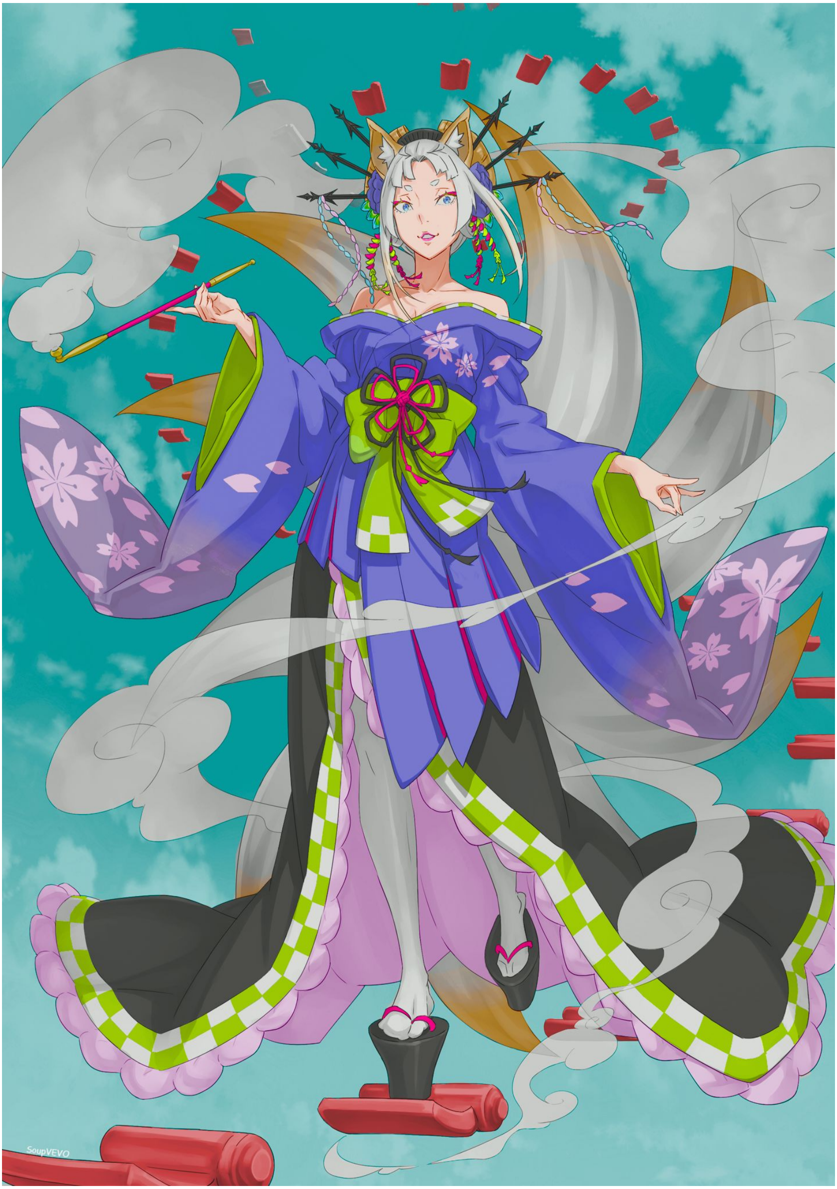
Neither fire nor ice nor wind nor earth were being manipulated, the building parts themselves were.

Olbart: "Kah, you're a real pain in the ass, ya know that? So that's the magic trick Cecilus and Araki were talkin' 'bout? How'd'cha do that?"

Yorna: “I told you so. It’s a secret technique that can’t be done by shinobi who can’t love anyone… I’m a woman who takes good care of things, despite my appearance.”

With a smile, Yorna held the kiseru between her lips, then struck her now-free hands with a clap-clap.

As if on cue, a change occurred in the half-demolished castle keep. —No, it was no simple change. It was a magic technique, one that distorted reality like a dream.



SoupVEVO

Subaru: “Th-This is…”

The roof distorting beneath his feet, Louis hugged Subaru’s arm as he gulped. While supporting her body, an aberrant event happened under Subaru’s nose, as the half-demolished castle keep was restored before his eyes.

Little-by-little, the building repaired itself like a sped-up video of a wound being healed.

Combining Abel’s guess about Yorna being a user of the Soul Marriage Technique and her words from earlier, a theory came to Subaru’s mind about what happened.

It sounded very, very stupid, but Yorna Mishigure—

Subaru: “Sh-She’s using the same Soul Marriage Technique on the castle as well…?”

Indeed, he could not help but at a loss of words by the ability showcase of the ruler of the Demon City, a being literally out of this world.

Chapter 52:
Love Can’t Be Bequeathed

1

—By using the Soul Marriage Technique on the Castle, her Od was being instilled into even inorganic substances.

This was the reality of the extraordinary phenomenon of Yorna, who was using the spiraling roof tiles as a foothold.

Abel had spoken of her Soul Marriage Technique being applied to the more than hundred people chasing after Subaru’s group like it was already something unusual, but that was not even the strange part.

If he assumed she was handing out part of her Od, even to her own castle and kiseru.

Subaru: “That seems extremely bad for your body…!”

In the first place, the act of handing over Mana to someone else was quite tiring in itself.

In fact, Subaru had firsthand knowledge of how difficult it was, as he would regularly exchange Mana with Beatrice, with whom he had a contractual relationship.

While in the Sand Sea, on their way to the Watchtower, for example, Beatrice had taken a lot of Mana from him, and even though it had been only the necessary amount, he’d gotten dog-tired.

Additionally, the risk of trouble occurring with his Od tied to Beatrice alone—in Yorna’s case, by simple calculation that risk was more than a hundredfold.

On top of that, she herself had the power to unfold a heck of a battle.

In reality, the fact that she was supposed to be dog-tired because she was sharing her power with everyone was, considering she had split the Castle with an axe kick, quite unbelievable.

Olbart: “Hahaa, you’re usin’ some strange skills. Geez, no matter how long I live, techniques I dunno come out one after the other, it’s a real headache.”

Yorna: “That’s the kind of fertile ground we live on, so there’s no point for you to lament it. From my point of view, Old Man Olbart’s skills are also troublesome enough… It’d be better to make you disappear.”

Olbart: “Kakakakka! I won’t be taken outta the picture so easily… Wuoh?!”

Olbart, laughing with his big mouth open, sprung backward in response to the hostility that followed that immediately.

Instantly, the roof beneath Olbart’s feet exploded, and roof tiles shot up from the impact from directly below. It was much like a reprisal for the previous attack that had launched Yorna.

And yet unlike Olbart’s single blow, Yorna’s attacks fired in rapid succession, as if hot on his heels.

Bang bang bang, with that sound, shockwaves chased after Olbart as he spun backward and hopped away. That had been accomplished by Yorna simply waving a supple finger of hers, using a roof tile fixed up in the air.

Olbart: “Yo! Ho! Huh! Take this!”

Yorna: “Old Man Olbart, you sure are a stubborn man.”

Olbart: “If ya got the impression they’re flies, ya dunno elderly opponents, lass. However—”

Cutting off his words there, Olbart twisted his body as he spun backward. As he did, with his back turned while in an upside-down position, the roof lifted like a wave to greet him.

Chased by shock waves from his front, and by surging waves of roof tiles from his back, he was being attacked on both sides—the sight of the castle tower surging like an ocean made Subaru want to doubt his eyes.

But doubting his eyes was what he'd want to do for what happened directly after that as well.

Olbart: "…"

As the roof tiles approached like a tidal wave, seeing that, Olbart kicked himself off the air itself, heading into the roof tiles of his own accord head-first.

Albeit it looked like a wave given its appearance, the tiles that made up the large wave had not lost their hardness and weight.

If he went in head-first, his whole body would be thrashed, his bones broken, and, in the end, his head would be tragically smashed. Without thinking, Subaru covered Louis's face as he hugged her, hearing her protest with a "Uu!".

But that cruel outcome never came to pass.

Olbart: "Ain't I amazin' for bein' able ta put the technique of hidin' in the ground into use without preparation?"

At the moment of collision, Olbart plunged soundlessly into the waves of roof tiles as if he were diving into water, and jumped straight out the back of the surge of roof waves. Scraping the torn-off roof tiles with his heels, Olbart flashed a cunning smile showing his white teeth, acting as if it had been nothing special.

In fact, Olbart had yet to display the depth of his abilities.

On the other hand, Yorna might have already exposed what terrors the Soul Marriage Technique held, but,

Yorna: "Will you be able to achieve your goal while merely running away like that, Old Man Olbart?"

With composure, she looked down from the sky towards the monstrous old man, who had still not sustained an injury.

Both of them had shown only a fraction of their power. That alone was enough to prove that the Nine Divine Generals, the Empire's greatest warriors, held tremendous strength.

However, if the fight continued in that way, it could be presumed their even match would continue, as both sides would not give in.

Apparently, Subaru and Louis watching from the sidelines were not the only ones with this impression.

Olbart: "Good grief, that's a painful thing to hear. Tho', if the Third stubbornly holds out against the Seventh, well, it can't be helped that His Excellency'd be angered."

Yorna: "Then, what shall we do?"

Olbart: "Good question. Well, it's not like I've been runnin' 'round aimlessly either…"

Raising her shapely eyebrows, Yorna asked that of Olbart, who stroked his chin. As he rubbed it, the monstrous old man's cheeks twisted, his gaze turning in another direction.

Those glowing yellow eyes turned to the two children watching the battle from the sidelines—

Subaru: "—Hk."

Yorna: "Old Man!!"

Suddenly, Olbart's gaze sharpened and Subaru drew back.

Immediately afterward, Yorna, her eyebrows raised, kicked off the roof tiles, throwing herself furiously at Olbart. Once again, Yorna rained down intense strikes on Olbart, similar to those at the start.

However—

Olbart: "It's 'cause of somethin' like that, that'cha haven't reached His Excellency even once despite so many rebellions."

Olbart spat that out, and a leg of his, incomparably shorter than Yorna's, sprung up. But, the sole of his shoe collided directly with the thick sole on Yorna's heel, sending shockwaves through the long hair of the two.

Yorna gnashed her teeth, Olbart clenched his own, and in a second the bodies of both were blown in opposite directions. Yorna and Olbart, each at the same time.

Then, as soon as he saw that there was a wide distance between them, Olbart plunged his left and right arms into his sleeves and then pulled something out. —Between his fingers, there were round and black lumps, four in each hand.

Subaru: "Ration balls?!"

Olbart: "Ngh, looks like that, right? But, things'd get messy if ya ate 'em. —For ya see, chunks of Fire Magic Stones are tightly stuffed in 'em."

Hearing Subaru's shriek, Olbart laughed and gave a grand swing of both his arms.

If his words were to be believed, those black balls were bombs. Propelled with an impact, they flew towards Yorna who was showing a large opening—No, that wasn't it.

Olbart: "In the latest rebellion, that lot were the bunch we fought, right? I wouldn't have used something like this against them, so it's fresh, isn't it?"

His cheeks distorted, Olbart threw the bombs over the roof into the open sky.

From the way he hurled them, it seemed there was no particular aim, and because of that, there was no doubt about it. —For Olbart, a bomb just needed to fall onto a place with people.

Only that—

Olbart: "I've heard it said that'cha and the folks of this city are awfully tough, but… Are ya tougher than the folks of my village were?”

Yorna: “—You lowlife!”

The size of the bomb was small, but the hidden power there-in was wholly unknown.

There was also the question of how many people in the city were under the effect of Yorna’s Soul Marriage Technique at the moment. In conclusion, leaving those bombs as they were would be far too reckless.

Yorna instantly drew that conclusion as well. Hence—

Yorna: “HaAAAaaa!!”

Stomping her foot hard enough to smash the roof, Yorna brandished her arm wide. Clutched in her hand, was the kiseru that had been used to attack Olbart.

At the same time, the smoke overflowing from the tip of the pipe traced the same arc as the full swing of her arm, and the mass of purple smoke flashed across the sky of Chaosflame like a horizontal slash.

—That mass of purple smoke had entirely caught the bombs scattered about.

Immediately afterward, the tremendous sound of chained explosions, thunderous booms and shock waves dyed the sky of the Castle. One of the explosions occurred near Subaru and Louis, blinding them and making it impossible for them to stand.

Subaru: “Kah—”

He faintly remembered seeing on the television or in a book that one should plug their ears and open their mouth when an explosion occurred.

As a result of failing to do both, Subaru’s body suffered great damage. His head was rocked, his vision was colored bright-red. That was how out of the ordinary Olbart’s bomb was.

Olbart was out of his mind to be carrying around so many of those things.

That he was going to scatter them all over the city without mercy was also clear—.

Louis: “Uau!”

There was a shout, and Subaru’s shoulders were shaken by a small hand.

Upon taking a look, he saw Louis projected in his deep-red, obscured vision and noticed that her facial expression was changed. Her mouth quivering in terror, tears were welling up in Louis’s blue eyes.

Seeing that before his eyes, Subaru went to reply with “I’m fine”,

Subaru: “—Ah.”

—At the edge of his red field of view, he caught sight of Olbart appearing behind Yorna.

Subaru: “…”

As she was busy dealing with the bombs that had been thrown, her pose was still the same, having done a full swing of her kiseru. Olbart, having appeared right behind her, was about to draw his arm in, and loosen a strike of his hand being used as a sword.

His aim was the center of Yorna’s back; if this were a manga, it would be a situation in which her heart would be pierced with one blow.

If it truly would play out like something out of a manga, he didn’t know. But enough had been seen in the fight so far to know that both Yorna and Olbart were superhumans with manga-like powers.

If it continued unchanged, Yorna would die. So—

Subaru: “Louis—!”

Grabbing Louis's hand that was on his shoulder, Subaru pointed towards Yorna and Olbart.

He'd told her the procedure in detail before entering the Castle, and Louis, setting it in motion, opened both her big round eyes—the next moment, Subaru's vision flickered, and the teleport happened.

And so—

Subaru: "Ah."

Before he could inhale once, Subaru leaked a dumbfounded voice.

The reason was simple, because even his blurry bright-red vision was taken away by a sudden warm feeling. Through that sensation, he understood that the cause for that was some kind of fluid that had been poured on his face without warning.

As he tried to wipe that sensation away with his arm, he noticed a sense of discomfort.

Louis's grip was too light.

Olbart: "The hell was that just now? Ya weaklings are supposed ta be over there."

The sound of Olbart's voice of curiosity made Subaru look up dumbfounded. Within his view was the monstrous old man, his head slightly tilted, shaking his hand vigorously.

Within Subaru's vision of red, an even redder arm waved with vigor.

Subaru: "Louis…?"

As he watched, Subaru called Louis's name, gripping her hand tighter.

He thought that they had to get out of that place at once. They would have to leap two times, maybe more. Perhaps he'd throw up, but that would be bearable.

He would bear it, so they had to get out of there, right now.

Because of that—

Subaru: “Louis! We’ve got to hurry…”

Olbart: “Nah, sayin’ somethin’ that absurd’s quite pitiful ta look at. There’s nothin’ left above her neck, is there?”

Subaru: “—Huh?”

Hearing those words spoken so indifferently, Subaru was not able to understand their meaning.

Perhaps him being smaller and his brain younger was why he didn’t get them. He had been told something he didn’t get, something his little brain didn’t want to understand, and because of that.

And because of that, even if he were told that nothing of her head was left.

Yorna: “How dare… you do that!!”

Shortly after, with a shout of anger, something shot over Subaru’s head, and Olbart jumped sideways to avoid it. An impact shaped like a straight line ran through the place where Olbart had been just before, and the newly-repaired castle tower was once again destroyed.

But Olbart was unconcerned by the sort of dreadful power in that blow,

Olbart: “Oh, scary, scary. But ya should be grateful, foxgirl.”

Yorna: “What do you mean?!”

Olbart: “If it weren’t for the boy and lassie there, you’d be dead, ya know? Well, at this rate, it’s only a matter of time anyhow.”

Yorna: “…”

Shaking his upraised finger, Olbart continued in a carefree tone.

Yorna held her breath, and Subaru felt her attention going from the monstrous old man to himself. However, Subaru slumped on the spot, and the best he could do was pull Louis's lifeless arm towards him.

Subaru: "Lou, is…"

His vision was red, and he couldn't see Louis's figure properly.

If that was because of the disorder of Subaru's eyes, or because Louis's figure had turned bright-red, he couldn't even tell.

But there was one thing that could be said. —Louis had died.

Even though Subaru had not found any answer on what should be done about her.

She had acted as she had been told to by Subaru, and as a result, she died.

Subaru, had let her die.

Yorna: "Child! Child, look at me!"

Suddenly, Subaru's face cast downward was lifted by two hands clasping both his cheeks.

In front of him, in his red vision, was a beautiful woman's face. The reason as to why he had not been able to tell it was Yorna at first glance was because the expression on her face was one of grief.

It was different from the confident face she had shown the previous day to Subaru and the false Emperor, and their respective entourages.

It was different from the kind face that had tried to treat Subaru and the others politely this very day.

Right now, Yorna's eyes were shaking as she stared at Subaru with a pained expression.

He finally understood the reason why, due to the reflection of Yorna's eyes before him.

Subaru: "—Ah."

Subaru dropped to his knees, with that face of his being in an awful condition.

His left eyeball had burst into bright-red, and his right one had popped out of its socket, held by a string. His eyeball had been pushed out of its orbit because of the impact of the explosion, which had not been dampened at all.

It was, like some special effects from a cheap-looking zombie movie, somewhat weird to look at.

Subaru: "Haaa."

Realizing his circumstances, Subaru's vision, solely that of his left eye, wavered as he let out an exhale. But Yorna's hands did not allow him to fall.

Yorna, moving her lips and staring into Subaru's face, spoke, "Child—",

Yorna: "—Love me. Right now."

With eyes looking straight ahead, she declared something utterly absurd.

To love, and to do it at this moment, was awfully absurd. In the first place, he didn't know what he should do specifically, and loving someone was no trivial thing to do.

He did believe Yorna was a nice person, and she was beautiful, but—

Yorna: "Child! If you love me, those wounds will also…"

Olbart: "Kakakakka! Oioi, that's one hell of a thing ta ask for, lass, for real. Not that I know much 'bout it, but love doesn't bud so easily, does it?"

Yorna: “Silence!”

Shouting out in anger towards Olbart behind her teasing her, Yorna’s eyes were tinged with a deep hue.

Watching that happen near him, Subaru repeated faint breaths to prepare, as to accept the waves of pain slowly arriving.

Even if one of his eyeballs had burst, and one of them had popped out, he did not have fatal injuries.

Unlike Louis, he still had his head. He knew that, soon enough, deathly pain would flare up. He was sure he would scream and yell and cause Yorna plenty of trouble.

He didn’t want to cause any more trouble—

Yorna: “Child.”

One word was spoken, and Subaru’s consciousness flickered up.

Then, much like an attack that made use of a gap of just one moment, Yorna’s serious face approached his own.

Subaru: “…”

Yorna’s lips, overlapped with Subaru’s own.

A soft sensation hit his face, and he could feel her breath right up close. It took him a while to realize that he was being kissed.

Partly because he was younger, and partly because he didn’t have much experience to begin with. His scarce memories were rather distant and he considered them to be very, very moving experiences, but this—.

Yorna: “My lips aren’t cheap. With this…”

The kiss ended, Yorna distanced her face, and she interrupted the words onto which she was clinging. However, Subaru vaguely understood what the words that were to follow would be.

What she wanted to say was—Can you love me now?

If Subaru were to love Yorna, the situation would change.

That was most likely the root of Yorna's power, or something like the origin of her strength.

However—

Subaru: "There's a girl I like, so…"

On the other side of his bright-red vision, the face of the girl he liked, located in a distant place, emerged.

When he gazed at her smiling face, his heart would throb. Therefore, Subaru could not love Yorna.

He could not love her, and so, upon hearing that, Yorna's face tensed up in grave pain. It was difficult to look at that.

Olbart: "—Well, things don't always turn out so well with men and women."

In a moment, along with that voice filled with something like disappointment, Subaru's field of view changed completely.

Subaru: "…"

Yorna's face, which was right in front of him, disappeared, and all he could see was the sky being dyed red.

Similarly to Louis's teleport, his vision shifted quickly—No, it was different from Louis's.

If it were like Louis's teleport, the world would reflect something different, more vivid, in an instant.

But what was happening to Subaru at the moment was much rougher and cruder. His vision was spinning, and there was no interruption like there would be in a teleport, and he saw everything from the ground, ground that was a continuous plane.

Just above him was Yorna on her knees, and Olbart's form standing before her. Next to Yorna, was the body of a fallen girl, perhaps that of Louis.

There was one other thing, something, or someone, standing between Yorna and Olbart.

That was—

Subaru: "—Ah"

—It was the body of the young Subaru, a child missing his head.

Olbart: "Good grief, it's mentally tough ta kill a child. Well, physically it's easier tho', isn't it?"

Yorna: "Old Man—!"

With a blood-curdling scream, Yorna's body plunged into Olbart. He met it head-on, and the bodies of the two clashed, causing the Crimson Lapis Castle to rock violently.

It rocked, it cracked, it shattered, and once again the destruction spread and spread, and then, something happened.

From that point onward, Subaru did not understand what was happening.

He did not understand anything anymore. Without understanding anything, Subaru's head bounced off the roof—

It bounced—.

2

—Dark, he was dragged into a dark space.

???: "…"

It was an empty space; he had no hands or feet and was floating; it was incomprehensible, neither sky nor ground existed, drifting about, nothing shook, nothing resisted, nothing was experienced, nothing shuddered.

It was like he had been acquainted with it many times before, it was like this was the first time he laid eyes upon it.

It was like it was drifting away, it was like it was infinitely close.

Amidst the seemingly everlasting darkness, in the space completely dominated by darkness, there was an echo.

An echo, of weeping, of someone's crying voice, one that made his non-existing heart beat, of a voice.

???: "I love you."

Those, were words of love.

Like an appeal for love, a request for love, a plead for love, a deferment of love, the voice had requested love for love.

???: "I love you. I love you. I love you."

That accretion of love, originally, was supposed to be that of words filled with various emotions.

The likes of happiness, of anger, of sadness, of pleasure; the whirlpool of emotions was filled with that sort.

And yet, that which filled the love in this everlasting darkness, was nothing more than a single emotion.

???: "I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you—"

Crammed among the entirety of those emotions, in the entirety of that whirling love, was only "sadness".

Sadness, of sadness, of sad, that love sobbed, saddened by sadness.

Unceasingly, there was sobbing.

Unceasingly, the sobbing made him yearn for death just because he was listening to it.

Love was sadness, love was made of sadness, love was made of sad, love was saddening sadness.

While sobbing, while carrying out love on love, while saddened by sadness, they united at the terminus.

???: “—Where are you?”

3

Olbart: “I’ve heard it said that’cha and the folks of this city are awfully tough, but… Are ya tougher than the folks of my village were?”

Yorna: “—You lowlife!”

The whirling, spinning vision of red performed a rotation, and tense voices struck his eardrums.

One was that of an old man, and the other was that of a woman—he could understand they were Olbart and Yorna respectively.

He understood, but that was the only thing he could understand.

Subaru: “Huh…”

Yorna: “HaAAAaaa!!”

Immediately after letting out a dazed voice, there was a massive boom, and, stepping hard on the roof of the Castle, Yorna’s foot crushed it. At the same time, the golden kiseru in her hand was swung.

A large, horizontal, arcing blow from the kiseru, with tremendous speed and destructive power, spread a large plume of purple smoke across the skies of Chaosflame.

Subaru knew what it was for and what would happen next.

He knew, but it would happen before the knowledge he was aware of could catch up with reality.

—A bomb struck by Yorna’s purple smoke exploded, and a shockwave engulfed the area.

Subaru: “Gah—”

His whole body bathed by the same shock that had bathed it mere moments ago, Subaru’s field of vision was dyed bright-red.

He thought he heard a small sound like something being split, and he immediately drew the connection to his reddened vision. The sound had been the bursting of his eyeball. Hence, Subaru’s vision had turned red.

If so, before long, the other side of his field of vision would turn dark—

Subaru: “Ah, g-gyAHHHHHH—!!”

Covering his face with both hands, Subaru screamed as he was struck by two things, pain and “understanding”.

He had gained “understanding”. One of his eyeballs had been ruptured and the other one popped out. As long as his brain didn’t want to understand, it was possible to ignore the pain.

But, if he knew what had happened to begin with, he would not be able to ignore the pain.

Subaru: “AAAAAGH! AGH, GYAHHHH!!”

Louis: “Uau! Uauu!”

A small body clutched Subaru, who had collapsed onto his back on the spot, wailing loudly.

His name was being called. He did not understand. His ears were burning, and his own voice was too loud. The pain, the gushing of blood, he could hear it. He did not understand whether it was blood flowing inside or outside his body. It hurt, it just hurt. It hurt it hurt it hurt it hurt, it hurt.

Somebody, help. I don’t want pain. I don’t like pain. I don’t like, pain.

It hurt, it hurt because it hurt, it hurt because it hurt, because it hurt, it hurt it hurt it hurt it hurt it hurt—.

Subaru: “Wa—”

Olbart: ”Oioi, isn’t that a bad idea?”

Subaru: “—Hk.”

Pain swirling around in his head, his red vision glazed over.

Right beside Subaru, there was a hand holding him down as he tried to roll around, but it was getting in his way. He wanted to scream louder, flail around more, and let the pain escape from his body.

No, it was his face that hurt. His eyes and his ears. So, if it hurt somewhere else, if this pain would go somewhere else.

Louis: “Uau! Auaa—”

Thud thud, he banged his head on the ground. A strong force pulled him up. Someone fastened their arms behind his back, making him unable to move. It hurt, he was afraid of being hurt. He hated it, he was scared, he was going to die.

Subaru: “Guh…”

Olbart: “Kakh, ya can’t be serious, foxgirl. What kinda body ya got that won’t die from that? So that’s what Cecilus was talkin’ ‘bout when he said he couldn’t lop off yer head?”

Yorna: “…There’s no way I’m going to reveal my womanly secrets to a lousy man who lays his hands on children.”

In the distance, someone was arguing. Caught between his own voice and the voice that was trying to hold him back, he couldn’t hear anything. He couldn’t understand. It hurt, everything was wrong.

Yes, everything was wrong. The red and the pain, everything was their fault. Everything was because of them.

Subaru: “It’s because of them…! That’s, that’s, that’s their fault! Not mine! Even though it’s not mine, uuuugh!”

Louis: “Uu!!”

Squirming and struggling, Subaru tried to push all of it somewhere else. What if he pushed everything to something else and was able to escape, what should he do if he could escape?

He would think about such a thing after he escaped. He would think about it after he escaped, so.

Olbart: “Wahwah, I can’t stand hearin’ the sound of children cryin’. —Shuddup.”

Yorna: “Wait…!”

A woman’s desperate voice and an uninterested hoarse voice.

After hearing them, something approached with the sound of scraping. From behind his head, fastening their arms behind his back, someone hugged Subaru tightly.

But, being embraced by them did not help.

Because a bright-red, heated light swelled up again, engulfing Subaru and the rest.

He was swallowed, and the pain went away, and then—.

Olbart: “I’ve heard it said that’cha and the folks of this city are awfully tough, but… Are ya tougher than the folks of my village were?”

Yorna: “—You lowlife!”

A moment later, again he heard the voices he had heard just a while ago, and hearing them again, his consciousness turned white.

Subaru: "Huh…?"

Immediately after everything was suddenly and abruptly cut off, the replay began anew.

Other colors returned to his bright-red vision, he felt the sound of the wind in his deaf ears, felt the warmth of the soft girl right beside him, and—

Yorna: "HaAAAaaa!!"

The voice of a vigorous woman was raised in volume, and a moment later, an arm was swung with tremendous force.

The trajectory of the swinging arm was already known to him.

—A series of explosions rang out, and a shock dyed his vision bright-red.

Subaru: "GYAHHHH—!!"

Covering his face and taking in the pain of his ruptured and popped-out eyeballs, Subaru collapsed back-first onto the roof, and yelled.

Louis: "Uau! Uaau!"

Someone's voice, seemingly crying, jumped onto his fallen body.

As he felt it, as he listened to the world drowned out by harsh sounds, as he lamented the pain and suffering, Subaru's head was filled with tears, fear, and "why".

Perhaps, he was dead. He was dead.

He knew death. It was very painful and cruel, it kept him away from this place. But then it returned him to this place immediately, and then he died; it was painful however, due to the red explosion.

Even knowing this, Subaru repeated in his mind, “Why?”.

—This, isn’t it.

Vaguely, a sensation rang in his head, almost pushing him away with pain and redness. But it was a feeling of absolute certainty that he could not let go of.

An eyeball burst, an eyeball popped out, his eardrums ruptured, he was crying out in pain, he would soon after this die in a horrible way yet again despite wishing that the pain would be kept at a distance. Along with tears, snot, drool, and the leakage of some urine, his frenetic head thought such.

Subaru: “Tihs, isn…”

Louis: “Uau! Au, uu!”

Subaru: “This isn’t, mine…”

It’s not.

It’s not, it’s not, it’s not.

It’s not, it’s not, it’s not, it’s not, it’s not.

It’s not, it’s not, it’s not, it’s not, it’s not, it’s not, it’s not, it’s not, it’s not, it’s not.

It’s not, it’s not—.

Subaru: “Tihs is…”

Before the pain filled his head, he thought of something that he must never forget.

Again and again, Subaru was thrown into this world of red and pain, and this, this was—.

Subaru: “Not it…!”

—It was not Natsuki Subaru’s Return by Death, but something else.

Chapter 53:
What Lies Beyond the Eleventh Second

1

Olbart: “I’ve heard it said that’cha and the folks of this city are awfully tough, but… Are ya tougher than the folks of my village were?”

Yorna: “—You lowlife!”

He heard voices he’d heard many times before.

The hoarse voice of an old man, and an anger-filled voice of a woman. And then—

Yorna: “HaAAAaaa!!”

There was an impact, that of the roof tiles being stepped on by a foot with force, and the kiseru and purple smoke were swung furiously. Chaosflame’s sky was scythed by a sideward swipe, scythed, scythed—

—Once more, a series of explosions echoed, and that red, intense pain arrived.

Subaru: “Geh, GAHHHH—!!”

Louis: “Uau! Uaau!”

The pain and shock of having an eyeball bursting and the other popping out made him collapse on the spot clutching his face. A light body jumped on him; he’d already known this would happen.

But although he knew it, he was not able to deal with it. There just wasn’t enough time.

Subaru: “Guhhhh! Agh, guh, UGHHHHH!”

A bright-red field of vision, a pain like that of his head being smashed, his soul crying out, “Why?”.

All of these caused Subaru to waste the ten seconds of despair that came time and time again.

The pain prevented him from thinking, the loss that made the world turn red prevented him from seeing his environs. Even if it would swiftly fade away, three seconds were all it took for him to freshly savor the same pain all over again.

Pain, red, scary, why, death. Pain, red, scary, why, death. Pain, red, scary, why, death. Pain, red, scary, why, death. Pain, red, scary, why, death. Pain, red, scary, why, death. Pain, red, scary, why, death. Pain, red, scary, why, death. Pain, red, scary, why, death. Pain, red, scary, why, death. Pain, red, scary, why, death. —It was repeated endlessly.

He was going mad.

Olbart: “I’ve heard it said that’cha and the folks of this city are awfully tough, but… Are ya tougher than the folks of my village were?”

Yorna: “—You lowlife!”

Once more, the same voices could be heard. The pain and the redness ceased for only a moment.

But once more, he was so scared that his soul was torn to shreds, as he was going to taste the same pain.

Subaru: “AAAaaah—!!”

He didn’t want to hear anything. He didn’t want to feel pain. It was, scaryscaryscaryscary.

He opened his mouth wide and screamed; screaming to the point of rupturing his throat. Because he didn’t want to see anything, he closed his eyes and crouched down, his head in his hands.

And at the very next moment.

Subaru: “…”

Boom, the sound of an explosion resounded, and Subaru’s small body was repelled, rolling away. The sound became distant, and his soul cowered in terror as the pain and the red once again arrived.

However—

Subaru: “—Huh.”

That pain never arrived.

The pain of one of his eyeballs bursting and the other being popped out did not arrive. Although his hearing had been destroyed, the world had not reddened. What hurt him the most was his throat due to his loud scream.

Subaru: “Why…”

Louis: “Uau!”

Shortly after his stunned voice leaked out, a small body jumped at him.

It was Louis. She pulled on his arm, trying to get Subaru to stand up. But he could not, his knees had no strength, and he had not yet gotten an answer to his “why”.

His throat just tightened up and tears welled up in his eyes, happy to be away from that red pain, even for a moment. Unable to bear it any longer, he crouched and cried.

Yorna: “Chil—”

Olbart: “Oioi, isn’t that a bad idea?”

Yorna: “—Hk.”

Far away from the crouching and crying Subaru, a battle of a whole other dimension continued. —No, the scales had tipped grandly; within his blurry vision, he could see that the woman had fallen to her knees.

Yorna, her knees bent, and Olbart, standing to her back.

Olbart waved his blood-red right hand, raising his eyebrows in surprise as he gazed down at Yorna, bleeding from the corner of her mouth.

Yorna: “Guhk…”

Olbart: “Kakh, ya can’t be serious, foxgirl. What kinda body ya got that won’t die from that? So that’s what Cecilus was talkin’ ‘bout when he said he couldn’t lop off yer head?”

Yorna: “…There’s no way I’m going to reveal my womanly secrets to a lousy man who lays his hands on children.”

Striking her molars, Yorna replied to Olbart in a voice devoid of any loss in intensity. Upon hearing that, Olbart let out his usual loud laugh.

After that, he waved his blood-soaked sleeve,

Olbart: “Ya say some funny things. I’ll show ya what it really means ta lay yer hands on a child.”

Yorna: “Wait—!”

A black ball pulled out from his sleeve—a bomb was thrown and flew towards Subaru and Louis.

Louis quickly stepped in front of Subaru and tried to repel it, but it was too late.

The red light exploded in front of Subaru’s eyes yet again, and Louis’s whole body, having rushed in front of him, along with Subaru’s own, were both engulfed in light and once more torn apart—.

Olbart: “I’ve heard it said that’cha and the folks of this city are awfully tough, but… Are ya tougher than the folks of my village were?”

Yorna: “—You lowlife!”

Once more, the same voices could be heard.

2

—The moment the red and the pain disappeared, he closed his eyes and raised a loud shout.

Having repeatedly experienced the red pain many and many times over, and having only managed to escape it a few times, this was the absolute rule Subaru had obtained.

No matter what, once the red and the pain arrived at the same time, there would be nothing Subaru could do about it. He could only cry, scream, and then, die.

And just when he’d think he was dead, once more he would hear those voices and suffer the red pain from the explosion.

Don’t wanna do it anymore. Don’t wanna. Because I don’t wanna, because I’m begging, I’m scared.

Olbart: “I’ve heard it said that’cha and the folks of this city are awfully tough, but… Are ya tougher than the folks of my village were?”

Yorna: “—You lowlife!”

Once more, the same voices could be heard.

At that moment, the pain and the redness receded entirely, and the momentary relief seemed to drain all the strength from his body. Enduring it, he did what he had to do.

Subaru: “AAAaaah—!”

Squeezing his eyes shut, he opened his mouth wide and howled.

Although he could not hear because of his own shouting, Yorna was probably brandishing her kiseru with a wide swing, attempting to detonate the bomb thrown by Olbart.

So, soon afterwards—

Subaru: "—Hk."

Subaru's whole body was pushed by the roar and blast wave of the explosion, landing on his butt atop the roof. The corner of the roof tile bit into his butt, the pain so sharp that he felt like he was about to cry.

But he did not cry. No, he did not want to cry and make his vision go blurry. Because—

Subaru: "I can see…"

Fearfully opening his eyes, he could see just fine; they had not burst nor popped out.

As usual, his ears were not working, just ringing, and his throat was burning, but he did not experience that red pain. It was alright. It was good.

If he closed his eyes and shouted out loud, he would not have to suffer that red pain.

Louis: "Uau!"

Louis rushed over to Subaru, she seemed to be on the verge of crying from emotion. While he could finally see Louis's face, her blue eyes were wide open as though worried about Subaru.

Without thinking, he hugged Louis's body back and shouted, "I'm fine!".

Louis: "Uu."

Subaru: "I'm fine! It hurt, and it was red… Yeah, but, now, I'm fine…”

Anyhow, once the pain and the red disappeared, he would close his eyes and shout.

As long as he remembered that rule, he would never have to suffer. As Subaru hugged Louis’s thin body, he felt certain of this.

Olbart: “Nah, you’re not fine at all ya know, look. O’er here, o’er here.”

Immediately afterward, Subaru heard a horrifying voice and reflexively looked up.

As Subaru’s eyes widened, Olbart, wearing a smile of satisfaction, cast shurikens that drew irregular trajectories, flying towards Subaru and Louis.

The shinobi’s dark-colored dull weapons, glinting with a shing, were all aimed precisely at vital points.

Subaru: “Hii.”

Yorna: “I won’t tolerate this sort of debauchery.”

Subaru’s throat tightened, and to his front appeared Yorna’s back. She intercepted the trajectory of the oncoming shurikens with her kiseru, striking them down in their flying path altogether.

Simultaneously, the roof tiles on either side of Olbart rose, and then slammed into the monstrous old man with the force of a mousetrap or a flyswatter.

However—

Olbart: “Kakakakka! What a flashy show, isn’t that an amusin’ technique!”

Olbart twisted his minute body to dodge the blow of the roof tiles.

Subaru used to believe that the bigger someone who labored in waging battle was, the stronger they would be and the wider the range of their attacks. However, Olbart's agility and quick wittedness defied that impression.

Olbart: "Well, I don't need this flashy stuff. Ultimately, a human bein' can be killed by a sharp needle ta the forehead."

Yorna: "Your words make my fox ears itch. —So, how about this instead?"

Olbart: "Oh."

Olbart avoided the showy attack, but right after, Yorna struck the roof with her heel. Then, one-by-one, the roof tiles rose and began to float, revolving around in midair.

Drawing an extremely large spiral across the entirety of the roof, the circumference of the whirlpool narrowed towards Olbart at the center. —Just like a tornado.

And then—

Yorna: "Why don't you show me some of your shinobi techniques on how to escape from a place without an opening?"

Before she finished speaking, Yorna's outstretched hand squeezed tight.

Immediately after, the whirling tornado of tiles engulfed Olbart and compressed him into the center in one fell swoop. The tiles collided with each other relentlessly, and the sound of a fierce, all-crushing impact rang out.

Even a somewhat robust human body would not be able to withstand the pressure at the nexus of this fierce destruction. It would be crushed, with no chance of survival.

Louis: "Au…"

Witnessing the same thing, Louis too gasped at its exuberant destructive power.

In response to Louis's reaction, Yorna quietly replied, "I'm sorry to have frightened you”,

Yorna: “I started all this on a whim of mine. I feel terrible about the way you look…”

Olbart: “Oioi, don’t’cha go thinkin’ we’re done here. I’m tellin’ ya, the fact that I’m still alive even tho’ I’m a geezer means it’ll take a lot ta kill me, ya know?”

Yorna: “—Hk.”

Just as Yorna was about to turn around, she heard that comment and her fox ears perked up. Taking a look towards it, the voice she’d heard had come from a whirlpool of roof tiles that had gathered at their center, crushing it—No, it had come from behind it.

Accompanied by a rattle, the voice that came from among the debris of the broken roof tiles was that of Olbart, unharmed despite the fact he’d been at the core of the vortex of devastation.

The monstrous old man waved his hand, smiling with a malicious look on his face,

Olbart: “Yo. And that’s the shinobi’s technique of escapin’ when there’s no openin’. Ya satisfied?”

Yorna: “—. Old or decrepit, you are still a Nine Divine General, it seems.”

Olbart: “Kakakakka! That’s a terrible thing to say! First of all, I’ve been an ol’ man ever since I was chosen ta be one of the Nine Divine Generals, ya know? Even tho’ I’m old and decrepit, I’m still much stronger than most, and that’s why I was chosen. You however, lass, really need ta set yerself straight.”

Yorna: “Why’s that?”

Olbart tucked his waving hand into his sleeves and cocked his head, causing Yorna to frown.

In response to Yorna’s question, Olbart continued, “Ya see”, Olbart: “If ya didn’t have so many people ta protect, like the people of this city and the kids behind’cha, you’d be able ta handle me better.”

Yorna: “—Hk.”

Olbart: “You’re fightin’ ‘cause ya wanna protect others, but you’ve become weaker ‘cause of it. Yer priorities are all wack. That’s why ya can’t reach His Excellency, no matter how many times ya try, lass.”

Olbart’s yellow eyes seemed to pierce through Yorna to Subaru and Louis as he spoke.

In that moment, Subaru realized that they would once again be targeted. Perceiving this, he squeezed Louis’s hand right away,

Subaru: “Yorna-san, Louis and I will be going away! Do your best!”

He felt terrible that he’d gotten Yorna into this situation, only to then run away.

But if Subaru and Louis were present, Yorna would have to fight to protect them as well as herself. Olbart would take advantage of the opportunity and, sure enough, she would be killed.

That’d be no good. He had to avoid that from happening. Somehow.

Subaru: “Louis!”

Shouting this, Subaru squeezed Louis’s hand tight while pointing down towards his feet.

Making the connection between his touch and his instructions, Louis responded with her usual sound and a teleport happened.

Subaru and Louis’s bodies teleported directly below where they were, to the interior of the Castle, and they found their feet on a wooden floor.

Confirming this, Subaru clenched his teeth.

Subaru: “Uh…”

There was a feeling like that of the contents of his stomach churning inside him, and his head swayed. For a moment, his red vision and his pain flickered, but the level to which them hindered him was incomparable to before.

Now that Subaru and Louis were gone, Yorna would be able to fight to her fullest—.

Subaru: “—Hk, what?!”

Immediately afterward, there was the sound of an explosion occurring overhead, which triggered Subaru’s recent trauma.

A chain of tremendous roars from explosions followed, their shock reverberating through the roof and throughout the whole Castle, reaching Subaru and Louis. His knees came near to buckling involuntarily; desperately enduring that, Subaru looked up at the ceiling.

Although he couldn’t see it, it was most likely Olbart.

After all the bombs he had used, he was still carrying around even more.

???: “—Ah. Whoawhoa.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

In Subaru field of vision as he raised his eyes, a wrinkled face slipped through the ceiling and peeked down below.

Subaru’s breath hitched at the suddenness of it all, and then Olbart fell straight down, his face as well as his entire body slipping through the ceiling.

The old man was smiling meaningfully as he dropped from the ceiling,

Olbart: “Ya gave me the willies back there. I took ya as just a kid, I messed up, I messed up.”

Louis: “Uu!”

A moment later, Louis kicked out a thin leg at the approaching smiling face. But the monstrous old man responded with a short “Yo” and swung his arm, sending everything below her shin flying.

Spinning around, Louis’s white foot flew, spraying blood, and causing her to scream.

Louis: “Ah, UUUU—!”

Then, wide-eyed at the sight of Louis screaming, Subaru tried to pull her closer to him, hoping that perhaps he could help her.

Whether it was for the sake of escaping or out of concern for the girl who was crying out in pain over the loss of her foot, he did not know.

But either way, he couldn’t even manage to perform that fast action right.

Subaru: “Gaguh.”

Just as he thought he heard a whoosh, Subaru’s throat burned with more heat than when he’d screamed. The blood gushing out of his neck clogged his throat, rendering him unable to speak or breathe.

Olbart: “Can’t let’cha get away from me, it’d be too much trouble. I’m sure yer head’s enough ta get through ta that foxgirl.”

Having said that, Olbart’s finger then pushed on Subaru’s forehead. Once he did, his tilted head fell forward and Subaru’s head landed on his own crumpled knees.

His head was still attached by a small flap of skin from his neck; his now-dangling head touched his lap.

Olbart: “Just like an idakikubi.”

Unable to laugh, a terrible joke was heard, then he became unable to hear anything.

And then—

Olbart: “I’ve heard it said that’cha and the folks of this city are awfully tough, but… Are ya tougher than the folks of my village were?”

Yorna: “—You lowlife!”

Once more, the same voices could be heard.

He knew what had to be done right away, and pulled Louis in close, so.

So, while he thought about it, the roar of an explosion echoed.

—His vision exploded into bright-red, and, once more, the pain engulfed Natsuki Subaru.

3

—The moment he heard the same voices, he covered his ears, closed his eyes, and yelled out loud.

That, was the principle of survival that Subaru had come to discover after repeating those ten seconds of despair tens of times.

However, he had yet to find any solutions to this puzzle beyond that.

Olbart: “I’ve heard it said that’cha and the folks of this city are awfully tough, but… Are ya tougher than the folks of my village were?”

Yorna: “—You lowlife!”

Olbart threw a bomb, and Yorna swung her kiseru to deflect it. A heavy impact, felt by his feet, made Subaru remember that he had returned and what he had to do, following his ingrained instincts.

He covered his ears, closed his eyes, screamed loudly, and then took the blow of the explosion.

He kept his ears plugged for the sake of his eardrums, he kept his eyes closed for the sake of his eyeballs; he did not know what the point of shouting loudly would be, but he always shouted when he was not in pain or when everything was red, so he could not imagine not shouting anymore.

He could not bear the thought of doing something a little different and experiencing the same pain again.

Once his timing was off, he would have to repeat the ten seconds of despair ten times or more, in order to get the same chance again.

He was done with it all. The pain, the fear, he was done with them both.

It did not get any easier at all. It always hurt. He was always scared. Beyond the pain, beyond the fear, death was always there.

So—

Louis: “Uau!”

With his ears and eyes fine and dandy, he caught Louis’s body as she jumped on him.

He had managed to survive the first explosion intact again for the umpteenth time. The rest was a cycle of events, recalling what would happen next, so up first was—

Subaru: “Shurikens.”

Olbart: “Don’t think it’s over just yet!”

Simultaneously with hearing Olbart’s voice, he remembered.

The next moment, a storm of shurikens, not a single one possessing the same trajectory, came flying from all directions, raining down around Subaru and Louis.

If one were to be hit by any single one of the more than ten shurikens, they would become unable to move.

To stop them, Yorna tried to rush out—

Yorna: “I won’t tolerate this sort—”

Subaru: “Yorna-san! It’s fine!”

Stopping Yorna from dashing in with his palm, Subaru then pointed somewhere with his outstretched hand. Then, he squeezed the hand that was tied to Louis’s with all his might,

Olbart: “—The hell’s that?!”

A moment later, their field of vision was switched by the teleport that had occurred, and a shuriken stuck into the place where Subaru and Louis had been.

Olbart’s eyes widened in surprise at what had happened and the lack of any warning signs of Louis’s teleport. Indeed, Olbart did not know of it, Subaru and Louis had been keeping it a secret.

Subaru had escaped into the Castle using it. But as he had been killed by Olbart, who had chased him down—

Subaru: “Even if it’s just once…”

Olbart could be caught off-guard.

And then, much to Olbart’s surprise,

Yorna: “You’re not allowed to look anywhere else—!”

Olbart: “Tch—guah.”

The soaring Yorna’s fierce axe kick was driven into Olbart from directly above.

His immediate reaction was delayed, and the leg he raised to intercept the attack failed to reach it in time, causing Olbart’s entire body to take the impact and fold in half. With that, the back of his head crashed into the roof, and with a resounding crash, Olbart’s figure disappeared into the Crimson Lapis Castle.

Even Olbart should have sustained damage due to that powerful blow—

Olbart: “Kakakakka! Ouchie, ouchie!”

Subaru: “No way?!”

Just after Subaru shouted in joy that she had scored a critical hit, Olbart returned.

Opening a hole in the roof different from the one he had been knocked into, Olbart jumped out, teeth bared and his right arm stained vermillion with blood.

He had taken Yorna’s heel with his arm, hence, it had been crushed out of shape like a dead branch.

Olbart was unfazed by the terrible condition of his arm, which made Subaru want to avert his gaze immediately. With his remaining left arm, he threw shurikens, simultaneously aiming at Subaru and Yorna in front of and behind him.

Of course, Subaru was unable to react. So Yorna flicked smoke at the attack approaching her own self with her kiseru and immediately wagged her finger, causing the tiles to rise, as to protect Subaru and Louis.

And then—

Olbart: “Here, it’s ninety years old.”

As he said this, Olbart suddenly resorted to violence.

He stretched out his bloodied right arm and cut it off below the elbow with the kunai in his left hand, sending the arm flying towards Yorna, spraying blood.

Yorna: “…”

Faced with this, Yorna was forced to make a split-second decision.

In other words, she could either parry the flying arm or dodge it.

However—

Olbart: “Too bad, either choice’s off.”

Yorna: “Guhh…?!”

Before she could act on her choice out of the options for the flying arm, a blast occurred beneath Yorna’s feet. There, was the hole that led to the floor below, into which the previous blow had knocked Olbart through.

From there a tremendous torrent of wind literally spouted, tearing through Yorna’s kimono.

Olbart: “It’s a basic principle of the shinobi. If ya gotta pick between right and left, then ya gotta pick up.”

Yorna: “You, cheeky old man…!”

Yorna’s cheeks scrunched up as her kimono was ripped open by the blades of wind that engulfed her entire body. With things as they were, she stepped in, ignoring the bluff of the flying arm, and tried to rush towards Olbart.

As Yorna advanced towards him, Olbart took a breath and spoke, “Ah yeah”,

Olbart: “When I said both options were off, I lied.”

—In the next instant, Olbart’s flying arm swelled from the inside and exploded.

Yorna: “—Hk.”

Subaru: “Yorna-san!!”

Yorna’s body was blown away by the explosion that occurred right beside her. With that, Subaru widened his eyes, and raised a yell from his hoarse throat, as her figure tumbled and rolled atop the roof.

The hole he had fallen into, the arm he had severed, all of those were traps to be used.

Ever since Subaru was first acquainted to the idea of shinobi as ninjas, he'd thought that they would be extremely troublesome opponents. But it had never occurred to him that they would be so "vicious".

Almost in sync with Olbart turning around, Subaru shuddered.

Subaru: "—Louis!"

Olbart turned around, and the moment he saw the ferociousness in his eyes, Subaru shouted.

Grasping Louis's hand tightly, he hoped that the timing on the second teleport would be such that there would be no interruption. He'd just point as far away from Olbart as possible to get some distance from him—

Louis: "Auau."

Louis's teleport occurred, and both their bodies moved in the blink of an eye.

Moving out of Olbart's line of sight, they'd move somewhere, a large distance away from Olbart. Since taking refuge within the Castle would not allow them to survive, there was nothing Subaru could do after escaping the initial explosion except to keep his distance, buy some time, and hope that Yorna would stop Olbart.

And—

Subaru: "Eh?"

As Subaru tried to hold back his nausea, something hit him at the tip of his foot.

His eyes shot wide open upon seeing what had hit him. It was a small, round, black ball.

A black ball that he had seen so many times, throwing him into the depths of despair.

Olbart: “I’ve been watchin’ ya for a while. You’ll fly in the direction ya point. I still got no idea how ya do that.”

That’s why I threw the ball in the direction ya were pointin’ at, and with that, Olbart shrugged his shoulders.

That gesture from the monstrous old man was poorly balanced, given he was missing one arm.

Louis: “Uau.”

Once again, Louis called out to Subaru.

Immediately afterward, light overflowed from the black ball that exploded beneath their feet, scattering countless shards of glass-like things within, shredding, shredding, and shredding Subaru and Louis to tatters.

Blood splattered bright-red, and shards flew into Subaru’s eyes and mouth, mutilating his entire body as the sharp pain engulfed him, dicing his limbs into bits.

Olbart: “Ya gotta eat it ta find out what’s stuck in it. Isn’t that interestin’?”

The pain, once more, was red, making him question his sanity.

Olbart: “I’ve heard it said that’cha and the folks of this city are awfully tough, but… Are ya tougher than the folks of my village were?”

Yorna: “—You lowlife!”

Once more, the same voices could be heard.

Subaru: “—Hk.”

The moment he heard it, Subaru plugged his ears, closed his eyes, and opened his mouth wide. No loud shout came out. Merely a raspy voice. Even so, the roar of the explosion, and the accompanying wind, rushed towards him.

Striking his whole body, he was knocked down on his butt onto the roof. He couldn’t follow his rules. He couldn’t scream. Afraid of the pain and the red that would come. He just—

Louis: “Uau.”

A light touch made him jump, causing Subaru to let out an exhale.

And so, he checked to make sure that his eyes and ears and the rest of his body were fine. His eyeballs and eardrums were fine, despite the fact that he had not made a loud voice. His voice had nothing to do with it. Maybe his mouth was the cause.

I don’t know. I don’t know, but—

Subaru: “Guuhhh…”

Hugging Louis, Subaru sobbed through clenched teeth, unable for the life of him to find a way to survive the explosion.

And because he was incapable of finding a way, he sobbed, he cowered, he was unable to move once more.

Olbart: “Wahwah, I can’t stand hearin’ the sound of children cryin’. —Shuddup.”

Yet again, inevitable “death” engulfed Natsuki Subaru.

4

Again and again, he repeated cycles of red and pain, and at their end, experiencing a sense of helplessness, of pain and harshness and suffering and fear once more; he still could not reach it, even with this accretion.

Yorna: “—Love me. Right now.”

In his mangled state, how many times had he almost gotten help in this way?

Every time he was not able to act as he was being told, he felt sad.

Louis: “Uau! Uaau!”

Desperately pulling Subaru’s arm, Louis endeavored to somehow keep him alive, to keep him from dying.

That was why it was so painful every time they died before Subaru did.

Time and time and time and time again, ten seconds of death and despair.

In the red world, the only feeling that dominated was pain; a feeling of helplessness that, irregardless of how hard he tried, he could not reach the end, no matter how many times, he repeated it with no end in sight.

His mind, felt like it was about to break. His heart, felt like it was about to die.

This, was not Return by Death.

The thing surrounding Natsuki Subaru, was something apart from Return by Death.

He did not wish to believe that Return by Death was a mercy, not in the slightest.

But compared to these ten seconds and the endless accretion of loss, it was very much so.

—This was a loveless act, so much so that it seemed like there was love in Return by Death.

5

Olbart: “I’ve heard it said that’cha and the folks of this city are awfully tough, but… Are ya tougher than the folks of my village were?”

Yorna: “—You lowlife!”

Once more, the same voices could be heard.

Olbart’s aloof voice and Yorna’s strained voice.

The immediate pain and loss vanished, and Subaru returned for a brief moment, for just a few seconds, to a sky of blue and a body free of pain.

Brain numbing, throat raising a continuation of the scream before death, knees buckling.

Nevertheless, the conditioned reflexes already imprinted in his soul made Subaru shut his eyes, cover his ears, and leave his mouth open as he continued to scream.

Yorna: “HaAAAaaa!!”

Yorna, howling, swung her kiseru, and several bursts of flame were born in the skies above Chaosflame.

The hot air, shock waves, and the sound of the explosion washed over Subaru and Louis, but at this moment, no matter how many times he tried, he could not resist falling on his butt.

Louis: “Uau!”

Subaru fell on his butt, and Louis’s light body jumped onto him.

Accepting it, he hugged it tightly. That too, was already a conditioned reflex. Because he had died god-knows how many times, he absolutely missed the warmth of people. That was all it was.

He had no other reason. He did not, and so, he clenched his molars together.

Subaru: “After this…”

There would be no time for relief, for the next attack that would kill Subaru would come rushing in.

Olbart: “Don’t think it’s over just yet!”

Alongside his words, Olbart hurled shurikens at Subaru and Louis. That the blades coming from all directions were more than ten, and that their sharpness could easily slice through a child's soft skin, he already knew.

He had already experienced being killed by shurikens many times. But to which pain they corresponded, he could not recall. There had not been a single painless death, so he did not know.

Yorna: "I won't tolerate this sort of debauchery."

During his confusion, Yorna cut in with her back turned to Subaru.

She swatted away the entirety of the shurikens with the kiseru in her hand, and then, as retaliation against Olbart, she made the roof tiles undulate and hit him with the castle from both sides, pinning him down.

Olbart: "Kakakakka! What a flashy show, isn't that an amusin' technique!"

Olbart used his agility to sidestep the attack.

Due to Subaru's belated reaction, the situation was following the same pattern. But there was nothing Subaru could do in this situation, a situation he had already witnessed countless times.

When Yorna was about to be attacked and he tried to protect her, when he succeeded in escaping into the Castle, when he rushed at Olbart because his head was messed up, he had died all the same.

What if all paths, all actions, led to death?

Olbart: "Well, I don't need this flashy stuff. Ultimately, a human bein' can be killed by a sharp needle ta the forehead."

Yorna: "Your words make my fox ears itch. —So, how about this instead?"

Olbart: "Oh."

Yorna responded to the provocation of the nasty Olbart, by striking the roof with her heel.

One-by-one, the roof tiles arose, and what emerged was a tornado of destruction swirling around the entire Castle. He knew it was awfully powerful, as well. But it could not defeat Olbart.

Subaru: “What should…?”

I do? He could not understand. He had a presentment that painful, scary things would arrive soon, once more.

Failure. How could it be avoided? The red world, the choir of pain.

Even if he wanted to help Yorna, he would be a burden to her.

Even if Subaru attempted to run away with Louis, they would be caught.

If only he had returned to an earlier point in time, he would never have gone to the roof with Yorna in the first place. If only he had left Yorna alone, if only he had not parted with Abel and the others, if only he hadn’t told them about Louis, Al, Medium, Taritta, if only he weren’t smaller, if only it were the original Subaru, Zikr, Flop, Mizelda, Kuna, Holly, Utakata, Priscilla, Rem, Rem, Rem, Rem, Rem—.

Rem, he must bring her home, and yet here he was, dying.

If Subaru were left behind in a world where death was inevitable, what could he do but continue to die forever and ever, what could Natsuki Subaru even do?

Over and over again, death, pain, and a sense of helplessness overwhelmed Natsuki Subaru.

It felt like it was going to crush his heart and body, and then—

Louis: “Uau.”

Gently, the warmth of the young girl holding his hand was transmitted, and Subaru gulped.

The warmth, suddenly, made Subaru realize.

That, for Natsuki Subaru, it was impossible, but.

Subaru: “—If everyone else were here, what would they do?”

6

Pain, red, scary, why, death.

Pain, red, scary, why, death. Pain, red, scary, why, death.

Pain, red, scary, why, death. Pain, red, scary, why, death. Pain, red, scary, why, death. Pain, red, scary, why, death.

Ten seconds of despair, replayed time upon time upon time.

A never-ending hell of pain and helplessness accreted on top of one another, endeavoring to break Subaru’s mind again and again.

But after so many repetitions of those ten seconds of despair, he arrived at what laid beyond.

Pain, red, scary, why, death. —Beyond that.

Instead, after those ten seconds of despair many more possibilities branched out, but there still was no answer to the question of what was the how through which he could escape the pain.

Once more, Subaru died over and over again. Many times, in repeated pain and suffering, he died.

Not one of them worked.

Subaru would always make Yorna sad, let Louis die first, then die as well.

—But there was a time that laid beyond the ten seconds of despair.

He would utilize all of that time.

And even if he used all of it, and ended up dying, he would once again reach beyond the ten seconds of despair, over to the eleventh second, and think for dear life.

—If everyone else were here, what would they do?

Olbart: “I’ve heard it said that’cha and the folks of this city are awfully tough, but… Are ya tougher than the folks of my village were?”

Yorna: “—You lowlife!”

Once more, the same voices could be heard.

At that moment, Subaru covered his ears, closed his eyes, and opened his mouth to endure the explosion. The roar and the impact of the explosion assaulted his whole body; unable to resist it, he fell on his bottom.

Immediately, a small body jumped at him, shouting, “Uau!”. Catching it, he hugged them back as if to reassure them, and while doing so, he contemplated.

—If everyone else were here, what would they do?

Subaru: “…”

Subaru had become smaller.

His arms and legs had grown shorter, and the contents of his head had most likely become those of a child as well.

If he were the original Subaru, he could have done many things and come up with many more ideas. But the original Subaru was not here. So, he could not come up with a way to fix this.

As such, then this problem could not be solved by Natsuki Subaru as he was currently.

That was why—

Subaru: “If everyone else were here…”

Up until now, they had encountered many problems and made many mistakes, but, together, they had overcome them in their entirety, and made it this far.

Now, Subaru was completely alone. He was in the Empire, where he knew almost no one.

However, there was something within Subaru, that he had received from everyone.

Subaru: “If everyone else were here…”

What would they do?

Otto, Garfiel, Roswaal, Frederica, Petra, Clind, Annerose, Meili, Puck, Ram, Beatrice, Emilia, what would they do?

Subaru: “If everyone else were here…”

What would they do?

Julius, Anastasia, Eridna, Ricardo, Mimi, Hetaro, Tivey, Reinhardt, Felt, Rom-jii, Tonchinkan, Al, Priscilla, Wilhelm, Felix, Crusch, Liliana, Shaula, what would they do?

Subaru: “All of them are so strong.”

He wanted everyone who could fight Olbart to cheer him on from behind.

It was not the turn of those people who seemed able to handle Olbart’s cunning and his absurd little tricks as well. I’m sorry. Thank you. I love you all.

Subaru: “They can use magic.”

The current Subaru could not possibly imitate everyone capable of helping Yorna.

He wanted to do something, to not become a burden to Yorna, a kind person. But, at this juncture, it was not healing magic’s turn. I’m sorry. Thank you. I love you all.

Subaru: “If so…”

What about imitating everyone who never gave up and was able to do their utmost till the bitter end?

Why not imitate everyone who was able to use everything in their possession to try and go beyond these ten seconds of despair, go beyond the eleventh second, and go even further beyond?

Yorna: “I won’t tolerate this sort of debauchery.”

A kiseru was waved, and the shurikens closing in on Subaru and Louis had been flicked away with a shrill rapport.

As that happened, the tiles on either side of Olbart rose and pinned the monstrous old man down in an attempt to crush him.

Subaru: “…”

As he watched the fight between Yorna and Olbart, he thought for dear life.

Hadn’t he died many times already, over and over again? Hadn’t he witnessed this scene many times already? Even if it had become hard to remember, he could remember the pain, couldn’t he?

Just the thought of it froze his body in horror. His heart shriveled, his soul became frightened.

It was as if the very existence of Natsuki Subaru was freezing over. But—

Louis: “Uau.”

The heat transmitted from the hand that held Subaru’s own would not let him freeze to death.

And because he would not freeze to death, he would be able to remember everyone.

There was no way to interrupt Yorna and Olbart’s fight.

Even if he wanted Yorna to win, Subaru and Louis, being Olbart's targets, would get in the way. The battle had already started, and this affair would not develop further without one of them being victorious.

Perhaps, it always ended with Olbart winning, and Subaru and the others dying.

So, would it be enough that Subaru and Louis just survive?

Emilia: "That's probably reaaally wrong, too. I mean, Yorna has to be kept safe, too."

Otto: "There must be a better way."

Garfiel: "Don't'cha stop thinkin'."

Ram: "Truly a fool."

Roswaal: "Giving up here would be a joooke~."

Frederica: "Assuredly, everything will be fine."

Petra: "Everybody's here for you."

Meili: "You wouldn't want to be in pain, would yooou?"

Clind: "All battles must be settled. Inevitable."

Annerose: "There has to be an opening."

Beatrice: "We're going to find that opening, I suppose. That's, the key to victory, in fact."

Subaru: "The key, to victory."

For whom? Of course, for the one fighting.

Then, which one of them was fighting, Yorna or Olbart—.

Subaru: "No."

Louis: "Uu?"

Subaru: “Nononono, NO—!”

In front of Louis, twisting her neck around, Subaru shouted in a loud voice.

No, I was wrong. I love all of you. So that’s why—

Subaru: “The one who wins—”

Once again, the red light and pain spread before his eyes, and then —.

Olbart: “I’ve heard it said that’cha and the folks of this city are awfully tough, but… Are ya tougher than the folks of my village were?”

Yorna: “—You lowlife!”

Once more, the same voices could be heard.

The moment he heard them, Subaru covered his ears, closed his eyes, and crouched down with his mouth open. Immediately afterward, the sound of an explosion and a shock wave smashed against his whole body, but this time he did not fall on his bottom.

In an instant movement, he removed his hands from his face and raised his head. And from there—

Louis: “Uau.”

With concern for Subaru, Louis jumped at him with a worried look on her face.

Catching Louis in front of him in his arms, Subaru took action right there. And,

Subaru: “Thanks.”

Louis: “Uh?”

As he looked towards his front, the words Subaru had spoken went over the surprised Louis's head completely.

The pain of his whole body being burned, of his bones being exposed, of his internal organs being mangled, was lingering still. He felt like he was going to scream, cry, and roll around if were he to not control himself.

However—

Olbart: "Don't think it's over—!"

As he said this, Olbart was just about to throw the shurikens he'd pulled out of his sleeves.

Olbart's eyes met those of Subaru head-on.

The eyes of the Vicious Old Man, someone devoid of mercy even in reaping the life of children. And the teary eyes of a child who had experienced despair many times, still struggling to hold back the tears.

As if he had seen something in those eyes, Olbart turned to him, the glint within his yellow eyes becoming even more intense.

He was not just aiming for Subaru as a tool to get Yorna's attention.

To murder Natsuki Subaru, the Vicious Old Man unleashed shurikens from his hands.

Shurikens with no trick to them flew.

Subaru's eyes couldn't perceive the threat, but he could feel them closing in on him; and so he thrust his lifted finger straight towards his front—to Olbart.

If everyone else were here, what would they do?

Thinking for his dear life of what everyone else would feel, he'd had a thought.

No matter how tattered he was, being plagued by the feeling of powerlessness, failing utterly, everyone placed faith in Subaru.

Regardless of how shameless, how unsightly the way he'd died was, in pain, with harshness, fear, crying, screaming, wetting himself, everyone placed faith in Subaru.

I love all of you.

Up on the top of the Crimson Lapis Castle, was this game to reach past the ten seconds of despair, and the eleventh second beyond that, and further on, dying over and over again; and, the one who wins is——The one who wins is always you, Master!

Subaru: "Louiiiis—!!"

Pointing to Olbart, he called out the name of the girl at the end of the linkage of warmth.

Then, he squeezed Louis's hand tightly and forcefully—instantly, the world changed.

Olbart: "—What the?!"

The opponent he was supposed to kill with his shurikens disappeared, causing Olbart to shout in astonishment.

That was an illegal technique, one outside Olbart's understanding that went wholly unnoticed by the cautious shinobi. The sole way to outsmart Olbart was the first use of this teleport, as he would be able to respond the second time it were employed.

And Subaru, who was teleported by Louis's power and flown—

Subaru: "AHHHHHH—!"

Olbart: "Huoh?"

Resolutely, Subaru clung to the back of Olbart's head, that was right in front of him.

He clung to the small old man in a desperate attempt to survive, not letting go of him, clutching at his gray hair with all his strength.

The moment of the teleport was unexpected to the point that even Olbart was unable to react to being grappled.

The small Subaru did his best to cling to the old man, who was not much taller than him.

Naturally, Olbart tried to pull him off of himself, and Yorna, suddenly awestruck, tried to run over to them.

Olbart: “Whoa! Th-The hell’s that! Boy?!”

Yorna: “Children! Get away now! Old Man Olbart’s…”

Olbart’s arm grabbed Subaru’s hair and tried to pull him down forcefully. Although she wished to stop that, Yorna feared meddling in that attempt, delaying her move.

Taking little notice of the pair’s reactions, while desperately clinging onto him, Subaru raised his voice—

Subaru: “—My win!”

And, shouted.

Olbart: “—What?”

At that moment, Olbart’s hand loosened as he tried to pull Subaru away, and Yorna’s eyes went wide, and looked over at him, wondering what she had just said.

Not paying attention to the reaction of the adults around him, Subaru clung on tightly to Olbart, refusing to let him go.

Subaru: “My win… It’s my win! It’s Olbart-san’s loss! Isn’t it?!”

Olbart: “But, what are ya sayin’…”

Subaru: “You said we only needed to do it once!”

Olbart: “Huh?”

As the energy he was putting in to shake him free petered out, Subaru finally raised his face and spoke to the back of Olbart’s gray head in front of him. Sobbing both tears and leaking snot from the excitement and his racing heart, Subaru's throat twitched.

Subaru: "Th-The game of tag! In hide-and-seek, we were supposed to find you three times… But in tag, we were supposed to catch you once…"

Olbart: "…"

Subaru: "That's why! It's my win! I caught you! This game's my win! Olbart-san, Yorna-san, you both lost to me! That's why, it's my ween—"

He thought to himself, that he was saying some absurd reasoning.

In the first place, Subaru and the others had been the ones to choose to play hide-and-seek as opposed to tag. To do something such as suddenly changing the rules of the game of tag was unfair.

It was unfair, but he still couldn't come up with any other method.

Besides—

Subaru: "It was Olbart-san who cheated first…"

Olbart: "…"

Subaru: "S-so that's why, I'm telling you, i-it's my win—"

Little-by-little, the tears and runny nose that came pouring out of his eyes became unbearable, and his voice became raspy.

Despite that, Subaru poured strength into his clinging arms, not letting go of his sly victory. He had caught Olbart and won the game of tag. He had won.

Yorna: "—What will you do now, Old Man Olbart?"

Suddenly, Yorna asked that of Olbart, who had fallen silent.

Glancing over, Yorna relit the tip of her kiseru and let out a plume of fresh purple smoke. Her appearance as she took it into her lungs was as beautiful as before she started fighting.

Still, depending on Olbart's answer, she would be willing to fight for and protect Subaru and Louis, with whom she had little to no connection.

And that wasn't the last of Olbart's troubles.

Louis: "Uau! Aa, uu!"

Olbart: "Thaaat hurts."

While Subaru was still clinging to Olbart, Louis, who had travelled with him, stomped on Olbart's foot. Louis glared at Olbart, her round eyes narrowed to their fullest.

In response to Subaru's complaint, Yorna's question, and Louis's glare, Olbart was silent for a moment, then violently scratched at his own head.

And then—

Olbart: "I'm the one who said he didn't like the idea of throwin' away a game he's set in motion halfway thro'. Didn't expect it ta be abused this way."

Yorna: "—Is that your answer, Old Man?"

Yorna's words were quiet, her eyes lowering to meet Olbart's.

Nothing happened. Because Olbart had plopped down on the spot, sitting cross-legged. With Subaru clinging onto his back, Olbart, flashed a toothy grin and said,

Olbart: "Kakakakka! Anyone can see I've lost. If I said somethin' like whether I win or lose doesn't matter, then I wouldn't be a shinobi, I'd be an animal."

After saying that, Olbart slapped his knee with his hand with "I lost I lost!", looking up at the sky.

Under the blue sky, atop of the beautiful, slowly-mending Castle, one second, two seconds, beyond the ten seconds of despair, from the eleventh second onward, the future was quietly, surely, being etched—.

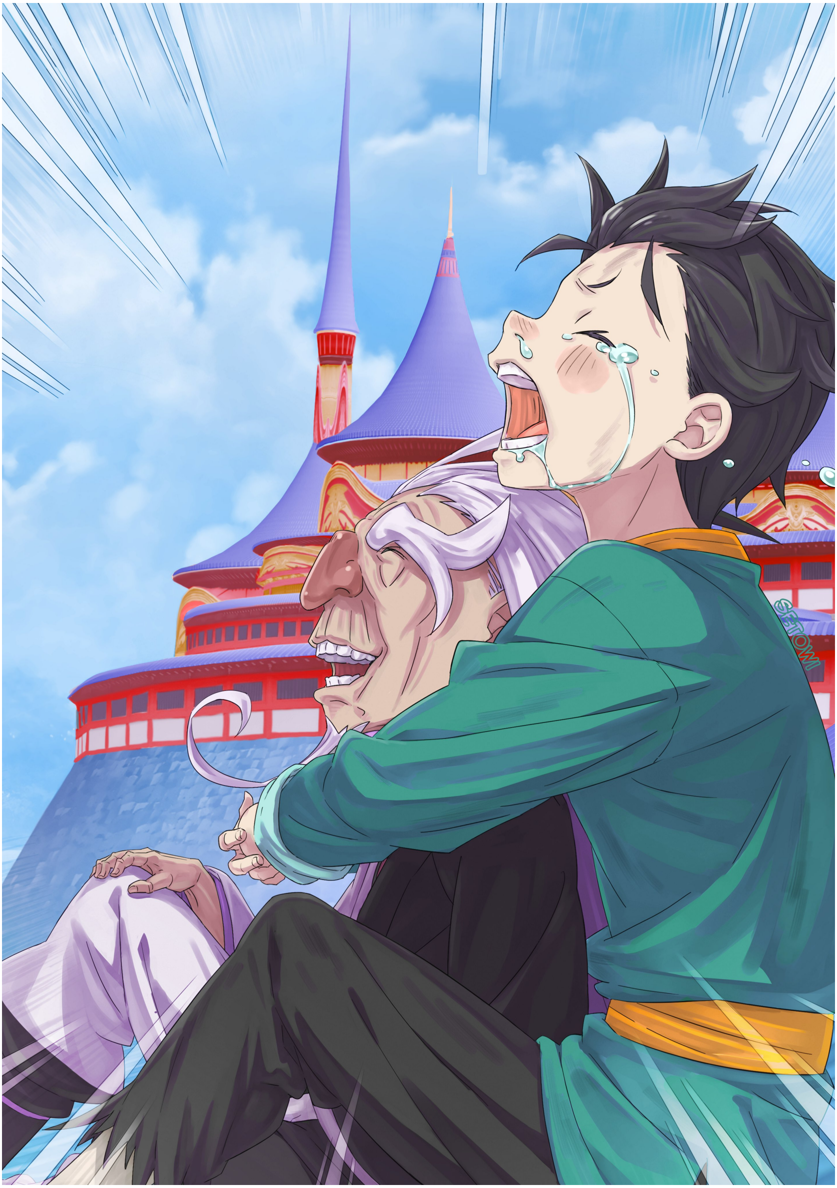
Subaru: “It’s, my wiiiiiiiin…!”

Subaru’s nose went sniff-sniff, and while sobbing he continued raising complaints.

Listening to Subaru clinging to his back, Olbart let out a “Kakakakka!”, and smiling,

Olbart: “If ya keep sayin’ that, I’m gonna get angry. —Shuddup.”

And so, he tapped Subaru’s forehead with his hand.



SETOWI

Chapter 54:
The Utopia of Chaosflame

1

Subaru: “Uh, ugh, uhh… Hk.”

Olbart: “Yeah, yeah, the snivellin’ brat’s cryin’, you’re such a handful, ya know.”

Sniffling his nose, Subaru was unable to stop his crying fit. With the boy latched to his back, Olbart gave a shrug of his shoulders, with nothing else to do but scratch at his cheek with a finger.

—It had been a dreadful, dreadful experience.

Those ten seconds of despair that had happened to Subaru, and the eleventh second that followed after overcoming that despair—to get here, just how many “deaths” had he experienced?

Through despair and heartbreak, it was a miracle that his worn-down spirit seemed to not have completely vanished.

But after such a hellish experience, he had finally reached the end.

Louis: “Uauu.”

Clinging to Subaru’s arm as he cried without end, Louis groaned.

Not that she’d had the same experience as Subaru, that of trial-and-error repeated more times than he could count, but Louis had suffered the same fate as Subaru many times over, having lost her life.

Jumping onto Olbart’s back in order to reach such a flimsy victory, would not have been possible without her presence.

Subaru: “I… Really, I don’t get you.”

Louis: “Uu.”

Subaru: “But without you, it wouldn’t have been possible… Thank you.”

Those were the feelings in Subaru’s heart, albeit in a complete chaotic mess.

He knew that Louis was guilty of various things, he knew in what way he and her were connected. He knew it, yet he was still overflowing with feelings of gratitude

And, it was not only Subaru’s gratitude that was overflowing.

Louis: “Ua, uh…”

Subaru: “Louis?”

The dam’s burst was sudden.

Having heard Subaru’s faltering words of gratitude, tears slowly welled up in Louis’s big round eyes, then trickled down her cheeks in the blink of an eye.

Pling-pling, tears fell down Louis’s cheeks, with such momentum that she did not know how to halt their course.

Subaru: “Louis, you’re crying, you’re really crying…”

Louis: “Uu, uu!”

Louis herself knew she was crying, yet did not attempt to stop or wipe away the tears that streamed down her face. All the while, she remained clung on to Subaru’s arm with a desperate look; one would have expected her to stop so she could wipe away her tears.

Subaru: “Your face, wipe it, you idiot, idiiiot…”

Seeing Louis cry like that, Subaru, who had tried to soothe down his emotional swings, was likewise on the verge of it himself. The tears that had been shed, the visible sobs, were by now innumerable.

It was like the pair made up of him and Louis would, at this rate, be crying forever and ever, without being able to stop—

Yorna: “—Well done, you did your best, you two.”

Subaru: “Ah…”

Yorna: “However much you cry isn’t an issue. I’ll allow you to do it, as the Lord of this Demon City.”

Long arms extended from behind Subaru and Louis, and tenderly embraced them.

The warmth and softness of those words made Subaru’s eyes widen in surprise, he became entranced by the beautiful profile near him. With long eyelashes, vermillion lips, and glimmering azure eyes that put one at ease, no matter the troubles and suffering; it was so sublime that it enthralled those who laid eyes upon it.

He already knew what type of person the owner of those eyes was.

Therefore, he knew that in her words and warmth both, there was kindness devoid of anything untoward behind it.

Because he knew that even if he entrusted everything to them, he would be forgiven.

Subaru: “Uh, guh… ah, uh, AAAaah!”

Louis: “Uau… Uauhk, ua, uh, uau…!”

Yorna: “There, there… Children have the privilege to cry, the privilege to cling onto an adult’s chest. It’s okay if you use my bosom, you may weep as many tears as you need.”

Looking up, tears flowed down Subaru’s face once more. Louis embraced Subaru as he was.

Holding them both together tenderly in her arms, Yorna patted their small backs. All the while, at that moment, at the end of the battle that had unfolded up on the castle tower of the Crimson Lapis Castle—

Olbart: “I dunno what kinda face I should be makin’ here ‘cause all this is happenin’ on my back.”

Yorna: “Silence.”

With that, the boorish interruption from the monstrous old man was shushed by the Lord of the Demon City.

2

Yorna: “So, how do you explain yourself, Old Man Olbart?”

Olbart: “Explain myself? Did I make any excuses? You’re the one who attacked me ‘cause of yer mood, right, foxgirl?”

Yorna: “…”

Shortly after Subaru had cried his eyes out, this time, they would have a calm conversation—so he’d thought, when the castle tower was abruptly engulfed by a precarious atmosphere.

Needless to say, the cause was the aloof and unapologetic one, Olbart.

Sitting on the roof, picking at his ear canal with the tip of his pinky,

Olbart: “I kinda did what I was told, yeah? Well, I did try ta use a few loopholes, but look, that boy called us even, aight?”

Subaru: “Ugh… B-but, that’s…”

Olbart: “Now now, ya should listen ta me, boy. —’Cause whatever ya say, I’m the one who’ll have the most ta gain. Kakakakka!”

Subaru stammered as Olbart opened his mouth open wide and roared with laughter.

In fact, Olbart was right. If Subaru were to argue against Olbart’s misuse of the rules here, it would turn into a no-holds-barred situation that ignored the rules as a result, probably making them unable to defeat the shinobi Olbart in any sort of manner.

Olbart had plenty of hidden techniques, and did not hesitate in dragging others into it. Since coming to the Empire, Subaru’d had more than enough experiences to know that such opponents were the number one in toughness.

Subaru: “Olbart-san, you sound similar to one of the scariest bastards I know…”

Olbart: “Really? In that case, ya should definitely kill me. I’m no decent fella, and will be a serious pain in the ass.”

Yorna: “In that case, Old Man Olbart, you must agree with me that I should stop you from breathing here.”

Olbart: “Oioi, that’s a lotta hate for me. Well, that’s only natural.”

The air was tingling, ripe with tension, but this was due to the one-sided hostility that Yorna had unleashed.

Olbart, the party it was directed at, was no longer in a fighting stance. Of course, this was just for show, and he could turn the switch back on in an instant.

Nevertheless, it was natural for Yorna to be angry, as Subaru held strong anger towards Olbart as well. However, there was a big reason as to why he could not act on that anger.

That was, because of his shrunken limbs, and his head that was not functioning properly.

Subaru: “Olbart-san, about the technique that’s being used on us…”

Olbart: “Oh yeah, that’s right. Of course, ya can’t fix it if I’m dead. No, there might be another way, but I’ve never seen anyone do it.”

Subaru: “I knew it…!”

Olbart: “Well, it’s like an insurance policy. It’s supposed ta be a secret technique back at my village, so basically, we deal with the dead bodies without leavin’ any traces so that they don’t come ta light.”

Quite indifferently, Olbart spoke some disturbing words.

At the same time, Subaru congratulated himself for having walked a really dangerous tightrope.

Even if Yorna defeated Olbart, and the old man died, the "infantilization" that had befallen Subaru and his friends would have remained unresolved. His state would always be that of being Natchuki Subawu.

Just thinking about it made Subaru shudder.

Yorna: "I don't know the details, but I've heard that you've treated these children in a cruel way."

Yorna looked at Olbart as she put the kiseru in her mouth and filled her lungs with purple smoke.

When asking her for help, Subaru had given her as much honest information as he could, but he left out the nitty-gritty details of their situation. That included the fact that Subaru had been shrunk due to the influence of Olbart's technique.

Once Olbart dissolved the "infantilization", Subaru would return to his original body.

Once that happened, he would do his utmost to apologize and ask Yorna for forgiveness. —Of course, he didn't think that'd be enough to completely reverse her impression of the situation.

He would like to think that Yorna was the kind of person who would see reason with just words.

Yorna: "Old Man Olbart, you've conceded defeat in your earlier match, right?"

Olbart: "Yeah, I admit it, I admit it. For sure, it's a complete loss. At least, I'm lucky I didn't die losin'. But I didn't think I'd lose."

Yorna: "It was unexpected that you'd lose?"

Olbart: "I thought it'd definitely be the boy's boss who'd gimme a good challenge."

Paying no heed to Subaru's concern, Yorna and Olbart proceeded with their conversation. Yorna whispered, “Boss”, quoting Olbart, and gently, sliding her hand into her kimono, Yorna: “The sender of the missive, right? I’ve been looking forward to meeting him, but…”

Suddenly, Yorna cut off her words and narrowed her eyes at Olbart.

Olbart tilted his head at the sharpness of her gaze and uttered, “What is it?”,

Olbart: “There’s nothin’ scarier than bein’ stared at by a beautiful woman. What’s the hubbub?”

Yorna: “For crying out loud! I told Tanza to deliver a message to all the messengers, for them to come to the Castle. —Well, where’s Tanza off to?”

The air quickly chilled, to the point that Subaru felt like he was going to choke.

Yorna’s anger was always unleashed when harm was done to a resident of the city, or a child. This was even more so in Tanza’s case, who met both requirements by being a resident of the city and a child.

Nevertheless, Subaru suspected that Tanza had conspired with Olbart to prevent his own party from meeting Yorna. He would have to be careful how he approached this.

However—

Subaru: “I also thought Tanza was with Olbart-san. But she’s not… right? Is she hiding under some tiles or something…”

Yorna: “The Castle’s insides are much like my own. There’s no chance I’d miss someone entering or hiding within it.”

Subaru: “R-right. Yorna-san’s technique is amazing…”

Hearing Yorna’s self-assured answer, Subaru flinched at her unusual nature.

After wincing, Subaru realized that he and Louis had trespassed the Crimson Lapis Castle via the teleport, and that Yorna had found them immediately afterward.

At that time, Yorna had stated that she was walking through the Castle and found them by chance, but he guessed that was just a ruse. Truth was, she had noticed that Subaru and Louis had abruptly appeared in the Castle and moved to catch the intruders.

Perhaps the reason why she had not captured them right away, and instead treated Subaru and Louis as Tanza's friends, was because she had not been able to decide how to treat the two of them, Subaru and Louis, who were so young.

After all, ever since they had first met, Yorna had been protecting them.

Subaru: "…"

The more he came into contact with Yorna's personality, the more intense were Subaru's feelings of doubt on whether he should involve her in the great battle of the Vollachian Empire.

The same went for his feelings towards the people living in Chaosflame, the so-called "horned races", who had obstructed Subaru's group along the way.

They wanted to protect the safe haven they had finally found, after so much suffering and ostracism.

Could Subaru's group blame them for wanting to resume their peaceful lives? Especially considering their Lord cherished them.

—What was the difference between this, and the world desired by the girl Subaru liked?

Subaru: "…"

In silence, Subaru looked down from the castle tower, at the disorderly townscape of the Demon City.

A city where everything was chaotic, intricate, in a horrible mess, and without a sense of unity. Upon first arriving at this city, he had been bewildered by its disorder.

But after meeting Yorna and the people of this city, even if for a short time, Subaru had one thought.

Here, there was freedom.

There was freedom here, no need for a person to submit to someone, unbound by anyone. Ergo, one could express themselves as they wished, this overflowing chaos going undenied by anyone.

It was free, equal, and fair.

It seemed to him that a somewhat ideal picture of the future had been illustrated here.

Was it really the right thing to do, to pry Yorna away from such a place?

Yorna: “Old man, answer me. Where’s that girl, Tanza?”

Paying no heed to Subaru’s internal conflict, she continued to question Olbart.

Tanza was not inside the Castle. He’d like to believe that Olbart didn’t have a technique to make a person small enough to put them in his pocket.

Olbart: “No need ta have such a scary look on yer face, I’ll tell ya what I know. The only reason I made a deal with that deergirl was ‘cause I had just the right conditions to use her for the match.”

Yorna: “—Where is she?”

Yorna’s repeated questions were driven into Olbart, expressing that there was no need for superfluous talk.

In response, while tilting his head, Olbart turned his gaze towards the land surrounding the Castle—towards the Demon City, as if he were taking in the superb view, Olbart: “It’s not that hard ta guess. I’m an outsider, ya know? There’s only so many places where I can hide a single girl.”

That was his response.

3

—Just as Olbart had cracked under Yorna’s questioning, a little bit earlier.

Within the Demon City of Chaosflame, in one of its inns.

Neither was it large, nor was it very ornately decorated. —However, in fact, the walls and interior of the building were robustly constructed, and seldom did a sound ever pass through.

In Chaosflame, this was the only place where the atmosphere was so different from the rest of the city, prepared as an unlikely contingency as accommodations for VIPs.

The room that became the setting was a spacious one, said spaciousness resulted from its interior design being that of three rooms with their walls removed as to join them together. Even within the people that used this travelers’ inn, only a handful of them held the standing to be able to stay in such a spacious room.

There were no high-quality furnishings, no numerous works of art to delight one’s eyes, and no sort of fine alcohol available to soothe one’s palate, as many of the people who made use of this inn were of an utilitarian sort.

In a sense, this inn’s standing within Chaosflame was different.

The Demon City, with its popular name of “Land of Unlawfulness”, was worthy of being a symbol of “freedom”. Despite its chaotic existence, under Yorna, the ruler of the Demon City, the inhabitants of Chaosflame were remarkably unified in their will.

For those who shared a common vision, who did not tolerate foreign invaders, who had no mind to give mercy to those with their own troubles, there was no need for the kind of preparations that this inn offered.

Certainly—

???: "—The people of the Empire must be strong, that is the core tenet that this city of demons has overturned."

???: "Ah…"

???: "To some extent, governance is left to city leadership. But there are limits. —Is it because they do not know their limits, that they operate like this?"

As a man with crossed arms inquired this, the girl of small stature stiffened her cheeks and kept silent.

The man to question that of her, donning an outfit that combined red and black, his face concealed by an oni mask, was Abel. The demi-human girl bearing antlers opposite to him, wearing a beautiful kimono with her arms put through its sleeves, was Tanza.

In this city a face-to-face between two people with a presumably hostile relationship was happening.

—Nay; to be more precise, Abel and Tanza were not the only two meeting face-to-face.

???: "You all, you have stepped in here knowing what kind of place you are in…!"

Abel: "…"

???: "Answer me! Depending on your response, not a bone of yours will remain!"

Yelling so, was a man with dark skin reddening with wrath, General Second-Class of the Imperial Army, Kafma Irulux. Those words were directed at Abel, who had marched into the room, and the boy and girl who accompanied him.

He had nothing in his outstretched hand, but he had no need for a weapon. Any armaments were literally nestled within Kafma's own body.

That he would not leave any bone remaining was no mere declaration of a threat, but the truth.

—Because that was the true value of Kafma Irulux, the Fighting Insect General.

???: “Oi, Abel-chan, you serious?”

That voice, visibly strained with strong vigilance, came from a masked boy just before Kafma and his vigor; Al. He carried on his back a weapon he could not handle, the Blue Dragon Sword, and once he spoke, Abel glanced back at him, and,

Abel: “You, how many times shall you inquire that before you make up your mind?”

Al: “I’m asking that question again and again because, after you strolled, the jury’s still out on it. I mean, this is insane! Shit, I dunno why I followed you either…!”

Abel: “It should be obvious. —The current you is too much of a coward to be alone.”

Al: “Guh… Hk.”

Unable to speak further, Al was incapable of getting out any words beyond that. It was a reaction that revealed instantly that Abel had hit the bullseye. Yet the fact that Al could not even argue with him made it evident that he himself was aware of this.

For some reason, Al was currently no longer able to keep his composure for even a walk down the street.

???: “Abel-chin.”

Another companion, Medium, called out to Abel to protest on the behalf of Al, who was at a loss for words.

Medium, who walked alongside Abel with much effort, was protecting the now-useless Al; however, her facial expression appeared to have somewhat of a strong gloom to it.

All of this and more, had happened after becoming separated from Subaru and Louis midway through.

Medium: “I don’t think that’s a very nice way to put it.”

Abel: “Do you think, in this situation, we shall reach a mutual understanding with roundabout words? You and that clown both should be more conscious of the situation. One erroneous move, and, just as declared, not one bone shall remain.”

Medium: “All the more reason! You shouldn’t talk like that, it’s no good!”

Abel: “…”

Medium: “‘Cause you talk like that, Abel-chin, Subaru-chin and Louis-chan…”

She refused potently once, but afterwards her words tapered off.

That was inevitable, due to Medium’s own nature. Albeit she wished to blame Abel for all the problems that had arisen, she was far too compassionate to do that.

She understood clearly that her own attitude and gaze had been the factors that had driven Subaru and Louis to the brink. That, in turn, was likely a result of the education her brother had given her.

In any case, Al and Medium both were dysfunctional.

Abel: “Ergo, we do not intend to quarrel either. Put down your arm, Kafma Irulux.”

Kafma: “Are you… insane? You did not answer my question, just being stubborn in trying to follow your own will. With that conduct, do you believe yourself to be a king?”

Abel: “—. You are not far off the mark.”

Kafma: “You—!”

Kafma’s eyes became bloodshot, his anger, as someone with high loyalty towards the Emperor, reaching its limit.

By chance, Kafma came half a step short from coming into contact with the truth regarding the true nature of Abel's identity. That was the strength of the effect of "cognitive disruption" held by the oni mask obtained in the Shudraqian village.

In rough terms, with the exception of those whom the wearer intended to reveal his true identity, and those already possessing absolute certainty regarding the true identity of the one donning it, no one was able to see beyond the effects of the mask.

In other words—

Kafma: "Enough, I cannot take any more of this farce of bringing kids along! Regardless of what happened yesterday…"

???: "—Calm down, Kafma Irulux."

Filling his arms with strength, the tattoo patterns on Kafma's arm writhed. That impulse of his was stopped dead in its tracks by a voice behind him.

Kafma's eyes widened as he turned around; there, at the back of the room, the figure of a good-looking man sporting onyx hair was located, sitting leisurely in an armchair.

With black hair and black eyes, his dignified and exceptionally well-defined face was as if it saw through anything and everything in its path, unwavering in front of those uninvited guests.

Truly, Abel was impressed with how well the "mask" had been made.

Paying no heed to Abel's admiration, the handsome man in the back looked at each of the three, Abel included,

???: "There is no hostility within them. At least, in these circumstances."

Kafma: "But, Your Excellency! The insolence of this person, to not display their face before Your Excellency, not to speak that a feeling of reverence is not being displayed altogether, is that of a scoundrel's! Moreover, coming along with children…"

???: "What about it?"

Kafma: "No, coming with children in tow, makes very little sense…!"

Kafma, unable to hide all of his pronounced bewilderment, fought his anguish as he rubbed his temples.

To begin with, the man named Kafma had a bad habit of taking things too seriously. It was one thing to take things in earnest, but it was another to add to the room's worry.

With his excess of seriousness as pretext, he had rejected a position as one of the Nine Divine Generals for feeling himself unworthy. —Henceforth, barring his character, he was the owner of ability on par with that of the Nine Divine Generals.

Even if no one had fallen victim to Olbart's wily ways, and even if Taritta had accompanied them to this place, fighting a proper battle with Kafma as an opponent was an impossibility.

But on this point, the battle was in favor of Abel and his team. That was—

Abel: "I apologize for disturbing your sleeping quarters, but my business is with the girl there. At the present moment, I have no intention of bothering myself with you."

Girl: "Na… Hk"

???: "Ho. This one does talk up a big game before me. I shall commit that face and that voice to memory. Even more so if you truly are related to the envoy we happened upon at the castle tower yesterday."

Abel: "Hmm."

Snorting, Abel touched the chin of the oni mask while his opponent stared back at him—the one who Subaru had labeled a false

Emperor, and whom Abel knew as Chisha Gold, now assuming the form of Vincent.

Right beside Abel, Al and Medium carried complex frowns. The pair, as they were excluded from the effects of the “cognitive disruption”, were witnessing an exchange of words between Vincent’s possessing exactly the same voices.

The disguise of the White Spider, Chisha, was flawless.

With his voice and his conduct, there was no one else in the world that could perform a substitution of Vincent Vollachia as skillfully as Chisha Gold.

Rather, even contradictory thoughts such as him being more like Vincent than Abel was, could arise.

However—

Abel: “I have heard about how you responded to my subordinates. For the stern Emperor of Vollachia, you have been considerably magnanimous in forgiving the disrespect of an impudent woman.”

Vincent: “Even so, I am not enough of an eccentric to deal with people who do not know their place. But, if I properly recognize their relative value, they shall be treated accordingly. At any rate —”

Vincent responded to Abel’s sarcasm, and once there was a pause in the former’s words, their gazes intersected in midair, then their lips moved simultaneously.

Abel & Vincent: “—The people of the Empire must be strong.”

Indeed. That was the philosophy of the Sacred Vollachian Empire, their symbolic way of life.

The answer, from the ones fit as Emperors of Vollachia, that dealt adequately with those who had displayed a will to oppose them, could be said to be nothing but a magnificent one indeed.

Even if Abel had been asked the same question, he would have given the same answer.

No matter what laid within his heart.

Vincent: “Kafma, that girl there?”

Kafma: “Yes. Master Olbart requested of me to keep her at the inn… Said Master has since gone out into town, and has yet to return.”

Vincent: “I see.”

Kafma responded with an awkward look on his face, and, nodding at his reply, Vincent’s gaze now turned to Tanza.

The little girl, a tiny being in the corner of the room, let out an “Ah” as she attempted to devote herself to her duty and at least conceal herself, but her shoulders trembled at the sight of the one looking down from the pinnacle of the Empire.

Tanza’s reaction could not be described as neither timid nor frightened. Vincent, taking that in as inevitable,

Vincent: “Olbart’s involvement, yesterday’s agreement with Yorna Mishigure. In addition, the one associated with yesterday’s envoys has appeared looking for you, no less. I get the sense of the overall picture.”

Tanza: “I-I…”

Vincent: “Excuses are unnecessary. Of course, Olbart shall relay to me what happened in your stead, as I am not your master. Additionally, neither am I your enemy.”

Tanza: “Ah…”

Vincent: “Once you have initiated a battle, it is fine to fight it to your utmost earnestness, till the very end. Hence whether your destiny is to burn or not, remains your decision.”

Indifferently, Vincent declared to Tanza that he would not provide any further protection.

If one were to believe, however, that this had made Tanza feel the despair she had abandoned, that would be a mistake.

Tanza: "…"

Dwelling in Tanza's round eyes was the same light, perhaps the same flame of determination, the same beacon that dwelled at the time she had decided to take on that battle, that challenge.

That Tanza's life, as someone belonging to the horned races, had never been peaceful nor cheerful in the least, was a simple, yet plausible guess for Abel. Not to mention that, on the matter of the deerpeople from Chaosflame, that race had been the root cause for a rebellion raised by Yorna Mishigure previously.

Rather, it would not be surprising if Tanza herself was related to any of those casualties.

Tanza: "Vincent-sama, I apologize for the inconvenience. However, this occasion was not brought about by Yorna-sama, I was the one who orchestrated it."

Vincent: "As I said just now, excuses are unnecessary. The facts, I shall inquire of Yorna Mishigure. You may cease speaking yourself."

Tanza: "Yes. Thank you very much."

Tanza rectified her posture, then proffered a deep bow towards Vincent. Once she looked up, Tanza's gaze then turned towards Abel and the others.

Unlike the gaze directed at Vincent, this one was clearly hostile.

Al: "—Hk."

Due to that girl's aura, Al's throat rasped, despite his attempts to restrain himself.

He was a coward to the extreme, but it was also true that that aura was loaded with such fighting spirit that it made him feel pressure. And so, one could only imagine what circumstances had led her to torment herself this much.

All of this—

Tanza: "—Please, do not bring Yorna-sama into this war. She is a kind woman, who will surely fight for the sake of the weak masses, no matter how hurt or worn down she may get. Such a thing, I could never overlook. Yorna-sama is everything to me."

Medium: "Ah…"

Tanza: "Please, please grant this favor. Please…!"

With a small tremor in her words, Tanza's plea caused Medium to widen her eyes.

It seemed that, to Al and Medium, Tanza's motives had been unexpected. By far, the goal of the residents who had attacked them on their way here was maintaining the situation of the people of the horned races.

If they lost the protection of Yorna Mishigure, they would lose the safe haven that was the Demon City of Chaosflame, and would resume the long hard days of traveling in the wilderness. That was their fear.

That sentiment was probably held by a considerate portion of the residents of the Demon City.

But on the other hand, the likelihood that the feelings of most of the Demon City's residents favored Tanza was something Abel was well aware of.

And what convinced him of that, was that the Soul Marriage Technique had spread across the people of the city.

That was a secret technique that could not be formed by one-sided feelings.

If the residents loathed it, the mechanism that tied a vast number of people together would have driven them to madness; but since that was not the case, it only provided definite confirmation for the thoughts Abel had carried from the start.

Abel: “Yorna Mishigure shall be the one to decide. Bowing your head towards me shan’t make a difference.”

Kafma: “—Hk, you.”

For some reason, Kafma’s anger flared up at Abel’s response, the latter with arms crossed.

There was most likely no direct relationship to Tanza, but likely the man held some amount of affection for the girl due to her youth. In that respect, by and large, this was a man who could be described as being of the same ilk as Yorna.

And in regard to the true essence of the Demon City alone, that which was visible to Tanza, was not to Kafma. Hence, she kept her head down and continued.

Tanza: “No, she is not. It is not Yorna-sama’s decision to make, it is yours.”

Abel: “…”

Tanza: “Yorna-sama’s heart is vast and deep, she is a kind person… and, we attendants can only gaze at that unbelievably far dream, unable to help. The means to grant that dream, you must possess them, surely.”

Abel: “…The missive for Yorna Mishigure, are you aware of its contents?”

Tanza: “No.”

Having shaken her head, Tanza denied Abel’s suspicions. However, Tanza ceased shaking her head in front of him, instead casting it downward with a terribly fragile expression on her face,

Tanza: “Still, I understand. —Ahh, to witness Yorna-sama with the face of a maiden, for the first time.”

Abel: “The face of a maiden, is it.”

Tanza: “Yorna-sama, responds to the love directed at her. But for her to show that appearance of a maiden-in-love to someone… The reason would be no less than the answer to that letter.”

Abel: “Yorna Mishigure would not refuse, so you interfered. Therefore.”

Tanza: “—Yes. All of it was my plan.”

With her head sunken deeply, Tanza confessed to her plot.

All of it was not correct. Undoubtedly, Olbart must have had a hand in Tanza’s scheme, and distorted it to something more vicious.

However, Tanza intended to take responsibility not only for what she herself had started and what her will had led her to do, but also for whatever part Olbart had been involved in.

It was all too—

Abel: “—Beautiful.”

And so, an inaudible voice took form only within someone’s mouth, and went unheard by anyone.

Naturally, it went unheard by all; not even by Tanza, who bowed her head, nor by Al and Medium, both on-guard, nor by Kafma, who held back his anger, nor by Vincent, who rested his hand on his chin.

Abel: “I have a grasp regarding your participation. But, how does this matter?”

Tanza: “—. How, why…”

Abel: “Even after divulging your heart of hearts, you could continue your scheme if you desired. Even if you are beheaded, the residents of the Demon City shall still target my group. —No, if you are beheaded in the first place, Yorna Mishigure’s cooperation shall not be obtained.”

Tanza: “…”

Abel: “Or perhaps, having your own head lopped off was a measure you were willing to take?”

Casting her gaze downwards, a slight tension ran up Tanza’s neck. Having observed this, Abel was convinced that Tanza had left the option of taking her own life on the table.

Suffice to say, it was well thought-out. —Although there were a few things to ponder over until it could be put into action.

Al: “So you were gonna put your life on the line… You’re one hell of a girl.”

Medium: “No way! I won’t let you, ever! You won’t let her, will you, Abel-chin?”

At the revelation of the extent of Tanza’s resolution, Al was at a loss for words, as Medium probed Abel.

In case Abel voiced something contrary to her feelings, while the posture that Medium would adopt was something to be considered, it was a thought that may be regarded as meaningless.

Abel: “I should have already spoken such. If her own death is one of the measures she was willing to take, then taking her life would fulfill those plans. Unfortunately, I hold no interest in partaking in such schemes.”

Medium: “Abel-chin…!”

Abel: “People should die in a more efficient manner.”

Medium: “Abel-chin…”

A pawn that operated according to their own agenda was a nuisance, regardless of whether they were one’s own camp or the enemy’s.

Taking that into account, the being known as Tanza was a poison beyond their control. However, unless one was steeled to drink said poison, one would be unable to introduce stronger poisons.

Having made his decision, Abel fixed his gaze on Tanza, sitting on the floor, and said,

Abel: “I have no intention to take your life. But, I shall order you to call off the orders you gave your brethren.”

Tanza: “…So then, about my earlier request.”

Abel: “To not bring Yorna Mishigure into this war, hmm? —That is impossible.”

Tanza: “—Hk!”

Abel made a clear, definitive statement, and Tanza was rendered speechless.

From her point of view, it was the announcement of a future event that she wished would not pass, even if that meant that she had to sacrifice her own life. However, that was Tanza’s misconception. And it was a hopelessly mistaken desire.

Because—

Abel: “Even if I had not shown up, Yorna Mishigure would have been engulfed in the maelstrom of war. That is the position she has taken, making it unavoidable.”

Tanza: “What in the world do you see…”

Abel: “I shan’t speak to others of what is reflected in my eyes. However, I have measures for any possibility. No matter how it appears to those around me.”

While responding to the quivering Tanza, his eyes trained on her own, Abel abruptly took his gaze off the girl.

Instead, his dark eyes turned towards the silent Vincent, stock-still at the back of the room. Now sitting atop the throne of the Emperor, was the false Emperor, Vincent Vollachia.

No matter what motivation he’d had to topple him from his position —.

Abel: “My way of being remains unchanged. There is no altering that. My path towards retreat has been burnt down, a single path exists. —You would do well, to sear this into memory.”

Vincent: “—I shall keep that in mind.”

To Abel’s words, Vincent quietly replied.

That was all it took to inflame the atmosphere of the room, which lent the illusion of rising temperatures. In fact, everyone, with the exception of Abel and Vincent, were still, sweat beading on their foreheads.

Abel: “Girl, Tanza, raise your face.”

After the standoff between the new and old Emperor, Abel called upon the girl who regretted her lack of strength. Slowly, the girl raised her head with tears welled up in her eyes, as Abel sighed.

Abel: “From the onset, I did not call upon your mistress with the intention of wasting her. Her use requires thoughtful consideration, valuable assets must be made use of optimally. —People should die in an efficient manner.”

Tanza: “…Can I place trust in you in that regard?”

Abel: “Even if you do not believe me, that shall not change what I must do.”

Tanza attempted to cling onto her budding hopes, but that not-so-gentle response extinguished them.

Behind him, Al applied the back of his hand to his forehead, and Medium let out a sigh. However, after a brief hesitation, Tanza nodded her head.

Tanza: “Okay, I understand… Please, regarding Yorna-sama…”

Abel: “To fulfill that request, there are steps to be taken by your side. As it stands, I cannot merely stroll around this city.”

Al: “Yeah, that’s right. That’s what we came here for in the first place.”

Upon hearing the condition presented by Abel, Al seemed more lively as he spoke.

Presently, Al harbored fright for just about everything; it was possible to say that, for him, it was certainly a matter of life-or-death. It was imperative to get those chasing Abel and his allies, who were following Tanza’s call to action, off their backs.

Tanza: “But, how did you know I was here?”

Abel: “I made my decision with the fact it was Olbart’s doing in mind. Another possibility I considered, was that of him hiding in the Crimson Lapis Castle, but given the deployment of the pursuers, the matter of distance took precedence.”

Tanza: “—Ah.”

Abel: “Above all, you need to back off, for there are many lives currently in danger.”

Taritta was being hunted by a hundred people, and they had pretty much been separated from Subaru and Louis as a result.

Neither of them had their lives guaranteed, as long as they continued to be pursued by such hordes. Of course, Abel, alongside the powerless Al and the Medium at half-strength who accompanied him, were no exception.

In order to continue the match against Olbart, Tanza’s capture was a top priority.

Tanza: “…It is my loss, I guess.”

Abel: “That much is obvious. But, there is no need to feel shame.”

Tanza: “Eh…?”

Abel responded only that much to Tanza’s sole muttered word, then turned his back to her.

Without hearing an answer beyond that, Tanza blinked her eyes open in surprise. A voice then called out, “Girl”, to Tanza’s back,

Tanza: “Vincent, sama…”

Vincent: “As that one has spoken, there is no need to be ashamed.”

Tanza: “B-but, I…”

Vincent: “Lost. But, that means you threw the gauntlet. —Just as I hoped.”

Tanza: “…”

Vincent spoke those words while looking on at a distance, his chin resting in his hand, which caused Tanza to widen her eyes. However, as she lowered her head, the corners of her eyes slowly pooled with tears.

While she cast her eyes downwards, shedding tears, those drops softly, gently fell, and,

Tanza: “Yorna-sama, I apologize… I was, immature…”

And so, in a tearful voice, she apologized to her beloved master.

4

And so, with a tearful Tanza behind them—

Al: “With this, can we assume that the attackers will back off for the moment?”

Abel: “Yes. Of course, it is possible Tanza’s crying is part of a scheme against us…”

Medium: “No way! That absolutely can’t be!”

Medium, cheeks puffed out and in an imposing stance, lashed out at Abel’s concern.

At that menacing look, Abel closed one eye and traced his finger across the forehead of the oni mask.

Abel: “So, it seems there has been no improvement in your condition, right?”

Al: “Guh…”

Abel: “If you become useless, I shall have no choice but to discard you mercilessly. Albeit you are Priscilla’s clown, do not believe that it absolves you. Keep that in mind.”

Al: “I, get it… It’s not like I wanna be like this forever.”

Receiving that glare and a cold-hearted judgment, Al responded through gritted teeth.

There was no power in the voice of his response, Al’s fear had not abated. But regardless of Al’s physical and mental state, he would now be able to walk around.

Medium: “Then all that’s left is to resume the search for Gramps… Err, or would it be better to look for Taritta-chan? Or…”

Abel: “If the goal is to regroup, it would be ill-advised for us to act; Taritta’s eyes would find us much faster than we could find her. As for those fools…”

Medium: “H-hmm…”

Abel: “—. In any case, we shall stick to our plan of looking for Olbart. If we do, we shall find them in the process of looking for Olbart. That is, if we succeed in finding “an abyss with a great view”.”

Folding his arms, Abel murmured so, which made Medium widen her eyes in surprise with an “Huh?”.

Medium: “By any chance, Abel-chin, do you know where Gramps is hiding?”

Abel: “I have a guess on the second hiding place, at the very least. Crimson Lapis Castle.”

Al: “Wh-What are you saying? You mean, in that Castle?”

Abel: “Tanza’s reaction. When I brought up the subject of the Castle, she rapidly averted her eyes; Tanza herself was hiding in a traveling inn, but she must have known about Olbart’s hiding place as well. Although, it is not certain that she even had an inkling about the third hiding place.”

The procedure for Olbart and Tanza’s cooperation was that after Tanza delivered the message, Olbart would propose a game to Abel’s group. Then, after they discovered the first hiding place right behind them, the logical step was for Olbart to go outside and accompany Tanza to the traveling inn.

Of course, considering that Tanza could be apprehended, it was possible that Olbart had Tanza accept false information.

Abel: “The trick of hiding out in the Crimson Lapis Castle is also something to Olbart’s liking.”

Medium: “…Hm, I see. Well, we should go to the Castle as soon as possible.”

Al: “Yeah. We need to see that geezer immediately to get our bodies restored… If our bodies are restored, we should be fine. Same goes for bro and that pipsqueak if that happens.”

Clenching his fists tightly, Al grumbled this as if he were praying for it, as if he were cursing Olbart.

Al, having lost his mental capacity due to his own body having been shrunken, held extreme hostility towards the sort of relationship between the disappeared duo of Subaru and Louis.

When it came to him, he would like to get Subaru to how he was before as soon as possible, to ponder over a normal decision regarding Louis. However, Abel was doubtful that Natsuki Subaru would make a normal decision upon returning to his original body —And before that.

Abel: “No matter what your thoughts may be, I have no intention of letting Olbart’s technique be undone so simply.”

Al: “Huh?”

Medium: “Eh?”

Abel: “To be precise, I shall not interfere with either you or Medium. However, I have no intention of allowing the technique on Natsuki Subaru to be dispelled for a short while. It would be best to keep him in that state for the time being.”

Upon hearing Abel’s plan, the two were left astonished, their eyes and mouths wide open.

Then, after a pause,

Al: “Q-quit fucking about! The fuck’s up with that? You didn’t say anything like that before?!”

Incensed, Al, his voice trembling with anger, grabbed Abel’s collar —or rather, as he could not reach it due to his height, the belly section of Abel’s clothes was grabbed, lashing out at him.

However Abel, his countenance unphased by that powerless threat, replied with “It is as I stated”, Abel: “For now, I shall have him remain as-is, in his infantile form, for a while.”

Al: “Bastard…”

Medium: “Is that related to why you were bullying Subaru-chin?”

Exerting more pressure, Al inched closer towards him, while Medium grabbed his shoulders from behind. As she posed that question, she stared fixedly at Abel.

Upon her inquiry, Abel quietly exhaled,

Abel: “I do not recall bullying him, or any other low-level behavior of the sort.”

Medium: “Call it whatever you want! But, Abel-chin, you were trying to scare Subaru-chin on the way here, to get him to say something! Is it because of that?”

Abel: “…”

Medium: “That’s so unfair! If there’s something you wanna hear, just ask and they’ll usually tell you! It’s because of something like that…”

Abel: “—Unfortunately, there is no way that shall happen.”

Hearing the quiet, serene emotion in his voice, Medium could not help but stumble over her words, letting out only a “Eh?”.

Giving a sidelong glance to Medium’s surprised face, Abel brushed off Al’s arm that was gripping him with ease, and spoke,

Abel: “My thoughts have nothing to do with the wickedness that Medium suggests. It is merely a necessary thing.”

Al: “Necessary?! What the hell?! Why just bro… What about me and Lil’ Miss Medium!”

Abel: “You do not meet the requirements. You possess one arm, and Medium’s hair and eye color are the reasons for her.”

Al: “Wha…?!”

Not grasping the meaning of that statement, Al’s anger grew more and more intense. Medium, too, was left with a face that betrayed her lack of understanding of the true nature of Abel’s intentions, while a surprise of different origin still remained on her face.

And, Abel’s bottom line was—

Abel: “Even though the situation remains unaltered, the pieces are falling into place. Henceforth—”

Through his oni mask, Abel gazed out the window of a room in a traveling inn. Towards the outside, his eyes reflecting the Crimson Lapis Castle.

It was a gesture to stare at something far more symbolic than the Castle itself; and, in fact, Abel stretched his hand straight out as if to grasp something that could not be reached.

Abel: “—You shall accompany me, Natsuki Subaru. Blown by an unopposable wind, into the midst of war.”

5

Olbart: “That’s why that deergirl’s with His Excellency.”

Subaru: “…”

Olbart answered calmly, sitting cross-legged with his short arms crossed. Hearing his astonishing answer, Subaru was simply left dumbfounded.

He was not surprised because it was outside the realm of his imagination, however.

Subaru: “I thought she’d be at their inn, in case she wasn’t in the Castle…”

Olbart: “Oh, ya thought of it. Well then, boy, ya gotta have a terrible personality. Ya sure ya don’t have some of that Vollachian Imperial Family blood in ya after all?”

Subaru: “That’s really creeping me out, so don’t say that…”

It was perhaps Olbart’s comedic style, but not a single one of his jokes were really funny. As always, the person in question let out a “Kakakakka!”. In fact, he appeared to be in a good mood, which was probably the secret of his long life.

Paying no mind to others, not allowing stress to build up, laughing quite often; he was the very example of it.

Subaru: “There’s a saying in my hometown, that ill weeds grow apace.”

Olbart: “Oh, a proverb, is it? What’s it mean?”

Subaru: “Something like, the more you’re hated, the longer you live.”

Olbart: “Kakakakka! Well, I don’t have an excuse for that. Ouch.”

Louis: “Au!”

Louis’s angry fist struck Olbart, who was laughing hysterically at the meaning of the saying. Though it was a simple smack on the shoulder, the effort put into just touching it had led to this scene.

Perhaps Olbart, as a member of the most powerful of the Empire, would deal with the smack however he wished, were it anything akin to hostility or murderous intent.

In that sense, Subaru’s move in using Louis’s teleport as a playful touch of pursuit rather than an attack had been the correct option. Yes, he should be proud of himself.

Yorna: “Anyway, I now know where Tanza is… I heard that the residents of the city have been very unkind to you and the others, and I apologize for that.”

Subaru: “Huh, no, Yorna-san, stop it please! There’s nothing to be sorry about!”

Louis: “Uu!”

Yorna bending her knees on the spot in apology caused Subaru to be flustered. Even Louis jumped up involuntarily at the significance of having Yorna bow her head.

In fact, Yorna had taken him seriously, had not backed down at all against Olbart, and had tried to help Subaru again and again, and so on and so on—.

Subaru: "Uh…"

Yorna: "—? What's the matter, child? Your face is so red."

Subaru: "No, well, I just remembered some things…"

As the situation calmed down and the pain and suffering that had been pouring down like a nightmare receded, Subaru was reminded of the many times Yorna and him had exchanged a kiss, in those repeated moments of pain and suffering.

That memory had not remained in Yorna's memory, and Subaru was not in a position to remember the feeling of the kiss itself, so he only remembered it as an event that had happened.

Still, honestly, he admired and liked Yorna a great deal for her willingness to kiss him in order to make it so he'd like her, just so a dying child could be saved.

And because of that—

Subaru: "I don't want you to get mixed up in this."

An increasingly stronger resistance to bringing Yorna into the fray, to bring her into a war that would destabilize the entire Empire, was welling up within Subaru.

He was unsure if this was only because he had been made younger, or if he would think differently once he was back in his proper body.

But even if Subaru thought differently after returning to his original body, he would not believe that what Subaru felt and thought in this young body would be wrong, either.

Because if that was the case—

Louis: “Uau?”

Subaru: “I don’t want to leave the answer regarding you to someone else completely, even if that person’s my grown-up self.”

The question of what to do with Louis, the young girl who held his hand, was a question that Subaru’s mind was not able to answer.

If they joined Abel and the others, that was definitely an unavoidable subject. However, at the end of those ten seconds of despair, there was one thing that Subaru could not help but feel.

—He did not wish to kill Louis or to permit Louis’s death, that much was clear.

Yorna: “The restoration of the Castle will have to wait. First, I’ll go to see Tanza.”

Subaru: “Ah… Yorna-san, um, about Tanza…”

Don’t be too harsh on her, but from Subaru’s point of view, that was difficult to say.

Even if he believed that she had her own agenda and thoughts, Subaru had not heard them. It was just that—

Yorna: “It goes without saying that I’d never scold her without asking her to explain herself. Moreover, if that girl’s been overcome by her own feelings, I’d be to blame as well.”

Subaru didn’t need to worry; the Mistress of the Demon City knew what she had to do.

Because she was exactly like this, was probably why a great deal of people, Tanza included, adored her.

Subaru hoped that if she would not suddenly become cold once he returned to normal, if possible.

Subaru: “I might cry if that happens…”

That was rather, seriously heartbreaking to imagine. Sincerely, he hoped it wouldn't come to pass.

Anyhow, if Yorna could convince Tanza, the residents who had been chasing Subaru and his friends would withdraw. Subaru's critical second step would start from there.

But—

Subaru: "—There's nothing scarier than dying."

He told himself that, after going through such a horrifying experience, things were okay.

On top of that, Subaru also wanted to get out of the Castle with Yorna—

Olbart: "Wha, waitwait, boy. Why don't I turn ya back? Or do ya like yerself better now? I don't particularly mind if so."

Subaru: "Oh, sorry, no, of course not. I'll turn back, I'll turn back, I'll turn back alright. I mean, I'm getting used to being in this form, but I'm going to have trouble finding things to wear."

Olbart: "Kakakakka! Ya got a lotta nerve worryin' 'bout that."

Olbart called out to his back, and Subaru stepped on a roof tile and spun around.

In fact, although his body had been shrunk only for a few hours, he had exceeded the total number of deaths up until now, and so this became the body he had lived and died with the most.

He didn't want to say it was because of that, but his small body felt like a bad omen, so if he could get back he'd like to get back to his normal size sooner rather than later.

Right now, the only thing that scared him was the possibility that his views might change abruptly, but—

Subaru: "Don't worry, Louis. I'm going to face you properly."

Louis: “Uau… Au.”

Louis cast her head down after Subaru’s words, but then she gave a deep nod. Subaru pushed on Louis’s forehead with a finger, directing her towards Yorna.

Louis’s back struck her, and Yorna took her in.

Yorna: “Child, what is Old Man Olbart doing…”

Subaru: “Hm, I don’t fully trust him, but I’d like to think that he’s at least got just barely enough humanity left in him to follow the logic of victory and defeat.”

Olbart: “Oiii~, I can hear ya, ya know.”

Subaru: “I know that, that’s why I’m saying it.”

Subaru smiled wryly in response to Olbart’s teasing. To Subaru’s answer, Yorna narrowed her eyes as she hugged Louis tightly.

Yorna: “If you understand that, then I have nothing else to say. I haven’t been told what’ll happen exactly, but this child and I will be watching you.”

Louis: “Uh!”

Subaru: “Hmm, okay. Well, you know, I hope you’ll be on good terms with me after this, Yorna-san.”

Yorna: “—? Child, you’re quite the worrier, aren’t you?”

Being sent off by Yorna smiling at him and Louis’s cheerful face, Subaru went to Olbart’s side. Standing up, Olbart patted himself on the lower back, and spoke,

Olbart: “You’re talkin’ crap again. Oh geez, let’s get this over with.”

Subaru: “Yeah… Uhh, is it going to hurt?”

Olbart: “Did it hurt when ya shrank down? Then, that’s the answer!”

Giving a brief answer to Subaru's hesitant question, Olbart's outstretched hand gently touched Subaru's solar plexus.

Abel had conjectured that Olbart's "infantilization" technique interfered with the Od, and perhaps that Od resided somewhere around the heart.

At the same time, a memory came back to Subaru's mind. The previous day, he had indeed received a painless blow from Olbart as he fled from the keep right beneath where he was currently standing.

Subaru's "infantilization" had occurred, with the interference of his Od as a trigger.

Only a few hours had passed since his body had been shrunken, but it felt like that had been the biggest struggle he'd faced since coming to the Empire. Although, ever since he'd been in the Empire, he'd been struggling to begin with.

Even including the time outside of the Empire, those ten seconds of despair were some of the greatest—

Subaru: "Oh, speaking of which…"

Suddenly, Subaru remembered something he had been attempting not to think about.

Those ten seconds of despair, that seemingly hellish cycle of rebirth and death, were a far cry from the Return by Death that Subaru had come to know.

What had brought this about, and what had happened to Return by Death, the Authority that resided in Subaru?

???: "Found you."

5

—Everything that happened in that instant, was incomprehensible for all those who were present.

Olbart: “Ugh.”

Along with those words, Olbart withdrew his outstretched right hand in an instant.

But, too slow. Olbart’s wrinkled right hand, from the wrist onwards, vanished.

And then—

Yorna: “Chil—”

Louis: “Uau!!”

Her eyes widened in shock, Yorna pulled Louis into her arms and jumped backwards a great distance, hugging the girl struggling to break free.

Immediately afterwards, pure dark flooded Yorna and Louis’s field of vision, and, in one fell swoop, swallowed the castle tower, the upper parts, and the middle parts of the Crimson Lapis Castle, famous for its majestic and bright brilliance.

And then—

Kafma: “Your Excellency! That is…”

Vincent: “…”

From a distance, looking at the scene outside the window, Kafma, at the side of the Emperor he served to protect, and harboring a sharp fighting aura, felt as if all the bugs in his body shivered in terror.

In the meantime, Vincent had stood up, turning his sharp gaze towards the Castle dyed in black, allowing his deliberate thoughts to flow with all the peace in the world.

And then—

Tanza: “That’s, the Castle… Yorna-sama…”

Al: “Ah, ahhh, AHHHHHHH—!”

Medium: “Al-chin?!”

In a daze, the children stared at what had happened bug-eyed, in absolute shock.

Tanza feared for her master, who remained in the Castle; and Al, at the damage dealt to the city, screamed louder than anyone in the city—no, louder than anyone in the world.

Medium dashed over to him and supported Al’s shoulders. She stared at Abel as if clinging on to him in this inexplicable situation.

And then—

???: “Myyy~ oh my, how should I put it… This might be, a small bit I didn’t gaze.”

Taritta: “You—”

Watching the crumbling city from a distance, being swallowed by the shadows, Ubilk let out an easy-going mutter, using his hands as a visor, while the brown Shudraq standing opposite to him, Taritta, listened to him while grinding her teeth.

As if it were difficult to decide whether the shadow in the distance, or the man in front of her, were what she ought to pay attention to.

And then—

Abel: “—Is this, the true identity of the thing you had been carrying within?”

He directed his eyes to the same thing the false Emperor and the bawling children regarded, and Abel muttered so.

Clenching his fists tightly, he bit his lip, to the extent that blood flowed, hidden on the other side of the oni mask. As he glared at the jet-black mass, his countenance distorted to the point it resembled the terrifying visage of his oni mask.

And then—

6

—I love you.

—I love you. I love you. I love you.

—I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you. I love you.

—I love you. I love you.

Love akin to a curse that would never, by any means, leave, transcending every conceivable dimension, was blotting out the existence called Natsuki Subaru.

A hellish world devoid of love; that, he knew.

That his own self was still loved; that, Natsuki Subaru knew.

However, at the same time, that not all forms of “love” should be something to be affirmed, that he also should know.

Exactly because of his ignorance, there would be retribution.

Exactly because of his ignorance, of why everyone dreaded it, ran from it.

—It morphed into a sable shadow, swallowing all things, cheering while destroying.

Cheering for reuniting, for coming together, for embracing, for being tied, for this predestination, for this forward march.

Cheering for confession, for regret, for suspicion, for its mysteriousness, for exaltation, for devotion.

A hellish world devoid of love, that he knew.

If he were to arrive at a world with love, what sort of hell would it be?

Subaru did not understand. He understood naught.

If there was something he could say, in this situation inexplicable to anyone, there was only one thing.

The utopia of those ostracized, the Demon City of Chaosflame.

—The ruin of this utopia, was brought about by the causality of none other than Natsuki Subaru.

Bonus Short Stories

The Land of Wolves:
Death unto the Weak, No Mercy IV

1

—Man, what a weird situation for someone to be in.

Todd looked at the situation he was in as if it was someone else's business and grumbled in his mind like that. Basically, he disliked it when things didn't go his way. You might think that it was like that for everyone, but for him, everything was a matter of life or death.

Having such a mindset, he felt like his life hung in the balance whenever he made a mistake in his calculations. And that was something that the man named Todd Fang couldn't bear.

But it could be said that the situation Todd was in at the moment was an exception. Since—

"—So, you are the person who brought General Arakiya back to us."

The man who said that and looked at Todd in a room filled with elegant furniture from behind the elegant, custom-made desk, was an old man who had a full head of gently arranged white hair.

His narrow eyes that could be mistaken as being shut—which Todd felt was an ability sent down from on high since it allowed him to hide his emotions while talking—were a gift from the gods that hid the emotions in his eyes.

In reality, there was no doubt that that talent was a great help when you considered the man's position. It was because he was one of the top dogs in the world of political warfare full of trickery and deception.

That old man was Berstetz Fondalfon, the prime minister of the Sacred Empire of Vollachia himself—

“Lord Berstetz Fondalfon.”

“…”

“I am honored to have been blessed with an opportunity to meet you like this.” Todd knelt down on the carpet and bowed his head deeply at the man in front of him—Berstetz Fondalfon—and gave him a few words of greeting.

It’s merely a formality, but I’m sure I did it well enough.

Even if Todd was like that, he was the fiancé of a nobleman’s daughter, so he had been sensible enough to learn the bare minimum of etiquette so that he wouldn’t embarrass his wife-to-be.

But I never thought that I would have the opportunity to showcase my skills in front of the highest civil servant, the prime minister of the Empire, but it’s always good to be prepared.

All this was happening because—

“You don’t have to be so formal, it’s fine if you make yourself comfortable. Your actions have greatly contributed to the future of the Empire. So I simply wanted to show my appreciation and convey my gratitude.”

Berstetz conveyed his appreciation for what he had done with an air of dignity, not even trying to make him feel comfortable. The reason why the prime minister had invited Todd—a mere soldier—to his office and was entertaining him personally was because of the person he had brought back to the imperial capital. It was because he had acknowledged Todd’s achievement of rescuing Arakiya.

Arakiya—who had experienced an unexpected defeat in the fortified Imperial City of Guaral—was a member of the Nine Divine Generals, the strongest beings in the Empire. Losing her would have been a great loss for the Empire.

Thus Todd, without regard for his own safety, followed his righteous indignation and sense of duty and did his utmost to rescue Arakiya. At least, that was what the reports that got sent to the imperial capital said.

Todd himself let things be since he felt no need to correct it, but it ended up spreading around and wound up reaching the ears of the imperial prime minister himself, and so here we are. He hadn't thought lightly of it in the slightest, but he'd never expected he'd receive such treatment for saving Arakiya, and it made him seriously reflect on his naivety.

Anyway…

"I am not worthy of such words. I only did what anyone would do in that situation. General Arakiya is a person that this country needs, after all."

"Truly such exemplary loyalty. His Excellency the Emperor would be very pleased to hear that a man such as you is among his Sword Wolves."

With a respectful look on his face, Todd thought that his response was hollow. It was an open secret among the imperial soldiers that the Emperor and the prime minister of the Vollachian Empire were on bad terms.

The Vollachian Way had always been to appreciate anyone with good skills, but this way of thinking was even more pervasive during the reign of the current Emperor, Vincent Vollachia. There were many who were hired by him on merit who had once been his enemies.

Imperial Prime Minister Berstetz was one such enemy. Berstetz, whose master got killed, was serving the person who had ordered for their murder. Even Todd, who thought of himself as someone who could change his attitude on a dime, could imagine just how complicated his situation was.

"I think I heard about this from Jamal…"

Jamal, who had vanished into thin air in the fortified city, was as cunning as his appearance suggested, and he liked poking his nose into other people's affairs and got excited while talking about rumors. And yet, he was also an imperial noble, so he had no shortage of sources of such topics. Thanks to that, he got to hear about things without wanting to and thus became equally well-informed. So, even though he was meeting Berstetz for the first time, he did not feel like they were meeting for the first time.

In any case…

“General Arakiya has asked me to reward you handsomely. Though she said it in her own unique way, so that’s how I interpreted it… Is there anything you wish for?”

“Anything I wish for? Not particularly. Just…”

“Just?”

“In order to rescue the general, I lost a friend…not just my friend, but my fiancée’s older brother. The first thing I want to do is break the news to her and then be there for her as she grieves.”

With a docile expression and voice, Todd turned into a man being concerned about his lover that was about to experience a great tragedy. In fact, his heart ached with pain when he thought about how his fiancée would feel, so he wasn’t lying.

It was just that he could finally think of Jamal as his friend after his death. He felt relieved since dead people couldn’t get back at you.

“…” Berstetz became silent for a few seconds after listening to Todd’s earnest desire.

Todd couldn’t guess what kind of thoughts the prime minister had during that moment of silence since he couldn’t glean anything from his emotionless eyes. That made him realize that he wasn’t really compatible with him. It was someone he felt he needed to kill in order to feel safer. He couldn’t wrap his head around why His Excellency the Emperor would keep someone like him close just because he was capable.

Perhaps answering Todd’s prayers, Berstetz said “Alright” with a nod. “It is an imminent situation. Whatever you are going to wish for, you can do it after you calm your loved one down. We weren’t considerate enough of your circumstances. You may go now.”

“Yes, Your Excellency. I am grateful for your consideration.”

After exchanging the necessary pleasantries, Todd, who had been ordered to leave, felt relieved.

On the other hand, he felt a bit sympathetic towards Berstetz since he was in a position where he couldn’t forgo such troublesome exchanges. A man was bound by his position. That’s why Todd preferred to be in one that allowed him to be somewhat free.

Moreover…

“You have my gratitude for taking the time to meet me at a time when His Excellency the Emperor is absent.”

“—. Where did you hear that His Excellency isn’t around?” Berstetz quietly inquired as he raised an eyebrow at Todd’s farewell right as he was about to leave.

After being questioned, Todd said, “Oh no,” and gave a quick glance at the top of the prime minister’s desk. “I do apologize, but I just happened to see some of the papers sitting on top of the desk. I assumed that they were being approved by Your Excellency on His Excellency the Emperor’s behalf.”

The Emperor is probably away from the imperial capital on a military expedition or an inspection tour. I’ve heard that His Excellency, Vincent, moved around so freely that his subjects were having a tough time.

It was to the extent that imperial citizens joked about meeting the incognito Emperor while walking around the imperial capital. It was fine as a funny story, but it wouldn’t be so funny if it ended up being true. It was something that Todd couldn’t think of as someone else’s issue now, so he decided to at least store it in his memory.

Leaving that aside… “I will be leaving now. —Since I am making my fiancée wait.”

2

“—You complete pest!” a girl shouted as the vase she threw hit the wall and shattered, splattering its contents and the broken pieces everywhere.

He gave a quick glance at the vase that had hit the wall quite a ways away from him, then shrugged. “Did you miss because you care about me, perhaps? If so, there was no reason for you to throw money away like that.”

“I was definitely trying to hit you, okay! It just didn’t go where I wanted it to…so hold your tongue!”

“I haven’t said anything. Ah well…”

Todd smiled wryly after hearing a high-pitched voice reverberate inside his skull, then told the maid to clean up the shards and leave. As it was a chance for them to meet up after a long time, it would be natural for one to think that he wanted to be alone with her. However…

“I’m sorry about Jamal.”

“—Hic.”

The one in front of Todd’s eyes that he had just apologized to was a young girl who was at a loss for words, her cheeks tense. It was a girl with long, dark brown hair arranged in a braid, and her downcast eyes made her seem gloomy. The clothes she was fond of wearing were dark in color, and she exuded an aura that made even the people around her feel depressed. But her face was pretty, and her frizzy hair—one of her loveable flaws—was just like her brother’s.

Yes, she is perfect. She is a loveable flawed item that is perfect just as she is.

That was Todd Fang’s fiancée.

“—Katya.”

“How-How dare you show yourself in front of me!” Todd’s call made the girl’s—Katya’s—eyes flash with anger, and she threw the book next to her bed at him. It missed him once again, further fueling her irritation.

The things falling on the carpet of Katya's room—which wasn't luxurious or very magnificent at all—were the belongings she kept next to her bed that she kept throwing at Todd one after another.

All of them were gifts from either Todd or Jamal. They were everything that made up Katya's small world since she was weak from birth and didn't have much freedom. She couldn't bear children because she was prone to illness—she was a fragile person who couldn't even make herself pleasant to people at social gatherings. In Vollachia, which demanded strength, she couldn't perform any of the things expected of the daughter of a nobleman, so she was a pitiful girl who had been written off by society. Even in her family, only Jamal, her biological brother, cared for her. That made her the most attractive, ideal, and lovely girl to Todd.

"You abandoned…Jamal…my brother, and shamelessly returned… You should have…"

"Died in his place?"

"—Hic."

"You can't say it, can you? I know. I know every little thing about you."

When she hesitated to say something harsh in return, Todd closed the distance between them in an instant. He grabbed her slender wrist and snatched the book she was gripping tightly away while being careful not to break it, then put it back on the shelf. She couldn't hit him even if she tried, and just that was enough to make her start taking ragged breaths. She was frail and weak and couldn't live without relying on others.

Todd gently pinched the teary Katya's chin and stole her lips. He felt the soft sensation as well as a sign of resistance.

She immediately turned her face away and slapped him. "You…per-pervert! You vulgar man! What do you think you are doing…!"

"It's proof that I love you. And you are right."

"…"

"I let Jamal die and shamelessly came back. I know I'm not worthy enough to show myself in front of you. But I just wanted to see your face. I wanted to touch you," Todd said, gently caressing the cheek of the girl glaring at him.

"—Ah." Katya couldn't deny his words, and when she tried to move her quivering eyes away from him, her eyes darted to-and-fro.

But when Todd called her once, "Katya," she timidly met his gaze.

"…How was, my brother's, end?"

"He covered our retreat to save me and the general. He did not utter a single weak remark until the very end. I believe that the word brave was made just for him."

"If that's true, then you are a coward, Todd."

"You're right. But his death wasn't in vain, and I was able to return to you like this. I'm thankful that I'm a coward."

Even if the words I use to describe others are a lie, when talking to Katya, I feel like the words I use to describe myself are all true.

Todd was a coward, and it was because of that that he was able to return alive and meet Katya.

"I was able to achieve a great feat. That's why I'm sure that they will assent to my selfish request of wanting to stay by your side in the imperial capital. You won't have to be lonely anymore."

"Eve-Even if you aren't here, I would…"

"Jamal won't come see you anymore. Even if that's the case?"

Todd tried to get the words he wanted to hear out of Katya's mouth by talking cruelly.

Katya broke down in a fluster, on the verge of having a mental breakdown, after hearing the truth that she had been ignoring in her anger. She was made to realize, once again, that her brother, who had cared for her so very much, was dead.

And then…

“D-Did he, my brother, that brother, really die?”

Todd silently embraced the girl he loved, who had started to sob and shed tears. She timidly returned his embrace, wrapping her arms around his back. He then cradled her head, which was wetting his chest with hot tears, and thanked the heavens that the blood pumping through his veins was devoid of heat.

Because his body was like that, he could feel the heat of Katya’s warmth as he held her in his arms, and even the heat of the tears she was shedding too, which felt so sweet to him that it made his very soul tremble.

3

—At the same time Todd was enjoying his meeting with his fiancée…

“That private first class… Todd Fang, was it?” asked Berstetz.

“Yep,” Arakiya replied.

“So you want to make him one of your subordinates. I see.” Imperial Prime Minister Berstetz nodded deeply, narrowing his narrow eyes even further as he looked ahead.

It was almost evening in the imperial capital, and the person he was speaking to in his office lit up with orange light was Arakiya, who had come to visit him first thing after her wounds had been treated. It was reported that she had been greatly wounded, but she seemed perfectly fine at first glance. Donning her usual expressionless face that left people guessing as to what she was truly thinking, Arakiya had visited Berstetz and presented the proposal that had been mentioned in the beginning.

Berstetz touched his chin thoughtfully at Arakiya's unusual proposal. "May I ask what you have in mind? Are you saying that you want to recognize his feat of saving you from behind enemy lines and reward him for that?"

"…I won't say anything, difficult. I just want to give him a chance."

"A chance?"

"To avenge his friend."

Everything made sense to Berstetz after hearing Arakiya continue her words. Todd, who he had just talked to in his office a couple hours ago, had also told him that he had lost a friend in order to save her.

Naturally, Arakiya had heard about it on the way back. That's why she wished to give him a chance to avenge his friend.

"…" For a moment, Berstetz's mind went back to what Todd had said after he had asked him to leave. It was engraved in his memory that Todd was quick-witted since he was able to figure out that the Emperor was away just by looking at the papers on his desk. At the same time, it was also true that he felt a vague, dark presentiment.

He could not tell if it was just a groundless fear or an omen for something, but… "Anyhow, there's no way I could say no if you are the one vouching for it. I have no objections."

"…That's good. Then."

"However, there is something I need you to do before you return to the eastern front, General."

Arakiya's red eyes flickered in dissatisfaction. Seeing that out of the corner of his eye, Berstetz took out a document, the very one that had come into his view.

"I want you to go to the Gladiator Island. To fulfill a duty that only you are capable of fulfilling."

Thus, he ordered the general to get rid of the internal problem that was shaking the Empire.

END

Provisional Rem's Paranoia: There are No Oni Around the World

1

A tinge of blueness could strangely be felt in the air of this morning which had just welcomed dawn,

Whether what could be felt was the faint lingering notes of nighttime, or perhaps it's the impression given by the serene atmosphere of the morning coated in tranquility. She doesn't understand the fine details of it.

Nevertheless, Rem did not dislike that blue atmosphere which gave off a peaceful impression.

"…"

In the still early morning of the Walled City, Rem who had just woken up in the town's biggest Mansion, folded her beddings with haste and headed to the backyard with cane in hand.

For the cooking and cleaning, she has to draw water from a well. Because of the cane she's holding onto she was practically restrained to one arm, as such drawing the necessary water was a huge task.

Nevertheless, she simply did not wish to whine about a task she had decided to tackle by herself.

But then—

"—Ah"

Arriving at the well she had aimed for, Rem peeled her light blue eyes wide open and released a sigh.

In the vicinity of the well in the mansion's backyard, she perceived the traces of the well water having been drawn up in a water pail, and the necessary amount having been carried to the Cookhouse.

Then, the one who had done that in the stead of Rem who had come here hurriedly, had been—

"…"

The backyard of the mansion that falls into tranquility, faintly mixed in there was the cries of the trampled grasses, the sound of something sharp cutting through the wind, and the slightly labored breathing of a man.

Whence her eyes fell upon what she heard, the source of the sound, and who the offender who had drawn up the water from the well in Rem's stead was had become clear.

With the mansion's backyard as training grounds, continuing to swing his beautiful drawn sword, that was a person with red hair—with an unkempt beard across his profile and clouded blue pupils, he was a middle-aged man who gave no attention to his own appearance.

Those narrowed eyes were filled with negative emotions like they were cursing the world, even that profile with ragged breath seemed to be adorned by a deep resentment and rage.

—However, the path drawn by the sword he swung, just that swordsmanship looked beautiful to even untrained eyes.

"…"

These past few days, Rem had been made to think quite a lot about the meaning of the word Beautiful.

Understanding it, finding it within herself, ever since it was pointed out to her, that it would become the key to fill in something missing that Rem desired.

"…Oh, so you were here?"

The red-haired man noticed the presence of the silent Rem, who was pressing her hand tightly against her chest. The man stopped the hand with which he was swinging the sword, he wiped off the sweat flowing from his forehead using the sleeves of his shirt and the creases of his brow furrowed.

With that single gesture, an element of displeasure was added to the surprisingly well-proportioned features of this man.

Rem thought that, mixing in a hint of ugliness within something well-proportioned, perhaps had something that communicated much more anxiety and bitterness than something repulsive.

The man before her made her think that in particular—

"—It is Heinkel-san, who is early again this morning, it seems."

"Simple habit. A mediocre person like myself can't slack a single day or else he'll continue to slack more gradually after that. So it just happens that continuing is a lot more convenient."

"So then, is that why you're up this early in the morning?"

"That way I don't get any comments from the peanut gallery. At least until you arrived"

Huffing in displeasure, the man—Heinkel, told Rem she was a nuisance through implication.

While having been taken aback at the beginning, she had gotten used to that manner of speaking after several days. If she just thought of it as a slightly more tepid version of Abel's cold and dry manner of speaking, it was nothing special.

From the start, it was more unnatural that the majority of the people they had met such as Flop, the people of shudraq, and Zikr had been favorable towards her. Though it was obvious, just as there were people that were unconditionally kind to Rem, there were also people that unconditionally disliked her.

Heinkel was simply the latter. That, and a latter whom she had the reins of tightly held.

Heinkel, who was currently coarsely wiping his sweat, for all of his mouthiness and attitude, did not bring up any more trouble than that. That point must be because she also has the position of Priscilla's servant.

In the end, no one could directly go against that beautiful woman, with hair red like blood.

It likely meant neither Rem, nor Heinkel, were an exception to that.

But regardless—

"Heinkel-san gives me the impression of being a bit of an inconsistent person."

"…What?"

On the spot, she verbalized what she was thinking, and those sky-blue pupils glared sharply at her.

However, sensing that he wouldn't show any aggression other than glaring, Rem shook her head with a "No".

"You drink nothing but alcohol all day, and yet you're actually training while calling it a habit. And you even drew water from the well, earlier than I arrive…"

"I told you. I'm just continuing my training because it'll be annoying later. I use the water from the well too to wipe my sweat. It's an eyesore watching you and that brat bumble trying to draw water too anyway."

"If so, you could've just shut yourself in your room so you don't have to see us"

"—. What I do and where I do it is up to me"

Twisting his face in annoyance, Heinkel protested thus to Rem's point. But, something about it could not help sounding like a poor excuse to Rem.

Heinkel's true feelings likely were that he considers strangers disagreeable, and would rather avoid others. On the other hand, the fact that he cannot completely isolate himself from those he finds disagreeable is shown through his actions.

Which is why, the impression Rem holds of him had become that he was Inconsistent.

Huffing with a “Hmph”, Heinkel makes noise and sheaths his sword into its scabbard. That movement and handling of the sword, that it by itself looked like something so polished, pushed that impression further.

Although he looks at the blade as if it’s something detestable, he still handles the sword itself with great care. It appeared to be a state in which you could say love and hate are mixed together.

“Like you wished, I’ll go back to my room. You do whatever you l-…”

“Before that, won’t you help me with the cooking while you’re at it? If handling blades is something you’re good at from habit, then I would appreciate it if you could help me by peeling vegetables.”

“Are you fuc-…hk”

Heinkel, who had swiftly turned his back, turned back around with eyebrows raised having heard Rem’s words.

It must have been an unexpected request. Of course, Rem herself wasn’t being serious. She simply wanted to make Heinkel’s surly face collapse for some reason.

If he had asked to help suddenly, she would be surprised, and find it difficult.

Perhaps Heinkel also noticed that Rem meant nothing more by it than to tease him—

“Shit! You need to learn some fucking respect for your superiors else-…”

Saying so, Heinkel plucked at his own red hair. As he seemed to draw closer and closer, Rem was about to give a retort when—

“—Aaah! I am so late! I have done it now!” Before that happened, a high pitched voice resonating through the early morning sky broke into the space between the two.

With the pitter-patter of his worked legs, a young boy of short stature rushed into the yard. Bright pink fuzzy hair and, though small, proper butler attire. His big round eyes and his adorable face flustered, his cheeks were flushed and his breath was ragged.

The boy, looking at the already drawn water from the well, and at Rem and Heinkel who were facing each other then said:

“Uwaah, Heinkel-sama and Rem-sama, you are both up so early today again it is frustrating! Once again, I was so very late!”

Tapping his small feet on the ground as he stomps in frustration, was the young boy—Schult.

Much like Heinkel, the young boy was Priscilla’s servant, and as he expressed that earnestness and naiveté through his whole body, he switched gears with a “But!”

“You have yet to finish preparations for breakfast, correct? In which case, I should actually be able to help! Rem-sama, please do ask anything you will of me!”

“…Thank you very much, Schult-chan”

“Yes! Ah, but, I am a man, so I would rather you not add “chan” to my name please. Al-sama, also calls me that! But…”

“I’m sorry. You were just so cute so…”

Schult petitions that as he fidgets while twiddling his fingers together, and Rem’s lips loosen.

Schult’s behavior was about as adorable as his appearance. Feeling a sort of fraternity to that youthfulness different from Rui’s or Utakata’s, Rem also unconsciously felt like bullying him.

Whatever the case—

“I am very glad that Schult-kun will be helping me. That’s right, why doesn’t Schult-kun tell Heinkel-san? So that he can help us with the morning preparations”

“Wha-…”

“Ah! Will Heinkel-sama help us? I am so glad! Let us do our best work for the sake of Priscilla-sama!”

Getting a smile from the hoppity jumping Schult, Heinkel is lost for words. He then turned his spiteful eyes towards Rem, but it was quite unexpected.

While the one who incited this situation was Rem, Heinkel’s actions brought the situation upon himself.

In the first place, if he wanted to remain consistent with his act of an unpleasant and stubborn adult, he could just trample upon Schult’s innocent attitude, and boldly turn his back to him.

However—

“So that Priscilla-sama may rejoice, let us do our best!”

“…I. can’t do anything other than peeling.”

He said such, and dropped his shoulders, thus he was incoherent all the way down.

2

“That thing’s way of life is so utterly ugly, you would likely sooner learn but to pity from it”

Such were Priscilla’s words to answer Rem who had inquired more about Heinkel.

Why had she made Heinkel into her servant? Was meant to be a question without much thought behind it, not even Rem had thought she would get such a scathing answer to it.

She had surely thought that Priscilla would tell her about Heinkel’s real strengths and his humanity from her point of view, and how she had evaluated those parts, however her assumptions were off.

“What’s this? you’ve got a dumbfounded look about you. Were you not the one who requisitioned mine answer?”

“Well, that might be the case but… Umm, how should I respond?”

“That you do not understand? Hmph, why do you think like so?”

“—. Since I thought that Priscilla-san, didn’t like things that weren’t beautiful.”

That she loved things that were beautiful, was something that Priscilla explained to Rem on occasion.

That Rem had, in this way, been serving at Priscilla’s side, and taking care of her daily needs had also been because Rem wished for Priscilla to correct what she lacked using her sense of beauty.

Priscilla had eyes that could discern through the nature of people and objects. —Through their short time together, Rem had many times witnessed cases that could make her believe such.

And she had come to call things with value, things that excelled, Beautiful.

That she, had kept Heinkel, who she had evaluated as ugly, by her side was something—

“That did not make sense, or rather, it felt like it was not consistent.”

“Hooh, you point at mineself, and note that I am inconsistent? You have quite the overspoken lips do you not?”

“If I’m wrong, that may be so. But…”

She hadn’t said she was wrong.

Rem gazed into Priscilla’s crimson pupils, and clearly asserted such.

“…”

Hearing that response from Rem, Priscilla touched her pale cheeks with her graceful finger. Gently tracing the tip of her finger through her cheek, the tip of her finger arrived at her lips.

“Heh. So you won’t show me your wavering?”

“I have no reason to waver”

“And why do you believe so?”

“Because I believe that Priscilla-san is not a person who strays from logic, even if she’s intense.”

Rem quietly gave that answer at Priscilla’s gaze that seemed to be speculating on her. The moment she heard that, Priscilla exhaled with Hah, a sound of amusement.

She sighed in relief once it seemed like her mood had not fouled. Just like she told, Priscilla is a person who does not stray from logic, though she didn’t think she wasn’t unreasonable.

Rem didn’t hold the belief that her mood wouldn’t foul for some reason unknown to her.

“Rem, what do you think of a garden filled with only beautiful things?”

“Eh?”

“A garden filled with only beautiful things. I shan’t say it thrice.”

Being told that bluntly, Rem’s thoughts went into overdrive from Priscilla’s words.

Following Priscilla’s philosophy, would that not be the most ideal of gardens? If there is value in what is beautiful, then you would be surrounded by valuable things in that place. However, if that truly is an ideal place, Priscilla should be able to put together that same thing.

While having that privilege, Priscilla holds onto Heinkel whom she had judged ugly. What is her true motive behind that? Churning her thoughts with utmost effort—

“In a place filled with just beautiful things, the beautiful becomes common place?”

“…”

“You see something as beautiful, once you know something that isn’t. If that’s the case, then in a garden filled with only the beautiful, the value of what is beautiful becomes lower…or somesuch?”

Voicing her own thoughts, Rem furrows her brow at just how prideful a way of thinking it is.

If this logic were to be right, Priscilla is keeping Heinkel in her grasp, to keep him who she had judged ugly as a point of contrast to her beloved beauty.

For instance that could be, as a foil to Schult the much similar servant which tags along with him.

“I believe that…to be quite egotistical.”

“Kuku”

“—hk, Wh-What is so funny?”

Putting the back of her hand in front of her mouth, a sound escaped Priscilla’s throat in response to which Rem’s eyes widened. But, she lightly shook her head to that questioning.

“That your thoughts strayed into speculation, such that you would rebuke me was most amusing. There was also something amusive about your thoughts before that. If you gather only beautiful things, in exchange the value of that beautifulness is lowered… Not bad. However, that is just the grief of those who have no external measure of beautifulness.”

“Ah…”

“To those who know the world outside of the garden, that logic wouldn’t apply. Is your world something that would shrink to a single garden with just one query like that?”

She felt like she got cajoled with sophistry, but at the same time there was also a sense of defeat from having been outargued with logic.

What she had realized from Priscilla's words, was the difference between the world she saw and her's—it likely meant that, that which could be called a difference in field of view, was something in orders of magnitude.

Not having any memories, or any reliable foundation to stand on was not an excuse.

Rem slightly hung her head at that bitterness. Then—

"Besides, while that certainly might be an ugly way of living… the manner in which he handles the sword is beautiful."

With the addition of Priscilla's opinion, Rem recalls Heinkel's form from the early morning.

That red haired swordsman with haphazard hygiene who spills all sorts of sarcasm and vulgarities—however, it certainly is as she said, his form as he swings his sword and his posture handling the blade, there was something to marvel at in that.

"The things that are beautiful from any angle, like mineself, are limited. Do not narrow your view of the world even a little bit. —Rem, try to take your cane some time."

"—? I'm always holding onto a cane though."

"Fool. Not a physical cane. A cane to walk far and wide around this world. That imparted knowledge onto Schult, and vigorousness onto Al. So you as well, take your cane."

Priscilla's speech was obtuse, and Rem had her hands full following it. But, feeling that she's always telling her important things, she was stuck endeavoring to work her head.

Today's Cane will likely have Rem pondering over it, much the same as Beautifulness did.

However—

“There are points you must see—You may entertain mineself as best you can.”

So, her lips relaxed and what she felt from Priscilla’s form posed with magnificence, that was Beautifulness, because at the same time she understood that what propped that up was the Cane she held.

“I also, want that”

That which makes the blood-like Scarlet princess before her eyes.

She who was left at the Walled City, Rem had been naturally made aware of what she wanted as well.

END

The Dragon Kingdom:
Missing Child Search Chronicle IV

1

“Well, I never thought I would hear that my son is working for the Royal Selection.”

“I’m sorry to surprise you. But it’s true. Otto is always helping us with a lot of things. Right?”

Mazeran, a man who flaunted a fine mustache, spoke in awe, to which Emilia replied and requested corroboration from her companions.

“Correct.”

A man with heterochromatic eyes answered Emilia’s call with a nod. His figure was clad in an elegant, well-sewn attire.

“Sir,” continued the man, staring at Mazeran, “as Lady Emilia stated, we rely on your son’s invaluable assistance on a regular baaasis. And despite that, we have been very impolite, never bothering to come and greet you formaaally.”

“Oh, not at all. You have nothing to apologize for. If you find my inexpert son worthy, feel free to use him as you please. I know he would consider it an honor, too. Right?”

“Do you expect me to just say yes to something like that?!”

The forceful racket of a third voice cut into the men’s peaceful conversation.

The sudden shout led all eyes to the youth who was panting and moving his shoulders up and down: Otto.

“Oops.”

He immediately put a hand to his mouth, becoming aware that he had just ruined the ambiance.

“My, my, take it easy. You have to behave, Otto. You’re being rude to Lady Emilia and Margrave Mathers.”

“But, M-Mom…”

“Excuse my child’s noisiness. Ironically, he used to be such a quiet kid when he was little; I don’t know what changed him. I’m so sorry.”

Otto’s face showed uneasiness that contrasted with the serenity exuded by the woman who made that comment.

After serving tea to the guests who rested on the living room’s sofa, the woman sat down next to Mazeran with utmost naturalness.

Mazeran and Framir from the Suwen household were a perfect match.

When she took a glance at her tender features and demeanor, plus details such as her eyes, Emilia felt quite impressed.

“She looks just like you, Otto. You really take after your mom.”

“Yet he inherited his eye and hair color from his father… I see, you have rather amusing origins, Otto.”

“At least Lady Emilia was not trying to be malicious…”

“Huh? Did I say something bad?”

Otto’s grumble made Emilia’s eyes widen in confusion. ‘Do not worry about it,’ Otto thought but did not say, sealing the reply inside his mind.

This sort of thing happened sometimes when she talked to him. However, it was proof that Otto, being smart as he was, often concerned himself with Emilia and everybody else in the faction.

“Otto, let me share your troubles from time to time. I don’t know if I can help you, but I always do my best to.”

"… Yes. Thank you very much. I have never doubted that, ever."

Despite how insistent Emilia was, Otto reacted with a nod, not taking it personally. Satisfied, Emilia stroked her chest down, and then Otto's expression turned glum.

The glumness was not due to Emilia, but to the fact that the Suwens, in other words, his own parents, were watching the exchange.

"Dad, Mom, why those faces?"

"Don't you look at me with those suspicious eyes. Who do you think you are, a veteran merchant?"

"Excuse me, I may not be a veteran, true, but I am literally a merchant!"

"Come on, don't yell at him. We're both relieved to know that you've grown into such a splendid, hardworking man. Even if you strayed from your path as a trader."

"Uuugh…"

To see Otto blushing and gritting his teeth was a fresh experience for Emilia.

She was used to hearing him raise his voice to complain, but him doing it with his parents had a different air to it. Whenever he talked to Subaru or Garfiel, his attitude was different, maybe simpler. Or more precisely:

"It seems like, grow as they may, kids will forever be kids in front of their pareeents."

"Ah, yes. That's sooo close to what I was thinking."

In response to her companion's words, Emilia clapped, and her lips broke into a smile. Frustration became even more evident on Otto's countenance, whereas joyful smiles appeared on his parents'.

Suddenly, Emilia found herself fond of Otto's family.

Nevertheless…

“It was pleasant to chat with you, but, to be honest, we have not come here with your son only to greet youuu. Would you mind if we made one slightly complicated requeeest?”

As soon as the companion, Roswaal L. Mathers, broached the topic, Mazeran Suwen, head of the Suwen Company, shifted his stance from a mere father’s to a merchant’s.

2

“Done, no way they’re gonna try ta kill Otto-bro again after how badly we scared ‘em off.”

“Or rather, after Ram talked them out of it with her eloquence.”

“Both Sister Ram and Garf did amazing back there.”

Petra delivered her report with childlike enthusiasm.

“I’m glad,” said Emilia, relieved.

They were in a room of the Suwen family’s house, which had been allotted for the guests to stay. Emilia received the report from her other three companions, who had been absent during the discussion with the Suwens.

Ram, Garfiel, and Petra had been entrusted to complete a certain task in the Commercial City Piqtat. And that was…

“Hah! I can’t believe I was forced to give closure to Otto’s woman issues.”

“Hearing that ain’t gonna help Otto-bro get over it, tho. I mean, it ain’t really his fault… Maybe it’s just his luck, or tha way he talks or acts, I dunno.”

“You make it sound like he deserved it…”

With an awkward smile, Petra listened to Garfiel defending the subject of Ram’s displeasure while trying to soothe her.

Even so, the story probably matched what Emilia had heard, thus, out of the two, she agreed with Garfiel the most. She did not believe that Otto was to blame.

“So, that woman, who’s acquainted with Otto, was engaged to many men, and got angry when Otto exposed her secret… Am I right?”

“… That’s more or less the gist of it. Still, I’m sure there was a better way to fix things, so Otto should’ve thought better of it before angering her to the point she hired an assassin.”

“An assassin…”

Holding her own elbows, Ram uttered an answer that made Emilia’s shoulders quiver.

That woman and the assassin were the reason that Otto had been, heretofore, unable to return to his hometown. In fact, his recent visit was still being kept secret.

However…

“It’s all solved now! Master’s name sure came in handy.”

“Roswaal’s name? Oh, yes, since he’s important in this kingdom.”

“Yes, exactly. If he’s always going to be bringing problems, then he might as well lend us his name for a good cause.”

Petra declared so, standing proud and dignified, a great display of fortitude. Emilia could only marvel at how dependable the girl had grown.

Petra’s collaboration was also very valuable for their plan to rescue Subaru.

“Really, thank you sooo much, Petra.”

“Wh-What brought that on, Lady Emilia? You don’t need to…”

“But I want to say it. Not only to you, but to Ram and Garfiel too. I want to thank all of you."

Although Petra was confused to see Emilia bowing before her, Emilia shook her head sideways and then bowed again before Ram and Garfiel.

"If it weren't for all the help you've given me, I'd probably have tripped midway and never found the strength to stand up again. That's why…"

"You wish to thank us? It might be a little too soon for that," said Ram, interrupting Emilia's speech and narrowing her pink eyes.

Emilia raised her eyebrows at the stiffness in that voice.

"Well," Garfiel clicked his fangs, "I can't blame Lady Emilia for those feelings. If Otto-bro's family's supportin' us, we'll have a method ta get ta tha empire and find tha Captain. And we're just one step away from that."

"You're right, but…"

"Still, Ram may be cold, but she ain't lying. Let's keep our emotions at bay for a while, or we might end up like 'Tarngen the Hasty.' A'ight?"

Garfiel flashed his fangs with a smile, and then looked alternately at Emilia and Ram. Being the recipient of his gaze, Ram breathed out a small sigh.

"Are you trying to flatter both Ram and Lady Emilia? How impudent. Disgusting."

"Hey, I was just tryin' ta give ya a power-up!"

"'Power-up'… So you've caught the Barusu syndrome. My condolences, get well soon."

"Grrr…"

Ram's ruthless attack robbed Garfiel of all drive. Seeing the pitiful scene, Emilia tried to find the words to comfort Garfiel.

"It's fine, Sis, let them be."

"Petra… But I feel bad for Garfiel, you know?"

"Garf likes it when Sister Ram treats him that way. In fact, it'd be even worse for him if you meddled… I want to see Subaru again."

"… Hm, I hope we do, too."

Petra whispered as she pulled Emilia's sleeve and contemplated Ram and Garfiel. When she noticed the weak, childish facet that the girl, despite being brilliantly mature, was showing, Emilia nodded in silence.

The two yearned equally to see Subaru return safe and as soon as possible.

However…

"… Though, I think your yearning might be a bit different from mine, Sis."

"Huh?! Petra, what do you mean?!"

And once again, the mischievous side that Petra hid manifested itself to torment Emilia without any mercy.

3

"If I am correct, Master and his colleagues are still busy negotiating with Mister Otto's parents."

"Yes, probably. I hope they can reach an agreement soon, though…"

After leaving the lively room where Petra's group sojourned, Emilia entered another one.

Upon arriving at the calm place, she encountered Frederica, who kept her maid uniform despite the trip, and…

"Is Beatrice still resting?"

“Correct. She has not stopped doing so ever since we arrived. According to her, that prevents the excessive use of mana.”

“Yes. She’s in… ‘battery saver mode,’ was it?”

Emilia turned to look at the bed at the back of the room, where Beatrice slept. The girl had been lying there, her eyelids closed and fringed by long lashes, during most of the day, including the journey to Piqtat.

However, she was not merely sleepy…

“Miss Beatrice is meant to stay in repose until she can rejoin Mister Subaru.”

“Of course, I know. I tried asking my lesser spirits, and Roswaal did some research of his own too, but, at the end of the day, we can’t do much about it without Subaru.”

The contract between a spirit and its user allowed them to exchange mana via their gates.

Due to her unique origins, Beatrice’s only source of mana to preserve herself was her contractor, Subaru. Therefore, the longer their estrangement grew, the more alarming it became.

As her mana deficit worsened, Beatrice slept in an attempt to combat exhaustion.

Were it possible to find a replacement for her, they would be very willing to search for one, but…

“Lady Emilia, Miss Beatrice would have trouble resting if she were to see you grieving.”

“… Well, you’re right. Beatrice is sooo kind, after all.”

Since it was impossible, they could not afford to lose both Emilia and Beatrice to debility. And if Emilia had to be the one who kept her spirit, she would.

“Ah, by the way, Petra and the others came back a while ago; did you go greet them?”

“Indeed, I greeted them as soon as they returned. I must admit that, when I heard that Petra would be accompanying you, I became concerned that she would act imprudently…”

“She said Roswaal’s name came in handy…”

“I heard so too. Oh, that girl… However, now I realize that Ram would have probably been incapable of using Master’s name in that way, thus Petra was the most qualified for the job. Besides, if Garf had lost his patience, he could have resorted to violence, spoiling the progress of your negotiations entirely.”

“Hehe… Come on, Garfiel isn’t that big of a hothead.”

Perhaps due to their closeness as siblings, Frederica assessed Garfiel in a loving yet stern manner. Since Garfiel was still fifteen years old despite his looks, it was natural, to a certain extent, for her to treat him like a child.

Nevertheless, Petra and Garfiel’s age gap was merely of two years.

“Every youngster looks sooo childish to people like Beatrice and me.”

“… Well, Lady Emilia, I beg to differ in regard to that matter. You cannot determine who is an adult and who is a child based only on ages.”

“…? What do you…?”

When Emilia tried to inquire more about Frederica’s thoughts, she heard something.

“Be quiet, I’m trying to sleep, in fact.”

“Ah!” exclaimed Emilia, putting a hand to her mouth, as soon as she heard that sleepy voice.

Then she walked closer towards the bed and found the source.

"I'm sorry, Beatrice. Did we wake you up?"

"Sure did, I suppose… You'd better not make Betty's efforts go to waste, in fact."

"My apologies, Miss Beatrice. I should have known better…"

Frederica begged for pardon with a flush on her cheeks.

"Fine, but be more careful, I suppose," replied Beatrice from her bed, and after a blink from her round eyes, she continued, "You're supposed to be discussing things at Otto's home, in fact."

"Yes, we're already there. Roswaal and Otto are doing the talking for us right now."

"… I'm sure Roswaal will find a way to win them over, I suppose. That man can't afford to lose Subaru, after all, in fact. But…"

"I know, the empire is way too big. That's why Anastasia will be helping us too."

Even if Emilia's group managed to arrive in the Empire of Vollachia, Beatrice's misgivings would not be easily dispelled.

They would need to track Subaru's movements, and by extension Rem's, in an empire of expanse much vaster than the Kingdom of Lugunica. That was no ordinary chore.

Therefore, Anastasia had promised to provide them with her collaboration throughout the search for Subaru.

While Emilia intended to enter the empire through Piqtat, the other group contrived to access Vollachia via the city-state of Kararagi.

"I don't want to cause sooo many inconveniences for Anastasia, though…"

"But it's for Subaru, I suppose."

"Yes. Once we get Subaru back, let's go thank them for everything."

Once everything was over, she planned to go express her gratitude with Subaru safe by her side.

And to see that happen tomorrow, she needed to borrow many others' strength and keep running with all her might today.

"Miss Beatrice, if you stay awake…"

"I'm done, in fact… Now, let me go dream of Subaru for a while, I suppose."

"Hm, rest well. Say hi to Subaru for me."

"Sure, in fact," said Beatrice, with her eyes shut, as her lips relaxed.

Petting the girl's forehead, Emilia nodded at Frederica, and so the two exited the room.

Then, leaning her back against the closed door, Emilia shut her amethyst eyes tightly.

"Wait for us, Subaru… We're all coming to see you soon."

And although Subaru was nowhere to be seen, she dedicated those words to him, making it clear that she would not stop until she fulfilled her fervent desire to have him again in the faction where he belonged.

END

Comic Alive Collection 7:

Lugunican Papers
(CA)
(Edited Machine Translation)

1

???: “Shorty! Shorty Megan!”

A man rushes down the hallway, shouting loudly. He is a man who makes a loud, booming sound in the hallway. He walked forward without paying any attention to the people around him, and opened the door of the room he wanted to go to with the momentum of almost breaking through the wall.

???: “Shorty Megan! There you are!”

Shorty: “Huh? Yes, yes, yes, yes, yes, I’m here, I’m here, and I’m alive and well!”

The door was opened and in the room, a small boy literally jumped up at the sound of the man’s voice. He was wearing a large round hat that covered his head completely, and his bangs hid both his eyes. He was dressed in a pair of worn out work clothes and shoes whose only selling point was their sturdiness, and it was obvious at a glance that he had just worn them out.

This is not because of a personal sense of beauty or a desire to be unique and not conform to the trends of the world, but because of a lack of interest, wealth, and time.

This was evident in the fact that he didn’t have a home, but slept in his office, which was piled high with papers and other materials. The boy, Shorty Megan, wiped the edge of his mouth with a cloth, hiding the traces of a nap, and looked up at the man who appeared in the room, his eyes hidden by his bangs.

Shorty: “Mo, Mo, Mo, Editor-in-chief Morgan? What are you doing here?”

Morgan: “Yes, of course! I’m Morgan Frantz, the editor-in-chief of this “Dragon Nation Newsletter” And Shorty, you’re my man, my reporter, my hands and feet. Which one is it?!”

Shorty: “Of course, Your man, your reporter, and all of your limbs.”

Morgan: “Of course you are! But! You’re a little toe at best! If you’re going to write an article like that, I’m not going to trust you with the role of the other toes!”

It was Shorty’s boss, editor-in-chief Morgan Frantz, who was getting angry, his distinctive eagle nose, his face turning red. He is responsible for the publication of a newspaper that circulates within the Kingdom of Lugnica, the “Dragon Nation Newsletter” He is also a fearless worker who knows nothing about compromise. The editor-in-chief, who is not only tall but also loud and brash, is a genuine news addict who keeps a close eye on all the strange happenings in the kingdom and drools over the everyday events.

There’s only one reason why the news-addicted editor-in-chief went to the trouble of visiting Shorty, a small-time reporter. It means he saw Shorty’s article. The fact that he rushed here as soon as he saw the article only meant…

Shorty: “Yes, sir! I’m honored by your praise!”

Morgan: “Compliment why would I give you one? Look at my face! Look at my face! 70% or even 80% of my eagle nose is red. That’s the measure of my anger!”

Shorty: “Chief! It is 100% bright red!”

Morgan: “If that’s the case, I guess I’m angrier than I thought with this article!”

Barking, a dark red faced Morgan throws a stack of papers in his hand at Shorty. It hit him in the chest and fell to the floor. It was an article that Shorty had stayed up writing all night. It was a labor of his blood and tears, and this is how he treated it. In other words…

Shorty: “You want me to fix it?”

Morgan: “Oh, you idiot! All rejected! What are you getting a little greedy about? First of all, who’s going to be excited by the idea of a massive rat infestation underneath the Royal capital? I was wondering if there would be any surprises along the way, but then again, people’s words suck!”

Shorty: “Check for a follow-up report, go see it see for yourself…”

Morgan: “Shut up! Don’t lead the curious reader into the dangerous underground! Just call the guards and have them exterminate it! What if some readers die or get sick from challenging the big rats?”

Shorty: “In this case, is it a liability issue?”

Morgan: “Idiot! The problem is that the number of subscribers to the Dragon Nation Newsletter is decreasing.”

Shorty picks up the article on the floor, and Morgan sticks his finger in his nose. Shorty liked Morgan’s ideas, even though they were based on values that could only be described as press addiction. This was because Shorty was also a news addict. That’s why this article was also the result of his own hands-on research.

Shorty: “It was a great piece of work that interviewed people around the favelas and captured the details of the swarms of large rats that were breeding in large numbers under the royal capital. And now it’s all been rejected?”

Morgan: “Of course! Back straight and chin up! That is the motto of Dragon Nation Newsletter!”

Shorty: “We don’t publish anything that doesn’t make your heart tremble!”

Morgan: “That’s all there is to it!”

In front of Shorty, who was standing upright, Morgan spat in front of him and told him off. Shorty gritted his teeth in frustration as he got a large spray of spit in his face. Shorty wanted to argue. But nothing came to mind. In fact, Shorty didn’t have an answer to how the coverage of the great rat pack would shake the reader’s heart.

Shorty: “But once you start something, you feel like you’re losing money if you stop halfway…!”

Morgan: “I’ve always bought your resilience, but this time it’s been shown in a bad way. Speaking of bad things, I have the same impression about the drawing in this article!”

Shorty: “What? You can’t even draw? Aren’t the drawings really good?”

Morgan: “It’s too well drawn! It’s like a swarm of… rats that’s about to move!”

Snatching the article out of Shorty’s hands, Morgan opens the press picture in question wide. In front of Shorty’s eyes, a horde of rats… A realistic drawing of a horde of rats came into view. It was so close to the real thing that you could almost smell the animal scent of the rats in the air. Rather, Shorty was overcome with the memory and fear of an actual underground encounter with a horde of rats, a sensation that was both visually and olfactorily ironed out.

Shorty: “Uhhgg…”

Morgan: “Don’t throw up on your own article! But a lot of readers are going to have the same reaction to your article, you know? It’s Lulu Lara who drew this picture! didn’t She!”

Shorty: “If it was her…”

Shorty’s eyes wandered to the corner of the room as he fought back nausea. Following the movement of his eyes, “Yeah?” Morgan’s eyes widen.

In the middle of a mountain range lined with piles of papers, there was a shadow that was different from the piles of papers… There was a drawing book on her lap, and a young girl was absently working with a brush.

Shorty: Oh?! There you are, Lulu Lara!

Lulu Lara: “Under here…”

Shorty: “What are you doing in this messy room? It’s… or rather, it stinks! It stinks! You haven’t bathed since you got back from the underground, have you? Oh, no, no, no, no, no, no!”

The girl, Lulu Lara, glances at Morgan, who is picking his eagle nose and fighting the feeling of vomiting, and is silent. However, unlike her blank expression, her hand never stops drawing. That was her role as a news painter for the articles of the “Dragon Nation Newsletter”.

Nevertheless—

Morgan: “She’ s a real treasure! With her ability to depict reality as if you were really there, she can make even the most outlandish events convincing with her paintings. I’m sure you’re not embarrassed to have her draw a horde of rats, Shorty…!. Shorty?”

Shorty: “H… Here it is”

Shorty, who was buried upside down in a pile of papers away from Morgan, who was holding his head, answered. It was the result of Morgan being thrown off by Lulu Lara’s presence. He grabbed one of Shorty’s legs and said, “What are you kidding me? Morgan pulled the boy’s small frame out of the pile of materials. So Shorty, hanging upside down by one leg, smiled fondly, not knowing what to say.

He smiled and …

Morgan: “Don’t look so glum, Shorty.”

Shorty: “Uh…”

Morgan: “We need to shake the reader’s emotions, their true emotions. How can we do that if we can’t even be honest about our own feelings, I know you don’t!”

Morgan’s hand is quickly removed from his leg and Shorty falls headfirst to the floor, but he barks with exaggerated emotion, paying no attention to his subordinate’s state of agony.

Morgan: “Shorty! What in the world did you join the Dragon Nation

Newsletter for? Was it to chase a rat's tail and carve wrinkles between the brows of the subscribers of the Royal capital? What do you think?"

Shorty: "No, That's not true!"

Morgan's pitying words made Shorty bite back hard. Forgetting the pain in his head, he stood up and glared at his boss, who was forty centimeters taller than him. It was convenient that Shorty was hanging upside down and his head was bleeding. Thanks to this, Shorty could say what he wanted to say without shrinking his stomach, which usually shrinks when dealing with the editor-in-chief. So, if you ask me why I joined the Dragon Nation Newsletter…

Shorty: "I want to write articles that will change people's minds… and the world! I didn't become a reporter to torment people who hate rats!"

Morgan: "What would you do if it were the case! How can you waste Lulu Lara's valuable time and talent, and do it while you're napping in a pile of documents?"

Shorty: "If that was the… then… then…!"

Shorty clenched his teeth at his boss's words from above and let his gaze wander. In the corner of the room, Lulu Lara is still painting in the book on her lap. Her partner, Shorty, is the only one who knows how good she is at painting. Shorty knows her best, and Morgan is right in pointing out that he's giving her a job she doesn't deserve. Above all, Shorty himself was aware that his work was not commensurate with his passion.

"…"

Shorty choked up as he felt such a surge of passion. Out of the corner of his eye, he saw an article on the wall of his office. The article was not written by Shorty, but it was pasted on the wall as if it were an important piece of paper or a memorial, because the content of the article was exactly what Shorty had envisioned as a model of a "world-changing article." And it is Shorty's deepest desire to write such an article…

Shorty: “The Royal Selection…”

Morgan: “What?”

Morgan’s one eyebrow twitched as he heard Shorty’s murmur. Shorty was able to make out a change in the sound mixed in with Morgan’s muttering. To shake the heart of the editor-in-chief, to be that “first reader” who sees the article before anyone else.

Shorty: “I’m going to interview the candidates for the Royal Selection…! This is the biggest concern of the people of the kingdom, the candidates for the Royal Selection that will shake the kingdom, listen to their real voices and get to know their true selves!”

“…”

Shorty: “Wh… What do you think?”

Shorty, who had chosen his words with vigor, was anxious about Morgan’s reaction to his silence. However, despite Shorty’s uneasiness, Morgan’s mouth twisted into a wide smile after a few moments of silence.

Morgan: “Nice! Good, Shorty! That’s what I’m talking about!”

Shorty: “Gyaah!, My shoulder!”

A large hand grabbed his shoulder, and Shorty screamed in pain as his bones creaked. But Morgan’s eyes lit up like a child’s, ignoring Shorty’s screams.

Morgan: “The biggest concern of the people, the Royal Selection! It’s been a few months since the start of the selection was announced, and at first everyone was talking about it, but gradually the buzz had faded away. Let’s try to turn the people’s attention back to the Royal Selection by ourselves… Not bad! Not bad at all!”

Shorty: “Oh, thank you!”

Morgan: “Shut up, you idiot! You haven’t done anything yet! Don’t be happy!”

Shorty: “Not at all, no.”

Shorty thought he was being praised, but then he got angry, and his emotions almost made his eyes roll. But Morgan laughed through his teeth and patted Shorty’s aching shoulder with his big palm. Then he sticks his finger in Shorty’s teary eyes and says, “Look!” spitting at him.

Morgan: “Now that you’ve decided that, hurry up, Shorty! Don’t let anyone else get the better of you! Get an interview with the candidates for the Royal Selection, and do whatever it takes to get the story out!”

Shorty: “I got it!”

Morgan: “In the meantime, have that rat article replaced with something else! Give it top priority!”

That was all he said, and Morgan grabbed the big rat article and ran furiously out of the room. The wind he created sent the papers in the room soaring, and Shorty’s long bangs were also shaken. But in the room after the storm had passed, Shorty clenched his fists in passion. He felt that he had spoken out of momentum, but the passion in his heart was still real.

Shorty: I’m gonna do it, I’m gonna do it, Shorty Megan! I’m going to change the world! Lulu Lara, you’re gonna be busy!

“…”

Lulu Lara: “Huh? Me?”

As Shorty turned around with a puffed up nose, Lulu Lara tore off a page from her drawing book and handed it to him. Shorty took it and looked at the drawing. Shorty’s nose was bleeding with excitement…

Shorty: “No, at least say it out loud!”

Shorty carefully folded the picture and put it in his pocket. Then he grabbed his interviewing gear and was ready to hit the road on his next reporting trip.

Shorty: “I’ve been told that after the big rat, the next candidate for king is going to be a tough nut to crack, but I’m going to do whatever I can to make this interview a success! Let’s go, Lulu Lara!”

Lulu Lara: “See ya…”

Shorty: “Don’t just say goodbye, you’re coming too!”

Shorty carries Lulu Lara, who has curled up. Together, they carry her bag of drawing tools in front of their stomachs, and preparations for departure are complete. Shorty sluggishly leaves the headquarters of the “Dragon Nation Newsletter” with Lulu Lara.

Lulu Lara: “…Slow”

Shorty: “I’m not slowing down! I’ve heard that the candidates are beautiful, so I’m sure your creative juices will be flowing! It’s going to be a blast!”

Shorty’s adventure began, calling desperately to his apathetic partner. His steps were heavy, his partner was lethargic, but Shorty’s eyes were shining. It’s a good day to start writing an article that will change the world.

Shorty: “I see it, Lulu Lara… the blue sky is blessing our way forward!”

Lulu Lara: “Hm, it’s cloudy…”

Shorty: “Look with your heart’s eye!”

Dragon Nation Newsletter is known as a small newspaper in the Kingdom of Lugnica. The limited pages of the newspaper are filled with the emotions of joy, sorrow, anger, and sadness that occurred in Lugnica. It could be the happy news of a peaceful day, or it could be the painful and sad news of someone’s life lost somewhere else. However, no matter what kind of emotions it provokes, there is a core to the Dragon Nation Newsletter that can never be shaken. And that is…

Shorty: “We don’t publish articles that don’t shake us to the core! That’s our company motto, Lulu Lara.”

Lulu Lara: “Blub… Blub”

Shorty: “Will you stop blowing bubbles and listen to me? I know it’s a habit of yours, but you’re not supposed to do that in any of the places we’re covering.”

Shorty raises his fist and expresses his enthusiasm, while in front of him, Lulu Lara’s face is devoid of motivation. They are in the midst of discussing their interview plans for the future, having left the office and having dinner in the commoner’s quarter of the royal capital. However, Shorty is basically the one who makes all the plans and gives all the explanations, while Lulu Lara just gives inappropriate advice. Anyway…

Shorty: “We’re going to be going around to the candidates who are participating in the selection. No matter, how much Lulu Lara knows about the Royal Selection, right?”

Lulu Lara: “…?”

Shorty: “You look like you don’t know what you’re doing! I’m scared! I’m afraid of your lack of interest in the public, even though you’re involved with a newspaper! The way you’re painting my face is also scary!”

With a quick movement, she drew a picture of Shorty’s pale face in her drawing book. As you can see, Lulu Lara is a genuine weirdo who draws news pictures for the press for a living, and has no interest in any other work. However, her drawing ability is a gift that no one else can imitate, and she is a very important and valued partner.

Shorty: “I’m going to tell you, my valued partner, about the subject of our upcoming interview. You can dismiss it as just an explanation to help me organize my thoughts.”

Lulu Lara: “Aye…”

For the time being, Shorty coughed a little, glad that he had gotten some feedback. Then he began to explain to Lulu Lara about the Royal Selection and the participants.

Shorty: “First of all, the selection of the king is a ceremony to determine the next ruler, which was proclaimed in the royal castle about six months ago. Three years from now, the king will be chosen from among the five selected candidates… So now we’re in the middle of a competition to see who will be the king.”

The story of the king and his bloodline all falling ill at the same time is probably one of the hardest disasters to shake in the Kingdom of Lugnica in recent years. As a result, the kingdom is now without a king, and the Council of Sages is running the affairs of state instead. However, this is still an unhealthy situation. In order to solve this problem…

Shorty: “It’s a throne selection competition, or the Royal Selection for short. The five candidates for the throne are Duchess Crusch Karsten, Chairman Anastasia Hoshin, Baroness Priscilla Barielle, Felt-sama and Emilia-sama.”

Lulu Lara: “Is that big?”

Shorty: “No, it’s a small number of people, considering the deadline… We don’t know how many candidates will be left on the day the Royal Selection is decided.”

Lulu Lara tilted her head and didn’t seem to understand the true meaning of Shorty’s words. But Shorty didn’t intend to explain any further. Lulu Lara doesn’t need to know. The possibility of a dark struggle taking place behind the glamorous stage of the royal selection, or even the circumstances of an assassination battle between candidates.

Shorty: “I mean, you can’t call yourself a candidate for the Royal Selection if you’re not prepared. In other words, all five of the selected candidates must be prepared for anything.”

The candidates are prepared to fight a bloody and dark battle to be elected king, and all of them are willing to use intrigue and force to compete for the throne, so they must have extreme humanity.

Shorty: “Besides, all of them are women… In this case, I should say heroines. Crusch-sama known as “Valkyrie”, Anastasia-sama has risen through the ranks of the Kararagi City States… And Felt-sama who I heard ruled the favelas, most importantly, I heard that she has the Sword Saint with her.”

Lulu Lara: “Mean… “Knight of Knights”?”

Shorty: “That’s right… Oh, and by the way, the Sir Reinhard was painted by Lulu Lara before.”

Lulu Lara’s reaction reminded Shorty of one of her previous paintings. She happened to run into the “Sword Saint” while walking around the capital on her day off, and he generously agreed to Lulu Lara’s request to use him as a model. In fact, Lulu Lara seemed to be very enthusiastic about it, and the finished picture was very good. However, Lulu Lara lost interest in the painting after she finished it, so Shorty saved all of her drawings. I’m sure she has that one in a booklet at work. Anyway…

Shorty: “If that knight Reinhardt pledges his allegiance to her, then Felt-sama must be an extraordinary person, and…”

Lulu Lara: “And…?”

Shorty: “Emilia…Sama…”

A feeling of dread envelops Shorty’s entire body as he tries to name the next candidate. The blood drained from his face, and Shorty clutched his thin shoulders in a squirming grip. Lulu Lara looked at him strangely, but she would have been just as frightened if she understood why. Emilia, one of the candidates for the royal selection, is a half-elf with silver hair and purple-blue eyes, and she resembles the “Witch of Envy” who once drove the world to the brink of destruction. She is said to be a devilish being, clad in a cold air that freezes everything and accompanied by a terrifyingly ferocious spirit. Rumor has it that she has permanently frozen the northern lands of the kingdom and enjoys ruining the lives of those around her by playfully inviting snowstorms. Of course, she is not the “Witch of Envy” herself… but she is dangerous enough to be rumored to be the second coming of the “Witch of Envy”.

“…”

Swallowing, Shorty scolded himself for being scared. In the first place, other reporters besides Shorty must have thought of taking on the same subject. However, he had never succeeded in interviewing all of the candidates for the Royal Selection. The most important reason for this was the existence of the fifth candidate, Emilia. If he was going to call this an interview with the candidates for the Royal Selection, we naturally need to hear from all five of them. However, everyone was hesitant to interview Emilia. Shorty, too, had felt like he was about to falter many times after setting his goal for the interview because of his fear of Emilia. But…

“…”

Lulu Lara is looking at Shorty’s frightened face… No, Lulu Lara saw Shorty’s face turn pale and began to run her brush through her drawing book. It’s drawn. It doesn’t help, and I can’t hide my surprise that she didn’t listen to my explanation at all, but it still gave Shorty a chance to breathe.

Shorty: “Change the world…”

Shorty clenched his teeth together as he remembered what Morgan had said to him. Shorty won’t lie about those words. Shorty’s vow, his dream, his mission, there are many ways to say it, but they all meant the same thing to Shorty.

Shorty: “This is no time to be scared. I’ll do it, Lulu Lara. I’m going to do my job.”

Lulu Lara: “And, That one…? “

Shorty: “Oh, yeah. Oh, yeah, that’s right, that’s right, I know.”

At the same time as Shorty’s decision, Lulu Lara, who had finished drawing a pale Shorty, handed him the painting. Laughing at his own shameful self, Shorty carefully folds up the picture and puts it in his bag, and then remembers Lulu Lara's question, the last one.

Shorty: "The last one is Baroness Barielle, or Priscilla-sama, who has had so many unfortunate marriages that she is known as the "The Bloody Bride". She is still young and beautiful, and as a result she has been married many times, but all of them ended in tragic love… She's a tragic woman."

Lulu Lara: "Tragedy…"

Shorty: "She has a good reputation in her territory, and people seem to love her as the "Sun Princess". I guess she has a warm charm that makes people around her smile positively."

From the standpoint of having heard various previous stories, Priscilla Barielle is the one whose situation Shorty would personally like to support the most. A woman who is unfortunate enough to have to overcome the absurdity of her circumstances to achieve glory. It is a heroic tale and a story of success that will surely be exciting for everyone.

Shorty: "Whoa, whoa, not good. I have to be impartial. Above all, it would be disrespectful to the person who agreed to be interviewed in the first place."

Lulu Lara: "Other person…?"

Shorty: "Just as well, since she' s active in the Royal Capital."

As he said this, Shorty gulped down a glass of water from the table, wiped his mouth with his sleeve, and looked behind him toward the noble district. In the center of the royal capital, in a district of nobles located in the vicinity of the royal castle, is the residence of the subject of this interview, a building that stands out from the rest. The person who is the most important figure in the kingdom, and is considered to be the most powerful person in the current Royal Selection…

Shorty: "Duchess Crusch Karsten…"

Lulu Lara: "Duchess…"

Shorty: “To be honest, I was the one who thought it would be the most difficult, if not the most difficult emotionally. First of all, I didn’t think she would accept my request for an interview.”

After all, she was the most prestigious woman in the kingdom. Shorty was certain that he would be turned away from an interview because he was a commoner, or even it was for a newspaper that was intended to be read by the masses. In that case, Shorty was going to ask for an interview dozens or hundreds of times and wait for them to lose their patience.

Shorty: “Should I think of it as a good start, or should I think of it of be prepared to face my biggest obstacle?”

Lulu Lara: “…?”

Shorty: “Crusch-sama is as martial as a woman can be. She made her father step down when he didn’t need to retire yet, and she’s ambitious.”

Otherwise, she would not be able to serve as a duchess who is called by the title of “Valkyrie”. Perhaps the offer of an interview was just an excuse to take a rude shot at a reporter from a newspaper. In that case, Shorty would be a pathetic sacrifice.

Shorty: “Relax, Shorty Megan. “Relax, Shorty Megan, even if you fall short of your ambition, I fought for you. That’s what’s most important…!”

Stomping on his frightened heart, Shorty stood up, kicking his chair. He then takes Lulu Lara’s hand, who is eating a piece of bread, and sets off. The first thing he wants to do is to uncover the true character of Crusch Karsten, the candidate for the Royal Selection. Even if the first one is the last one to be interviewed, I’m determined to do so. However, as it turned out, Shorty’s grim determination was unfounded. The reason why the Duchess Crusch Karsten was interviewed by the “Dragon Nation Newsletter” was not because of any hostility towards the recent reporters or any desire to make an example of the industry. On the contrary…

Crusch: “So, Shorty-san and Lulu Lara-san have been working together for two years, and even though you’re young, you’re doing a great job.”

Shorty: “Um, yes, when you put it that way, ha ha ha…!”

Shorty, blushing at the unexpected praise, Shorty pats his head on the top of his hat. In response to Shorty’s reaction, a green-haired beauty with a frighteningly flattering gesture smiled elegantly as she put her hand over her mouth and said, “Oh”.

“…”

Despite the casual gesture, Shorty couldn’t help but admire the woman. As he admired her, Shorty was aware that he was being swallowed up by the atmosphere of the place… or rather, the other person’s… and he desperately wanted to do something about it. Now, Shorty is in a large mansion that makes your mouth hang open and look around, in a large, spacious parlor, with his butt on an overly soft sofa.

His buttocks are on a sofa that is far too soft. In front of him is a beautiful woman who looks like a heavenly maiden, and he feels vague about whether he is dreaming or not. Yes, a heavenly maiden, that’s exactly how Shorty would describe her. Her long, luxuriant green hair hung loosely down her back, and her feminine, undulating body was wrapped in a graceful dress. The stole that softly adorned her slender shoulders must have been well-liked by such a worthy owner. This is how beautiful Duchess Crusch Karsten is.

Lulu Lara: “Tsu…”

Crusch: “Um, Is the lady next to you, Lulu Lara-san okay?”

Shorty: “I’m sorry to have caused you concern, yes. But this is her normal behavior, so if you could please forgive me…”

Shorty is not in a normal state of mind when Crusch tilts her head and pays attention to him. But Lulu Lara, who was running her paintbrush next to him, was in a different state of mind. However, Shorty couldn’t blame Lulu Lara for getting lost in it. The woman, Crusch Karsten, was a beauty beyond compare. Lulu Lara’s desire to paint something that moves her as much as the aspirations of the “Dragon Nation Newsletter” does not even give her the option of stopping the movement of her paintbrush. And then…

Lulu Lara: “kindly…”

Crusch: “Well, can I have it? This is… me, isn’t it”

When Lulu Lara took the picture, Crusch raised her eyes. If you take a look at it, you will see that it is a picture of Crusch, perfectly depicted in Shorty’s eyes. Lulu Lara’s ability to portray what is right in front of her eyes in a realistic manner was demonstrated without regret, and it was finished as a supreme piece of art. Don’t get me wrong, it was as good as Shorty would hope for.

Shorty: “I’d like to hang it in my room…”

Shorty accidentally muttered that to himself. Naturally, Shorty’s soliloquy was heard, and Crusch asked, “Huh?”, Shorty immediately searched for words to make up for his mistake.

Shorty: “Oh, no, I didn’t accidentally mean… I said I wanted to decorate, not…”

Crusch: “Hmm, yes, I understand. She did such a good job of drawing it, Ferri-chan would want to hang it in their room also.”

Shorty: “Yes, I know… Are you sure it was okay?”

Shorty’s eyes widened as he nodded his head in affirmation of his true feelings. Then a person who whispered a devilish laugh and sat down next to Crusch. The new girl who joined the scene was also a terrific looking person. If the description for Crusch was beautiful, the description for this girl would be dainty. The way she gestures, the way she looks at me, there’s a sophisticated charm to every aspect Shorty couldn’t take his eyes off her. But don’t underestimate Shorty, he is a reporter for a newspaper. He has already found out exactly who this girl-like person is.

Shorty: “You’re the knight, Felix Argyle-dono, aren’t you?”

That is right, I don't like the name Felix. It isn't cute. I prefer if you call me Ferris instead but you're welcome to call me Ferri-chan.

Shorty: "Hmm, I'll go with Ferris-dono then."

Felix: "Hehe, How cuute."

Felix… no, Ferris… smiles coyly as he puts a finger to his lips. His mischievous expression and gestures are deceiving, but he is a man. Crusch Karsten, a candidate for the royal selection, and Ferris, one of her knights. The two people in front of them, who were in a master-servant relationship, were the subjects of Shorty and his team's interview this time.

Crusch: "Ferris, I don't want you to tease the two reporters too much."

Felix: "Yesss, I'm sorry-nya, Crusch-sama. But it's really well drawn. Crusch-sama, did you take the time to model yourself to her?"

Crusch: "When you say that, it makes me feel like I've done something embarrassing… No, I didn't. I'm sure she's very good at observing things."

While appeasing Ferris' attitude, Crusch's amber eyes look at Lulu Lara. Her eyes are not only beautiful, but they are also accurate in their assessment of Lulu Lara. In fact, her eyes are very special, and that's why she can draw with such great skill. However, I can't make Lulu Lara do all the work. Shorty has a role to play.

Shorty: "So, now that we have the honorable candidate for the Royal Selection, Crusch-sama, and her first knight, Ferris-dono, here, may I ask you a few questions for our interview?"

Crusch: "Yes, I am honored that you have taken the trouble to listen to my story. I don't know if I can live up to your expectations, but I would appreciate it."

Shorty: "Ahh"

Crusch bowed with a refined posture to Shorty, who chose his words carefully and asked a question. The beautiful woman was so impressive that even her bow was different from that of an ordinary person, but more than that, a sense of fear struck Shorty's whole body.

Felix: "Crusch-sama, you're scaring Reporter-Kyun. Please be more gentle with him."

Crusch: "It's a difficult thing to sit down and relax. It's hard to be natural, isn't it?"

Felix: "Mmm, it's not exactly the same, but I guess that's okay. If Reporter-Kyun does not take a tougher stance, I'll be in trouble."

Crusch and Shorty: "I, I understand…"

The two of them nodded in agreement as Ferris gave orders to both Crusch and Shorty. It seems that Ferris is the one who has the most authority in this place. In addition, the one who is most free is Lulu Lara, who now seems to be drawing a picture of Ferris.

Shorty: "Well then, Crusch-sama, you're the leading candidate for the Royal Selection, and it's been a few months since the selection began, so I was wondering if you could tell me how you're doing."

Crusch: "You're welcome to be more natural with me."

Shorty: "Yes, this is the best I can do for now…"

While watching the flustered Shorty, Crusch put her hand over her mouth and said, "Well". The gesture and the gentleness of her words and actions are the reason why Shorty is so nervous… It's very different from what I've heard. She is one called "Valkyrie," and her beauty and dignity are the best in the kingdom. But her reputation does not match the beauty in front of him. It was beautiful. There was not the slightest hint of the rudeness that Shorty had feared before the interview. In front of Shorty, who had this impression, Crusch pondered the content of the previous question, saying, "is that so," and after a moment of silence, she moved her lips.

Crusch: "I think it's a waste of time to say that I'm the best choice for king. At the very least, I have a lot to learn, and I'm not sure I'm fit to sit on the king’s throne.”

Felix: “Crusch-sama?”

Shorty: “Huh? What is that opinion, eh? You’re not going to give up, are you?”

Shorty couldn’t help but to raise his eyebrows when he heard Crusch’s unexpected self-assessment of her lack of confidence and unworthiness. Ferris was also very surprised. The first interview with a candidate for the Royal Selection has a surprising a turn of events. Crusch Karsten, the leading candidate for the royal selection, confided in the reporter that she was…

Crusch: “No, please don’t misunderstand me…”

However, despite the confusion of the reporter and his companion, Crusch quietly puffed out her chest. The calm tone of her voice and the look in her amber eyes made Shorty’s heart quiet down as if it had been hit by cold water. It was a feeling that surprised even him. But he couldn’t be surprised. Because, just as the confusion has subsided, so has the fascination with Crusch. It was the result of a kind of charisma that no one else could have.

Crusch: “I am still in the process of learning a lot… If there is one thing that gives me an edge over the other candidates, it’s my birth and family background. That is not enough to fulfill the responsibility of being the king. Therefore, I will continue to work hard.”

Felix: “Work hard…”

Crusch: “May this inexperienced body become a vessel for the duties of the king. And may my closest followers and vassals lend me the strength I still lack.”

Felix: “C… Crusch-sama…”

Gently, smiling, Crusch’s hand rested on the shoulder of Ferris next to her. Ferris’s eyes moistened and his voice trembled as he was thrilled by the touch of the hand. It’s not hard to imagine the happiness Ferris felt when he received such kind words from his trusted and beloved master. Shorty also couldn't help but feel his eyes burning.

Shorty: "…I think that's a very noble idea. So, can you tell me about the white whale? I heard that you accomplished the feat of defeating the white whale, in cooperation with the other candidates for the throne."

Crusch: "Oh, for that matter…"

Felix: "Nyafter all, we have an indispensable contributor to the defeat of the white whale! That Wilhelm Trias is here, you know!"

Ferris interrupted Crusch's reply and said so loudly. He stuck his finger in Shorty and Lulu Lara's faces and smiled at them as they rolled their eyes. However, although I was surprised, it was exactly what I wanted to hear.

Shorty: "So, I wanted to ask you about that too! You see, the two main characters mentioned in "Sword Demon Love Song" and the white whale have a strong connection…"

Felix: That's it! Hold on a second! I'll get you Wil-Jii right now!

Ferris, his eyes shining, jumped over the table and ran out of the room. It seems that he is going to be allowed to meet the "Sword Demon" in question, which makes Shorty nervous. Then, at the sight of Shorty, Crusch gave a small laugh.

Shorty: "Oh, no, I mean, I'm sorry! I know it's an interview with you Crusch-sama, but…"

Crusch: "No, no need to be sorry at all. Besides, if it's about my followers or subjects, I think it's synonymous with interviewing me. Wilhelm's story is quite moving."

Shorty: "Well, if you say so… Oh, in that case, just one more thing."

He asks Crusch to take consideration of his words, even though he expresses his brazenness. If Ferris wasn't around, he feels he would be able to hear the pure opinion of Crusch. A few months have passed since the start of the Royal Selection, and many things have happened that have caused a stir in the kingdom…

Shorty: “Which camp is Crusch-sama most interested in right now?”

Crusch: “That’s…”

The question caused Crusch to pause for a moment. However, the thought and hesitation was only for a moment, and the answer came quickly to her. However, even though she was talking about her adversaries, she kept a smile on her face. And then…

Crusch: “…I think Emilia-sama’s camp… deserves the most attention.”

She replied to his question.

3

Shorty: “No… It was a very friendly interview from start to finish, totally different from the previous reports…”

Shorty muttered languidly and tiredly as he left the Duchess’s villa in the Noble District after finishing his interview with Duchess Crusch Karsten. Rather than physical exhaustion, in this case I would say mental exhaustion. Although there was no hostility toward the reporters from the other newspapers, which was a concern at the beginning, the tension of talking to a person in a position of authority was always kept high. One of the main reasons for his exhaustion was that he was overwhelmed by the civility with which his hosts greeted him. However, Shorty thought that the results were worth the physical and mental exhaustion.

Shorty: “Ferris-dono called me in to listen, though I didn’t expect the length of Wilhelm-dono’s story…”

Shorty wanted to know about the defeat of the white whale, and Wilhelm, with the Crusch’s permission, he spoke very smoothly. However, Shorty was surprised to hear that most of the conversation was about his wife, the previous “Sword Saint” who had been defeated by the white whale and lost her life. It was an interesting story, but the content was 80% love talk.

Lulu Lara "…hk"

Back in the commoner's district, beside Shorty who is lying down with his legs stretched out on the grass-covered meadow, Lulu Lara, who is furiously working on her paintbrush, is blushing with excitement. Apparently, the interview with Crusch and Ferris had had quite a positive impact on her as well. Her appetite for painting knows no bounds, and she is already using up her new drawing pad. Shorty could understand Lulu Lara's excitement.

Shorty: "After all, there's a difference between what you actually see, hear, and talk about, and what you only hear and talk about."

If I were to analyze the reputation of the swordswoman, the masculine and ambitious duchess, Crusch, I would say that she is a talented woman with a family background, but with an aristocratic nature that is somewhat on the nose. However, such an impression was erased from Shorty's mind when he talked to her directly. Crusch was always soft-spoken, feminine, aware of her lack of education, and a likable hard worker who never lost her ambition.

Shorty: "Whoever becomes king, I want them to be like that…"

Lulu Lara: "Selfish…"

Shorty: "What? No, no, no, not at all! Reporters are fair! Reporters are equal!"

When Lulu Lara heard Shorty talking to himself, he panicked and denied it. However, Lulu Lara, who had made him panic, continued to work on the painting with an indifferent face. Shorty stood up on the grass, thinking that she was a very annoying partner.

Shorty: "Anyway, I'll summarize what I've covered. Misunderstanding of the rumors surrounding Crusch-sama… It's our role to resolve the gap between rumor and reality."

Lulu Lara: "hk…"

Shorty rubbed the bridge of his nose with his finger, and Lulu Lara handed him a picture. When Shorty received it, he looked at it and raised his eyebrows. As expected of Lulu Lara, a genius at drawing pictures for publication, she draws what she wants the reader to see… It was a beautiful master-servant image of the two of them leaning together, holding hands.

Shorty: “Yes, this is a good one. That’s what I’m talking about, Lulu Lara!”

Lulu Lara: “Glad, beautiful girls…”

Shorty: “No, I’m not looking at them that way, and Ferris-dono is a man, okay?”

Shorty is not happy about being looked at with a questioning and disdainful look, but he has no worries about the content of the interview and the quality of the pictures. However, they only finished interviewing the first candidate for the Royal Selection.

Shorty: “There’s a lot more to come… It’s especially important to be careful about what we cover next.”

Lulu Lara: “Problems…?”

Shorty: “Don’t say that like it’s a joke! I really do…! After all, the next interviewee is not from the Kingdom of Lugnica, but from another country.”

Hearing Shorty’s words, “… another country,” Lulu Lara said, looking as if she had never heard of it before. I had been briefed in advance, so it was not new to me, But for once, Lulu Lara needs to be aware of the danger she is in.

Shorty: “Anastasia Hoshin-sama is the Chairman of the Hoshin Trading Company, a powerful business in the Kararagi City States. She has come all the way across the country to compete for the throne of the Kingdom of Lugnica… Do you smell that?”

Lulu Lara: “I took a bath…”

Shorty: “It’s not your smell! If you had smelled it in the first place, we would have been in a lot of trouble with Crusch-sama!”

In the first place, it was a mistake to ask Lulu Lara, whose nose might have been dumbed down by the paint fumes. Shorty's sense of smell should be better. That was the division of labor between the two partners, a role that Shorty played.

Shorty: "So far, if there has been any interference from other countries, it has only been from the Vollachian Empire to the south that we have been wary of. In fact, before the Royal Selection, there are stories that a representatives of the Council of Sages secretly went to Vollachia to sign a non-aggression pact."

Everyone assumed that it was the south that everyone should be on the alert for. Anastasia, who was now a candidate for the Royal Selection, could be said to be an assassin from the west…

Shorty: "You can't help but feel that there's something fishy about the "Finest of Knights", Julius Juukulius-dono, who has expressed his support for Anastasia-sama."

Lulu Lara: "Take a bath…?"

Shorty: "He's the one they call "Finest"! I would be a disappointment if I didn't! Even if you're black-hearted, I hope you've got your manners in order."

Of course, it would be better if he didn't have this gut feeling. However, I don't know the true intentions of a promising talent who was highly trusted in the Royal Guard, why he would invite a powerful person from another country to be the king. The Juukulius family is a family of knights that has been around for generations, and there was no record of them being disrespected by the Kingdom of Lugnica. Then there is one possibility…

Shorty: "Either Sir Julius is tremendously ambitious or he's a traitor…"

Lulu Lara: "Bad spot…"

Shorty: "I don't like it if that's the case, so it's like one of those things… Whatever it is, I'd like to find out what they're up to."

Tightening his fists, Shorty renewed his resolve. After the interview with Crusch, Shorty's confidence and a new sense of purpose were awakened in him. It was to uncover the truth about the Royal Selection. Needless to say, the rumors about Crusch differed greatly from her actual personality. This meant that there would be no guiding principle in deciding who would be the next king. If that is the case, then the Dragon Nation Newsletter will serve as a guideline for those who may be misinformed.

Shorty: "If not the Dragon Nation Newsletter, then who else would do it…"

Lulu Lara: "Big time…"

Shorty: "That's right! We've already started running. Then we have to keep running until we make it. I'll do it. For that reason…"

Shorty pulled out a new drawing pad from his press bag and handed it to Lulu Lara. She took it with a puffed up nose and a twinkle in her eye. Lulu Lara is full of energy, and Shorty is full of a sense of purpose. With this momentum…

Shorty: "I don't care what Anastasia-sama is up to or what plans she's hiding. I won't be fooled by the pleasant words, I'll find out what she's really thinking!"

4

Shorty: "Ku…!"

Shorty recoiled at the words of a woman with her elbows on the table and her cheek resting on her hands. The woman's demeanor, which was gentle and calm, but with the mischievousness of a noble cat, and her words and actions just before, shattered Shorty's caution head-on. I didn't expect to have my words affirmed with a big smile. This was the result of his spirited attempt to expose his opponent's intentions.

Shorty: "Anastasia-sama, I think that is somewhat inappropriate."

Anastasia: "Ara-ra, I got upset. My knight is too serious." (TL note I decided to keep her Ara's since I am not doing the accent)

The one who sticks out her tongue like that is Anastasia Hoshin, a woman who looks like the word “dainty” with clothes on. She has long, wavy, light purple hair, and even in the slightly warm weather, she is dressed in fluffy fur. She is short in stature and has a fragile appearance, but the way she speaks and the strong-willed light in her eyes are full of a rebellious spirit, and she has a charm that is not easy to ignore. Anastasia was also as good looking as Crusch, and Shorty was beginning to wonder what criteria were used to select the candidates for the Royal Selection. It’s hard to imagine that appearance is an important part of the selection criteria, though.

Shorty: “No, considering that you’re going to be exposed to the outside world in a variety of situations, it’s not surprising that a good appearance is an important item to keep in mind…?”

Anastasia: “What’s that? Something on your mind? If you’ve got something on your mind, you can tell me.”

Shorty: “Anastasia-sama and Crusch-sama are both so beautiful, so I wondered what was going on.”

Anastasia: “Ara”

Putting her hand over her mouth, Anastasia rolled her eyes. Seeing her reaction, Shorty blushed slightly, thinking that he had once again said exactly what was on his mind. However, that didn’t seem to offend Anastasia, and the man sitting next to her nodded while keeping his eyes framed by his long eyelashes down.

Julius: “Well, I can understand your admiration for Anastasia-sama’s appearance. Not only is Anastasia-sama a woman of great business acumen and intelligence, but she is also very attractive as a woman.”

Anastasia: “If you don’t take it seriously, you’ll be wasting the reporters’ time and effort in trying to make the place more relaxed. Right?”

Julius: “Oh, I didn’t realize that. Well, that’s a terribly unreasonable thing for me to do.”

Shorty: “Well, uh, uh, that’s right! Haha…”

He apologized for the way things went, and Shorty stroked his hat and smiled bitterly to cover it up.

What else can Shorty do? Royal Selection candidate Anastasia Hoshin and her Knight Julius Juukulius, both of them in front of him.

“…”

Shorty’s trip to interview the candidates for the royal selection went unexpectedly well, and he was able to request an interview with Anastasia’s group, who was just visiting the royal capital. Shorty was not sure how much the premise that Crusch had already accepted the offer worked, but Anastasia was also willing to accept the offer of an interview. Naturally, it is desirable that Julius, her knight, is also present, both from the point of view of her escort and as a journalist. However, if there was anything unexpected, it was…

Shorty: “Wow, I can’t believe you’re letting me do this interview in a store in the middle of Royal capital.”

Anastasia: “Well, we could have picked you up at our store, but then we’d be right in the middle of the opposition! The other reporters would be nervous, wouldn’t they? I don’t want to sound like I’m scaring you into writing an article that benefits us, you know?”

Anastasia, smiling as she said this, was sitting outside the building on the terrace of a store that faced the main street of the capital and was visible from everywhere. She was determined to prove that she had no intention of forcing Shorty to write something he didn’t want, or to hide something he didn’t want her to hear. The way she dared to be interviewed in a public place gave me a sense of cleverness that Crusch, who takes the straight and narrow, did not have, and I felt I could understand part of Anastasia’s way of thinking.

Shorty: “If that’s the case, why dare to say anything that might cause offense?”

Anastasia: “It’s hard to hear you say that. I just thought that if I said something that surprised her, I thought that this child would look at me poorly.”

Shorty: “The girl… Oh, you mean Lulu Lara?”

Anastasia pointed to Lulu Lara, who was working with a paintbrush next to Shorty. As with Crusch, the ill-mannered girl with her knees up on the chair is snorting hard as she tries to capture the beautiful men and women in front of her.

Shorty: “It’s a sign that she’s working better when she’s focused on her work at hand, so if you don’t mind, I’d like to leave it at that…”

Lulu Lara: “uncomfortable”

Shorty: “Lulu Lara! Get into the apologetic position with me right now!”

Anastasia: I thought you wouldn’t do it if I said that… I was going to continue, but you guys are so agile that I didn’t have time to interrupt you.

Anastasia smiles at Shorty, who quickly grabs Lulu Lara’s head and tries to make her bow down with him. Incidentally, It should be added that Lulu Lara’s neck strength was extraordinary, and Shorty’s power to make her lower her head did not move her at all. Anyway…

Julius: “She didn’t seem phased by all this talk. Shorty, you say? I’m amazed at how focused your coworker is. May I take a look at her work for a moment?”

Shorty: “What? Well, as long as you don’t talk to her, I think she’ll be fine with it.”

Julius: “Hmm, would talking to her disrupt her concentration?”

Shorty: “Rather, when I talk to her, she ignores me, which makes me feel worse.”

Julius: “I see. I know what you mean.”

Julius stood up and lined up behind Lulu Lara, who was painting, and seemed to be observing her work, as if he saw it as Lulu Lara's professionalism. Julius is Julius, and he seems to be an intriguing fellow… Perhaps he is wary of the possibility that Lulu Lara's painting might disgrace his master. In that light, his occasional exclamations of admiration and murmurs of "not bad," it came across as a disguise for an eager student.

Anastasia: "You have a vivid imagination. Maybe you should become a novelist or something."

Shorty: "What are you talking about? I'm a reporter, and my job is to vividly report what I hear and see. I'm not suited to be a writer who needs to fantasize and think outside of the box."

Anastasia: "Really? Well, let's just leave it at that."

It was an implied answer, but Shorty didn't pursue it further because he was afraid of falling into Anastasia's trap once again.

Shorty: "Now that you understand, I'd like to get back to our original topic:…"

Anastasia: "Did I ever finish telling you what I thought I was doing when I joined the Royal Selection? It was a pretty straightforward question to throw in at the beginning, but you didn't like my answer?"

Shorty: "It's not that I don't like it, but if you keep this up, I'm going to have to write the same answer you gave earlier."

It would be somewhat inconvenient for Anastasia, a native of another country, to declare that her reason for joining the royal selection was to obtain the kingdom of Lugnica. But at that suggestion Anastasia just smiled and said…

Anastasia: "I don't mind. It's what I really feel, and it's the same thing I said at the castle the day the election started."

Shorty: "What? Are you serious?"

Anastasia: "Isn't that why you're here, to seriously ask us what we really think…? But if we talk about the pretense, it's disrespectful to the reporter spirit."

"…"

Shorty's voice trailed off as Anastasia clasped her hands in front of her face, asserting her claim. But it wasn't surprise or dismay, it was the excitement of encountering something more magnificent. Shorty was greatly impressed by Anastasia's way of thinking, just as Crusch said she was still learning and in the process of building up. Then, in front of Shorty, who was eager to hear more about Anastasia, she said, "Is that so?" She closes one eye and tilts her head.

Anastasia: "So I wanted to make it a fun interview. So I thought of a lot of things to say to the reporters, and put a lot of thought into it."

Shorty: "A taste for us, huh? What the…"

Shorty's question about whether he was going to do it was interrupted by the sound of high-pitched, imposing shoes sounding behind him, and the sound of it approaching was very clear. Sometimes presence can affect even the sound of human shoes. Then, the owner of the sound of the shoes that interrupted Shorty's words stood in front of a store on the street.

???: "…What is it, little fox? How dare you call on mine self"

Yes, there was an illusion of a woman's voice clothed in an ineffable heat that burned Shorty's eardrums.

Shorty gasped for breath, the only sound was the strange noise of Lulu Lara beside him moving her paintbrush, and only now did he truly envy her ability to concentrate without regard to her surroundings.

5

…Shorty was tormented by the sensation of a burning, dry air playing on his skin.

Shorty, a reporter for the "Dragon Nation Newsletter" and in a position to catch special stories, is daring to interview the participants in the Royal Selection that will decide the future of the Kingdom of Lugnica. Initially, Shorty was worried that his requests for interviews would be turned down, but he received surprisingly positive replies from all of the candidates, and his plan has now come to fruition.

However, that doesn’t mean that Shorty is free from all the worries. Rather, the real work begins once the interviews are conducted. Shorty Megan, still young and inexperienced, has to be careful not to be rude to the candidates for the royal selection, but to get to know their real characters. That’s why Shorty was exhausting his mind and ignited his reporter’s spirit to cover the story. Shorty had already completed his interview with the first candidate for the royal selection, Crusch Karsten. Surprisingly, the interview ended peacefully, and he was elated to go to the next interviewee. And just as he was about to start on the second interview…

Shorty: “I…I’m not sure how to thank you all for coming on such a beautiful day…!”

Shorty struggled to choose his words, a dry smile tugging at his tight cheeks and pale face. An impossible situation, an unexpected turn of events, an event that can only be described as a surprise… the scene that exists in front of us is truly an amalgamation of such things. On the main street of the royal city of Lugnica, two women are sitting across from each other on a terrace overlooking the people passing by… one with long, soft purple hair, a gentle smile, and a warm atmosphere.

Her name is Anastasia Hoshin, and she is a first-rate merchant who leads the Hoshin Trading Company at such a young age, and is one of the most notable people in the kingdom today. And the person sitting opposite Anastasia was…

???: “…What is it, child? It would be impolite to stare at mine face.”

Shorty: “Oh! I’m sorry! I didn’t mean to…”

???: “If you are going to look, look with dignity. It is only natural that others should be attracted to mine beauty.”

She is a gorgeous woman with red eyes who is pointing at her own face with a fan in her hand. Her dazzling orange hair is adorned with jewels, and her beautiful, voluptuous body is wrapped in a dress the color of blood. And she was supposed to be a tragic maiden whose life was plastered with misfortune.

Shorty: “Priscilla Barielle-sama”

With Shorty’s murmur of her name being spoken, the woman – Priscilla narrows her seductive eyes. That one gesture alone has the power to grab your heart, and Shorty’s throat rumbled slightly. It’s not at all what you hear about her, but she too has a special charm that transcends mere mortals. It could be said that she was the one who was destined to be chosen as a candidate for the Royal Selection. If you ask Shorty why Priscilla and Anastasia are here together…

Anastasia: “Reporter-san. you have a great reaction, I’d rather like it, leave it in the picture.”

Julius: “Oh, Anastasia-sama, Don’t be so cruel.…”

Anastasia puts her hand over her mouth and watches Shorty happily as he panics. It was her idea to set up this situation. The situation was secretly prepared for Shorty in order to make the interview more interesting. It certainly seems to be the most interesting topic in terms of surprise.

Julius: “It’s Anastasia-sama’s strange plan, I see. I’m sorry to Shorty-dono and Miss Lulu Lara that it turned out to be a trick.”

Shorty: “I’m afraid I’m going to have to apologize to Sir Julius… Hey, Lulu Lara. Lulu Lara?”

Shorty shrugs his shoulders as Julius apologizes on behalf of his master for his deviousness. Shorty asks his companion to agree with his shrug, and Lulu Lara, who is less talkative, thrusts out a drawing she has finished to Shorty. When Shorty received it and checked it, he saw that the drawing was of Shorty’s face, foaming at the mouth.

Shorty: “Looks like you’re enjoying yourself.”

Anastasia: “What’s that? You’re really good. I wanted to leave it in the picture, and I was wondering if you could give it to me.”

Shorty: “Please feel free… as a memory of our interview.”

In response to the unexpectedly high evaluation, Shorty reluctantly offered the painting to Anastasia. It’s a strange feeling to have your flustered face in Anastasia’s hands, but I’m glad that Lulu Lara’s painting was put to good use. Anyway…

??? “That’s right? It’s the start of a so-called joint interview. because I’m not sure how well an interview with the princess would go over.

Laughing and shrugging his shoulders was a strange looking person sitting behind Priscilla. We’ve already been introduced to him, but for reasons other than Anastasia’s and Priscilla’s good looks, he has a rather striking appearance. His face is hidden by a jet-black helmet, and he is dressed like a bandit, Priscilla’s knight… Al. However, he claims not to be a knight, and Priscilla calls him a clown.

Al: “It’s understandable that you’re trying a different flavor of interview of the candidates than you did with the starting lineup.”

In response to Al’s words, Priscilla began to speak in a quiet tone. Covering her own mouth with a fan, she looked at everyone in the room in turn with her red eyes. She looked at Shorty, Lulu Lara, Al, Julius, and finally Anastasia, and said, “However.”

Priscilla: “Fox Woman, why did you choose to pair mine self with you?”

Anastasia: “Hmmm… I guess so. You’re right, the other two weren’t so bad. Felt-san and Emilia-san wouldn’t have refused if I had suggested it. But…”

“…”

Anastasia: “I thought that the princess would best understand the purpose of my proposal.”

Anastasia's answer was to place her upraised finger on her chin and smile wryly. When Priscilla heard this, she closed one eye and made a silent pause for a while. During this time, Shorty was still subjected to the tension that tightened his whole body, and he was stepping on his own consciousness and telling himself over and over again not to let go.

Shorty thought "You have to turn this adversity into an opportunity, Shorty Megan!" And…

Priscilla: "Well, well. There are those who deny the use of trickery, but mine self is not one of those stubborn people. Even a she-fox's schemes can have meaning."

Al: "Oh, wow. The princess broke. That business owner over there is really good."

At Priscilla's words of approval, Al whistled and praised Anastasia. Anastasia smiled at his reaction and Julius put his hand on his chest.

Julius: "Thank you for your understanding. Well, Shorty-dono I know the format has been a little different from what you planned, but will you continue with your interview?"

Shorty: "Yes, yes, leave it to me! At first, my legs trembled with surprise and nervousness, but if I retreated at this point, my journalistic integrity would be ruined! Please leave it to me!"

Anastasia: "Yes, yes, okay."

Priscilla: "Hard work is a virtue of children. Keep up the good work."

With the willingness of both camps, Shorty was finally able to devote himself to the interview. Once he had regained his composure, albeit a bit nervously, the first question he needed to ask came to mind. It was the same question he had asked Anastasia, if they were in the same position.

Shorty: "So, we'll be covering this at the same time… Priscilla-sama, this is a question I've already asked Anastasia-sama. What do you intend to do when you become king?”

Priscilla: “Ho”

Priscilla raised an eyebrow at Shorty’s question. Her gaze then flicked to Anastasia, and she waved her hand, meeting her gaze.

Anastasia: “My answer is the same as it was in the castle. The goal is to acquire the kingdom. Did you give a greedy answer like me?”

Priscilla: “If you are true to your own desires, there is no room for change in your answer. And what will mine self do as king?”

Shorty: “Yes. Please tell us about it. The people would like to know what kind of thoughts you have for the Royal Selection.”

The Royal Selection has been declared, and the struggle to determine the next king has begun. However, many of the royal citizens, including Shorty, are not even fully aware of the mindset and personalities of the candidates who are competing for the throne. Information can easily shift, change shape, and even change color. The three candidates for the king’s election that Shorty had contacted under the guise of an interview… all of them had already made it clear to him that their personalities differed greatly from their previous reputations. Priscilla was not a fragile maiden, colored by tragedy and misfortune. She was a dignified presence, clad in red, the color of both scorching heat and blood. What kind of future does she envision for her kingdom…?

Priscilla: “…Do nothing”

Shorty: “Huh?”

Shorty, who had been preparing himself for what kind of answer he would get, was taken aback. In his mind, which had stopped thinking, Priscilla’s answer was ruminated over and over again.

Shorty: “Well, doing nothing is…”

Priscilla: “You can take it at face value. Mine self has no particular interest in the kingdom or the common people. All things in this world belong to myself from the beginning.”

"…"

Priscilla: "Mine self doesn't wish to disturb the harmony of nature. Of course, it's good to maintain and prune. But the world is beautiful as it is… This world is made for mine convenience. Therefore, if mine self is on the throne, there is also prosperity."

Priscilla's nonchalant answer seeped into Shorty's brain as she rested her chin against her hand. It was so ridiculous that it seemed like a joke that should have been laughed off. Because such an arrogant idea was a fantasy that not even the pinnacle of the kingdom could truly hold. But what seemed like a joke did not sound like a joke to Shorty. It's not because Priscilla is scary that he can't laugh it off. It is because Shorty's soul has accepted that the words she says are not false.

Anastasia: "As usual, the princess's logic scares me… If that were true, then everyone but me would have no reason to go against her."

Priscilla: I'm sure. Other people's wishes can be fulfilled without taking the throne. But your greed is the only thing that cannot be compromised… You are mine enemy.

Anastasia: "Ara, thank you for the high praise. I think of the princess as an enemy, too."

Anastasia's response was also sharp, despite her carefree face. Shorty was expecting to hear some friendly conversation between the two candidates, but his expectations were dashed when he found out that they were going to be interviewed at the same time.

Shorty: "But that's why it's worth cutting in…!"

As for Priscilla's statement earlier, it is necessary to choose the right words so that they are not misinterpreted. But it's only a matter of right and wrong, no need to dramatize the facts. It's a statement from the undisputed candidate for the Royal Selection, and it's up to Shorty to convey its true meaning in full.

Shorty: "What are your impressions of the other candidates?"

Anastasia: “Currently, the most promising candidate is Crusch-san, right? She was thought to be in a solid position, but the question is how much support she will get for her policy.”

Priscilla: “The little girl from the slums was a bundle of big words, a fool who was so full of ambition that she couldn’t see her own feet. If she continues to be a fool, there will be nothing to see.”

In response to Shorty’s question, Anastasia and Priscilla put in a few words. The fact that they don’t interrupt the other person’s argument is a sign that there is no room for objection. Shorty frantically writes down the two quick-witted replies in his head. Crusch and now Felt are the answers. Then…

Shorty: “…How do you feel about the fifth candidate, Emilia-sama?”

Anastasia and Priscilla: “…Out of the question”

“…”

The question, which he was ready to cut deeply into, was cut back with a few, straightforward words. Shorty gasped at the strength of that brief statement, his nose white, his mouth agape.

Shorty: “Why is that? What are you thinking?”

Anastasia: “I’m not sure what to say, but I think Emilia-san’s origin is what’s holding her back in the first place. She’s a half-elf with silver hair and purple-blue eyes… the perfect combination of features that a half-elf should not have.”

Priscilla: “It’s not a matter of questioning the person’s qualifications. Whatever their nature, most common people are ignorant. They can only judge by what we want to see and hear.”

The words they use may be different, but the core of their story is the same. The situation surrounding Emilia, the last of the candidates for the royal selection, is so severe that she is no longer in a position to question her own status. And this was a feeling that Shorty himself was having as well.

Shorty: “I’ve heard that Emilia-sama, like Anastasia-sama and Crusch-sama, contributed to the defeat of the White whale, which was one of the three great Witch beasts, and the defeat of a Sin Archbishop of the Witch cult…”

Anastasia: “It’s not strictly speaking Emilia-san’s own work, but that of her knight. And the damage of the “Witch of Envy” is not so weak that it can be wiped out just by that. Right, Julius?”

Julius: “It’s sad to say.”

When Anastasia turned to Julius, he shook his head, his long-lashed eyes downcast.

Julius: “I don’t know how much both the White whale and the battle with the Sin Archbishop will touch the hearts of those who listen. However, as Anastasia-sama said, we cannot expect too much.”

Al: “It’s a shame. If you don’t get any recognition for that much work, then I don’t know what are you doing it for. Are you doing this so you can just lose?”

Julius: “Al-dono, that’s not the way to talk about…”

Al: “Not good? That’s the way it’s supposed to be, But what’s the difference between what you and I are saying? You agree with the princesses, don’t you?”

Julius wrinkled his brow, and Al acted somewhat hypocritical. He fingered the seam of the helmet with his one hand… and made a clicking metallic sound. The dry sound seemed to represent the unchangeable reality that lay before Emilia, and Shorty felt somewhat depressed. But…

Priscilla: “In all things, victory or defeat is a given. However, the conditions of victory are not something that can be easily determined from the outside.”

Al: Princess?

Priscilla: “There is no doubt that the half demon is not worthy of being discussed as a potential opponent in the Royal Selection. Is everyone involved so stupid that they can't understand that? Mine self doesn't think so."

Priscilla, the master, overrides the opinion of Al, the squire. As expected, Al tilted his head and said, "Oi, Oi"

Al: "I didn't expect to get shot in the back. Don't you agree with me, Princess?"

Priscilla: "The process is the same, but the results are different. The same can be said for the mindset of that half demon."

Al: "So, Princess, you're saying she doesn't want to be king? You're saying he has another goal in mind?"

Priscilla: "Otherwise, it wouldn't make sense. Besides…"

Al's slightly heated tone was laced with a hint of desperation. Shorty wondered about this, but there was no time to interrupt him. But that's just Shorty's case. That is not the case with a great talent comparable to Priscilla.

Anastasia: "I'll have to preface this by saying that if things continue as they are…"

Priscilla: "Hmm"

As Anastasia continued, Priscilla narrowed her eyes and snickered. The fact that she didn't dismiss it as misguided suggests that she shared the same opinion. This means that both of them have the same perception of Emilia.

Anastasia: "Interesting and fun, don't you think? It was a game that was inevitably going to be a total loss from the start, but Emilia-san and the others still challenged it. Even so, there's something that makes it possible to win."

Priscilla: "If your intention is to participate in the war for the sake of numbers, you are not worthy of being in mine eyes. If you prove yourself worthy, you will naturally be reflected in mine eyes."

Shorty was strangely moved by the conflicting reactions of the two women, both smiling and taunting. For some reason, both Anastasia and Priscilla's emotions toward the person they were talking about seemed to be expectations.

Al: "Hey, I feel like I'm being stepped on. It would be better if the princess really stepped on me instead of just thinking about it."

Julius: "Al-dono, we're both in front of the press. You're a knight, you'd better be more careful about what you say."

Al: "Thanks for the heads up. But I'm not a knight. I don't even want to be one."

Julius: "That's a shame."

In response to Julius's meditative answer, Al snaps the seam of his helmet and makes a joke of it. Behind the gesture, the desperation of earlier was nowhere to be seen. Or maybe that was just Shorty's misunderstanding of the situation.

Shorty: "Thank you very much for your valuable words. Now… if you could, please tell me how you feel about the person in front of you in the final confrontation…!"

Anastasia: "…You're awfully brave, Reporter-san."

Shorty asked a question that was a no-brainer, and Al let out a sincere exclamation. It was a question that made Julius chuckle, but not mentioning the other person who was being interviewed at the same time was a bit of a misdirection. Shorty thought it was a natural question to be asked, per-se. Anastasia and Priscilla looked at each other and opened their mouths at the same time. And then…

Anastasia: "…I'll kick you off."

Priscilla: "…Break you by mine by hand"

They exchanged hostility, which could be considered the greatest praise at the moment.

Shorty: “Jeez, that shortened my life span…”

Lulu Lara: “Tired…”

Shorty mutters, leaning languidly back in his chair, his face an ashen color. Somehow he managed to finish his simultaneous interviews with the two candidates for the royal selection, and has just returned to his home away from home, The Dragon Nation Newsletter, a place free from tension and anxiety. At Shorty’s side, the ill-mannered Lulu Lara, hugging her knees on a chair, gave him a rare word of encouragement, though it was not very emotional. It seems that even Lulu Lara, who is not at all concerned about the outside world, was able to understand Shorty’s distress at being sandwiched between Anastasia and Priscilla. In fact, Lulu Lara’s brush seemed to be in high gear, and she produced a record number of press pictures during the interview. All of the pictures show Anastasia and Priscilla from different angles and with different expressions, and Editor-in-Chief Morgan was very pleased with the results. Some of them depicted not only the two candidates, but also Julius and Al, and…

Shorty: “I know it’s a little late, but you’re a bit of a hassle.”

Lulu Lara: “…Is a misunderstanding”

Shorty: “If you compare the number of pictures of the two candidates for the Royal Selection with Sir Julius, and Al-dono, you won’t be able to convince me!, you only drew one picture of Al-dono!”

Lulu Lara: “…Draw only what makes my heart shiver.”

Shorty pulls out the one picture of Al from the pile of press pictures, and Lulu Lara answers with puffed out cheeks. Shorty was pressured by Lulu Lara’s concern, which Shorty did not understand, and Shorty looked down at the painting of Al, “Okay I get it…”

Shorty: “This is when… Al-dono was a little weird.”

Lulu Lara: “I drew it because it was a… fight.”

Shorty: “It looks… serious”

Lulu Lara’s drawing of Al was from when he was arguing with Priscilla. It was the moment when Shorty mentioned Emilia, but it was also the moment when Shorty felt trapped, and apparently Lulu Lara felt the same way.

Shorty: “…When this is over, we might as well cover the candidate’s knights next time. Emilia-sama’s camp is also interesting in regards to her knight.”

Lulu Lara: “But, next one is more important”

Although Lulu Lara usually loses interest in what she has finished, she already seems motivated by the target of her next press painting. Shorty couldn’t help but chuckle at the self-serving attitude.

Shorty: “After all, I think Lulu Lara is a bit of a mess.”

Lulu Lara: “Because… is misunderstanding.”

Shorty: “Okay, okay. I’m just going to do a quick summary of the article I just wrote.”

To appease Lulu Lara, who could not hide her impatience, Shorty wrote down the interview in his mind on a piece of paper and prepared a simple headline and the content of the article. One of Shorty’s few specialties is that he never forgets what he has covered once, but aside from the freshness of the material, passion has a temperature. It’s important to prep the food before it gets cold.

Lulu Lara: “What’s the next… candidate?”

Shorty: “You know… but maybe you’re too obsessed with knights to know? Is it possible you forgot?”

Lulu Lara: “Wasn’t there…”

Shorty: “I don’t even want to hear it!”

Without stopping to write it down, Shorty shook his head at his trusted partner’s memory. They finished interviewing three candidates for the royal selection: Crusch, Anastasia, and Priscilla. There were only two left, and in that order…

Shorty: “The next interview subject is Felt-sama… honestly, Emilia-sama is the most unique in terms of her origins, but she also has very unique credentials.”

Lulu Lara: “…Color!”

Shorty: “Not that color. but a different color, as in unusual! She grew up in the slums of Royal capital. That’s why her background is the same as ours, Lulu Lara.”

Holding the drawing book on her lap, Lulu Lara stares at Shorty in silence. Both Shorty and Lulu Lara now work as a reporter and a news painter for the Dragon Nation Newsletter, but they were originally abandoned by their parents and were among the kids scavenging for garbage in the slums. Most of the time, the miserable children are unable to climb out and either fall into the wrong hands or are used and preyed upon and die. But Shorty and his friend were different. Each of them has used their skills and passions to get where they are today. In that sense, could it be said that Felt also won? The throne of the Kingdom of Lugnica is in its eleventh generation, a position as a candidate for the Royal Selection the throne may be within reach.

Shorty: “But there are a lot of other false rumors flying around about Felt-sama. I’d like to hear about the truth of it, but the big thing is the presence of her knight.”

Lulu Lara: “…Saint!”

Shorty: “Yes, the impact of his declaration that he will support Felt-sama as her knight, the Sword Saint Reinhard van Astrea… is enormous.”

Most of the people are more interested in celebrities whose names they have a chance to hear than the royalty whom they rarely see in person. In such a situation, the name of Reinhard, the current generation’s “Sword Saint”, has a great impression and will have a tremendous influence on the royal people. Even the people of the capital are more interested in the Sword Saint than the king. The difference is even more obvious when it comes to the people outside of the capital who don’t have the opportunity to interact with the royal family.

Shorty: “Of course, Felt-sama would want to win the Royal Selection. If that’s the case, there’s no way to avoid using the influence that Sir Reinhard has. That’s why…”

Lulu Lara: “Why…?”

Shorty: “In order to avoid being swallowed by the light emitted by such a Sword Saint, let’s keep our eyes on what we really need to discover!”

Shorty’s fists clenched in determination, Lulu Lara understood how far he was willing to go, and she held up her drawing pad with a pretense of willingness. He has been out of sorts many times so far, but that won’t happen in the next interview. No matter how dazzling the Sword Saint was, Shorty was determined to maintain a heart of steel.

7

???: “—Welcome to the Astrea domain, you two reporters.”

And so it was that Shorty and his companion were greeted by a fiery young man. He is a beautiful young man with dazzlingly bright red hair and blue eyes that trap the sky. Shorty had fallen in love with one of Lulu Lara’s paintings before, and the subject himself greeted Shorty and the other who had come to interview him with a smile… However, his attire was far from that of a “A knight of knights”.

Shorty: “You’re Sir Reinhard… right?”

Reinhard: “Yes, that’s right. Thank you for coming all the way from the capital today.”

When Shorty asked in a faltering voice, Reinhard nodded matter-of-factly. He was dressed lightly in a shirt and pants, having removed the uniform that indicated his affiliation with the royal guard. He was wearing a white towel around his neck and did not carry the Dragon Sword, which is synonymous with Sword Saint. His beauty makes him unusually eye-catching, but his attire is not in the least bit like that of a Sword Saint. Of course, Shorty didn't think that Reinhard would be forced to dress and act like a knight all the time. But still, the unexpected is unexpected. At any rate, what he had been doing until the moment he greeted Shorty and the others was…

Lulu Lara: "…You gardening"

Reinhard: "Oh, that's right. I'm taking care of the garden and flower beds at the mansion. The buds have just finally bloomed…"

Lulu Lara: "…Beauty"

Reinhard responded to Lulu Lara's question with a tilt of his head, indicating the flowerbed with his hand. Lulu Lara looked at the flower bed behind him and admired it as she hid behind Shorty. In fact, they are magnificent.

A field of red, white, and yellow petals in full bloom. The pruning of the trees in the garden seemed like fine craftsmanship to the untrained eye. As expected, Reinhard, the Sword Saint, is a versatile man no matter what he does.

Shorty: "No! That's a surprise, but don't they usually make you do something else?"

Lulu Lara: "Complain about saint…?"

Shorty: "I wouldn't do anything so foolish, though, would I?"

Shorty complained, rolling his eyes at the seeming waste of the Sword Saint. Immediately, Lulu Lara Kicked away the ladder, Shorty hurriedly tried to pull her support back. Reinhard tilts his head with a small smile at the exchange between the two.

Reinhard: "What do you mean, "something else"? I'm just asking."

Shorty: "Let me see, Sir Reinhard is such a big deal almost no one really knows him in the kingdom of Lugnica, so you can travel around to sell your name and face, solve the problems of powerful nobles to get their support, and so on.”

Reinhard: “…Yes, that’s right, Felt-sama.”

Shorty, who listed all the effective uses of Reinhard that he could think of, rolled his eyes at Reinhard’s comment, “Huh?” Shorty said. Then Shorty fearfully follows Reinhard’s gaze, and his eyes meet Lulu Lara’s, who is hiding behind him. But Reinhard’s gaze is further away.

“…”

Standing behind the two of them was a small girl who was their guide. The person who claimed to be a messenger from the Astrea mansion and took the trouble to come and pick them up at the dragon carriage stop… a person with dazzling blond hair, strong-willed red eyes, and distinctive teeth peeking out of her mouth… was the person who had told them many interesting stories along the way. The reason why Reinhard called the girl Felt now is because.…

Shorty: “Ah, uh, eh, oh…?”

Felt: “Oooh, he’s confused. Haha, look at his face.”

She pointed at Shorty, who was opening and closing his gaping mouth, and the girl couldn’t hold back her laughter. The gesture made Lulu Lara look at Shorty, too.

Lulu Lara: “…Tease”

Shorty: “Not at all! That’s not funny!

Felt: “Whoa! Don’t yell so loud!”

When Shorty peeled his eyes away from Lulu Lara’s too heartless comment, the girl was startled. However, Reinhard called out to the girl again and again with “Felt-sama”.

Reinhard: “It’s time to cut the antics, please. Shorty-dono and Lulu Lara-san will be exhausted if we go any further."

Felt: "All right, all right. I thought I was starting to understand you a little better, but you're still nagging me, aren't you?"

Reinhard: "I've become more flexible. That's why I stopped picking you up."

Felt: "You had Flam and Grassis attached to me. I'm still pretty stiff."

The girl sticks out her tongue and responds with an attitude to Reinhard, who shakes his head loosely. No… Shorty doesn't want to keep running away from reality with this girl anymore. Reinhard respects her and is in a position to treat her like this. In other words, this girl is the one…

Shorty: "…It's a pleasure to meet you, Felt-sama."

Felt: "Ha, thanks for the greeting, it makes my ears itch."

Shorty, who managed to bite back his surprise and bowed, reacted without a second thought. Felt scratches her own ear with her finger and wrinkles her nose as she answers. She is Reinhard's master, one of the candidates for the Royal Selection.

Lulu Lara: "Here…"

Shorty: "Anh?"

Shorty gasped, but Lulu Lara unexpectedly stepped forward. She tore a page out of her drawing book and held it out to Felt. She takes it without pausing, and when Felt looks at the torn page…

Felt: "Buh-hah."

Reinhard: "Felt-sama?"

Felt: "Ha-Ha-Ha! Hey, look, Reinhard, here."

Shorty's reaction to Felt's sudden outburst made him wonder what Lulu Lara had done to him. The page jumped over Shorty's head and passed from Felt's hand to Reinhard's hand. And Reinhard, seeing the same thing, made a small "Ku" in his throat.

Reinhard: "This is…ha"

Shorty: "Even Sir Reinhard? What did you give them, Lulu Lara?"

Felt: "Ha-Ha-Ha-Ha!"

Felt laughed out loud and Reinhard couldn't bite back his smile. Shorty's face turned pale at the sight of the two of them, and Reinhard nodded and handed him the page in question. It was Shorty who was drawn on it. The Shorty who was looking at Felt with wide eyes and an open mouth, stunned.

Lulu Lara: "…Masterpiece"

Shorty: "Ehh, Thanks as always!"

Shorty shouted a desperate thank you to the boastful Lulu Lara.

8

Shorty: "Once again, thank you for making time for us today…"

Felt: "You look like you're not happy. Well, the fact that the picture earlier was so funny makes up for it."

Shorty: "Thank you…"

Shorty is shown into the reception room of the mansion and is greeted with a simple response. It was not because of nervousness, but because he was uncomfortable with Felt, who was slumped on the sofa with her legs and arms crossed in front of her. So far, Shorty has interviewed three different candidates for the Royal Selection. It's hard to say whether Shorty has been able to maintain a level head from start to finish with these women, who all give the impression of being extraordinary. Still, Shorty was able to look forward to interviewing these women because he felt a certain reverence for their looks, their behavior, and their beliefs. But…

Felt: "…? what is it?"

Shorty: “No, no, it’s nothing.”

Felt: “You can’t just stare at people like that and expect them to do nothing.”

Felt leaned forward and looked into Shorty’s face. Shorty’s cheeks tensed under her gaze, he felt a slight disappointment. The awe and respect he felt for the other candidates, the way they were clearly different from each other, he could not feel it from Felt. In fact, when she came to pick him up at the station in the guise of a servant, if it had been any other candidate, Shorty would have stopped in his tracks even if he didn’t know her face. Shorty was sorry, but he couldn’t feel it in Felt. Considering her history, she should not have been given the opportunity to hone those qualities, and that is understandable. However, he couldn’t help but feel disappointed. She was not ready to compete for the throne on par with the previous three. If that’s the case, it’s almost certain that Felt and Emilia will not be selected, and it will be Crusch, Anastasia, and Priscilla who will compete for the throne. So, including this moment, the interview with the last two people becomes a game of understanding.

Felt: “Isn’t it a little early to be finished judging me?”

Shorty: “Huh”

Felt: “No, I know it when I see it. You look blatantly disappointed.”

Shorty flinched when Felt said that with a pout on her lips. It is the role of the reporter to reveal the mind of the subject of the interview. It was as if he had handed over the reins to someone who could read his mind. However, Shorty decided that there was no point in trying to fix it and changed his mind.

Shorty: “Did your eye for people come from living in the slums?”

Felt: “Huh? You’re asking me something that’s hard to hear out of the blue. But I like you better when you have that kind of look in your eyes.”

“…”

Felt: “So, did living in the ghetto make me stronger? Yeah, I guess it did.”

Felt, however, was not offended by the unceremonious intrusion into his past. Rather, as she said, she was impressed by Shorty’s brazenness. With a hand on her cheek, she looks out the window… Under the distant sky, far away, is the Royal capital where she grew up. Shorty wondered if that’s what she’s thinking.

Shorty: “…You miss the capital, you miss the slums.”

Felt: “What? Not at all. I don’t even like the slums.”

Shorty: “What?”

Felt: “That’s just too much of a feel-good sentiment. I don’t miss it when I’m away from it. That’s what a slum is all about… You guys must feel the same way.”

Felt bent her lips and said so while scratching her head roughly. Shorty stopped when he heard that and almost replied, “That’s true”, but. The way she said it, it was as if she had figured out that Shorty and the others were from the slums. And as if to affirm that his suspicions were true, Felt sighed and said, “Geez”

Felt: “It’s true that my habit of looking at people came about because I lived in the slums. Borrowing small amounts of money from other people’s pockets has always been a specialty of mine.”

Shorty: “Well, me and Lulu Lara are reporters, in case you forgot…”

Felt: “That’s why I’m telling you. If it was okay for you to lie or make up whatever you wanted, I wouldn’t have accepted the interview in the first place.”

Shorty snickers as Felt proudly confesses to her past criminal activities. But Felt said she had no intention of hiding it, which made me want to ask her for more information.

Reinhard: “Felt-sama, Shorty-dono and the others are in a tight spot.”

Then Reinhard, who had opened the entrance to the reception room and showed his face, intervened. With a silver tray in his hand, Reinhard brought cups of steaming tea and served them on the table between Felt and Shorty.

Reinhard: “I think it’s a virtue of Felt-sama that she doesn’t dare try to hide it, but there’s no need to go out of her way to make it obvious. I think you know that.”

Felt: “Well, I guess the sermon has started again. In general, I’m…”

Reinhard: “Rom-dono and Ezzo sent me.”

Felt: “Gua…”

Reinhard’s added words made Felt’s cheeks tense up involuntarily. She reached for her cup, brought it to her mouth, and chose silence. He smiled at the sight of his master and offered tea to Shorty and the others, while he himself took his place behind Felt.

Felt: “Here’s your tea. Although it’s not as good as the tea served at the other candidates’ residences.”

Shorty: “No, no, no, not at all. The tea was made by the Sword Saint. This is a very precious opportunity. I want to take it home and display it.”

Lulu Lara: “Stupid…”

Shorty: “It’s just a joke to lighten the mood.”

Shorty regains his composure at Lulu Lara’s words. After all, shouting out loud is something that brings a sense of mental stability. While chewing on such a feeling, he once again faces the master and servant in front of him.

Shorty: “I apologize for starting the questioning a little early, while your knight was away.”

Reinhard: “Oh, don’t worry. I heard you.”

Shorty: “I’m sure you’re right. That’s a relief… huh? You heard me?”

Felt: “Oh, come on, come on. If you take his comments seriously, the conversation won’t end anytime soon. I’ve got things to do later today.”

Reinhard’s comment bothered him, but he couldn’t delve into that when Felt told him she had business to attend to. Shorty cleared his throat.

Shorty: “So, once again… What do you intend to do as king, Felt-sama?”

Felt: “I’m going to destroy the invisible traditions of this country.”

Shorty: “…Yes?”

When Shorty heard the answer, he stopped writing in his notebook… What did Felt say she was going to destroy?

Shorty: “The invisible traditions of this country are…”

Felt: “All the unreasonable things we take for granted, all the things we’ve seen and heard and talked about and don’t like about them. The slums are just one of them.”

“…”

Felt: “That’s the way it is, that’s the way it’s supposed to be, that’s the way we’re supposed to think. Of course it’s hard to live in poverty in the slums. But I don’t like the idea that those born at the top will always be the winners and those born at the bottom will always be the losers.”

Before Shorty could fully digest Felt’s words, new information was being pushed out one after another. Shorty chewed on it little by little and tried to get to the bottom of Felt’s thoughts. It was not just the verbalization of the dim impulses of a child born and raised in the slums, who was jealous of her counterpart who was born elsewhere.

Felt: “Anyway, you don’t expect much from me anyway, right?”

Felt asks a direct question to Shorty, who remains silent. When Shorty was torn between what to think and what to say, Felt gave him a small snort and said, “Heh”.

Felt: “If you put it all in the right order, it becomes a bit cheap. I think it was a good decision for me not to say anything devious. In fact, I don’t think there are many people who are expecting me. That’s true. I’m just a little girl from the slums. I’m not as good as my opponents.”

So Felt cut him off, shaking her head, “No.”

Felt: “It’s better than my half demon-Neechan, but that’s about it. There’s no one who has any expectations of me… In that case, you have nothing to lose.”

Shorty: “Do you think this will lead to the breaking of invisible traditions?”

Felt: “I can’t make those hateful bastards bleed from the nose unless someone punches them. I’ll be the first one to hit them in the nose anyway. You’ll never know if the next one sticks until you try it.”

Felt concludes, rephrasing things in a violent back alley fashion. But her point, sadly, came through loud and clear to Shorty, who was also from the slums. Perhaps if Felt had listened, she would have understood Lulu Lara as well. At the same time, Shorty came to realize the strange potential of Felt. He wondered if the disappointment and pity he had felt for Felt before the interview, when she had challenged him to a contest he had no chance of winning, had been misplaced. As usual, Felt could not inspire the same awe that Crusch and the others had inspired in him. But if she looks like a mere girl with nothing to offer, that’ s wrong, too. Shorty strongly sensed in Felt the readiness of a challenger, the will to change, to be different, to be a reformer. Unlike the geniuses who have already perfected themselves and are naturally radiant and powerful, her vessel is still in the process of being formed. Perhaps the vessel will not be fired even after the Royal Selection is settled. But if her vessel is ever finished and people see it…

Reinhard: “The day will come when something invisible will be destroyed. Don’t you think so?”

Shorty: “Sir Reinhard…”

The same conclusion that Shorty came to was first mentioned by Reinhard. Looking, Reinhard turned his blue eyes to Shorty and Lulu Lara, then to Felt in front of him.

Reinhard: “In fact, Felt-sama is still in the process of doing a lot of things. For example, I’m sure I’m part of what she’s trying to destroy.”

Shorty: “You want to… destroy it?”

Felt: “It’s not that big of a deal. Reinhard, don’t say anything strange.”

Reinhard: “But I wanted to make sure that the fact that I was the first thing that Felt-sama tried to destroy was not hidden from the public.”

Felt: “Scary. What are you talking about?”

Reinhard’s gaze was gentle as he smiled, and Felt’s voice was truly stern as she responded. As far as Shorty can see, the two of them have a very strange master-servant relationship. Up until now, the relationship between the candidates for the king’s election and the knights, despite their differences in detail, had one thing in common: they were good. However, he felt that there is a gap between Felt and Reinhard that cannot be described in one word as a good relationship. It’s not bad, it’s not at odds. But the atmosphere is not smooth sailing.

Reinhard: “Shorty-dono, the only reason I tend to my garden and flowerbeds is because I’m following Felt-sama’s orders.”

Shorty: “Um, Really?”

Reinhard: “Yes. She told me to try growing some flowers. Unfortunately, I have the Divine Protection of Horticulture, so it’s not as difficult a challenge as it is trial and error…”

Reinhard breaks off there and looks at his palm. His fingers may be dirty from working in the dirt. But Reinhard's gaze was soft and somehow radiant.

Reinhard: "In fact, I feel like my feelings have changed. Maybe the transformation of the world can come from the accumulation of such small things."

Felt: "You're an arrogant bastard… You get carried away when I compliment you on your flower beds."

Reinhard: "I'm glad to hear it. It's what Felt-sama's words gave me."

Reinhard replies without hesitation to Felt, who blurts out with her tongue in cheek. Even Shorty, who was listening, was surprised by the comment, and Felt was no exception. She made a bitter face and glared at Shorty as if she was ashamed that he had seen her face.

Felt: "You're staring at me!"

Shorty: "Shit, I really don't see the point of this. If it's just going to make me feel uncomfortable, there's a limit to how much it's worth."

Reinhard: "Don't worry, the circulation of the Dragon Nation Newsletter is one of the highest in the capital. I don't think Rom-dono and Ezzo's strategy is wrong."

Felt: "Hey! Don't write what this idiot just said!"

Felt shows her sharp fangs and calls Reinhard an idiot. Shorty is not sure what Felt thinks of Reinhard, that she would let the Sword Saint tinker in the dirt or call him an idiot in the first place.

Shorty: "What did Felt-sama say about Sir Reinhard…?"

Felt: "Oh? What are you, a sleepyhead…?This is Reinhard."

Shorty: "Ah"

Felt: "It's nothing more, nothing less. You don't listen to me, but you talk a lot. It's a headache for me."

Felt crosses her arms and exhales heavily through her nose. Reinhard, who is standing behind her, doesn't say anything and just slightly lowers the corner of his eyes at the sight of her. Although he did not understand Reinhard's feelings, Shorty realized that he too had been poisoned by the "invisible traditions" that Felt had described. Shorty thought he understood the prejudices and preconceptions that prevailed in the kingdom, such as the noble districts and the slums, the nobility and the commoners and the poor. However, as Shorty continues to interview the candidates for the royal selection, he is constantly reminded that he is neither smart nor knowledgeable. Finally, Felt, who is also from the slums, makes the same realization… Shorty's fantasy of Reinhard van Astrea, the Sword Saint, is one of the things that Felt is trying to destroy because she doesn't like him.

Shorty: "Felt-sama, what do you think the outcome of the Royal Selection will be?"

"…"

Felt's red eyes narrowed as she stared at Shorty, who had asked her a question. Straightening his back, Shorty met her gaze head on. Here they were, and Shorty was not going to let his initial disappointment get in the way of underestimating Felt. It is true that Felt is an unfinished vessel compared to Crusch and the others. However, there is something about the size and shape of the vessel that makes Shorty anticipate what it will look like when it is fired. Shorty thinks that was the decisive push that made Reinhard choose Felt.

Felt: "Well, I think the rest of them are pretty impressive. When I first saw them at the castle, I didn't know what they were like because I didn't know anything about them."

Born and raised in the slums, it was not until Felt announced her participation in the royal selection and decided to live in Astrea Manor that she began to receive a decent education. Shorty remembers it too. In the beginning, he couldn't even read or write, and he couldn't even stand on the same stage without bridging the gap between what he knew and what he should have known. Felt has been through a lot of frustration, but she doesn't let it get her down and continues to fight.

Felt: “For now, it’s the Duchess who has the upper hand, followed by the merchant. Even if I join the reputation hunt, it’ll be hard to get to the position of my half demon-Neechan. I don’t know about that red woman, but…”

“…”

Felt: “I’m just as good, if not better, than her in terms of reputation. The future is bleak, and whether I can make up for this in three short years is my challenge.”

Shorty was impressed with Felt’s understanding of her current situation and her accurate assessment of the situation. This was proof that she was not throwing the game away, and that she was committed to doing everything in her power to win. The road ahead, however, was difficult. This is something that she is aware of, without a doubt.

Shorty: “Do you have any idea how you’re going to fight them?”

Felt: “For the time being, imitating other people won’t help you win. I have to do what only I can do. So…”

Shorty: “So?”

Felt: “In the meantime, I’m fighting with the black market guys. The business I’m going to do later is to meet with those executives.”

Shorty: “That’s a slanted answer!”

Shorty exclaimed to Felt, who laughed hysterically and gave an unexpected answer. In response to Shorty’s reaction, Felt laughs happily and says, “Ha ha ha”. In the background, Reinhard is putting his hand on his forehead, but it is Shorty who wants to cover his face. One of the candidates for the king’s election is cozying up to the Black Market and wants to win the Royal Selection.

Shorty: “And it’s too good to be true…!”

Even if Shorty showed it to Editor Morgan, he might think that he had fabricated the story. he didn't think Felt expected that, and Shorty didn't think she would talk about it openly.

"…"

While Shorty holds his head in his hands, Lulu Lara is quietly working in her drawing pad. Her attention is never far from Reinhard's, but she seems to be working on Felt's news picture as well. Perhaps she was becoming more aware of her role as a news painter, or perhaps she remembered that Shorty had asked her to draw Felt for the article. Perhaps it was neither, but Lulu Lara sensed the glow that Felt herself was giving off. Just as Shorty had changed his perception of Felt, the same thing had happened to Lulu Lara. The picture she drew would prove to be a glimpse of Felt's great talent. And then…

Felt: "So? What do you think of… the reason for participating in the Royal Selection? Any other questions?"

Shorty: "I've been asking the others… what is your impression of the other candidates for the throne, Felt-sama?"

Felt: "The others. I told you before. You think they're great."

It was Felt, calmly assessing her position. Felt is probably making an accurate assessment of the other candidates. The name that comes out of Reinhard's mouth every now and then may be the one that serves as the chief strategist in Felt's Royal Selection bid. I'd like to interview that person if possible. Anyway, the thoughtful Felt muttered, "Yeah."

Felt: "We didn't talk much, but I remember the Duchess looked like she had something to say to me. That piece of shit red bitch pisses me off so much, I'm going to take her down for sure."

Shorty: "Priscilla-sama was a person who was out of the norm in many ways…"

Felt: "I asked the merchant a bit of a favor the other day. I'm sure it was worth it, but it made me realize just how shrewd she is. And…"

Then she cut off her words and let the last person Felt had left her opinion of Emilia for the end… However, it wasn't a waste of time, it took a little while for Felt to come up with an answer. However, it was not because of any malice or hostility towards the half-elf, but because of the "invisible traditions" that she clearly stated had to be broken.

Felt: "That's the half demon-Neechan. You should go see her with your own eyes. You know better than anyone that rumors are unreliable."

Shorty: "I…I've been let down….!"

Felt: Well, it' s not that I don't like you. I do. But I owe Neechan a lot."

With her hands folded behind her head, Felt gave her an indulgent smile. In response, Shorty's shoulders slumped, but he accepted it with an "I understand." In any case, as Felt said, the next one is the most important one. Shorty will not be allowed to run away from this and write an article based on only what he has covered so far. Shorty's journalistic spirit, not to mention Editor-in-Chief Morgan's, would not allow it. And…

Lulu Lara: "Here…"

As she said this, Lulu Lara tore another page out of her drawing book with a sound. The news picture is offered again, and Felt takes it with a big "Oh" in front of her. She had laughed when she saw Shorty's picture earlier. Shorty was sure she was expecting that, but…

Felt: "Ack"

Then Felt frowned at him. Peering at the painting from behind his master, Reinhard rolled his eyes, "This is," he said, and then laughed. Shorty sneaked a peek at the painting to see what it looked like, and he agreed. The picture was of Felt slumped on the sofa and Reinhard with a soft expression on his face behind him… A moment of the uneven master-servant relationship.

9

…Shorty’s journey to interview the candidates for the Royal Selection began with an idea and momentum. Shorty’s research, which has taken a tremendous toll on his mind and body, is now reaching its final stage. At last, the last candidate for the Royal Selection and the biggest obstacle to this project. Emilia is rumored to be the second coming of the “Witch of Envy”, the worst evil that almost destroyed the world. She is said to be a witch who is not afraid to act in a hedonistic and evil manner. Even Lulu Lara, who has no interest in anything other than painting, trembles when she hears the name of the “Envious witch,” so the fear that has seeped into the people of the kingdom, the world… is extreme.

???: “…My name is Natsuki Subaru! I am the wind, thunder, and lightning, the unyielding guide!”

With a shout, he thrusts the fingers of his right hand into the sky and stands with his left hand on his hip. When he was greeted by a figure with dark hair and vicious eyes, Shorty realized that he had stepped into a magical world… The fact that the mysterious name of the dark-haired boy was the same name as the person Shorty wanted to talk to did not seem to register at this moment…

10

…Direct interviews with candidates for the Royal Selection.

Although the plan seemed reckless at first, it is now in its final stages. Once the project was realized, the candidates were surprisingly accommodating and willing to talk to Shorty and Lulu Lara. If Shorty was being honest, all of the candidates were very different from their initial impressions, and for better or worse, they were women who shook him and Lulu Lara’s sense of values as they interviewed them. Therefore, Shorty has received a solid response that makes him believe that this interview will be a good article. As a result, he will try his best to convey their thoughts and beliefs accurately to the readers without distorting them. However, whether Shorty’s determination and the many news pictures that Lulu Lara has drawn up to this point will be in vain or not will be decided later on. The last of the candidates for the throne of the Kingdom of Lugnica, the one who will decide the future of the kingdom…

???: "…That's the reason why she's our Emilia-tan. Nice to meet you!"

Shorty: "Yes, please, thank you."

Shorty nodded, his cheeks tightening at the openness of the black-haired boy, Natsuki Subaru, who raised his thumb and flashed his teeth as he said this. The location was not far from the large city of Costuul, in the territory of Roswaal L. Mathers, Margrave of the Western Frontier of the Kingdom of Lugnica. Shorty and his friend came to Costuul in a Dragon carriage, and the one who was waiting for them was, Subaru. Shorty was thrown off guard and confused by Subaru, who loosened the corners of his vicious eyes and treated him with an increasingly familiar distance. It was still fresh in Shorty's mind that he was bewildered by the unexpected response when Shorty encountered other candidates for the Royal Selection. But this was the first time he had been greeted with such an enthusiastic welcome. In addition, the name Natsuki Subaru was familiar to Shorty.

Shorty: "You said so yourself, didn't you? You are Natsuki Subaru-dono?"

Subaru: "Huh? Oh, yeah, I'm pretty sure I'm Natsuki Subaru. In case you were wondering, the two of you came to interview me, Emilia-Tan… No, I'm playing Emilia-sama's knight."

Shorty: "I knew it! You're the one who helped defeat the White whale and "Sloth", aren't you?"

Subaru: "Oh"

When Shorty unintentionally leaned forward, Subaru was thrown back by his momentum. But Shorty, oblivious to Subaru's condition, puffed out his nostrils.

Shorty: "I've heard so much about you! I was wondering if I could ask you a few questions?"

Subaru: “N, No, Of course, I was supposed to do that, but this time we’re talking about Emilia-Tan, not me.”

Shorty: “I’ve heard that you have crossed camps to ask for cooperation and have successfully defeated a great enemy! Where on earth did you get that much trust and ability…?”

Shorty’s curiosity got the better of him. Subaru was literally flabbergasted by his ferocity. And then…

???: “Ataa”

The back of Shorty’s head was hit by a light impact, and he turned around in surprise. Then there was Lulu Lara, holding up her drawing pad with both hands.

Lulu Lara: “Stop… talking…”

Lulu Lara with a slight harshness in the corner of her eyes, it was a reprimand that was so rare. Her attitude reminded Shorty of how embarrassed he was. In a panic, Shorty apologized to Subaru, saying, “I’m sorry,” as his face turned red.

Shorty: “I’m so sorry… I completely got carried away.”

Subaru: “Oh, yeah, I’m fine, I’m fine. I was overwhelmed, but on the other hand, I could feel the enthusiasm…”

Subaru laughed at Shorty’s flat and apologetic attitude. Saved by his generosity, Shorty bites down on his own shame.

Shorty: “I’m really sorry for the inconvenience…Waaa?”

???: “You, stay away from Subaru right now, I suppose!”

Shorty: “Waai…!”

It was the moment when the air had somehow almost been removed. An invisible shock-wave struck Shorty from the side, and Shorty’s small body was blown away. Seeing this, Subaru, who had his eyes peeled, turned around in a panic. Then Shorty saw a small figure standing in front of him with her hands on her hips.

???: “I’m not going to let my guard down, In fact. If it weren’t for Betty, Subaru wouldn’t have as many lives as he does, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Be, Beako, you…”

Beako: “Apparently, you’re too surprised and grateful for words, In fact. If you can’t talk, at least express your feelings for Betty through your actions and attitude, I suppose.”

As Subaru said this, a girl in a dress reached out her hands to the flustered Subaru. Subaru stretched out his trembling arms to the girl, whose long hair was coiled in a luxurious manner. With his hand, he pinches up the girl’s Appa-red cheeks.

Beako: “Gya? What are you doing, In fact, Subaru! I just saved your life and I don’t deserve to be treated like this, I suppose!”

Subaru: “You idiot! It’s true that my life is as unreliable as fluffy cotton wool, but I’m still brave this time! It’s the two members of the interviewing staff!”

Beako: “T…That’s, In fact”

With her cheek pinched, the girl looks at Shorty, who has blown away over Subaru. Shorty was blown away helplessly and crashed into a hedge, his outstretched leg being pulled by Lulu Lara.

Subaru: “You all right, Shorty-san? Sorry! My Beako made a terrible mistake!”

Shorty: “Heh, I’m fine, I’m fine… It’s not uncommon for me to run headfirst into something when I work as a reporter for the Dragon Nation Newsletter…”

Subaru: “That’s a great story! Anyway…here we go”

Lulu Lara was too weak to do it, so Subaru pulled Shorty out of the hedge with a single shout. Shorty is painted in foliage, with leaves tangled in his long bangs that hide his eyes.

Subaru: “Hey, Beako, apologize for being so brave. I’m sorry.”

Beako: “B…but I think this little-kid was being misleading is at fault, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Don’t say words you don’t understand!”

In front of Shorty, Subaru scolded the girl for being stubborn. However, as the girl became more and more stubborn, Shorty said, “Well, well, okay”

Shorty: “Don’t worry about it! I’m fine.”

Subaru: “No, I’ll make her apologize! It’s part of her education! Come on, Beako!”

Beako: “Nugu gugugu… Betty will never apologize, In fact…!”

The girl with her head held down resisted Subaru’s stubborn attempts to make her apologize. It’s a smiling exchange like a father and daughter, but Shorty can’t help but be perplexed. It seemed like there was nothing else to do but to wait for them to come to their senses, but…

???: “Natsuki-san and Beatrice-chan, what are you doing in front of our guests?”

The air in the stalemated place was held back by a soft voice filled with dismay. Subaru and the girl, who were engaged in a back-and-forth battle, turned to the person who had called out to them and changed their expressions to “Oh.” Shorty, too, turned his gaze in that direction. Standing there was a calm-looking young man with gray hair and green attire. However, Subaru and the girl… who was called Beatrice, her face tensed at the sight of the young man.

Subaru: “Ugh, there are circumstances that make this unavoidable…”

???: “Are those circumstances grounds for leaving our leafy guest alone?”

Beatrice: “A man who is irritable and relentless, I suppose…”

Subaru and Beatrice shriveled up in response to the honest truth.

Shorty raised his eyes at the familiarity and ferocity of the young man. Laughing at Shorty, the young man reached out and took a leaf from his head. And…

???: “I’m sorry for the trouble that these two have caused. I’ll make sure to scold them properly.”

Shorty: “Well, uh, thank you, And you are?”

???: “My name is Otto Suwen. Well, I’m related to the two people behind you… Yes.”

The young man, Otto, shrugged his shoulders and made a face that was a mixture of pride and reluctance. In the background, Subaru and Beatrice were both puffing out their cheeks. However, Shorty did not have time to touch on Subaru’s situation.

Shorty: “Oh, Otto Suwen-dono, is it?”

Otto: “…? Yes, I am, but…”

Shorty: “Ehh! Sor… I’m so sorry!”

When Otto tilted his head, Shorty knelt there in awe. Then he pulled the sleeve of Lulu Lara, who was in a daze beside him, and made her kneel down as well.

Shorty: “Lulu Lara! Lulu Lara, get down on your knees! Beg for forgiveness or he will gnaw your head off!”

Otto: “I don’t bite. What do you think you know about me?”

Shorty: “The militant internal affairs officer who was wanted for threatening a powerful noble in his hometown of Picoutatte, wiped out bandits nesting in Mount Gina, and the man burned down a Margrave’s mansion to negotiate a pay raise.…”

Otto: “It’s one thing to say those things, but isn’t this too terrible!”

Otto, raising his voice, however, does not deny those reputations. In other words, Shorty had an inkling. It was information that even Shorty thought was groundless until he saw the real thing. But there is no doubt that he has contained and completely tamed Natsuki Subaru, who has accomplished the defeat of the White Whale and “Sloth”.

Shorty: “Oh, please don’t kill me…”

Subaru: “Oi, Oi, Otto, you, no way…”

Otto: “I’m not going to take it. In other words, don’t be a jerk, Natsuki-san, and help me clear up this misunderstanding! This is getting out of hand!”

Subaru and Otto are arguing. Shorty beside them was shrinking and shaking. Sighing at the sight of these three, Beatrice suddenly noticed Lulu Lara’s hands as she crouched down. Lulu Lara was kneeling on the ground, where she was moving her paintbrush at a furious pace. Realizing that the object of her paintbrush was herself, Beatrice brushed her hair back.

Beatrice: “At the very least, paint a picture of Betty in all her splendor, In fact.”

Lulu Lara: “Draw, little…”

Yes, she nodded in satisfaction at Lulu Lara’s answer as she moved her paintbrush.

11

Although there was a stumbling block at the start…

Subaru: “Once again, welcome, you two. Welcome.”

Shorty: “Oh, thank you, thank you… very much.”

Shorty shakes hands with Subaru in a renewed welcome after leaving the dragon carriage boarding area. Contrary to the grandiosity of his reputation, Subaru treats him with a much more casual attitude. Shorty is also somewhat curious about his relationship with Beatrice, who is always holding his hand.

Subaru: “When I heard that I was going to be interviewed, I was really tense. After all, it’s common knowledge that image strategy… and public relations are important in campaigning.”

Shorty: “Tense…? Image…?”

Otto: “Oh, it’s some words that Natsuki-san uses from time to time, you could call it the Natsuki speak. He says it’s his native language…”

Subaru: “Well, it means thinking about your mood. If you’re confused, just ignore it.”

As you can see from their welcoming attitude, they seem to have a very positive impression of the upcoming interview. Otto, the internal affairs officer, also seemed to agree with this point and accepted Shorty and Lulu Lara.

Shorty: “But I didn’t expect to be picked up at the station… by a bunch of heavyweights.”

Subaru: “In fact, Emilia-Tan herself wanted to come, but the camp stopped her because they thought her appearance would scare you off.”

Shorty: “You, mean you yourself did?”

As for Shorty, just the fact that Subaru, one of the knights of the candidates for the Royal Selection, came to pick him up was enough of a surprise, but he couldn’t help but be surprised when he was told that it could have been more than that.

Subaru: “Oh, you’re still scared, aren’t you? Emilia-Tan is not a scary person at all”

Beatrice: “Even so, it is human nature to bow down to authority and position, I suppose. Both Subaru and Emilia are still lacking in that area of thinking, In fact.”

Otto: “I’m with you on that one. I hope they learn from this.”

Otto rubbed his brow with his fingers and muttered sadly. As well as Otto’s argument, the words and actions of Subaru and Beatrice are also noteworthy. It’s not surprising, since they are related to the camp.

Shorty: “What kind of person is Emilia-sama in the eyes of the three of you?”

The question was quite insincere in a way. It cut too close to the heart of the matter to be thrown out as a chat during the tour and before reaching the mansion. Naturally, Shorty expected a harsh response from all three parties.

Subaru: “…Well, an angel. Cute and hard working, an angel to say the least.”

Shorty: “Uh?”

However, after a moment of thought, Subaru’s answer came back to him.

Beatrice: “Subaru…The little reporter is dumbfounded. I suppose. I don’t think that’s what he’s trying to say, In fact.”

Subaru: “No, I thought that is what he meant. Then what would Beako say?”

Beatrice: “It’s obvious, I suppose. Emilia is a bottomless pit of optimism, a blockhead, In fact”

Subaru: “Isn’t Emilia-Tan a little too out of touch in Beako’s mind?”

Beatrice pulled on Subaru’s sleeve, her opinion also not in line with Emilia’s previous reputation. When Shorty was puzzled by this point, Otto scratched his cheek with his finger and said, “Ah.”

Otto: “I understand the purpose of your question, Shorty-san. In general, I’m aware of how Emilia-sama is regarded by the public.”

Shorty: “Hee! Please don’t be angry.”

Otto: “I’m not mad at you, though, am I? Anyway! Many of the preceding impressions are false. This is an opportunity for you to understand that.”

Otto is not as aggressive as Subaru, but he seems to agree with the expectations of this interview. At his words, Subaru nodded and said, “Right.”

Subaru: “I have to improve her image in order for people to understand the real Emilia-Tan. So, please write a good article, Shorty.”

Shorty: “I’ll only write about what I see with my own eyes and hear with my own ears. Even if threatened by the militant Internal Affairs Minister, I will never be deterred…”

Otto: “I’m not going to threaten you! Ugh… I wonder what my reputation will be like by the time the Royal Selection is over.”

Beatrice: “Don’t waste your time thinking about it, I suppose.”

Otto laments the uncertainty of this world, and Beatrice explains the uncertainty of this world. While they were talking, Shorty sensed something strong in all three of them. That is, all three of them have a fondness for Emilia and a dissatisfaction with her situation. A half-elf with silver hair and purple-blue eyes, it was a rebellion against the environment that surrounded her. The anger they feel, if it is justified…

Shorty: “…The real Emilia-sama.”

The difference between the previous reputation and reality, there was nothing that Shorty felt more keenly during this interview. There was a drastic change in his impressions of Crusch, Anastasia, Priscilla, and Felt. If so, could the same thing happen to Emilia? The more he thought about it, and the more anxiety and anticipation Shorty felt, the more he realized that…

Shorty: “I can’t wait to meet you in person.”

Lulu Lara: “…W…what, was scared.”

Shorty’s muttering, his fists clenched, only reached Lulu Lara, who had known him for a long time. What did she see in Shorty when he muttered that? As soon as she started to move her paintbrush, there was no doubt that Shorty had caught Lulu Lara’s interest. So, following the guidance of Subaru and the others, Shorty and Lulu Lara headed for the Margrave's mansion where Emilia was waiting. However, it was on the way there…

???: "…Oh? You guys came to the wrong place, didn't ya?"

Suddenly, there was a wild voice, and a figure jumped out of the grass with great force. It was a fierce-looking boy with golden hair and bared sharp fangs. Shorty gasped, expanding his eyes at the sudden appearance.

Subaru: "Whoa, bandits!"

Beatrice: "This is ridiculous, In fact… The end of the world, I suppose."

Subaru: "What? On a road near a big city like this?"

For a moment, Shorty was left behind in the situation, while Subaru and Beatrice, their faces pale, hugged each other and slumped to the spot. Seeing Subaru and the others, the blond-haired boy sniffed in a good mood and said, "Heh."

Boy: "You seem to know what is going on. If you don't want to get hurt, you'd better be quiet."

Shorty: "Heeii, please spare my life, please spare my life…"

Looking down at the trembling Subaru and the others, the boy licked his lips with cruelty. Quickly protecting Lulu Lara behind him, Shorty looked back at Otto for help. That's when it happened…

???: "…That's enough, scoundrel."

The air around them was completely taken away by the unexpected sound of a voice like a silver bell. When Shorty opened his eyes to see what was going on, the blond haired boy turned around grimly and said, "Ah?" Then, there was a rustling sound of grass, and a figure appeared. A beautiful girl with shimmering silver hair and eyes as purple-blue as jewels, once you see her, you will never forget her… and even Shorty forgot to breathe at the sight of her.

As they looked at her, the girl pointed her finger at the blond boy.

Girl: “I’m not going to overlook any more of your misdeeds. Get away from Subaru and the others.”

Boy: “Ha! Don’t tell me what to do, Who the hell are you…? aren’t you? … No way!”

Girl: “Yeah, that’s right, no umm. I am… I am…”

Boy: “…?”

The girl’s vigor rapidly faded in front of the boy who was bracing himself. She stiffens in a finger-pointing posture, raising her shapely eyebrows. And then, stealthily, she made eye contact with Subaru.

Girl: “…Subaru, Subaru, what was the next word?”

Subaru: “…That’s “Emilia, the next candidate for the throne of the Kingdom of Lugnica.” That’s it, Emilia-Tan.”

Emilia: “…Oh, right. Yeah, I got it. Let’s see.”

After exchanging words with the slumped Subaru in secret, the girl returned to her original position as if she had regained her composure, coughed lightly, and continued.

Emilia: “I am Emilia, candidate for the throne of Lugnica. In the name of the moon, I’ll punish you!”

Boy: “Aah! Oh no! It’ s Emilia-sama, a candidate for the throne. I can’t do it!”

Hearing the girl’s words, the fearful boy prostrated himself on the spot. Seeing this, the girl nodded profoundly, looking at Shorty and the others who were stunned.

Emilia: “Well, I guess that’s that. Are any of you hurt?”

The girl smiled at Shorty… no, there was no doubt about her identity, if what she said earlier was true. It was obvious from the features of her appearance.

Shorty: “Eh, Emilia-sama?”

Emilia: “…! Yes, that’s right. I just happened to be Reeeally close walking by…”

With her chest puffed out, the girl, Emilia, replied. However, right after she answered, Emilia held her stomach and crouched down with an “ugh”. Immediately, Subaru in a panic rushed to Emilia, saying “Emilia-Tan?”

Subaru: “What’s wrong with you all of a sudden, are you okay?”

Emilia: “Uh, no, I’m fine. It’s just that when I lied to them my stomach suddenly started hurting…”

Beatrice: “This is… I’m sure it’s because he made you do something you weren’t cut out for, In fact. Subaru, enough…”

Subaru: “Don’t give up, stupid! We’ve made it this far. We have to finish it…”

Subaru and Beatrice were in a panic as they surrounded Emilia. The whole thing was so transparent that Shorty was seriously wondering how he should react. However, the one who gave Shorty the best solution to his thoughts was…

Otto: “No, this is a waste of time, it’s not even close, this is a farce!”

It was Otto Suwen, who couldn’t resist shouting. To the amazement of everyone in the room, he trudged over to Subaru and…

Otto: “Natsuki-san! I thought you rejected this plan, didn’t you? Why are you forcing it?!”

Subaru: “It was too good to throw away! We’ll be saved by a dashing Emilia-Tan when we get tangled up with some thugs! It’s a reenactment of an encounter between me and Emilia-Tan!”

Emilia: “Hey, Subaru. I don’t remember saving you like this…”

Otto: “It’s Emilia-sama who’s doing this! Can you please stop talking about your dreams?”

Subaru: “It’s true that meeting Emilia-Tan was a dream come true, but that was not a dream.”

Shorty was still being left behind, but one thing was clear. It was the image of Emilia that Subaru and the others had told him just before…

Emilia: “Both of you, stop fighting! Otto-kun, Subaru has thought hard about this, so don’t be too angry with him!”

While Otto was shaking Subaru back and forth, Emilia was raising her voice. From her earnest expression, Shorty didn’t get the impression that she is a cold and cruel “Witch”. he got the impression that she was just an ordinary girl who was at the mercy of the events in front of her.

Boy: “Yo, Beatrice… Is it possible that this was a mistake?”

Beatrice: “It goes without saying, I suppose. Originally, it was a foolhardy plan to get Emilia to lie, In fact. Sure enough, the plan is a mess, I suppose.”

Boy: “Damn, you mean “over-kneaded Gatsune”?” (TL Note this is one of the idioms/metaphors of the golden-haired “boy”)

The boy raises his prostrated head and scratches his own blond hair. Beatrice sighs next to him, and judging by the way she crosses her short arms.

Shorty: “Um, you’re all from the same camp… right?”

Garfiel: “There’s no point in hiding it now, is there? That’s right. My amazing self is Garfiel Tinsel, “The Strongest of Shields”. Remember, I’m no bandit.”

With a click and a snap of his sharp fangs, the boy… Garfiel, proudly announced himself as such. The thug’s performance was great, and the dominance he wore was extraordinary, and Shorty was relieved that his mental image was not wrong. Anyway, these are the grand impression operations planned by Emilia and her group…

Lulu Lara: “Behind…farce.”

Shorty: “Shh! Shh! Shh, Lulu Lara! I was about to say it too, and then I stopped!”

Shorty glanced back, wincing at Lulu Lara’s frank statement. It seems that Emilia and the others have just settled their argument. A disheveled Subaru was thrown to the ground, and Emilia was lending him her lap. With that, Otto bows to Shorty as he repositions his hat.

Otto: “Well, I’m sorry for showing you a bad time. As for this…”

Shorty: “No! I mean, I didn’t see anything…! I can’t say that, I think I have to react in some way…”

Otto: “That’s true. All I can say is, I’m sorry for the confusion.”

For the umpteenth time today, Otto laments greatly as he rubs his fingers across his brow. Even though they had only known each other for a short time, Shorty could sense his position in this camp. The rumors of his saga may have been spread while he was speaking out loud for the benefit of those around him.

Otto: “Even so, it’s true about wanted men and bandits being destroyed…”

Garfiel: “Otto-Bro, the Captain and Emilia-sama are sorry for what happened. Isn’t it about time you stopped complaining?”

Otto: “I don’t know why you did it in the first place. Garfiel is going to get a lecture from me later.”

Garfiel: “Gah! This is unnecessary trouble.”

Garfield gritted his teeth and regretted his gaffe. After all, Otto’s position in the camp seems to be that of a chaperone or an advisor. And in the midst of Shorty’s solidified impressions, the one person whose impression has yet to be solidified is…

Emilia: “I’m sorry for all the confusion. No one meant any harm…”

Shorty: “Yes, yes, yes. I can understand that, I think.”

Emilia: “Are you sure? I’m so relieved. I’m reeeally relieved.”

It was Emilia who smiled and patted her chest as if relieved. It was only a few minutes ago that Shorty thought that they should meet and talk to her in person. In this way, Shorty’s mental image was greatly stirred up in front of the real thing. The witch who froze the forests of her homeland and freakishly caused snow to fall on the Mathers territory has come back to life in the modern age.

Beatrice: “I told you, In fact… You’re a bottomless dunce, I suppose.”

Beatrice, who had come up next to Shorty, said so with a pout on her lips. In her current opinion, there were more omitted elements than in her earlier assessment of the person, but Shorty couldn’t disagree with her.

Emilia: “…?”

Emilia tilts her head curiously, even though she is being talked about herself. This was especially true when Shorty was surrounded by the carefree atmosphere she exuded.

12

???: “Okyakusama, please don’t misunderstand. As for that farce, Ram has stopped that charade from continuing. So it’s now up to Emilia-sama and Barusu.”

The maid who brought the tea to Shorty reminded him in a very cold tone. After the farce on the road was over, Shorty and Lulu Lara were once again taken to the mansion where Emilia was staying. A peach-haired maid brought them tea as they were ushered into the parlor. The first words were thrown out by the maid to Shorty and the others after a brief greeting. Shorty was too intimidated by the maid to say anything back. The fact that Lulu Lara’s brush never stopped painting the maid was proof that she was more than just a servant in the mansion.

Shorty: “Wow, that was one sharp maid… With Emilia-sama being like that, I thought the maid over there was more of a witch.”

Lulu Lara: “…Drew it”

Shorty: “Did you draw it? You’re so fast… It’s very intimidating.”

The picture of the maid who left the room clearly captured not only the beauty of her appearance, but also the oppressive feeling that cannot be expressed in writing. It is unlikely to be used as a news picture this time, but it is a picture of pure power that should be preserved. And so Shorty and Lulu Lara were enjoying the hospitality.

Emilia: “I’m sorry to keep you waiting. Subaru, had to go change clothes.”

Emilia appears in the parlor. She is accompanied by Subaru, who has changed his clothes, behind her is Beatrice, who is holding Subaru’s hand. It is an ideal combination of a candidate for the Royal Selection and her knight together.

Shorty: “But, Beatrice-sama…”

Beatrice: Well, Betty and Subaru are one in the same, In fact. Our relationship is a special one that no one can break, I suppose.

Subaru: “Actually, yes. I’m not kidding, if I’m too far away from Beako, I’ll pop and die. Oh, and please keep this off the record. It might be my… weakness, just in case.”

Shorty: “Oh, you mean, don’t talk about it. I understand.”

Beatrice was pulled in and placed on Subaru’s lap on the sofa. The two of them were sitting next to Emilia, who was sitting across from Shorty, they didn’t say anything about their situation, so it seemed to be normal. Shorty didn’t say anything about it either. Subaru’s tone was light, but Shorty could tell from listening to him that it was not a lie or a joke. It was a part of Shorty’s ability as a reporter that he could at least tell the difference.

Shorty: “Once again, thank you for taking the time to interview with us. I’ve already spoken to the other candidates for the Royal Selection…”

Emilia: “Yes, I heard. So I guess that means we’re the last ones, right?”

Shorty: “Yes. I don’t have any other motives for the order of the interviews, so I don’t want to be misunderstood…”

Shorty’s words were interrupted when he tried to explain what had happened so far. That was because he was taken aback by the scene in front of him.

Emilia: “First of all, thank you for coming to talk to me. I’m also happy to talk to someone who is willing to listen to my story, so thank you.”

“…”

That’s what Emilia, who was sitting facing him, was bowing deeply. Next to her, Subaru, instead of admonishing Emilia, also bowed his head in the same way. The other candidates for the Royal Selection were relatively positive and gracious in accepting Shorty’s interview. But this was the first time they bowed to him with thanks. It was less a testament to the discipline and politeness of Emilia and the others. Rather, it was a clear indication of the bad situation they were in and the depth of their preconceptions. The fact that they were able to get a straight interview in this way was exceptional for Emilia.

Shorty: “Emilia-sama…”

Emilia: “Yes, what is it?”

Shorty: “Why did you decide to join the Royal Selection, Emilia-sama?”

Shorty found himself asking the question as if it had just slipped out of his mouth. It may have been too frank and rude to ask Emilia, who had politely and courteously accepted the interview just before. Shorty’s intent in asking that question would be obvious without thinking… Emilia’s, being a half-elf, the situation is just too bad. Even though she is a candidate for the Royal Selection, it is clear to everyone that she is going to lose. In fact, Shorty had to bow his head with all of his gratitude to her for accepting the interview with such a young and unproven man. The odds were slim to none. So, why did she challenge them? Shorty's question must have had a hidden purpose. But…

Emilia: "…I didn't think too much of it at first."

She was not angry, but even had a smile on her lips. In front of Shorty, who was gasping for breath, Emilia gently put her hand on her chest and narrowed her purple-blue eyes as if thinking back to the "first" she had just said.

Emilia: "I was living in the forest when Roswaal came for me. That's when I first heard about the Royal Selection and that the king was gone, at first, I didn't know if I could handle such a big responsibility, so I just took it on for my own selfish reasons."

Shorty: "For selfish reasons?"

Emilia: "It's about family, sort of. I wasn't doing it for the kingdom or the people around me at all."

Sticking out her tongue in a small way, Emilia replies in a bashful manner. That overly honest answer would clearly have a negative impact on her chances at the Royal Selection if anyone were to hear it. There are already too many reasons to poke at her. But that's a short-sighted way of looking at things. There is more to her words now.

Shorty: "So you think differently now?"

Emilia: "Yes… Subaru and Beatrice next to me, as well as Ram and Otto-kun, Garfiel and Frederica, Petra-chan, Ryuzu-san, and Roswaal. There are people who expect me to be strong and push me forward."

As she answered, Emilia moved her fingers on her chest. It was only then that Shorty realized that what Emilia was touching was the crystalline stone that she wore around her neck. She touched the crystalline stone, which was cracked and had lost its light, as if loving it.

Emilia: “Everyone has been good to me, and I’ve learned a lot in my own way, and it’s a difficult position to be in, like Shorty-kun and the others are so worried about me. But, but…”

“…”

Emilia: “But I don’t want to give up. I want to do my best so that people can see exactly how I was born, how I was raised, and how I think.”

“…”

Emilia: “I don’t want to be told that what I want to do or be is wrong because of who I am or who I’m not. That’s what I’m trying to do right now.”

Emilia said this as her purple-blue eyes looked straight at Shorty. Shorty’s eyes widened at the determination expressed by Emilia in her faltering words. At the same time, Shorty was ashamed of the prejudice in his heart. Even though he wanted to be as fair as possible and treat her without preconceived notions, Shorty was still stuck in a fixed mindset. As a half-elf with silver hair and purple-blue eyes, Emilia must have lived with more prejudice, preconceptions, and incredible obstacles than Shorty can imagine. However, Emilia does not lament her circumstances any more than necessary, but rather chews them up. She chewed them up and gave them a reason to rise up. She decided to fight on the side of other people who were suffering the same kind of pain and who were exposed to unjustified discrimination. There are plenty of conditions for people to cast people into a mold and look down on them.

It doesn’t have to be anything exaggerated to have the same characteristics as the “Witch of Envy” who once almost destroyed the world. It is easy to be branded as “weak” if you were born in a bad neighborhood, if you have criminal parents, or even if you were simply born poor. And people can be incredibly cruel to the “weak”. Shorty, who grew up in the favelas, knew this all too well.

Shorty: “So, Emilia-sama, are you saying? That you would save us.”

It was Shorty’s unfair question on behalf of the “weak”. Shorty, who until a moment ago was acting like a stranger who had nothing to do with Emilia’s challenge to the Royal Selection, shamelessly tried to be the first to run up to her banner of salvation. What if Emilia had stuck her chest out and affirmed it? In any case, he doesn’t know the answer in that case. Because…

Emilia: “I want to be able to help people. But I can’t promise anything as big as I can help everyone.”

“…”

Emilia: “If two people want something, if it’s something they can share, fine, but if it’s not, only one of them can have it, right? I can’t help both of them.”

Shorty: “Then how can we be helped?”

Emilia: “Uh… I can’t help you, But I think it’s strange that you say you want help since you can’t get involved with the competition. So I won’t let that happen.”

“…”

Shorty: “Yes, you’re right. I’m sure I’ll leave some possibilities open for you. It’s fair game for everyone.”

Emilia nodded to Shorty’s clinging words as if to confirm them. Once the words had been sorted out in her mind and spat out, she did not retract them. She did not retract them, but gave a straight answer to Shorty’s question. In response, Shorty quietly rewrote his impression of Emilia. And next to Emilia, who nodded…

“…”

Subaru: “Yeah, Emilia-Tan, you’re looking great.”

Beatrice: “Naah! Subaru! Don’t wipe your tears with the collar of Betty’s dress, In fact!”

Subaru: “It’s not tears I wiped, you idiot, It’s snot… Dah!”

Beatrice: “That’s even worse, I suppose!”

Beatrice head-butted Subaru, who wiped his eyes and nose with her dress. Emilia’s knight and his escort ruined the mood, but just as well. If Shorty couldn’t hear this story from Emilia, he wanted to hear it from her knight.

Shorty: “Natsuki Subaru-dono, why did you become Emilia-sama’s knight? Is it because you share Emilia-sama’s current beliefs?”

Subaru: “Me…? When I look back on how it all started, it was an ulterior motive.”

Shorty: “And the ulterior motive…?”

Subaru replied, holding up a finger without taking offense. Shorty rolled his eyes at the unexpected answer, and Beatrice shook her head in dismay. However, even Beatrice did not correct Subaru’s words or silence him.

Subaru: “I saw a glimpse of her on the street, and I fell in love with Emilia-Tan at first sight. And as I ran around wanting to help Emilia-Tan…”

Shorty: “So you’re in this position now? But, Subaru-dono has defeated the White Whale and “Sloth”, right?”

Subaru: “It was all part of trying to act cool for the girl I liked.”

Scratching his cheek with his finger, Subaru smiled shyly. He was not in his usual joking mood, which made Shorty believed that he was serious in his answer. In other words, the reason why Subaru became a knight and has continued to achieve so many successes is because he is in love with Emilia…

Shorty: “Were you not shocked by Emilia-sama’s appearance?”

Subaru: “No, I was surprised by how cute she was. Even now, when I see her in the morning without preparing my heart, I get surprised.”

Emilia: “Oh, you’re joking around like that again.”

As she said this, Emilia tugged lightly on Subaru’s ear with her outstretched hand. Subaru yelped, “Ouch” Emilia’s cheeks blushed slightly as she smiled at Subaru.

Emilia: “Please don’t write about that joke in the article. Subaru, you get carried away too easily.”

Subaru: “I think it’s better to be written off as a check on a romantic rival…No, the purpose is to improve Emilia-Tan’s image, so isn’t flirting with me a good idea?”

Emilia: “I’m not flirting. Also, I don’t think I’ve ever helped Subaru…”

Subaru: “My heart would creak if I went into detail about that…”

Emilia’s lips pouted at Subaru, who defended himself with his ears still pinched. Beatrice, who was on Subaru’s lap, was watching the exchange between the two. In spite of the disarming atmosphere, Shorty was struck by shock. At the same time, Shorty clenched his fists tightly in frustration. On the one hand, Shorty was glad that he could hear Emilia’s story here and now, but on the other hand, Shorty also thought… why he was the one who was here.

“…”

Emilia spoke seriously about her feelings, and her words certainly touched Shorty’s heart. Shorty nodded without exaggeration that it was a wonderful determination, thought, and resolve. However, this was only the shock that Shorty felt when he spoke directly with Emilia and received her voice and gaze with his own body. It is not an easy task to bring the same thing to the readers of the Dragon Nation Newsletter. And it was not Emilia’s fault, but Shorty’s lack of ability. If Shorty’s writing was good enough to convey what he saw with his own eyes to everyone who read the article, he wouldn’t have to suffer like this. But unfortunately, Shorty’s current writing doesn’t have that much power. Other than Shorty, that is, the current Editor-in-Chief Morgan, it might have been possible. Shorty is unable to convey the correct information due to his inability to do so. This is the most dreadful situation for a reporter. It is a situation that can affect his career as a reporter. So what can Shorty Megan do? Aware of his own inadequacies, but still with the truth that he must tell in front of him, what will the reporter of the Dragon Nation Newsletter do?

"…"

Unbeknownst to him, Shorty was at a crossroads in his life, and he looked to Lulu Lara, who was pouring her heart and soul into her paintbrush, for help. As usual, Lulu Lara continued to draw pictures for the paper, ignoring the interview. This was her way of working, so she had no complaints, and Shorty had no expectations that her words would help. Lulu Lara was just moving her paintbrush at a breakneck pace, capturing the scene in front of her with incredible accuracy. Shorty gulped as he looked at the vividly drawn news picture. On impulse, he snatched the drawing book from Lulu Lara's lap.

Lulu Lara: "…No!"

Shorty: "Sorry, Lulu Lara! Let me see!"

Suddenly, Lulu Lara was shocked as if she had been stripped of her other half. While holding her bitingly angry forehead, Shorty looked over the dozen or so pictures that had been drawn since the beginning of this interview… or rather, since he had encountered Subaru and the others at the station. When Shorty looked at each of the pictures on there, he muttered, "Yeah, I knew it."

Shorty: "It's this look on Emilia-sama's face."

Picking up one of the press pictures, Shorty nodded, lowering the corners of his eyes. He then stretched out his arms and turned to Lulu Lara, who was retrieving her work tools, and hugged her petite body from the front.

Lulu Lara: "…Unhappy"

Shorty: "Lulu Lara, thank you, thank you! Thanks to you! Thanks to you, I've seen the light! I'm no good. After all, without you, I can't do it at all!”

Shorty thanked Lulu Lara from the front as she rolled her eyes and froze. Thanks to her, Shorty had a breakthrough. Shorty still had to curse himself a lot for his lack of ability, but Shorty would like to thank the heavens that he had a partner in Lulu Lara. Shorty Megan, as a reporter, finally knew what he had to do.

Shorty: “Emilia-sama, Subaru-dono! Please go ahead and tell us about the two of you… and not just the two of you, but about everyone!”

Emilia: “About us? Don’t you mean the Royal Selection?”

Emilia tilted her head at Shorty, who turned around and spoke with authority. Subaru and Beatrice on his lap were also tilting their heads in the same way, and Shorty couldn’t help but smile at their smiling faces. “Yes!” Shorty nodded vigorously. Shorty understood Emilia’s ideals and her beliefs. So, now we just need to make sure that people other than Shorty understand them…

Shorty: “…First, let me fall in love with you all!”

13

???: “…Shorty! Shorty! Is Shorty Megan here?”

The door was violently thrown open with the sound of loud footsteps and a rumbling voice. Immediately, the documents piled up in the room flew up, and Shorty, who was drowning in them, jumped up. Shorty jumped up, looked around, and jumped up at the eagle-nosed, tall man standing at the entrance.

Shorty: “Wow, Editor-in-Chief Morgan! Yes! Yes, yes, yes! Shorty Megan, I’m right here, I’m here, I’m awake!”

Morgan: “Yes, that’s right, Morgan Frantz, Editor-in-Chief of the Dragon Nation Newsletter! And you idiot! Of course you’re awake! The starting bell has rung! We’re at work!”

Shorty: “Oh, I’m sorry!”

Because of the height difference, it was as if he was shouting at Shorty from above, and Shorty had no choice but to hold his hat in his hands and shrink back. Shorty hurried to clear his head, trying to order the articles he had to write and the tasks he had to take care of. But…

Shorty: “Huh? Well, today I’m working on…”

Morgan: “What’s the matter, Shorty? Don’t you know what you’re doing?”

Shorty: “I’m sorry! Uh, what was I supposed to be covering today?”

Morgan: “Idiot! You are the only one who can do it. If you do, you’ll be the first to know. Because…”

Morgan thrusts something at Shorty, whose eyes are blank. As Shorty recoiled from the blow, he took two or three steps backward. As he did so, he saw the whole thing that had hit him in the face.

Shorty: “This, this, this, this is…”

Morgan: “Of course it’s a copy of Dragon Nation Newsletter! And more importantly, an article! What’s in it?”

Shorty: “My article on the Royal Selection!”

Shorty’s eyes light up, he gasps, and he falls to his knees as he snatches the copy of the Dragon Nation Newsletter… the paper with his article, out of Morgan’s hands.

Morgan: “You have been busy, Shorty Megan!”

Shorty: “Because, because, because… Finally, finally, finally, my article is…”

Morgan: “Yeah, don’t let that get you down! Shorty Megan! The motto of the Dragon Nation Newsletter is…”

Shorty: “…! It will not be published unless it is a report that will shake your heart!”

Morgan's eagle nose turned red, and Shorty responded by reflex. He even stood up quickly, straightened his back, and stood upright. In response to Shorty's reaction, Morgan stroked his eagle nose and nodded generously.

Morgan: "…It was a good article."

Shorty: "Oh…"

While touching on the claims of each of the candidates for the Royal Selection, what is new is the focus on their personalities, which has not been deeply explored in the past.

Shorty: "It may not be enough for those that want to follow the selection closely…"

Cutting off his words there, Morgan patted Shorty's frozen shoulder forcefully.

Morgan: "I'm sure those readers will be impressed by the last sentence! Stay tuned for more information on the Royal Selection candidates in the next issue…! So you're going to continue?"

Shorty: "Yes, that's the plan! No, I mean, with the editor's permission… Yikes!"

Morgan: "Fool! Don't be a wimp! Who can stand in the way of this project?"

Shorty's body flew through the air and plunged into a pile of documents. But Morgan didn't pay attention to that devastation of Shorty's.

Morgan: "Well done, Shorty, you've taken the plunge! In fact, I've received polite thank-you notes from all the candidates for the Royal Selection. I'll leave the interview with them to you in the future!"

Shorty: "Oh, thank you… But, Editor-in-Chief, this interview is on…"

Morgan: "Mm… Yes, I know what you mean. I'll leave it to you and

Lulu Lara!”

Correcting his last words, Morgan taped the article to the wall of the room as if to slam it down. Then he takes another look at the article, then turns his gaze to the corner of the room.

Morgan: “Nice news picture. I knew I made the right decision when I picked you guys up.”

That’s all he said, and then Mr. Morgan left the room with loud footsteps. Shorty was impressed by his dignity as a leader of the news reporters.

Shorty: “Oh man, you’re no match for me… Oh, Lulu Lara, thank you.”

Lulu Lara: “…Good”

Shorty shakes his head and struggles to get out of the pile of documents. Not seeing this, Lulu Lara, who was in the corner of the room, helps Shorty escape. She took his hand and pulled him out, and Shorty stood taller. Then he looked again at the article Morgan had posted on the wall. There was the article Shorty had written about the five candidates for king, along with a selection of press pictures that Lulu Lara had drawn.

The smiling Crusch, Anastasia and Priscilla standing side by side, and Felt with the Sword Saint are all quite ambitious, but Shorty’s favorite of all is…

Lulu Lara: “…had a good response.”

Shorty: “Oh, I see. Yeah, I guess so. I’m glad it did.”

Shorty smiled proudly at Lulu Lara’s words as she lined up next to him. The one that received the biggest response was a group painting of Emilia, Subaru, and the people from her camp who had gathered together. Shorty doesn’t know the value of the painting, but he can tell you that it is a masterpiece. That’s how good this one was.

Lulu Lara: “…And this?”

Shorty: “That’s because I wasn’t strong enough.”

Lulu Lara: “…?”

Shorty: “My writing skills were not enough to convey Emilia-sama’s determination, resolve, and everything she wanted to say. There were too many obstacles in the mind of the reader to accept it.”

Preconceived notions, prejudices, and many other things that have been in the way of Emilia’s life in the past are going to have a negative impact not only on her herself, but even on the writing that talk about her. Sadly, Shorty’s writing did not have the power to dispel that… How can Shorty get rid of that obstacle?

Shorty: “That farce was really bad. But it really took the edge off my shoulders.”

Lulu Lara: “…Farce”

Shorty: “I thought that was the starting point, that Emilia-sama was someone completely different from the “Witch of Envy”.”

“…”

Shorty had a prejudice against Emilia as a kind of “Envious Witch”. The first thing that shattered this prejudice was the poorly executed farce that was shown on the road. They discussed it in the camp and planned it to dispel the preconceived notions going around about Emilia, that poorly conceived and poorly planned farce… but it was important. The real Emilia, the one who does such things seriously, is the fact that many people in the kingdom, who cannot remain unaffected by the Royal Selection, need to know. Emilia, in her quest for fairness, Shorty did not fully accept or affirm her claims. There are times when preconceptions, prejudices, and the like are useful. It is just as valuable to keep them from getting lost in judgment as it is to keep them from getting it wrong. That’s why he didn’t fully agree with Emilia. However, Shorty’s reporter-ly answer is to appeal to fairness, saying that her arguments are worth listening to as well. In order to do so, the first step is to make it clear that Emilia is not the same person as the “Witch of Envy”.

Shorty: “So, this article is going to touch on the candidates’ goals and their personalities. Of course, I’ll go into more depth in future follow-ups.”

Lulu Lara: “…Gonna do it?”

Shorty: “Yes, of course. I’m sure Lulu Lara will be happy to know that all of them are good subjects.”

Shorty shrugged his shoulders, and Lulu Lara fell silent with a blank expression. Shorty laughed, seeing a certain passion in her profile that made it difficult to see her emotions. They have known each other for a long time… more than ten years now, since the favelas. If it hadn’t been for Lulu Lara, Shorty would not have been able to become a reporter for the Dragon Nation Newsletter, he would have lived a poorer life, or he would have died a long time ago. It was a plain white wall of stone with a large painting on it by Lulu Lara… the power of the painting was so powerful that it drove Shorty to make sure she didn’t end up living here. Thus, as a reporter, there are too many things in the world that are just a waste of time to let Shorty have his back to the fire and run around. So…

Shorty: “We’re not there yet, but we’ll be together for a long time to come, Lulu Lara.”

Lulu Lara: “…Can’t be helped”

Shorty: “Yes, I have no choice. Without you, I would still be a novice reporter.”

Shorty smiled at Lulu Lara, who slumped her shoulders as Shorty repositioned his hat.

Yes, there’s more to come. Fortunately, it would be easy for Shorty to apply for the follow-up interviews with the candidates for the Royal Selection because of the good responses to the article. In particular, he received a good response from Emilia’s camp. It was significant that Subaru, Emilia’s knight, had focused on the value of the Dragon Nation Newsletter’s article. As for Subaru, he was very active in this article about Emilia. This is because of his many historical achievements, but most of all, he is a man of many talents…

Shorty: “I didn’t think there would be this much of a response to the “Lolimancer”.”

Lulu Lara: “…Think, mystery”

Shorty: “Oh, I don’t think you’re mad at me, are you?”

All of the knights who were candidates for the king’s election had titles as well as spectacular achievements. So, it was an idea after much thought to prepare something appropriate for Subaru as well. This was due in large part to the relationship between Subaru and Beatrice… he had assured Shorty that he would not be able to fulfill his duties as a knight without her cooperation. So, as a result of Shorty’s naming of him as the “Lolimancer”, there was a tremendous response. Perhaps in the future, the names of Natsuki Subaru and “Lolimancer” will be inseparable.

Shorty: “I don’t know what I’ll do if I’m denied an interview because of this…”

Lulu Lara: “…Too late”

Shorty: “No, I know, but! It’s a job I don’t want to give up to anyone else now…”

The more Shorty thinks about it calmly, the more he feels like he has done something wrong, and the more his blood runs cold. Seeing Shorty begin to worry with a pale face as he was, Lulu Lara picked up a paintbrush. Then, in her usual tone again, Lulu Lara began to draw Shorty’s upset face.

Shorty: “That’s exactly how Lulu Lara does things here… Why do you draw so many pictures of me when you only draw what interests you in the first place?”

Lulu Lara: “…You know”

Shorty: “I don’t know! It’s just weird to have so many pictures of myself drawn.”

Shorty's voice betrays the freaky attitude of his partner, who tilts her head. In the meantime, she continues to paint. In the first place, the earlier problem has not been solved.

Shorty: "Ah… Should I bring them an apology gift? But if he's not mad, I am a jerk… Wow, I'm scared of the future!"

Lulu Lara: "…Plate"

Shorty: "Lulu Lara is no stranger to this, you know?"

Lulu Lara waved her hand in a small way, and Shorty saw it and shouted a scream. Behind them, in a pile of documents, Shorty's written interview was left unorganized, and it slowly began to lean. Shorty and Lulu Lara's names will remain for a long, long time as the first two people to conduct interviews with the candidates at the heart of the disputed Royal Selection that will involve not only the Kingdom of Lugnica but also neighboring countries…

Shorty: "Waah…?"

Lulu Lara: "…Kyu" (Grab)

The two of them are crushed by the crumbling pile of documents and get lost together in the office, but for the time being, that's another story.

As a side note, this article was published in the Dragon Nation Newsletter, which became the highest-selling issue of all time, and most of the people of the kingdom waited with baited breath for further news on the candidates…

END

Sword Identity I

1

???: “—Let the conference commence.”

The solemn and austere proclamation echoed around the place of assembly.

It was not particularly loud, but that voice had the strength to cleave through the tense atmosphere, and forcibly shake the eardrums of those assembled.

It could be described in other words as self-confidence and ego. None of it was half-heartedly firm, but that was to be expected.

The reason being because the owner of said voice was the head of a country, the Emperor of an Empire that lived by the law of survival of the fittest.

—The Seventy-Seventh Emperor of the Sacred Vollachian Empire, Vincent Vollachia.

A fine figure of a man, with glossy black hair and dignified slitted eyes, his slender form adorned in ornamented attire without it being overly extravagant. He held an intelligent light in his dark eyes; he was praised as a wise Emperor who possessed ingenuity and possessed every corner of the Empire within his consideration.

Under his reign as Emperor, the Vollachian Empire had entered its first era of peace since its founding.

In the strife-ridden Vollachian Empire, the seven years following his ascension to the throne were spoken of as the most peaceful nights in history by the populace, day-after-day.

However, capability as a statesman was not proportional to a gentle disposition. —The current Emperor, like all previous Emperors of Vollachia, was ruthless.

The fact that this was well-known could be sensed from the atmosphere in the assembly hall.

Everyone: “…”

The Generals had gathered in the assembly hall for the conference. They were in charge of the powerful nation of Vollachia’s Military in various forms, and their expressions were stern as they stayed on their toes.

The Generals knew this. —If they displayed weak behavior in front of others, much less the Emperor, it would be fatal for themselves.

???: “Now then, on the agenda today, there are a considerable number of topics to discuss”

A cool voice followed Vincent’s words, somehow giving a leisurely impression in the strained, tense life-and-death air of the assembly hall.

He was a figure of nothing but white, from his white hair to his white face to the white outfit covering his whole body.

A great long table had been set up in the spacious assembly hall, with the Emperor at the head, and it was arranged so that the seats were filled in order of rank, starting with the position near the Emperor.

Thus, the all-white figure was seated directly at the side of the Emperor—It was nothing less than the most trusted and valued position to the Emperor.

Chisha Gold. —That was the name of the tall all-white figure, the Emperor Vincent Vollachia’s deeply-trusted chief strategist.

Chisha, who had contributed to the Emperor’s reign with his outstanding resourcefulness and profound discernment, was simultaneously one of the Nine Divine Generals at the top of the Vollachian Imperial Military. He was one of the nine people given the top rank of First-Class General in the General system of the Vollachian Empire.

Naturally, unlike the Second-Class Generals and Third-Class Generals, some of whom had been invited to the conference, all of the First-Class Generals had been called before the Emperor—□,

Chisha: “To begin with, first on the agenda… It is troubling that the gathering of First-Class Generals is the absolute worst.”

That Chisha had been the first to bring it up was also a serious matter.

—For a fact, Chisha’s words were not false.

For the one who should be the most esteemed in the Empire, the seats around Vincent were conspicuously empty. That meant, it was evidence that the attendance rate of the First-Class Generals—of the Nine Divine Generals, was poor.

???: “What a disgrace! If we, who ought to be the model for the Second-Class Generals, do this, how can we face the other Generals!”

???: “I, punctual. Naturally.”

The one ferociously and the other mechanically expressing their dissatisfaction, were the two of the First-Class Generals filling the vacant seats aside from Chisha—Goz Ralfon and Moguro Hagane.

Goz, a veteran soldier, and Moguro, who was known as a steel man of unique origin, both were highly loyal to the Emperor and, like Chisha, attended the conference as a matter of course.

Thus, it was only the three of them who filled the honored seats of the Nine Divine Generals properly.

Goz: “What happened to Groovy, the one leading the campaign, or better yet, Sir Olbart!”

Chisha: “I have received a letter of absence from Sir Olbart. …Well, let me put it this way: General Goz knows what he is doing by leaving out Cecilus and Arakiya.”

Moguro: “Expectations, futile”

Goz raised his voice at each absence. When Chisha smiled bitterly at that, Moguro affirmed it with a concise sentiment.

In the Vollachian Empire where the strong were respected, the requirements for being chosen as one of the Nine Divine Generals were plain and simple. There was nothing more to it than being a powerful person with great military prowess. As a result, compared to other countries the Empire had unparalleled military strength, but going up the ranks discipline tended to become lax.

It was no wonder that the two Goz did not expect to attend—Cecilus Segmunt and Arakiya, the First and Second Ranks of the Nine Divine Generals respectively, had been left out.

In any case—

Goz: "The conference taking place on His Excellency's time, what do they all take it for…!"

Vincent: "—The same old chirping and whining.」

Goz: "Your Excellency…!"

Goz's stern face flushed red with anger, as he was chided by the good-looking man at the head of the table, the Emperor Vincent Vollachia.

Vincent's slitted eyes narrowed at the empty seats of the Nine Divine Generals,

Vincent: "From the beginning, I had no expectation of their attendance. Even on a Shatranj* board, each piece moves in its own manner. If one disregards that and moves as one pleases, the board will go amok without regard to the intention of the move. Above all —"

???: "His Excellency did not revive the Nine Divine General system to demand good behavior. That is how I understand it, for one."

Vincent: "Mm"

His words taken halfway through, Vincent let out a small sniff.

The one unafraid of impiety in decisively interrupting the Emperor's speech, sat adjacent to Vincent—an aged man with tidied greying hair who sat facing the unfilled seats.

He was a capable person who held the most powerful position in the Vollachian Empire after the Emperor. As the Nine Divine Generals were the top of the military, he was the top of the civil office, the Prime Minister Berstetz Fondalfon.

Goz: "Prime Minister, to interrupt His Excellency's words…"

Berstetz: "My apologies. However, His Excellency is also occupied with government affairs. I thought it my duty as a loyal subject to expedite the conference, as much as possible."

Goz: "Are you suggesting that we interrupt the will of His Excellency!"

Berstetz: "Do not become overzealous, General Goz. I am afraid His Excellency's gaze is growing cold."

Goz: "Gu…hh"

Goz rebuked Berstetz's obtrusive deeds, but the experienced Prime Minister easily sidestepped.

Unfortunately, Goz and Berstetz were of different wits in a war of words. Goz had the full confidence of officers and men as a soldier who had worked his way up, and as expected his true value to be demonstrated on the battlefield.

And, where the battlefield laid depended on the nature of the person in question—Chisha was likewise more suited to a battlefield in which he was able to use his head rather than wield a lance.

Moguro: "Cecilus, Arakiya, those two, now."

Berstetz: "Yes, it is as Moguro-dono says. That the seats of those two, First and Second, would be empty has already been taken into account… I think we should get into the main issue of the conference promptly."

Vincent: “…It matters not. Chisha, begin.”

In the end, Goz was unable to recover after being backed into a corner, and the conference moved on.

Chisha sighed, with a sidelong glance at Goz, who seemed to be about to break the gauntlets of his golden armor from gripping them so tightly. He let out a “Well then,” and tried to go on to the issue at hand.

Every single time, before the beginning of the conference, the body and spirit would be wasted.

—This too, was how things were for today’s leaders of the Sacred Vollachian Empire.

2

The term coup d’etat was one that frequently appeared in Vollachian history books.

As mentioned previously, in Vollachia where survival of the fittest was respected as the natural way of things, the instilled value of taking what one wanted by brute force was encouraged. That could be land for officers and men, or plundering a loved one, or fighting for accumulated wealth, the options are too numerous to mention.

Of course, there were also certain rules for demonstrating such might.

Without that, a world in which power ruled unchecked would be nothing more than a lawless land.

There was once a time in which such lawlessness went unpunished, but today’s Empire is different. —The Emperor of this age, Vincent Vollachia, possessed outstanding political skill.

He naturally governed the whole of the Empire by laying down laws, and sought prudence in how power was demonstrated.

As a result, many Imperial citizens benefited from this, and no small amount of relief spread among the weak. The weak who were expected to be oppressed and expended, had been saved.

But at the same time, he listened to the lamentations of the strong who had been the oppressors, and improved the laws put in place.

Since many related parties detested each other, and duels and the like had repeatedly destroyed many houses in a chain of retribution, appropriate authorities intervened, and devised ways to stop the flames of anger from spreading.

It could be called the beginning of an age where it was harder to die and easier to live, for both the strong and the weak.

However, it would be a mistake to think of Vincent as a merciful Emperor for bringing it about.

Vincent: “Although our national flag touts the Sword Wolf, even among wolves there are superiors and inferiors. And a pack cannot exist without individuals of various sizes. It is possible that the wolves may consume each other. However, the eating of bad meals that could destroy the pack will be suppressed. It is a necessity to make that known.”

That was Vincent’s policy, and the purpose for the altered Imperial laws.

Vincent’s politics kept the surface of the board arranged as neatly as he saw fit. For that reason, he did not balk if it distorted the Empire’s old conventions and ways of doing things, or if he trampled them underfoot.

In a way, he was a most unusual Vollachian Emperor, and a typical Vollachian Emperor.

Seven years had passed since Vincent had taken the throne—Vollachia had entered an era of peace since its founding. Therefore, the word coup d’etat was far from relevant.

Excluding the period immediately following his succession, the reign of Vincent Vollachia had suffered a situation that could be called a coup d'etat just once, in the beginning…

Chisha: "—The empty seat of the Nine Divine Generals, we need to fill it."

Vincent: "…"

Once the conference was underway and some of the items on the agenda had been digested, Chisha brought up the topic.

At that moment, the atmosphere in the assembly hall became chilly and tense.

Goz, who always had a stern look, had creases chiseled between his brows like a craggy rock, and even Moguro, whose face structure could not be easily understood, seemed to have vaguely changed in mood.

The Second-Class Generals and below without seats also felt the tension. The only two other than Chisha whose expressions had not changed were Vincent and Berstetz.

—A vacant position among the top military officers, the Nine Divine Generals. That was not something that should ever happen.

The sole qualification for the Nine Divine Generals was strength, which meant the position was synonymous with defeat being impermissible. To be missing signified death from defeat.

And, the reason for the loss of the Ninth Seat, was not confined to death from defeat.

Goz: "If only Balleroy hadn't been so stupid."

Goz grumbled with a disgusted expression, crossing his brawny arms. No one followed his remark, but that no one rebuked him showed their inner thoughts were the same.

Balleroy Temeglyph—The missing Ninth General, and one of the key players who had brought about the coup d'etat in Vollachia.

A plot by one of the Nine Divine Generals, involving the emissaries of a foreign country, had aimed to take Vincent's life. That was the reality of the greatest coup d'etat since the start of Vincent's reign.

Consequently, Vincent had received a nearly-mortal wound, but the coup d'etat had ended with the defeat of the man who had been the main culprit and the perpetrator, Balleroy.

That had taken place two months prior, and since then one seat of the Nine Divine Generals had remained empty.

Bearing in mind Vincent's unobjectionable return to governance, the seat could not be left vacant indefinitely.

The late proposal, it was justified.

Chisha: "As there is a necessity to keep the neighboring country in check, it is about time we think on it."

As silence fell over the assembly hall, Chisha once again stirred the waters.

Each person's attention understandably went to Vincent. Under their gazes, Vincent glanced over to the truly empty seat.

The empty seat whose back Balleroy Temeglyph had blithely leaned on.

Chisha: "Your Excellency."

Vincent: "It matters not. I have no time to waste on the deceased. Select your personnel swiftly."

Chisha: "Yes. I am grateful for your approval."

In an instant, Vincent narrowed his dark eyes and gave a parting shot.

Having received his words, Chisha bowed to the Emperor's judgement and continued. Then, he turned to face Goz who was sullenly crossing his arms,

Chisha: "General Goz, what do you think? Are there any capable generals that have caught your eye?”

Goz: “Mm, right… I can think of several who excel in military strategy, but if we are talking about those who could rank among the Nine Divine Generals, what about Second-Class General Kafma Irulux?”

Chisha: “Second-Class General, Kafma?”

Goz, who was in contact with a wide range of Generals, came up with a name that was naturally familiar to Chisha.

Kafma Irulux had risen to the position of Second-Class General at a young age due to his outstanding talent. He was a member of the Insect Cage Tribe, which was rare even for the racially-diverse Vollachian Empire.

The Insect Cage Tribe kept parasites called bugs inside their bodies, using them from a young age, and had a special technique to borrow the abilities of the bugs in an emergency.

But the problem was—

Moguro: “Kafma’s relatives, Balleroy, collusion”

Chisha: “As General Moguro says, the aforementioned Second-Class General Kafma is supposed to be on house arrest, is he not?”

The Insect Cage Tribe were among those who had supported Balleroy’s plotted regicide, and, at the same time, they were Kafma’s clan of origin.

Kafma himself seemed to have not been made aware of the treason, but he had been blamed for the participation of many of his relatives, and was currently also held in a state of confinement.

Chisha: “I have my doubts about whether he is worthy to be the next seat of the Nine Divine Generals.”

Goz: “If that’s the case, shouldn’t we give him the chance to redeem himself! He himself feels responsible for his relatives taking part in treason! As it is, he is even prepared and willing to take his own life."

Vincent: "Hmm…"

Goz: "Your Excellency! I know I am going out on a limb here but let me just say this! Kafma Irulux is a man too loyal to Your Excellency to lose! Please, judge him leniently!"

Standing out of his chair with a stomp, Goz leaned forward and put his hands on the table in a direct appeal.

Were it anyone else, they would be rightly accused of disrespect, but the burning in Goz's eyes and chest were nothing but the flames of loyalty and righteous indignation.

Goz: "Your Excellency!"

Vincent: "Do not raise your voice to me, you mere commoner. The volume with which you speak is pointless. Do not lean so far forward, your voice is echoing not just through the assembly hall but throughout the entire palace."

Therefore, Vincent does not rebuke Goz with the exception of the volume of his voice.

Vincent himself had told him, and Goz gulped weakly "I am sorry…!" yet still apologized loudly,

Goz: "Still! Please reconsider! The missing seat of the Nine Divine General and clemency for a loyal and faithful General, the two problems should be solvable in one stroke!"

Vincent: "—. Chisha."

Chisha: "Yes. To offer my opinion, General Goz's option is not a bad one."

To Vincent's request for his opinion, Chisha stroked his own sharp chin as he responded.

The surrounding circumstances had turned out poorly, but Chisha also knew of Kafma Irulux's distinguished military service. As Goz had said, losing one of the Empire's premier Generals could only be a heavy loss.

To say nothing of the fact that the Empire had already lost Balleroy Temeglyph.

Days after the incident, the Kingdom of Lugunica had signed an armistice treaty, but even so it had been for a period of three years, after which no one knew what would happen.

Something like a period during which it would be permissible for the Empire to be at reduced strength, would always be absurd.

Chisha: "I'm certain that General Second-Class Kafma has his own inclinations too, but I cannot imagine there is anyone in the Empire who would turn down a promotion to the Nine Divine Generals when approached."

Vincent: "Hm. As expected, that is a compelling argument coming from a man who unwillingly filled his seat."

Chisha: "…Jest all you like. I have already resigned myself long ago."

Drawing unexpected sarcasm from the Emperor, Chisha shrugged his slender shoulders in self-deprecation.

He would be deeply sympathetic about being approached in such a way, supposing Kafma was not prepared and aiming for the position of General First-Class. Additionally, Chisha would be happy to see more like himself.

Chisha himself felt heavily burdened by being granted an excessively high position like the Nine Divine Generals.

It was certainly more in his nature to handle a civil position than a military one.

Berstetz: "—Your Excellency, may I also say something?"

Goz had made a strong recommendation for a new, capable person to be offered the unfilled seat of the Nine Divine Generals. In the assembly hall that had seemed to reach a consensus, the one humbly raising his hand was Berstetz.

The Imperial Prime Minister, whose eyes were thin like thread and whose inner feelings could not be guessed, bowed his head reverently when Vincent permitted his opinion with just a glance,

Berstetz: “As Goz-dono has given Kafma-dono his recommendation, there is a person I would like to recommend to you as well.”

Goz: “What did you just say?!”

Goz’s eyes widened and glared at Berstetz, who had turned the discussion up till now on its head with his remark.

Just as Goz was hoping to bring good news to the General he favored, Berstetz had tried to pluck it from his hands. Goz’s reaction was quite natural.

Goz: “Prime Minister… You dare to meddle in the affairs of the Nine Divine Generals who head the Imperial Military!”

Berstetz: “With all due respect, my position as Prime Minister… obliges me to devote myself to the betterment of the Empire. That being the case, allow me to share my opinion.”

Goz: “—You”

In contrast to Goz’s indignation, Berstetz responded with consistent composure.

Growing impatient with that reply, Goz’s eyes quietly began to fill with fierce hostility. Like a predator before its prey, his posture showed his powers of concentration had been elevated.

It meant the rise of the fighting spirit of the one known as “The Lion Knight”, Goz Ralfon.

However—

Vincent: “Cease, commoner. After becoming accustomed to it, your voice is all the more clamorous. —Berstetz, you said there was one who you wished to recommend. Speak."

Goz: "Your Excellency! Please reconsider…"

Vincent: "I already told you, cease."

Goz: "—Tch."

Asked to close his mouth again, Goz kept silent, red-faced.

In response, Berstetz assented,

Berstetz: "I respect your magnanimous judgment."

Vincent: "Be silent. I will not tell you a third time. Speak, swiftly."

Berstetz: "Yes. The person I would like to recommend for the next of the Nine Divine Generals is Madelyn Eschart."

Hearing the much-awaited name he had prompted from Berstetz, Vincent's eyebrows drew together. It was a rare surprise, a reaction that would have been too modest for anyone other than him.

In fact, Chisha, Goz, and many of the other Generals in attendance, wore identical dubious expressions.

The reason being, the name of the person, Madelyn, was one no one happened to know of.

Moguro: "I, unknown name. Prime Minister, who is that?"

The taciturn Moguro asked the question representative of all present.

His opportunities to speak were few, and his words faltering, but by no means was Moguro not listening to the conversation, nor was he dull-witted. In a sense, he grasped things more flexibly than Goz, as he was a person who could sift out essential information.

To Moguro's inquiry, Berstetz touched his mustache,

Berstetz: "It is natural you would find it surprising. Since Madelyn Eschart… She has no experience working under the Imperial Military, and no track record of leading a group.”

Chisha: “That’s… no matter how you look at it”

Goz: “—Out of the question!!”

Chisha was convinced with the divulged reasons as to why he would not have heard of her, and Goz, who had been ordered to be silent by Vincent, could not bear anymore and yelled out angrily.

But for once, no one could hold it against Goz. All the Generals gathered in the assembly hall, including the First Generals without exception, were skeptical of Berstetz’s idea.

No military experience, and no track record of leadership. In other words, it was evident this person had not achieved anything tangible. —Who would listen to such a recommendation?

Goz: “Are you ridiculing the honor of our Imperial Soldiers!”

Berstetz: “Do not be absurd. I told you. As the Empire’s Prime Minister, I would like to offer my opinion regarding the future of the nation. That statement is no fabrication.”

Goz: “How can you say such a thing…”

A blue vein popping on his brow, Goz’s patience was reaching criticality. But before he could explode, Vincent’s voice rang out, “Wait”.

His elbows propped on the armrests of his chair, Vincent rested his chin on his hands and turned towards Berstetz with an evaluative look. Drawing that gaze, Berstetz called to him, “Your Excellency”.

Berstetz: “Once again, I have no intention of conspiring against you, or disrespecting the position of the Nine Divine Generals. I am confident that Madelyn Eschart will surely be able to meet Your Excellency’s expectations.”

Vincent: “Do not speak of confidence so easily. What are her capabilities?”

Berstetz: "—She commands, sky dragons."

Vincent: "…"

At that moment, the air in the assembly hall became still.

Incidentally, as he listened, even Chisha gasped at how reckless that statement had been.

The technique known as Sky Dragon Riding, was a special skill involving the subjugation of the ferocious and brutal sky dragons found only in Vollachia. It took a long time and a lot of talent to be able to subdue sky dragons, and those who could become sky dragon riders were exceedingly few.

As such, sky dragon riders were considered useful, but that was not where the problem lay.

The one of the Nine Divine Generals who had committed treason, Balleroy Temeglyph, had also been a rider of sky dragons.

Everyone: "…"

For the deceased Balleroy's position's replacement, a dragon rider like Balleroy had been suggested.

Regardless of intention, his proposal could only be thought of as an act of provocation.

It could be said it was only natural that the Generals were speechless, and that Vincent also did not have the words to continue.

Wondering what he was thinking, it seemed the area around Goz was about to erupt.

However—

Vincent: "That is like you. Nevertheless, you cannot endorse a sky dragon rider just to replace a sky dragon rider."

Berstetz: "Yes, you have keen insight. Of course, I too, for merely being a sky dragon rider… Even though one possessed such a precious skill, I would not think them qualified to be ranked among the Nine Divine Generals. Even so.”

Vincent: “What.”

Berstetz: “I have just one correction. —I did not describe Madelyn Eschart as a sky dragon rider. She commands sky dragons, that is what I conveyed.”

With a smile that showed no true feelings, the Prime Minister answered the Emperor’s question.

It could be said it was typical for the sides of the conference for both to probe at each other’s true motives without conveying their own.

However cunning his opponents, for such a person to be placed in the seat of Prime Minister, that itself was proof that Berstetz was a competent man.

—Select for talent, and make use of that to create the board.

Vincent was by no means himself a man of exceptional valor, but that was his unconditional method for governing Vollachia, the land of the Sword Wolf.

Therefore, Vincent would once more exercise his own abilities to the fullest.

Vincent: “Kafma Irulux and Madelyn Eschart, summon them both.”

Chisha: “It is no problem for me, but is that all right?”

Vincent: “It matters not. I have an understanding of Kafma’s potential. If possible, an ascertainment of Madelyn’s is also required. If I am unable to see it, that means Berstetz is getting old. I am not so merciful as to provide a position for an incompetent old man. Understood?”

Chisha: “Understood, Your Excellency.”

Despite the callous looks towards him, Berstetz bowed showing no sign of fear.

He did not expect Vincent to show mercy, nor for him to take it lightly. He had absolute confidence in his own judgment, at any rate—

Goz: “Commands sky dragons, he says… Who gives a damn! Kafma can command bugs too!”

Moguro: “Goz, that, not important. I, think.”

Goz: “We do not need to rely on sky dragons, even bugs can carry His Excellency! Am I wrong, Moguro!”

Moguro: “Not wrong. But, I, dislike bugs.”

Berstetz’s view had been accepted, and Moguro quelled the irritated Goz.

With a sidelong glance, Chisha internally reprioritized governmental affairs.

The new replacement for the Nine Divine Generals was a high priority. He was not certain what would be the difference in merit between Kafma and Madelyn, but he assumed there was a high probability they would compete with force.

If that was the case, it would be necessary to establish a time and place—

Chisha: “Good grief, looks like things will be getting busy. Just when the matter of that insurrection was finally starting to settle down.”

Patting his shoulder in premonition of the hard work to come, Chisha accepted the resolution of the discussion for the time being.

It would be necessary to do something to deal with it, perhaps by saying something to Goz afterwards, but asking that of Vincent would probably be expecting a bit too much.

Since Vincent had already done more than enough in accordance with his own duty.

Chisha: "…In a country where the strong do as they please, the crowning role of Emperor is imposed upon and cannot act freely. I find that rather ironic."

Even so, it was a position he had desired and won, so it was an outcome he had to bear.

There were also a great many ways to escape if one really wanted to. He could think of some who had actually escaped the confines of the birdcage, but—

???: "—Oh, is everyone here? Please forgive me for this."

He spoke, just as the conference was about to come to a conclusion.

The doors to the assembly hall had been pushed open to reveal a person with a light tone of voice. The man with an easy-going smile peeked inside, wearing a large blue rope that hung from his head.

He was a character too detached from the tense air of the assembly hall.

At this person's entrance, even Chisha had faint disgust etched into his white face,

Chisha: "Mr. Stargazer, is it? On what sort of business have you made an appearance?"

Stargazer: "Oh no, I didn't know you were actually in the middle of a conference, sorry. You see, His Excellency has kindly allowed me to stay at the Crystal Palace, but I'm basically a good-for-nothing freeloader."

Without minding the unwelcoming atmosphere, the man—the Stargazer, answered flippantly.

To that, Chisha's response was limited to a hollow "I see".

Stargazer was not a position of the Imperial Military like the Generals, nor a civil office like that of Berstetz, it was something unusual—it was the one and only such position in the Vollachian Empire.

He was not a personage welcome by anyone, including Chisha.

But—

Vincent: “I do not recall summoning you, jester.”

Save for the Emperor himself, who called out to him like that and made no attempt to keep him away.

While exposed to the vigilance and disgust of those around him, the Stargazer scratched his cheek in response to Vincent’s words. His attitude was like that of a child being rebuked for fooling around, but the situations were incomparable.

He acted as if he did not know he was legitimately riding the line between life and death.

Vincent: “We are in the midst of a conference. You have no role to play here. Leave, swiftly.”

Stargazer: “Of course, I will bear in mind my own position. Since it is at Your Excellency’s mercy that I am allowed to stay here. But, I have to play my part.”

Vincent: “Ho.”

At his refusal, Vincent closed one eye and let out an interested puff of air.

At the same time, Chisha and the other Generals went on guard all at once.

—No one liked or trusted this Stargazer.

But the prophecy the Stargazer would bring was a different story.

Vincent: “You could not even foresee Balleroy’s treasonous plot, so what have you seen this time? If you cannot say something beneficial, expect to have your slender neck wrung."

Stargazer: "Please don't say such scary things. As you can see, I'm just a stick of a man. If I'm threatened like that, my knees will break from shaking."

Goz: "Enough of your nonsense! His Excellency demands an answer! Hurry up and answer him!"

Stargazer: "Uwah!"

The Stargazer suffered Vincent's threat and Goz's enraged shouting. He jumped back in an exaggerated manner, and gave a strained smile under the Generals' gaze,

Stargazer: "It looks like I'm not welcome here. So I'll do as you said… Your Excellency, if you're having any problems, it seems your troubles will soon be over."

Vincent: "—. What do you mean."

Stargazer: "Uhh, if someone is competing for supremacy, this is the best opportunity to do it. It's a little hazy, but I think that's about all I can say…"

Vincent: "Is that so. Moguro, sharpen your arm."

Moguro: "Understood."

His head tilted in thought, the Stargazer spoke those words, and Vincent nodded and gave the command to Moguro.

Heeding the command, Moguro raised his huge arm, and the mineral-like smooth arm slowly transformed, and started steadily sharpening to a spear-like point.

Even Chisha knew that Moguro's arm was as sharp and dangerous as a sword. With an arm that could easily cut through solid stone, he could probably take off the heads of ten Stargazers at once.

Stargazer: "Your Excellency?! You're not seriously going to execute me?!"

Vincent: “Nonsense, why would I do such a thing?—First, let us start with the fingers.”

Stargazer: “Surely Your Excellency must also know that information obtained from torture is worthless?!”

Vincent: “With those who hold their tongues like you, firstly it is vital to make them speak. After they do so, one can examine the content with care. Is that not correct?”

Vincent’s severe and rational conclusion caused the Stargazer to shrink away, and his back hit the wall. Moguro, standing more than three meters tall, approached the cornered Stargazer.

Under that oppression, the Stargazer looked around as if searching for aid but,

Goz: “Hmm, we must not allow the assembly room to get stained with blood. Somebody go get a sheet!”

Goz in particular acted as though the torture were a decided matter, and there was no indication anyone would help. Of course, Chisha was the same. There was no reason for him to oppose Vincent and side with the Stargazer.

As it stood, the time when the Stargazer’s fingers would become shorter than the average person’s was at hand—

Messenger: “—Excuse me for interrupting the meeting! There is something I must report!”

Thus, following the Stargazer, a messenger burst into the assembly hall, and the bloody situation was temporarily shelved.

3

Fluttering, white and yellow butterflies flitted about before their eyes.

???: “…”

They gazed at the two butterflies, and their aimless, irregular movements fluttering their wings in midair, and pondered what was actually the relationship between the two of them.

Thinking without puzzling over it, they were probably family? But how could butterflies of differing colors, white and yellow, be blood relatives? Could they have inherited the characteristics of their parents, like humans do with hair color?

???: “But I feel like butterflies basically stick with their own kind.”

If it were a human and a demi-human, they had similar forms and would be able to communicate with language, so love could sprout between them, and a child might be born. The same could be said for butterflies, but strangely enough, they didn’t get the sense that those types of living creatures mated with species different from their own.

Like how birds also paired with similar birds, not different birds.

???: “Oh, but cats and dogs aren’t like that… Am I overthinking it?”

Absorbed in their thoughts, they kept racking and racking their brain to the limit, and then they withdrew from attempting the difficult unanswered question.

What if they abandoned the possibility of the two butterflies being family, and saw them as sworn enemies?

Thinking of it that way, it was curious that the dance of the butterflies, irregularly changing places with each other, looked like a life-and-death battle where none did concede an inch.

They also became curious about the techniques used by butterflies. Although human eyes could not see the regularity of it, perhaps butterflies use a sort of insect-killing martial art?

If learned, there may be an opportunity to make use of it in their own swordsmanship.

???: “Speaking of, it seems like the Insect Cage Tribe can come to a mutual understanding with their own bugs, though I don’t think there’s anyone who has a butterfly. If there were, my troubles would be solved.”

Basically, they had heard that the bugs the Insect Cage Tribe allowed to parasitize their bodies were mostly aggressive types. But if it were a butterfly that used insect-killing martial arts, wouldn’t that be sufficient qualification to be counted among the strong?

Preferably, they wanted to observe more closely, and turned their attention towards the butterflies—

—In a flash, red flames poured down from on high, and the field of flowers was instantly consumed.

???: “…”

The idyllic scene from a moment before vanished without a trace, flowers reduced to ash by the licking tongues of flames.

The world that had been painted in gentle hues of blue, green, and yellow, had been swallowed up and repainted into a red hellscape.

It was not just plants and flowers, starting with the butterflies, various bugs and animals had been turned to ashes in an instant.

And, the reason behind it was—

???: “A violent greeting as usual, huh.”

The young man with swaying blue hair looked back at the scorched field of flowers from a bit of a distance, shrugging his shoulders. Before his eyes, standing in the middle of the burning field uncaring of the scorching flames, was a half-naked young lady.

Her outfit left her dark skin mostly exposed, herself possessing floppy dog ears and silver hair, and an eyepatch concealing her left eye. She was the one responsible for the burned field of flowers.

Her name was—

???: "—Anya."

Anya: "…No, it's Arakiya. Don't make me keep saying it."

When called Anya, it was immediately refuted with an unhappy look by this girl—Arakiya.

He heard her answer, but the young man answered back "No, no", shaking his head. And so, without stopping his shaking,

Young man: "Sorry, but that's what I've called you since we were kids, right? I can't correct it now, my mouth has already learned this movement by heart."

Arakiya: "So, since forever, I've been saying…!"

Young man: "Yeah, yeah, I know. So I've also been saying since forever, right. —If Anya beats me, I'll humbly correct myself. And yet,"

Arakiya: "And yet?"

Young man: "And yet, isn't it Anya's fault for not beating me all this time? If you say it's my fault, I can only say I'm sorry for being too strong, yeah?"

He closed one eye and smiled charmingly at her. At that, Arakiya's face filled with rage, her whole body exuding fighting spirit and creating a frightening atmosphere.

Seeing that, the young man let out an "Oh dear", and once more opened both hands in front of his chest,

Young man: "C'mon, look, it's not safe here."

Arakiya: "…Butterflies?"

Fluttering, the white and yellow butterflies flew up from his open hands.

When Arakiya had rushed in along with her flames, he had promptly covered them with his hands and protected the two butterflies. Had he abandoned them, they likely would have burned along with the flower field.

Young man: “It’d be a bummer to have a long-awaited one-on-one duel spoiled by an interruption. If you consider yourselves indebted to me, I’d certainly like to hear who wins…”

White and yellow, the conclusion of the battle of two butterflies and what had led to it in the first place. It must surely be a delightful story, and the young man’s curiosity was inexhaustible.

But, it seemed hearing the rest of the story would be difficult, and the young man sighed as he sliced through an oncoming ball of flames.

Young man: “Really Anya, you’ve been tactless since you were a kid, y’know.”

Arakiya: “I was never Anya in the first place.”

Young man: “Say what you want, but you’re rather proud of it, aren’t you?”

Waving his drawn sword, the young man grinned at Arakiya with her hand turned toward him. At his remark Arakiya gave a baffled expression, but the answer was plain.

Anyhow—

Young man: “Since I, Cecilus Segmunt, the leading star of this world, personally gave that name to you. You can loudly and proudly call yourself Anya!”

Arakiya: “Cecilus, I’ll kill you.”

Cecilus: “Hahahaha! There you go again, talking about something you can’t do!”

Laughing at the straightforward comment, the young man—Cecilus Segmunt ferociously charged into the destructive force of nature that rained down incessantly.

On one hand, a deadly swordsman who cut through the destruction with the help of the two katanas on his waist.

On the other hand, a beautiful deviant who manipulated nature at will and twisted the way of the world.

—These were the Vollachian Empire's Nine Divine Generals First and Second ranked.

4

Cecilus: "Wow, Anya, you've gotten strong! Look, my kimono has a few scorch marks here and there! This will be super hard to send off for repairs!"

Arakiya: "Yeah, well…"

Cecilus: "So, as usual I'll leave the mending to you! You'll be repairing what you burned and tore yourself, so don't complain!"

Arakiya: "…Fuck off and die, Cecilus."

Arakiya spat a curse, lying sprawled on the burnt field. But, the curse's main target looked unconcerned as if he had heard nothing.

Beyond the effect of the curse, hostility and murderous intent were overflowing, and he was calm in the face of that, so cursed words were nothing significant.

After all—

Cecilus: "It's bad luck to say small fry lines like "die" and "fuck off". If you lower your own value as an actress, the roles that come your way will be unimportant."

Arakiya: "…Again, you make no sense."

Cecilus: "I don't think I'm saying anything that difficult though? Big shots only say big shot things. Small fry only say small fry things. That's how the world works, so paradoxically people who can say cool things are cool!”

Cecilus held up a finger as he spoke of his own philosophy. He plopped down cross-legged next to the fallen Arakiya. Though he was dirtied with ash and soot all over, he bore no conspicuous wounds.

Considering that, the area around them looked desolated as far as the eye could see much like it had been carpet bombed by magic stone artillery, it was hard to believe they had rampaged in the hypocenter.

Cecilus: “I can even dodge the rain if I really try, y’know.”

Arakiya: “…No matter how you look at it, that’s a lie.”

Cecilus: “So what! It’s up to yourself whether it’s a lie or not, I say. You can’t do what you think you can’t do. As long as you think you can’t, you’ll never be able to slice through clouds.”

Carping at the weak objection, Cecilus unsheathed the katana on his waist as he sat.

In a flash of lightning that left even the sound behind, the force from the drawn blade rose into the sky, and the thick clouds above the pair of them were cleaved in twain right down the middle.

Arakiya: “—Slicing clouds.”

Cecilus: “Well, it’s a bit of a startling feat, isn’t it? But if I had said that I couldn’t reach the clouds or whatever, I wouldn’t have been able to do it ever!”

Arakiya: “…”

Cecilus: “So Anya, instead of saying “die”, or “I’ll kill you”, you should speak with a more solid sense of purpose. —You have a goal, right?”

As he peered at her face lying on the ground, she turned away as if the gaze made her uncomfortable. He leaned over further trying to study her face, and Arakiya finally flipped over.

Amazed, Cecilus smiled broadly at the young lady's extreme attitude.

A clash between two of the Nine Divine Generals, which considering the surroundings was nothing but an inconvenience to others—It was a common occurrence between Cecilus and Arakiya.

There were various reasons for the Nine Divine Generals to fight one another, but Arakiya fought Cecilus to challenge the ranking order.

The Nine Divine Generals were ranked in order of strength from the lowest number, so the only person above the Second Rank, Arakiya, was Cecilus—That was to say, Arakiya wanted the seat of the First.

By obtaining that seat, she would be able to make her wish come true or some such.

Cecilus: "I'm also rooting for Anya's wish to come true. I won't go easy on you though."

Arakiya: "…Still hate you."

Cecilus: "Oh no, I get it, I get it. But I don't mind you hating me, in fact I like it."

As he spoke, Cecilus took off the outer layer of his kimono, and gently laid it over Arakiya's prone figure.

He was aware she would not like it, but in the midst of battle he couldn't worry about the clothes she wore. Since her light dress by nature was tempting, he would feel sorry for those around if he did not take care.

Cecilus: "Even though Anya's an especially beautiful woman, you have zero consideration, huh. If the other soldiers started feeling strange and turned the tables, you wouldn't even be affected by their eyes!"

Arakiya: "…What you're saying, I've no idea."

Cecilus: "That you don't get it is the problem, I think. Is it that the master of your heart has left you alone all these years, and no one has taught you anything? Do you want me to train you? Woof woof, woof woof.”

Arakiya: “…”

His outer garment wrapped around her shoulders, Arakiya sat up and seriously glowered at him.

In return for his courtesy, Cecilus was left in a lurch. Although he did not know the difficulty of being treated with kindness by an opponent he could not win against, he could imagine it.

Cecilus: “I wonder whether being comforted by Sword Saint-dono would be tough… Normally if someone you like is kind to you, you’d be happy even if you’re frustrated, right?”

Arakiya: “Hate you, Cecilus.”

Cecilus: “Oof, so stubborn. I’ll leave this one to Chisha after all!”

When troubled, Cecilus decided to rely on Chisha, the person he wholeheartedly trusted to solve his problems.

Once his mind was made up, Cecilus would act quickly. Just like a bolt of lightning.

Cecilus: “Well then, I’ll bring Anya back to… Oh? Come to think of it, it seemed like there was something going on at the castle today…”

???: “—G-General Cecilus! General Arakiya! Are you alright!”

Cecilus: “Ohh, over here, over here!”

Turning his head, Cecilus waved to the voice, smiling broadly.

Then, an Imperial Soldier gingerly set foot onto the burnt field. The young soldier looked around,

Young soldier: “Wh-What on earth… What happened?”

Cecilus: “Ahh, no need to worry! This area is Anya’s estate, we’re just using a place left untouched for our duel.”

Young soldier: “Ah, General Arakiya…?”

Hearing this, the soldier’s face stiffened and his eyes turned to Arakiya who had not responded. She just stared at the ground pouting, dissatisfied with her defeat.

A charred and desolate wasteland, that was the guaranteed damage each time Arakiya messed with Cecilus. It was not so much Cecilus, but when Arakiya raged it was like a natural disaster occured, so flashy damage was unavoidable.

The environmental damage was egregious, that excluding battlefields, Arakiya’s destructive activity was basically only permitted on private land she had attained through her own efforts.

Cecilus: “It’s by direct order from His Excellency. That’s why I live in a shack on Anya’s property.”

Young soldier: “I see…Huh?! A shack?”

Cecilus: “Yep yep. Look, see over there? That’s where it is.”

Cecilus pointed out a place a ways away to the astonished Imperial Soldier. Near a forest and a flowing stream was a shack, that was Cecilus’ dwelling.

In addition, a similar shack sat on the opposite side of the grounds, which was Arakiya’s residence, so the top two of the Nine Divine Generals each lived in their own hovel.

Young soldier: “Wh-Why, the two strongest of the Empire, in that sort of place…?”

Cecilus: “Because I buy all the treasured and excellent swords from all ages and places that I can get my hands on, which uses my entire salary. In Anya’s case, it’s because she doesn’t care.”

Young soldier: “…You live together?”

Arakiya: “No…”

He was not sure if he was right to, but curiosity got the better of the soldier and so he asked the question. Arakiya was quicker than Cecilus to deny his suspicion.

In fact, though they lived on the same land they did not live together, so it was the correct answer.

Actually, as to why Cecilus lived on Arakiya’s property,

Cecilus: “That’s also His Excellency’s order. See, if I lived in a bad place, and Anya’s temper exploded, it would cause a wide range of damage, right? Since that’s the case, if I’m always within Anya’s reach, the only one in danger will be me, he said…”

Young soldier: “Excuse me, excuse me! My comprehension is poor, so I don’t understand what you mean!”

Cecilus: “Hahaha, His Excellency’s judgement seems poor, right? There’s probably more to His Excellency’s words, but I haven’t heard details so I’m not sure.”

With a cheerful pat on the shoulder of the bewildered soldier, Cecilus smiled at him apologetically.

Honestly, not comprehending it was understandable. It was just that Cecilus had been living this way for many years, so he was not bothered by it now.

Arakiya: “…So, what do you want?”

And just as the bewildered soldier looked about to pass out, Arakiya asked the reason for his visit.

To her query, the soldier replied “That’s right!”, and regained his energy as if he had been rescued.

And then—

Young soldier: “General Cecilus Segmunt and General Arakiya, an urgent summons has come for both of you! Please hurry to the Imperial Capital's Crystal Palace right away!"

Cecilus: "The Crystal Palace… Ah! By the way, is there a conference today? I always just doze off when I go, so lately I haven't been getting invited."

Arakiya: "Me too…"

Young Soldier: "I haven't heard much about that situation, but this time is different!"

Ignoring Cecilus and Arakiya's replies, the soldier straightened up and his face became stiff. Seeing the rising tension and unease in his expression, Cecilus moistened his lips with his tongue.

For some reason, it seemed a problem had occurred.

Cecilus: "Balleroy-san just did all that not too long ago, what's going on in Vollachia all of a sudden, huh? Maybe the start of a war?"

Arakiya: "…The Emperor Selection Ceremony, would be enough."

Cecilus: "Hmm, I guess I see Anya's point, but I'll be off my game, y'know. My pent-up frustration was cleared away by Sword Saint-dono, so… Sorry."

When two Generals started conversing, there was no reason a foot soldier should interrupt. While apologizing for interfering, the soldier said "No", with a shake of his head,

Young soldier: "The situation calls for both of your strengths."

Cecilus: "Oh ho, what for?"

Arakiya: "That's…"

The soldier paused there, swallowed his saliva in one gulp and continued.

The situation that he had introduced that required the strength of both Cecilus and Arakiya, it was—

Young soldier: “—The Seventh of the Nine Divine Generals, General Yorna Mishigure has raised a rebellion!”

Sword Identity II

1

—Yorna Mishigure, of the Sacred Vollachian Empire's Nine Divine Generals, had a bad habit.

It was customary in Vollachia for powerful people to be promoted and hold high positions.

The system of the Nine Divine Generals, revived by the current Emperor, Vincent Vollachia, was a representation of this. But given that the selection was based solely on the requirement of strength, naturally, humanity would not be guaranteed.

Strong people were able to be strong because they did not pander to others, nor concern themselves with the weak.

In accordance with such ideology, it would not make sense for them, for the people with ultimate strength, the Nine Divine Generals, to carry a modicum of ethics, or of a spirit of cooperation.

Consequently, many of the Nine Divine Generals had a sparse record of attendance even in conferences attended by the Emperor, and this state of affairs would go unpunished. Of course, that did not mean mere selfishness would be forgiven.

—For those people, there were roles only they could play.

On the condition that they fulfilled these duties, the Nine Divine Generals were allowed a degree of freedom beyond belief.

And naturally, should they be deemed unfit for these special privileges, they would be made to yield by a force greater than theirs.

That was the way of the strong, the custom of the Vollachian Empire, the Land of the Sword Wolf.

—Moreover, returning to the topic of the opening passage.

One of the Nine Divine Generals of the Sacred Vollachian Empire, Yorna Mishigure.

Standing at the pinnacle of strength in the Vollachian Empire, the ruler of the Demon City, holding unparalleled power and privilege to match, she had one incorrigible bad habit.

And that was—

Messenger: "—Seventh of the Nine Divine Generals, General First-Class Yorna Mishigure has raised a rebellion!"

A messenger rushed in through the opened doors of the assembly hall, and hearing the gasping soldier's pointed appeal, instantly, silence fell over the room.

It lasted for the length of time it took for the words to hit their eardrums, and permeate their brains.

Then, the information was digested by their brains, and after a beat each person's reaction became apparent.

Most of the Generals at the conference had wide eyes and tense faces, while each of the reactions of those seated at the center of the assembly hall were different from the ordinary officers, with no exception.

Some furrowed their brows, some were lost in thought, and some did not stir in the slightest. And the one with the fiercest reaction, raising his arms covered in golden gauntlets,

Goz: "Damn her, that vixen!!"

He brought down his stout arms in anger, pulverizing the grand table into splinters.

The might of the blow gave rise to wind, the violent shockwave making the hair and clothes of the participants flutter. The strike delivered in a fit of rage held the power to slay even a large Witchbeast in one shot, reminding all of the strength of the man feared as the Lion Knight, Goz Ralfon.

But then—

Vincent: “Your foolishness is not limited to your loud mouth, commoner.”

The Emperor’s eyes were icy as the grand table was demolished, his black hair swaying in the resulting wind.

Under Vincent’s gaze, the face of the one who had lost their temper, Goz, grew pale. The red color his face and neck had acquired upon hearing that report then vanished, and Goz knelt his huge body on the spot.

Goz: “Your Excellency! I am terribly sorry! Please punish me however you see fit…”

Vincent: “Nonsense. When would there be time to punish you? You are one of my Generals, yet you are too much of a fool to grasp the situation? Or are you suggesting that I am a fool?”

Goz: “My apologies! Everything is as you say!”

Goz was deeply ashamed of his blunder, forcefully prostrating himself.

For better or worse, being prone to emotional outbursts that could easily influence his own capability as well as his command of large armies was a characteristic of his. Perhaps, this too ought to be dubbed a bad habit.

Goz would do his utmost to rectify it were that pointed out to him. Yet, depending on the circumstances, that would carry the risk of reducing the most powerful manifestation of strength of the man in the Nine Divine Generals to that of a merely ordinary General.

Therefore, Vincent directed merely a single glance to the man on bended knee, and did not reprimand him further. Instead—

Vincent: “Is this what your prophecy foretold, Stargazer?”

Stargazer: “Probably. …But, I’m thinking to myself that there’s not much of a point in prophecies if I can’t tell you of them earlier, right?”

Vincent: “Hmph.”

Moving on from Goz to fish for further information, and hearing the answer of the Stargazer whose slender face was hidden by his robe, Vincent snorted with an expression that showed no trace of emotion.

The report of that treasonous plot concurred with the prophecy brought by the Stargazer kept in Imperial Capital’s Crystal Palace. In light of that, as well as the situation arising from the topic of the conference, he could see what ought to be done.

—What ought to be done by the one at the top of the Vollachian Empire, the Emperor.

Vincent: “Berstetz.”

Berstetz: “Yes.”

Resting his chin on his hands, elbows braced on the armrests of his chair, Vincent addressed the thinnish elderly man, who responded quietly. The Prime Minister bowed his head reverently, and Vincent turned his sable eyes towards Berstetz,

Vincent: “The name you gave a short while ago.”

Berstetz: “—It was Madelyn Eschart, Your Excellency.”

Vincent: “That one, is she willing to come when summoned?”

The Emperor’s query seemed to test him, and the wrinkles of Berstetz’s face deepened grimly.

However, before the old Prime Minister could answer, a voice called out to Vincent with “Your Excellency”. In the seat opposite to Berstetz was Chisha, who served as Vincent’s adviser.

While Chisha’s white face betrayed no emotion, he glanced over to Vincent, Chisha: “Are you certain you want to do this?”

Vincent: “It matters not. Should they fail to meet expectations, we shall just behead them, senile old fool and clown, both at once.”

Chisha: “…I also agree, as you wish.”

Receiving Vincent’s answer, Chisha obediently withdrew. The Stargazer ducked his head and looked like he wanted to say something, but Vincent paid him no mind.

Vincent: “You heard me, Berstetz. My intentions are clear. You also must do so.”

Berstetz: “Certainly, I understand, Your Excellency. Of course, I am prepared to sacrifice my life for the betterment of the Empire. — What is there to be afraid of?”

Vincent: “…”

Vincent said nothing to Berstetz’s reply, which was earnest to the point of feeling disingenuous.

Without further ado, Vincent turned his gaze to the top of the head of the large kneeling figure.

Goz still remained with his body flat, only the top of his head able to be seen as a result.

Anyway—

Vincent: “Commoner, the one you nominated, he shall likewise move at once.”

Goz: “—Hk! Of course, Your Excellency! He is currently in custody on the grounds… With Your Excellency’s permission, we shall do so at this very moment!”

Vincent: “Do not blurt out that which you cannot do. —Have him ready by the time the troops are deployed.”

Goz: “Yes Sir!”

Given conditions equivalent to those presented to Berstetz, Goz accepted with a voice like the rumbling of the earth.

As Chisha had also agreed, the course of action for leaders of the Empire was decided.

Vincent: “Yorna Mishigure’s rebellion shall be suppressed. The successor for the seat of Ninth of the Nine Divine Generals shall be decided based on the performance of those two, Kafma Irulux and Madelyn Eschart.”

Moguro: “Your Excellency, next, vacancy supposed to be Seventh?”

Receiving Vincent’s orders, this question was presented by Moguro.

As a steelman, his voice was stiff to the ears; the other Generals in the room were of the same opinion. Naturally, if the treasonous Yorna were executed, she would be stripped of the position of Seventh she had been anointed with.

Chisha: “Once that comes, General Second-Class Kafma and Madelyn-dono alike could join the Nine Divine Generals, or perhaps a new name will be raised by spectacular efforts. Of course, we must keep in mind the possibility that other Divine Generals may also be lost in this battle.”

Berstetz: “I would prefer avoiding such a dreadful situation. Still, I believe Moguro-dono’s concern is premature. Whether or not Yorna-dono is stripped of her position depends on the will of His Excellency, does it not?”

Continuing after Chisha, Berstetz’s narrow gaze pierced Vincent.

At the probing look in the old man’s eyes, so narrow that one might think his eyelids were shut, the Emperor closed one eye. To others, there was probably not much to interpret from that reaction but—

Vincent: “I am neither merciful nor lenient. However, as long as they play their part, nor shall I revoke the position I bestowed. Albeit.”

Then pausing for a beat, Vincent surveyed the personnel encircling the assembly hall, and resumed.

Vincent: “If a piece on the board does not obey my will, no longer shall that be the case. —And know, that goes for all of you present as well.”

Those words of Vincent Vollachia brought the present conference to a close.

2

—”The Flamboyant” Yorna Mishigure’s rebellion.

News of an Imperial General First-Class’s rebellion spread like wildfire throughout the Empire, its origin a large city located to the southeast of the country—an incident in the Demon City of Chaosflame.

Originally, it was common for each city in the Empire to be self-governed by city leaders that possessed private armies.

Nonetheless, there were forts stationed by Imperial Soldiers at strategic points and along the main roads that linked every city. In order to maintain public order in the Empire, which boasted the largest territory of the Four Great Countries, powerful troops kept a watchful eye, day and night.

Therefore, the first scene of this incident also occurred at the settlement of soldiers on the front line of the realm’s defense. The one who had destroyed the entirety of the forces there, had been none other than Yorna Mishigure.

???: “They’re saying even though there were some three-hundred soldiers at the fort, every last one of ‘em was killed. I’ve heard a lot of bad shit ‘bout General First-Class Yorna till now, but it ain’t gonna fly this time.”

??: “Yeah?”

In the bustling atmosphere of a cheap eatery, seated at the same table, a young man gave a half-hearted reaction to his colleague’s tale, and looked down at the meat on his plate.

The thick, slow-roasted meat was minimally seasoned with solt and peppa. The fragrance of herbs tickled his nostrils, and his saliva reflected the overjoyed cheers of his empty stomach.

“Meat you can heartily sink your teeth into” was the sales pitch of the shop, and there was no objection to be had regarding that point. But the young man’s taste was for meat that was not overcooked and remained a more reddish color.

All of this was the result of leaving the matter of ordering entirely to his crude companion.

It was entirely his own oversight, since he did know that his companion made decisions without a care.

He firmly vowed never to let this person make any sort of decision on his behalf ever again.

Anyhow—

Companion: “Oi, what’s with the half-assed response? This is a big deal for the Empire. It ain’t someone else’s problem.”

Just before he could sink his teeth into the meat that was not quite to his liking, his companion bent forward—an eyepatch on his right eye, Jamal dampened the mood in a sullen voice.

His partner glowered at him, and under his glare, the young man put back down the fork in his hand,

Young man: “I don’t really believe it’s someone else’s problem. It’s just that we’re in the middle of eating, you know? You’re the one who brought me to this reputable restaurant, and yet you’re making me wait, it’s not fair.”

Jamal: “Ya dipshit. You can eat meat basically whenever. But how often do you get a chance like this to show your mettle as an Imperial Soldier? You better take it serious too.”

Young man: “Serious, huh? You don’t look like it, but you’re a really earnest guy, aren’t you?”

Jamal: “The fuck?!”

With that unintentional expression of honest thoughts by the young man, Jamal’s face immediately turned red.

Contrary to his crude speech and demeanor, the strange thing about Jamal was his deep loyalty to the Imperial Soldiers. Though he was a weak Low Count, the fact that he was from an Imperial aristocratic family may have influenced him somewhat.

But then, Jamal had neither the self-awareness nor the readiness as the next head of the Aurélie family, and his only concern was rising up in the world solely by his own efforts.

To put it nicely, he was an honest man who did not rely on the power of his family. To put it badly, oneu could call him an absolute moron who took his ideal privilege and threw it down the drain without making use of it.

Of the two, he was closer to the latter, precisely because he remained on the same level as one of the ordinary soldiers despite being born a Low Count. The young man did not disagree with the view that Jamal was an idiot.

However—

Young man: “I commend you. Even though things may appear this way, I’ve enough brains to give due respect to the guy who’ll soon be my brother-in-law.”

Jamal: “You “commend” me? I don’t sense any respect in that tone of yours…”

Young man: “It’s not in my nature to be able to sing your praises outright. If I could, Katya’d also have an easier time putting her faith in me.”

Jamal: “Yeah, that’s probably true. She’s a stubborn one, I’ll say.”

The young man shrugged his shoulders as Jamal folded his arms and nodded his head in agreement. The words may have been perfunctory, but they seemed to be effective enough for Jamal.

He had no intention of letting their relationship sour. —He would be in trouble were he longer able to see Katya.

Because that young lady, blood-related to this crude man, Katya Aurélie, was the one and only thing the young man absolutely could not risk losing.

Jamal: “So, yeah. Talking about Katya aside, let’s get back to the subject of General First-Class Yorna.”

Young man: “Can’t I eat meat while we do that?”

Jamal: “What are you, a glutton? It ain’t gonna take that long, just listen.”

Kept away from eating the tantalizingly smelling meat, the young man pursed his lips and looked at Jamal.

His displeasure was laid bare, but Jamal seemed to take it as a sign of seriousness, and raised a finger, saying “You see?”, in a greatly satisfied manner.

Jamal: “I also heard the army’s being sent out to suppress General First-Class Yorna’s rebellion… And that it’ll be a test to decide the next member of the Nine Divine Generals.”

Young man: “Why’s that? I know a Divine General was lost a little while ago, but what’s that got to do with what’s going on now?”

Jamal: “Guess they can’t leave the seat of a Divine General empty forever. And they say that because of that, whoever helps quickly quell the rebellion is gonna get the empty seat. Whaddya think of that?!”

Young man: “I really don’t think anything either way.”

Jamal had been getting more and more heated as he talked, and, severely disappointed in that response, he proclaimed “What the hell!”. His butt fell off the stool, and he shook his head in dismay.

It was as if he were being called an idiot, and it irked him.

Young man: “Even if what you say is true, what’s that got to do with us? Seriously, don’t tell me you’re going to try and do some extraordinary feat here to get promoted to the Nine Divine Generals?”

Jamal: “Uh, ‘course I am!”

Young man: “I knew you were stupid stupid, but never thought it’d be to this degree.”

He was stunned to see Jamal showing his white teeth, coupled with a jab of his raised thumb towards himself.

The position of Divine General, the pinnacle of the Vollachian Empire’s military, was the aspiration of many officers. Jamal even more so; with the background of a Low Count, he held a strong sense of pride as an Imperial Soldier.

It was natural that he would aspire towards the Nine Divine Generals.

Young man: “Look here, Jamal… You and me, we’re ordinary soldiers of the Empire. You may be a Private First-Class, but you’re far from being a General, you’re a foot soldier.”

Jamal: “All the more reason to make a move to turn the tables here…”

Young man: “Such is life, there’s no way a chance like that’d fall into our laps. Besides, awarding the position of the next Divine General for the greatest results in suppressing the rebellion sounds fake anyway. Where’d you hear that from?”

As a man with an unexpectedly wide circle of acquaintances, Jamal collected all sorts of dubious rumors.

The young man was quite cautious in this regard, since Jamal had a history of being swept up by fake news. To put it bluntly, the young man had assumed it was false from the start.

However, “That’s the thing”, Jamal answered the young man’s question with a confident smile.

Young man: “Well, in your case, the level of confidence’s got nothing to do with the authenticity of the matter.”

Jamal: “Shut the fuck up, I ain’t gonna let you question it. I mean, I heard this from the lot that escaped from the fort General First-Class Yorna destroyed.”

Young man: “—The guys that escaped the destroyed fort?”

He ruminated on what he had heard, and Jamal held his head, having blurted it out without thinking.

But for now, the young man put off making any allusion to the degree of Jamal’s stupidity, and pondered. This time, Jamal’s information might not be as ridiculous as he had thought.

Young man: “Having escaped the fort, they’d be related parties to the situation…Given that they’d be briefed on the circumstances, could they be connected to the higher-ups? And, if that’s where you heard it.”

Jamal: “Oi, what the hell. What’s with all the mutterin’…”

Young man: “—Jamal. Your story might be no laughing matter, y’know?”

Jamal: “…”

Jamal, bitter-faced at his own blunder, gulped at that comment.

But he quickly changed his expression to a lively one,

Jamal: “What the hell’d you come up with? Let’s hear it right now, Todd.”

Todd: “Now hold on, don’t be in such a rush. Let’s take our time, settle down, and gather information. We’re going to get called in anyway. Wouldn’t be very fun if we died.”

Answering the impatient Jamal, the young man—Todd Fang, wore a twisted smile.

Smiling, he finally sunk his teeth into the massive piece of meat upon his plate

The meat had already gone cold, but his sharp fangs mercilessly tore the thick flesh to pieces.

3

The terrible scene of the overrun fort was not unlike the report of a one-sided-massacre.

Upon actually arriving at the scene and stepping foot on the soil where so many Imperial Soldiers had lost their lives, Goz Ralfon felt a torturous non-physical pain within his massive chest.

The corpses had already been carried away, and he did not witness the lurid deaths themselves.

However, the aftermath of the battle had been carved into each part of the fort, the numerous broken weapons, the traces of blood that had not been wiped away, presented the fierce battle that had taken place here.

His heart aching at the terrible scene, Goz looked down on the surroundings from the roof of the fort.

Those who had been mercilessly slain here, must have been honorable soldiers willing to defend the Empire.

To be helplessly slaughtered like that, even in the Empire that extolled the survival of the fittest, was a tragedy.

Goz: “Damn you, Yorna Mishigure…!”

His voice trembled with righteous indignation, and Goz clenched his fist, a fist the size of a child’s head.

That the one who had committed such high treason was a General belonging to the Nine Divine Generals like himself, meant Goz could not suppress the emotion boiling in his gut.

Why, why would a Divine General who must wield their power for the defense of the Empire, massacre soldiers gripping their swords under the same will, of all things?

Above all, at what point would Yorna Mishigure sincerely swear vassalage to His Excellency the Emperor?

Goz: “…”

Goz was a veteran who had worked his way up as an Imperial Soldier; as of the revival of the Nine Divine General system, he had been designated as one of the founding members, and had continued to hold that position to this day.

He did not believe his own abilities to be exceptionally superior compared to the other Divine Generals, but he was proud that his loyalty to Vincent, the Emperor of Vollachia, was second to none.

From Goz’s point of view, Yorna, who had raised rebellions against Vincent time and time again, was difficult to comprehend.

Each time the insurrection had been suppressed, Vincent graciously protected her neck and position in spite of it, and once more another situation like this was brought about.

Neither respect for Vincent, nor awareness of her role as a General First-Class, even existed.

For that reason—

Goz: “I shall definitely behead General First-Class Yorna for this rebellion.”

???: “Weeell, that’ll be a bit difficult, won’t it? I appreciate your enthusiasm, Goz-san, but y’know, Yorna-san’s holed up in the Demon City again, hasn’t she?”

Goz’s solemn face turned grim, and a lighthearted voice came from behind as if to put a damper on his ardor.

As Goz turned around, before him was a slender, blue-haired youth who had appeared on the rooftop unnoticed.

As he looked at the fort's devastation, just as Goz did,

Blue-haired youth: "Yorna-san's antics are as relentless as ever, huh. They said all of those who remained at the fort were done in by Yorna alone, but…"

Goz: "Indeed. That is what I have heard from those who got away. In fact, I am sure of it. With General First-Class Yorna's strength, allies would not be required to take down the fort."

Blue-haired youth: "Haha, yeah, if anything Yorna-san's stronger when she fights alone. My condolences to all the people she came across, and then, I'd like to send my thanks to the openin' act!"

In rather good humor, such was the declaration of the youth—of Cecilus Segmunt, and Goz shot him a reproachful look. That was far too little respect for the dead.

Cecilus responded to Goz's critical gaze with an "Oh?" and raised an eyebrow,

Cecilus: "Is Mr. Goz-san feeling displeased, perchance?"

Goz: "Naturally. To refer to deceased soldiers as "an opening act"… They had their own histories and their own lives. To put it in your terms, the stage was theirs."

Cecilus: "Oops, my apologies. But, lemme make one correction, Goz-san."

With a snap, Cecilus stuck up one finger, looking up at the taller Goz. With that slender finger pointed at his jaw, Goz's thick brows drew together, and Cecilus continued.

Cecilus: "Certainly, there's a saying… that every person's the protagonist of their own story, but to me that's escapism. It's impossible. In this world, there's but one stage program called this world… and there's only one shining star, only one person who's the stage's lead actor."

Goz: "…And you are' claiming that is you?"

Cecilus: “Yep, that’s right!”

Thumping himself on the chest, Cecilus asserted it with zero shame on display.

That was Cecilus’s philosophy, a creed no one could overturn—Neither Goz, nor anyone else in the Empire, could ridicule it as a foolish pipe dream.

Why?—The reason was that this was the Vollachian Empire, where the strong were esteemed, and Cecilus Segmunt was peerless, the strongest swordsman, and bore the title of First. The strongest in the Empire.

In accordance with the Vollachian Empire’s way of doing things, to ridicule his logic and deny it, one must be stronger than him. And there was no such being anywhere.

Therefore, no one could deny Cecilus’s philosophy.

???: “—This again. Cecilus, you’re so stupid.”

Immediately following his conclusion, an exception appeared, berating Cecilus’s philosophy as stupid.

The exception, shrouded in wind, slowly swooped down from the air and stepped on the rooftop of the fort. Unseen wind twisted around her, her short silver hair fluttering, it was the young dog woman, Arakiya.

That was a lineup consisting of the First, Second, and Fifth of the Nine Divine Generals.

Were an unknowing soldier to rush into this place, they would be in for an extreme shock.

But then—

Cecilus: “Oh, you’re late, Anya. We started running at the same time on “ready, go”, but I got to the fort quite a bit faster, didn’t I?”

Arakiya: “…We hadn’t actually decided where we were going.”

Cecilus: “Now that you mention it, that’s true, but since Goz-san was standing on the top of the fort like a shiny gold beacon, Anya also didn’t hesitate to come here, right? In that case, wouldn’t it be fair to say that I won because I reached Goz-san first?”

Arakiya: “Die, Cecilus.”

Cecilus: “You’ve a quick temper because you can’t argue!”

When Arakiya spoke with a scornful glare, Cecilus shot back, raising his voice as well.

Were any soldier to witness this childish back-and-forth, their shock would go beyond the simple fact that it was an assembly of Divine Generals, and amount to something more deeply rooted.

By nature, both Cecilus and Arakiya had a tendency to lack self-awareness as Divine Generals, but when put together, that tendency became increasingly notable.

Of the two, Arakiya was the more serious one, but tended to be engulfed by Cecilus’s atmosphere, and dragged down to the same level.

Goz: “General First-Class Arakiya, it shall be troublesome if you talk on the same level as Cecilus. You should have more self-awareness as one of the Nine Divine Generals, His Excellency’s own hands and feet.”

Arakiya: “…I’m sorry.”

Cecilus: “Woah woah woah?! Goz-san, did you possibly get the impression that Anya’s a better person to talk to than me? That’s really hurtful, or rather, I object! Seriously, Anya’s crazy too! She always cooks omelets on just one side, for one thing!”

Arakiya: “If you want them done on both sides, do it yourself.”

In response to the scowling Arakiya’s words, Cecilus pouted and let out a grumble.

With a sidelong glance at them, Goz once again narrowed his eyes at the terrible scene of the fort, and the brilliant Demon City that could be seen beyond.

—Far away in the distance, glittering in the heart of the Demon City, was the Crimson Lapis Castle.

Made of special magic crystals called crimson lapis, it was a castle that equaled the Capital's Crystal Palace in beauty. However, therein contained was the treacherous vassal named Yorna Mishigure.

Goz: "Come to think of it, that glimmer seems like the color of blood."

Cecilus: "Well now, I think that's stretching it a bit… Anyway, seems me and Anya are under your command this time, so what do we do?"

Goz: "I shall not bother tying you two down with logic. Once the battle begins, I shall leave it up to each of your judgments."

Cecilus: "That's Goz-san for you! How reasonable!"

Tasked with being a free agent, Cecilus clapped his hands, his eyes gleaming, overjoyed.

The required qualities of the Empire's Generals were individual strength and ability to command groups.

Goz had reached a certain level of competence in both, whereas Cecilus's qualities were completely concentrated in individual strength.

Likewise, Arakiya also stood out for possessing individual strength, in contrast to people like Chisha, who by nature showed extraordinary capability in commanding groups.

He laid out battlefields suited to each, where their strength could shine fully.

That was what it meant to deploy forces for battle, and it was also an ironclad rule of Goz's tactics.

Truthfully, with both Cecilus and Arakiya, even if the opponent held a sizable force, that would be no match for the two of them. However, that logic was no longer valid in cases when the opponent was a Divine General.

Goz: “Much less when the opponent is Yorna Mishigure… We must make absolutely sure everything goes flawlessly.”

Arakiya: “Yorna Mishigure…”

Arakiya tilted her head, listening to Goz mumbling with thick arms crossed. As she touched the eyepatch covering her left eye with her finger,

Arakiya: “I’ve, never met her. What’s she like?”

Goz: “Mm… That makes sense. Since General Yorna’s never shown her face at a conference, has she.”

Cecilus: “Speaking of that, me and Anya aren’t even invited to conferences! Things will proceed more smoothly if we’re not there, that’s what His Excellency said, from what Chisha told me!”

Goz: “I cannot deny that, despite the fact we are all a bit irritated by it.”

The topic of the low attendance rate of the Nine Divine Generals had just been raised at the most recent conference.

Although, with Cecilus, Arakiya, as well as Yorna not expected to attend, the maximum attendance was limited to six people. And considering they were presently lacking a Ninth, the limit was five people.

It was only just the other day at the conference that even the five of them could not all be present.

In any case—

Goz: “General Yorna is a fox woman who rules over the Demon City. Her arrogant demeanor and lack of respect for His Excellency in her conduct is evident, and I dislike it.”

Cecilus: “She’s incredibly beautiful, and her aura makes her appealing as a stage actress. Oh, and I’ve even tried to kill her twice before, but I couldn’t do it.”

Arakiya: “—Hk, Cecilus, failed to kill her?”

Arakiya goggled at the supplementary fact, lost for words.

Cecilus and Arakiya’s relationship—That Arakiya had attempted to kill Cecilus many times over in her quest for the position of First was well-known. Goz had also once happened to be there for their battle to the death.

Arakiya must have challenged Cecilus more than one-hundred times already.

From her point of view, an opponent that Cecilus, who was without rival in the Empire, could not kill, was unheard of.

Standing stock-still with her one eye opened wide, Arakiya stared and looked Cecilus up and down,

Arakiya: “Cecilus, do you hold back when your opponent’s a beautiful woman…?”

Cecilus: “Woah woah woah, I don’t hold back! No matter who’s my opponent, I’m not gonna cut corners intentionally! Anyway, if I were unable to take that stuff seriously because the opponent’s a beautiful woman, wouldn’t Anya also meet the same condition?!”

Arakiya: “…”

Cecilus: “What can I say, Yorna-san’s strength’s peculiar. I think it’s kinda similar to Olbart-san in that respect. Well, Olbart-san’s strength’s also incomprehensible, isn’t it!”

As Cecilus went on about Yorna’s strength, Arakiya’s expression showed mixed feelings.

Goz was also of the same opinion as Cecilus in that it was difficult to explain, as not much was known about the particulars of Yorna’s power. But Cecilus was right in that as long as the mechanism was unclear, she would pose difficult to subdue; it could be thought of as being in a realm of strength similar to that of the Nine Divine Generals' Third—Olbart Dunkelkenn.

Arakiya: "I'm getting more and more confused. Ultimately, how strong is she?"

Goz: "Ahh, do not blame Cecilus, General First-Class Arakiya. I would also find it difficult to explain General First-Class Yorna's strength. Still, if I had to put it into words."

Arakiya: "Put into words?"

Her head cocked to one side, Arakiya sought an answer to the question, and Goz pondered for a moment.

But ultimately only one answer came to mind, and so, he spoke.

Goz: "I guess you could say it is a power that changes in radiance from time to time, like her alias, "The Flamboyant"."

Arakiya: "…I don't get it."

Cecilus: "I know, right!"

Cecilus laughed loudly at Goz's explanation, and Arakiya tilted her head trying to see what was so funny.

Perhaps displeased by his attitude, Arakiya shot him a reproachful glare. It blew over the swordsman like a cool breeze, her indignation growing worse and worse.

In normal times, Goz did not get the impression that Arakiya was quick-tempered, and he was almost rather impressed by the degree to which Cecilus managed to get on her nerves.

The pair's behavior was unchanged from usual prior to battle, but whether that was thought to be a sign of reliability was a different matter—

Goz: "—For the sake of His Excellency the Emperor, we must carry out our mission."

Arakiya: “That’s right, yes.”

Cecilus: “I got no objection.”

For suppression of the current rebellion, Goz was the commanding officer of the dispatched troops. Cecilus and Arakiya’s response to his determined words were neither hesitant nor faltering.

As long as there was no doubt about his will or ability, there would be no desire for change.

That was the way of Vollachia, and the way things went in Vincent Vollachia’s reign.

???: “General First-Class Goz! General Second-Class Kafma Irulux has arrived!”

Goz: “So he has come.”

Rushing up to the rooftop of the fort, his subordinate delivered a report, to which Goz gave him a dignified nod.

The subordinate was astonished to see Cecilus and Arakiya, as he had not known of their arrival, but he quickly came to his senses and continued his report.

Subordinate: “About General Second-Class Kafma, there is a bit of a problem.”

Goz: “Hm, a problem, you say? Don’t tell me, did something happen during his house arrest?”

Hearing his subordinate’s lowered tone, Goz grimaced and asked that in return.

Kafma Irulux—A young man from the Insect Cage Tribe, holding a strong sense of responsibility, who sincerely regretted the reckless actions of his people who had revolted against the Emperor.

Goz had informed Vincent that Kafma was even willing to take his own life, and that was no exaggeration. In fact, Goz had exchanged words with the repentant man, and witnessed with his own eyes that the man had pushed himself to the point of endangering his life of his own accord.

Such was not his desire, but were his sense of guilt to increase more and more, he would have bestowed upon himself a punishment that would sever his very future.

If such a thing were to happen, as the one who recommended him as the next Divine General, Goz would also be held jointly responsible.

Goz did not care what happened to himself, but he did not wish to disappoint Vincent.

But to the latter question, his subordinate said “No, sir” and shook his head,

Subordinate: “Well, I believe it will be faster if you see it firsthand.”

Goz: “You are saying, you cannot tell?”

Subordinate: “Y-Yes, sir…”

Goz looked down, hand on his chin, and his subordinate nodded, cowed.

The phrasing was somewhat concerning, but it did not seem to overlap with the worst-case scenario Goz had feared.

Cecilus: “Not that it matters, but if you call for a General First-Class, we can’t tell if you mean Goz-san, me, or Anya. See, pretty much everyone here’s a General First-Class.”

Arakiya: “Have you ever done anything General First-Class-like?”

Cecilus: “I have! With the dignity of the Vollachian Empire at stake, I fought a one-on-one battle with the Kingdom’s strongest, the Sword Saint!”

Arakiya: “I heard you got your ass kicked.”

Cecilus: “Well, when we fought again in the Kingdom it was a draw!”

Stamping his foot on the ground, Cecilus responded to Arakiya’s comment by pouting.

Unfortunately, there were strict orders that anything related to Cecilus’s aforementioned embarkment into the Kingdom, including the incident he had caused over there, should not be relayed to others.

Later the bewildered subordinate who happened to overhear this would have to be told to keep his mouth shut.

Careful not to forget that, Goz told his subordinate, “Got it”.

Goz: “Let us head down to Kafma. Lead the way.”

4

Cecilus: “Hahaa, well well, oh dear, I see.”

With a hand on his slender chin, Cecilus closely inspected all over what was before him.

Watching from a little ways back, Arakiya hesitated as to whether she should launch an attack on his back which was full of openings.

Vincent had given her permission to go after Cecilus to her own discretion, but she thought to herself that she should choose an opportunity during the mission.

Not to mention, if she struggled against Cecilus here, she would end up causing trouble for Goz and the other soldiers, disregarding him.

Goz had a huge frame and a scary face, but Arakiya did not dislike him.

He worried about things and tried to take care of her, and if there was something he believed to be bad, he would caution her. Arakiya’s intuition was not the best, so it was helpful for her.

For that reason, even though it appeared to be a perfect opportunity, she did not attack Cecilus's back.

Cecilus: "Huh, you haven't tried to pick a fight with me, Anya. Did you perchance not notice I left an opening just now?"

Arakiya: "Die."

Cecilus prattled not with abusive language, but with language that seemed abusive, and she reflexively retorted back.

This was met with a wry smile, which made Arakiya feel extremely bitter.

Cecilus: "Anyway, I've never made his acquaintance, but he's a surprisingly unusual person, isn't he? You said his name is Kafma-san?"

Goz: "…Certainly, he has always been different from other people in some ways, but not to this extent."

Cecilus: "Ah, so it's like that after all. I'm glad. I didn't expect something even more inhuman than Moguro to join us, so I was bracing myself."

Taking little notice of Arakiya's state of mind, both Cecilus and Goz were in front—exchanging words before the object that had been carried to the cellar of the fort.

Goz's brows were deeply creased, and Arakiya could not guess what was going through his mind. Within her heart, there was resentment, but she also thought the same as Cecilus.

This, object called Kafma, would be difficult to get along with.

The reason being—

Cecilus: "—It's just like a chrysalis, isn't it?"

With a slight smile on his face, Cecilus frankly conveyed his impression.

Chrysalis—A state that was one of the processes by which bugs changed during their growth stage before emergence.

It had been placed there in front of everyone in the basement, covered in a reddish-brown shell, devoid of the slightest sign of movement.

Having been told that this was Kafma Irulux, Arakiya too, was at a loss.

Arakiya: “Why, is it like that?”

Her head cocked to the side, Arakiya inquired the soldier responsible for carrying the chrysalis. Thereupon, the soldier saluted “Y-Yes ma’am!”, shrinking back,

Soldier: “During General Second-Class Kafma’s house arrest, he put a new bug into his body…”

Arakiya: “A bug…”

Soldier: “It is a rather risky endeavor, so I am told.”

Though she nodded at the stiff soldier’s remark, she did not really comprehend it.

When Arakiya looked to Goz for an answer, he muttered “So that is what it is”, with a hand on his forehead.

Goz: “Immediately after they are born, people in the Insect Cage Tribe take a parasite, called a bug, that was passed down by their relatives and put it into their bodies. They coexist with those bugs, and sometimes borrow their power, which is the special trait of the Insect Cage Tribe…”

Arakiya: “But, he put a new one.”

Goz: “Yes, I have heard of that. Those in the tribe who excel, shall again usher in a new bug, and develop their abilities. Which means, General Second-Class Kafma…”

Cecilus: “—So in search of new power, he carried out this endeavor?”

Taking in the view of the chrysalis through narrowed eyes, Cecilus drew the conclusion of Goz's conjecture.

Even Arakiya, who took little interest in the affairs of the world, had caught wind of the Insect Cage Tribe's opposition to Vincent and the resulting punishment of a considerable portion of the tribe. Kafma Irulux too, though he had not taken part in the rebellion, hailed from that very tribe so he had been placed under house arrest.

During his house arrest, he put the new bug into his body, his mind was—

Arakiya: "Was he angry, and wanted to lash out?"

Cecilus: "Ahahahahaha! Of course he wasn't, he's not Anya!"

Arakiya: "…"

Cecilus: "The reason people with regrets want power's plain and simple; for a comeback. To kill the powerless self, and become a different self, stepping onto the stage of death. What else could it be?"

Arakiya thought it could be something else, but Cecilus had a point.

Arakiya too, had once wished for power of the sort. —No, she still did even now.

At the time her own power had not been worthy of protecting her precious person, Arakiya's life took a major turn. The sense of helplessness she had felt at that time was huge, and still affected her in the present.

What if the same thing had assailed Kafma Irulux?

Arakiya: "To change, into a stronger person."

Cecilus: "Literally, he's waiting to change by emerging from the chrysalis, huh. Nonetheless, I wonder how long it'll take to emerge from this state. Goz-san, do you have any idea? "

Goz: "—. I know not, but I can tell you this. We cannot wait for long."

With an anguished expression, Goz answered as though he was wringing it out.

As the one who had endorsed Kafma as the next Divine General, Goz surely possessed a strong desire to see him actively participate in this battle. However, as things were, it seemed that it would not come to pass.

And, regrettably, there was no time to wait for it.

Cecilus: "I see, I see…If that's the case, let's wrap things up without delay."

Arakiya: "Cecilus?"

Feeling sorry for him, Arakiya wanted to do something for Goz.

Cecilus spoke softly in front of Arakiya, and slowly unsheathed his sword.

He readied the faintly blue sword, pointing the sharp leading edge at Kafma's chrysalis.

In his honed swordsmanship, there was no sense of a joke or prank.

Goz: "Cecilus, what in the world are you doing?"

Cecilus: "Right, if I had to say, I'm questioning Kafma's resolve, perhaps? If we can't take long, then I guess he'll have to prove it to me. —How serious he is."

Cecilus responded to Goz's caution, his blue eyes mingling with the energy of the sword.

As the resonating energy of the sword swelled, Arakiya felt the micro-spirits lurking in the air surrounding her become frightened. —As a Spirit Eater, that was terrifying.

She could see why spirits would be afraid of herself, as she ate them. However, the spirits feared Cecilus's swords aura, because that power gave the impression of death without substance.

And it was the same for the tragic being of the Insect Cage Tribe that had turned itself into a chrysalis—.

Cecilus: "—Sh."

Cecilus gave a short exhalation, and the sword in his hand hummed with power.

A light flick of the wrist that emitted a flash of the sword, it was the technique called Cloud Cutting that Cecilus had shown in sport. But few could laugh at it as a street performance.

In particular, those with uncommon courage such as Arakiya's master, and Vincent.

For those without it, it would be enough to give them a sensation like that off their own flesh being cleaved in twain.

Henceforth—

Cecilus: "—Haha, of course."

Laughing, Cecilus inclined his head. Something like violet thorns burst out from the cracks in the chrysalis, and they jumped out as if to graze his cheek.

It was likely some sort of defense response to Cecilus's swords aura.

The thorns poured out from inside the unmoving chrysalis, and Cecilus dealt with them deftly with one sword, protecting himself.

And then—

Cecilus: "I think it's prolly safe to tear off the shell now. Since it responded to my sword's aura, now it's only a matter of time, I think."

Goz: "I-I see. …Yes, it would appear so."

At first Goz seemed surprised, but was convinced upon touching the outstretched thorns. Once he put force into the thorn he had touched, it cracked and shattered. The next, while flexible like a bird of paradise plant, had a hardness to it as though it were frozen.

It spread throughout the thorns extending from the chrysalis, and he confirmed that all of them had crumbled. Then Goz called out to his soldiers once more, and commanded them to tear off Kafma's chrysalis.

Goz: "No, you might be attacked by the thorns in the process of tearing it off. I shall perform that. I shall leave the recovery of the torn shell to you all."

Soldiers: "R-Roger that, sir."

They replied, and quickly set to work on the chrysalis, following Goz's instructions.

Viewing the state of affairs, Cecilus sheathed his drawn sword and looked back over his shoulder in good humor. Disgusted by his buoyant mood, Arakiya's gaze grew quite harsh.

Cecilus: "Oh, in poor humor, aren't you Anya."

Arakiya: "Your good humor is my ill humor."

Cecilus: "What with the weird link? I think it'd be healthier for you to determine your own humor without relying on me or the master of your heart."

Arakiya: "—Tch"

Arakiya's eyes burned with anger, having been told something she wished not to hear.

But, Cecilus brushed off the heat with his hand, "At any rate", he continued,

Cecilus: "The emergence of insects is an incredibly marvelous phenomenon, isn't it? After all, butterflies look totally different as larvae than as adults, don't they? The abilities they use to survive also seem different, right?”

Arakiya: “…Eating leaves, and sipping nectar.”

Cecilus: “Right, their food’s also different! In fact, they’re like totally different things. Even chrysalises, if you tear open the shells before they emerge on their own, the insides are mushy and it makes a huge mess…”

So Cecilus spoke, going that far.

In the background, from the direction of Kafma’s chrysalis, Goz’s deep voice and the noisy voices of the soldiers could be heard. Each one of them was peeling off the chrysalis’s shell, but she had a bad feeling about the noise.

As if it were related to the topic just now.

Arakiya: “Cecilus.”

Cecilus: “I thought it was alright, but was I too hasty?”

Tilting his head in a way that gave no sign he felt any particular sense of danger, Cecilus scratched his cheek with his finger.

Though she sighed at his irresponsible attitude, Arakiya left the matter of dealing with the chrysalis to Goz.

Instead, she stared intently at Cecilus’s profile with her one eye,

Cecilus: “—? What?”

Arakiya: “This mission, is about deciding the next Divine General.”

Cecilus: “Yeah, seems so. So, I was thinking I’d at least like to let Kafma-san give it a try too, but…”

Arakiya: “—I’ll make sure, you’ll properly call me by my name.”

Cecilus: “Oh?”

Arakiya quietly announced her determination, and Cecilus widened his eyes.

Then, his surprised expression changed into a satisfied smirk,

Cecilus: "So in other words, what you're saying is that I'll be surprised by the fruits of this battle?"

Arakiya: "Even you, Cecilus, couldn't kill Yorna. So, I will."

Cecilus: "So you'll try to kill Yorna-san. I see, I see… I know!"

Arakiya nodded, and Cecilus stepped forward in front of her, facing her with a huge grin. Without pause he quickly moved to take Arakiya's hand, and wildly shook it up and down,

Cecilus: "Sounds great, please do try to prove you're better than me! If the requirement's for you to beat me, no matter how much time passes, Anya won't be able to do it, so this arrangement's just perfect!"

Arakiya: "…"

Cecilus: "Oh no, what's the matter? Your brows are gathering ugly wrinkles. Since you're weaker than me, I think it'd be a good plan to at least maintain your loveliness as a beautiful woman."

Arakiya: "Let go."

Arakiya grit her teeth, shaking off Cecilus's arm, which had exceeded the limits of annoyance.

She had decided in her heart, that she absolutely would overturn that tranquil act, and transform it into a tearful face.

Not for the purpose of usurping the seat of First from Cecilus, nor because of the feelings that continued to burn deep in Arakiya's heart for her master.

Simply, it was a necessary rite for Arakiya to remain standing strong as Arakiya.

Cecilus: "Oh dear, Anya's so quick to anger. …Anyhow, I happily welcome such an attempt. I'm more blessed than even Sword Saint-dono, in that I've got someone to challenge me."

Indifferent to that sort of anger from Arakiya, Cecilus murmured with his hands linked behind his head.

The skyless underground ceiling, and the look in his blue eyes that seemed to gaze beyond it, was the most aggravating thing of the day to Arakiya.

It was the permanent figure of Cecilus Segmunt, acting like the absolute strongest, not even taking Arakiya into consideration, more than anything.

5

—At the same time, Imperial Soldiers were in the process of gathering at the nearest fort to the Demon City.

???: “At any rate, it appears we have an unexpected guest.”

In a comfortable, bewitching tone, a dominant voice filled the castle tower.

In a spacious room covered by a wooden floor, deep inside positioned at the seat of honor, was the Lord of the Castle, the heavenly beauty that held the Demon City of Chaosflame in her hand. A fox woman who dressed herself in a flamboyantly colorful kimono, numerous hair ornaments, and all sorts of decorations—Yorna Mishigure.

She was now the woman in the most perilous position in the Vollachian Empire, but her demeanor showed no sense of that.

For all who serve her, it was her calm presence that supported their hearts. Even if the whole Empire was watching, they would not be shaken in the least.

Clearly, this was the way of the beauty that had rebelled many times against the Vollachian Empire.

However—

Yorna: “Even the best may fail, but I did not expect to receive a guest like you.”

???: “Is that an answer to my, the dragon’s, question?”

Bringing the long-handled kiseru to her mouth, leaving a trail of purple smoke, Yorna’s voice was firm.

The voice was emitted from a small silhouette, sitting down on a lower seat looked down on by Yorna. If you looked only at her diminutive frame that carried childishness, her earlier words were nothing but the embodiment of disrespect towards the Lord of the Castle.

Still, there were not many who could press the other party on this matter.

Because the Crimson Lapis Castle in the center of the Demon City was receiving more guests than just the one before Yorna’s eyes.

Yorna: “…”

Intently, many yellow eyes were glaring imperiously inside the keep.

The owners of those eyes were known for their ferocity; whether their opponent was human or Witchbeast, it was their nature to swoop down and attack without mercy. As though to prove that such a tale was neither lies nor nonsense—

Yorna: “—Tanza, don’t move now.”

Tanza: “Y-Yes…”

With a glance, Yorna’s blue eyes flickered in the direction of a person on the balcony of the castle tower.

A deer girl with large antlers growing from her small head—Tears in her eyes, her entire head being held inside the gaping mouth of a flying dragon.

If the flying dragon closed its mouth on a whim, her head would crack as easily as an egg.

And, there were more flying dragons besides the one with the girl’s head held in its mouth. A large number had landed on the roof of the Crimson Lapis Castle, resting their wings while keeping the citizens of the Demon City in check.

Flying dragons held no love for people, and the techniques to make them obey were extremely limited as well. The one they obeyed, whose eyes shone with Yorna's face, was a young girl—

Yorna: "You are…"

Young lady: "—Madelyn Eschart."

Yorna: "…"

Madelyn: "You better listen to what I, the dragon, say. Since not everyone is as kind as me, the dragon."

So spoke the young girl—Madelyn, whose narrow golden pupils were trained on Yorna.

She was sitting in a well-mannered way, with black, twisted horns unlike those of an oni or a deer sprouting out of her head. —A race that was supposed to be lost, which had existed since antiquity.

—A dragonkin girl with the horns of a dragon, was advising Yorna to surrender.

Sword Identity III
(Translation Pending)

Sword Identity IV (Translation Pending)

The Scarlet League
(CA)

1

“Very well. Then, this is war,” the woman proclaimed, stunning and red as blood, proudly brandishing a raised fan in her hand. Those in her presence and anyone who heard her declaration found themselves filled with astonishment, perplexity, and in some cases, fervor. However, there was one unifying thread woven through them all—that being that each one of them were very young.

The enchanting woman’s resounding voice carried across the gathering of young boys and girls, all in their teens, with only a slight variation in age. On top of that, as children, they were far from war-savvy. Rather, they were simple boys and girls from the city. And while not entirely removed from the conflict, they were not expected to join the battlefield themselves. It was an audacious act to declare war to such youths, even attempting to draw them into its clutches.

An act that, even if said as a joke, could easily be misconstrued as malicious intent. Regrettably, however, in this particular instance, the person making the declaration showed not the slightest inkling of speaking in jest. The person was a tyrant for whom even the slightest suggestion of dissent would have the offender’s hand chopped off at the wrist. Be that as it may…

“We are going to war. Both sides should be well prepared,” declared the captivating Priscilla Barielle, repeatedly and with a distinct air of amusement. Her iron-helmeted squire, observing from behind, couldn’t help but think that perhaps it was more than the fear of losing his remaining arm that deterred him from challenging her outrageous words.

2

Several hours before Priscilla’s declaration of war…

"Lady Priscilla! We have a problem beyond my control!" The shrill voice of a child reverberated throughout the grand mansion. It wasn't due to the sheer volume of the cry, but rather because the maidservants had sporadically thrown open the doors and windows to ventilate the building.

The desperate tone in the voice carried a sense of urgency. However, having already figured out its identity, the women all pursed their lips into a smile and returned to their work. Amongst them, only one individual sat up heavily at the sound of the high-pitched voice while scratching their neck.

"Well, well, seems Schult's as peppy as ever today," remarked a man in a black iron helmet, rising from the comfort of the sofa where he had been resting with a hint of irritation. In contrast to his head, which was fully concealed with jet-black steel, the armor protecting his body from the neck down was noticeably lacking. On his feet were customized sandals that looked so out of place, they would surely be seared into one's memory.

Despite his eccentric appearance, however, only a select few were aware of the true nature of the role he fulfilled. In fact, it would be accurate to say that he himself hardly grasped what his position was. "Princess calls me a clown, but is she gonna pay me?" he wondered.

He knew that his mistress was very generous with the wages she paid her attendants. She was never known to be stingy, and her propensity to properly compensate them for their hard work had earned her their respect and admiration. However, his compensation did not come in the form of a monthly salary deposited into an account, so she must have handed it to him in some other way. But the exact details of this arrangement escaped his memory.

"I hadn't really thought about it. I don't really desire much, and she usually gives me pocket money when I ask," he thought. "But maybe I'm just a useless old man with a crappy resume and no savings." Saddened by his unintended self-analysis, the man headed for a room in the building without hesitation.

Considering the identity of the owner of the high-pitched voice and the nature of its cries, he had only one destination in mind. And sure enough, his intuition proved to be correct.

“I tried my best, but nobody would listen to me! At this rate, it will be all my fault that Your Ladyship’s… Your Ladyship’s…reputation will…!”

“Hmm, my reputation?”

“Th-They will doubt you! I can’t bear it!”

Peering into the room, the man’s gaze fell upon the hunched figure of a petite back. Clenching his tiny fist in frustration and trembling impishly was a boy with pink hair, a distinguished butler of the mansion who wore short trousers that complimented him well. This was Schult.

Seeing him in all his childish glory, and his valiant efforts to navigate the challenges before him, he had a charm that made one want to tenderly take care of him. The adoration bestowed upon Schult by all the attendants of the mansion was not only due to his age, but because of his own personality. Yet the attendants themselves were hesitant to openly express their affection for Schult, not because of their overwhelming workload, but for another, more fundamental reason. Namely…

“Your demeanor sure is adorable as always. Say, how can someone so small worry so much about me?” remarked Priscilla, the owner of the mansion, her narrowed eyes fixated on Schult as she doted upon him. Seated in a gaudy chair, her elbow resting on the armrest with her hand placed on her cheek, Priscilla lent an attentive ear to Schult’s heartfelt plea, with a book she had been reading left on her lap.

Priscilla, who was surprisingly well-read, dedicated much of her leisure time to reading. Princess’s time devoted to reading is sacred to her. Interrupting her during this time is like stepping on a landmine that triggers relentless verbal abuse. In fact, I wouldn’t be surprised if that person gets sent to the guillotine and bites the dust. Of course, the exception being Schult, that is.

"Wait, don't the maids get let off the hook too?" the man wondered aloud. "Which means, the only one getting special treatment is me, the one being abused."

Priscilla, having caught Al peeking into the room from the hallway, called out, "I thought I heard a crude, unusual voice. And indeed, it is you, Al."

"Well, this sucks," Al muttered to himself. He bowed his head as he appeared. Although he hadn't necessarily been trying to hide, he was well aware of Priscilla's unpredictable temperament, akin to the volatility of her own stock price—a frightening thing to say the least. One wanted to take as much time as possible to carefully gauge her mood.

Fortunately, Priscilla chose not to address his eavesdropping. Instead, she simply cocked her chin, and said: "Enlighten me, pray tell. Are you also here to bring me yet another report with a look on your face suggesting the end of the world?"

"Of course not, Princess," replied Al. "You think I'd work as hard as Schult without this helmet on?"

"Even if you did, such unsightliness shall not stir my heart in the slightest."

"Huh?!" Schult blurted out, unable to contain his curiosity at this particular part of Priscilla and Al's exchange. "Lady Priscilla, have you seen Sir Al's face?!" His curiosity having gotten the better of him, Schult immediately clamped his hands over his mouth in remorse for his lack of composure.

"I really am a mess, aren't I?" he lamented. "I should become a bug that does nothing but chirp…"

"Foolishness," Priscilla chided. "I have no desire for insects within the confines of my abode. If you wish to avoid being trampled upon, hatch into the best version of Schult as fast as you can."

"I will grow up!" he vowed.

"Seeing you in such haste, it is indeed adorable."

Al stepped forward, placing a hand on Schult's drooping head from behind. To Al's surprise, the child seemed more delighted than repulsed, a testament to his innocence. I really do hope this kid feeds on the favor of those around him in the future, and grows plump and fat.

"So, what's your complaint today, Schult? Princess making unreasonable demands again?" Al inquired.

"What do you mean 'again?'" Priscilla asked indignantly, furrowing her shapely eyebrows. "When have I ever made an unreasonable demand of Schult? Whenever he laments as such, it is usually due to his own self-indulgence."

"His own self-indulgence, huh?" Al chuckled, appreciating the cuteness of Priscilla's remark. "Well, that's pretty likely." He turned to Schult and tilted his head. "What's up? It's not unusual to see you all flustered, but I can't turn a blind eye to an emergency that affects the Princess's reputation. Tell me what happened."

"Well, you see…" Schult began.

"If I recall, you were supposed to accompany the maidservants into town this morning," Priscilla interjected.

"Surprise! I did!" Schult exclaimed. His reaction was to clutch his small chest, as if she had struck a chord.

Al, who had never witnessed someone exclaim "Surprise!" in such a manner, stared blankly out the window and mumbled, "Into town, huh?" In this case, the town Priscilla was referring to was Krufuna, located in the mansion's vicinity.

The city of Krufuna, which wasn't too far from the Barielle residence, held great significance and prosperity within the Barielle Domain. To be precise, it would be more accurate to say that it was Priscilla who made it flourish.

"I heard things were pretty bad when ol' Leip was the lord," Al remarked to himself.

The tyranny of Baron Leip Barielle, Priscilla's late husband and the former lord, was so extreme that it was almost impressive to watch from the sidelines, while the people suffered both body and soul. That's when Priscilla, Leip's "beloved wife," gallantly emerged to save them with her benevolent governance.

In retrospect, one could almost perceive Leip's excessive arrogance as a calculated strategy intended to boost Priscilla's future popularity. But from Leip's perspective, who died after succumbing to mental deterioration and a near-bedridden state, such an assessment would serve as nothing more than a rhetorical argument not worth entertaining.

"Schult, what did you do in Krufuna?" Priscilla asked.

"I-I was…utterly useless!" Schult moaned, biting his lip, his slender shoulders burdened by a weight too heavy to bear. The incident occurred earlier that morning when he accompanied the maidservants on a shopping trip.

"So basically, you couldn't mediate a siblings' argument about Princess?" Al summarized.

"Y-Yes…" Schult admitted, nodding slightly in agreement. Regret filled his eyes, growing moist with remorse. Al gazed down at him and tapped his helmet thoughtfully as he pieced together the details of what transpired. According to Schult, that was the crux of the matter.

While en route to Krufuna with the maidservants, Schult came upon a boy and girl quarreling in the streets. If it had simply been a trivial argument, Schult would have paid them no mind. However, it became evident that the two, presumably brother and sister, were engaged in a dispute concerning Priscilla.

"The older brother was saying bad things about Lady Priscilla! And the little sister was arguing back with tears in her eyes. But while they were arguing, the younger sister was pushed away…" Schult explained.

"And you just had to butt in," Al remarked. "But that brother sure had guts if he wasn't intimidated by the sight of you, Schult."

"Huh?" Schult looked at him quizzically. Yet it went without saying that he belonged to Priscilla's entourage. Schult was a well-known figure in the Barielle Domain, and there likely wasn't a single soul in Krufuna who would not recognize him. The boy had indeed displayed remarkable audacity to continue slandering Priscilla, even in the presence of Schult. He seems like the daring type of individual that would have been beheaded had he been born in a different era.

"Of course, I'm sure not even the Princess would do something so tyrannical—"

But before he could finish his sentence to defend what was left of her sense of righteousness, Priscilla was on her feet. "I shall make my way to Krufuna!" she declared.

"Wait, wait, wait, wait, wait! Calm down, Princess! You can't do that!" Al protested, attempting to appease her anger. Sure, there's nothing more foolish than for citizens to criticize their lord so openly in public, but—

"After all, they were only kids, right?" Al continued, "Those siblings weren't much older than you. Right, Schult?"

"Yes, that is right!" Schult agreed. "The brother was just a little older than me."

"See! No matter what he said, would you really behead a—"

"Foolishness!" Priscilla said, placing her fan against Al's throat before he could utter another word. Al, immediately silenced, felt a scorching heat searing his larynx from the outside, causing him to holler and roll over in agony.

"Ow! Ow, ow, ow, ow! Ain't this a bit too much?!" he moaned, clutching his scalded throat under Priscilla's piercing, fiery gaze.

"Too much, you say? If you cannot even comprehend the intentions of your mistress, then there is no point in keeping a fool like you by my side. Do not take your position for granted," Priscilla stated coldly, unfurling the fan that had left a mark on Al's throat.

"For granted?"

"Do not take it for granted that I will continue to keep you in my company," she threatened. She concealed her mouth with the fan as Al groaned. "I am not as short-sighted as you seem to believe. However, Schult will not stop crying about his lack of strength. If I do not take action, my reputation as a lord will suffer."

"What do you really want?" Al asked.

"I simply wish to alleviate my boredom," she confessed. "Additionally, I would like to know exactly what insults were spoken about me."

"Sounds like you." Al dropped his head in disappointment, convinced by Priscilla's characteristically straightforward response. He then scanned his surroundings with a quizzical look. "By the way, where'd Schult go?"

Just as Al was about to search for the vanished Schult, a voice rang out directly behind him. "Sir Al! Here you go!"

"Huh?!" As Al spun around to face the voice, his face was doused with a deluge of water. Upon closer inspection, a breathless Schult was holding a flower vase that had been on display in the hallway. He had carefully removed the flowers, using the remaining water to drench Al. Dripping wet with water that smelled and tasted distinctly of plants all over his helmet, he could do little more than stare in shock at Schult's abrupt and unanticipated act, asking, "Why?"

"You were burning up, Sir Al," Schult responded innocently. "So I thought I should cool you down…"

"I see…" Al nodded at Schult's explanation, then turned his attention to Priscilla with a snap of his head. "I'm gonna wipe down my helmet. Gimme a moment, 'kay?" he requested, indicating the need to postpone their departure.

3

"And that is why I have come here to see for myself," Priscilla declared, crossing her arms and causing her opponents to stiffen before her. Al sympathized with them from the depths of his heart. He sympathized, but there was little he could do about it. He had no power to stop her, nor had he intended to in the first place.

“You’d have to be a real wise guy to speak openly of the Princess,” Al remarked. In truth, it was a rarity for Priscilla to even listen to Al’s opinions, despite his role as her loyal servant. In fact, she hadn’t even waited for his return after cleaning his helmet drenched with vase water. Once he heard that Priscilla and Schult had already departed the mansion, he hurried after them. By the time he caught up, Priscilla was already standing before her intended audience.

“Ah… Oh…” A boy of around thirteen or fourteen stood there, eyes filled with fear as they darted around under Priscilla’s piercing gaze. With red-toned hair and freckles, he was a rather ordinary looking boy with no remarkable features. For a boy like this to receive a sudden visit by the lord of the land, he would surely wilt away. Even more so given the reason for her visit.

“The Sun Princess…! Wow, it really is the Sun Princess!” Beside the boy was a girl, bouncing up and down in excitement, hand over her mouth. She appeared around ten years old, and wore her hair in two red pigtails. Based on Schult’s earlier explanation at the mansion, these two were most likely the brother and sister in question—the siblings who had been arguing about Priscilla.

“And it’s the big bro who was bad-mouthing the princess…” Al muttered to himself. The expected scenario would have been for the sister, in defense of Priscilla, to confront her brother, who had been bad-mouthing her. Then, Schult would have joined forces with the sister, only to be defeated. Had the roles been reversed, however, with the older brother chastising his sister for her ignorance, there wouldn’t have been a problem.

Yet this was not the case. It was a much more delicate matter. Not to mention, the boy’s age is also a concern. Priscilla’s surprisingly patient with children, but this boy looks like he’s teetering on the edge of her tolerance. But when push came to shove…

“Would I have to put my life on the line to prevent rumors of her cutting down one of her subjects from spreading?” Al said to himself. “It’ll sure be a pain to convince the Princess, though.” In fact, it would require more than just pain—it would be a matter of life and death.

Regardless, Al stepped onto the scene on that late afternoon, ready to intervene at a moment’s notice, fully alert for potential confrontations. Just then, Schult spotted Al and called out, “Sir Al! You caught up with us! Um, is your helmet okay? Did it get rusty or damaged?”

“Nah, don’t worry, it’s fine,” Al replied. “Well, if it does break, just use your savings to get me a new helmet that suits me more, ‘kay?”

“A new helmet?” Schult asked, “But I think a hat would suit you better! It would be more fashionable. Plus, we would be able to see your face, Sir Al!”

“That curiosity’s one of the things that makes you so adorable, y’know, Schult,” Al remarked, glancing at the inquisitive young boy who eagerly desired to see his face. Then he turned his attention to Priscilla. “So, what’s up with you, Princess? Already making the kids cry?”

The stunning, sharp-tongued Priscilla dismissed him with a single word: “Foolishness.” She then elaborated, “Do you truly believe I would engage in such behavior? I simply clarified the nature of my visit to them.”

“The nature of your visit? How so?” Al inquired.

“I heard that he slandered me, and I was curious to know what kind of nonsense he had concocted.”

“How I pity them…” Al mumbled.

It’s awkward enough for the accused to know that his words had reached the person in question. However, to be confronted directly about it is undoubtedly an unbearable situation. Not to mention, the fact that the person in question happens to be the lord of the land in which he lived. He must feel like he's on thin ice.

The girl, unaware of her brother's distress and unable to comprehend the gravity of the situation, made a heartfelt plea to Priscilla. "Sun Princess! My brother is so mean! He said bad things about you! Please scold him! Tell him it's not nice!"

If Priscilla were to grant her request, there was a high probability that the boy would face more than a simple scolding. However, it was impossible for this girl to understand that.

"Hmmm, a scolding from me, you say?" Priscilla mused. "That sounds like quite an interesting proposal. What do you think, Schult?"

"U-Um… well, you see," Schult stammered, "it was my fault for not handling the situation properly. So it would be a bit odd for you to do it, my lady…"

"You are not being very articulate," Priscilla chided. "Can you not speak up?"

"I-I want you to watch me do my very best, Lady Priscilla!" Schult exclaimed, standing tall in front of Priscilla. Mustering his courage, he turned to face the boy, his face flushed with determination.

Al observed the scene beside Priscilla in admiration. Schult had apparently reached the same conclusion as him, although from a completely different perspective—that this matter should not be left up to Priscilla.

Schult looked up at the boy, who was only slightly taller than him.

"Why did you have to say such mean things?" he demanded. "Priscilla is incredibly beautiful and charming! And she is smart, too… There is nothing wrong with her!"

"W-Well…" the boy stammered.

"That's right!" the sister chimed in. Encouraged by Schult's words, the girl joined in on proclaiming Priscilla's beauty to her brother. "Whenever I said something nice about Lady Priscilla, you always denied it! Just look at her! She's so incredibly gorgeous!"

Priscilla, being complimented on her beauty by these two young children, did not so much as flinch under the boy's uneasy gaze. She proudly and unabashedly displayed her bold and blazing beauty to the public. However, the boy's gaze held a mix of complex emotions, contradicting what she had been told earlier. It appeared the tension he felt was not solely due to her lordship, but also because he was faced with the beauty of a woman that his eyes couldn't help but admire.

"Well, he doesn't seem to hate you, Princess," Al observed, "but… ain't it just that typical youngster bravado? Y'know, refusing to admit that someone's a looker even though everyone else says so?"

"I fail to see the point of your analogy," Priscilla remarked, brushing off his words, "but I suppose I have a good idea of his motivations. Al, do you happen to have any siblings?"

"Me? Nah, I'm an only child."

"Then it would be futile to expect you to comprehend," Priscilla retorted. Al grimaced at being told off so bluntly. However, his expression remained hidden beneath his helmet, invisible to the eyes of others.

"Cease your frowning. Your gloom is stinking up the air," Priscilla ordered, despite being unable to see Al's facial expression.

"Wha?!" he blurted out, startled.

Ignoring him, Priscilla stepped forward. The boy, cornered by both his sister and Schult, timidly retreated, shrinking once more under Priscilla's commanding beauty and power. However…

"You two siblings both have red hair, I see," Priscilla observed, combing her fingers through the petrified boy's red locks.

"Huh?" The boy appeared startled by the gesture. "Your sister's hair is a brighter shade of red while yours appears to be a tad darker, but it's safe to say they belong in the same category," Priscilla continued her observation, to which the girl eagerly affirmed.

"There aren't many kids with red hair," the girl continued, "so I told my brother how lucky we were to look just like the Sun Princess! But he got really mad at me for saying that."

"Simply having red hair is quite a rarity," Priscilla explained, "so it tends to attract the attention of others around you. Some people will pick on you over the most trivial of things. Has that happened to you?"

"You mean like people saying mean things? Yeah. But, when that happens…" the girl's voice trailed off. Priscilla's question seemed to have triggered a memory, and the girl's gaze shifted toward her brother.

The meaning behind her look was clear. Before today, the girl's brother would have stood up to any criticisms regarding their hair. That is, until a certain red-headed Sun Princess named Priscilla Barielle appeared.

"So that's it, huh," Al deduced, finally grasping the core of the siblings' dispute, albeit long after Priscilla had. In short, the brother's antipathy toward Priscilla stemmed from jealousy. "At first, he was the one defending his sister when she got picked on for being a redhead. Guess that all changed once the Princess entered the picture…"

The boy must have felt his self-respect and pride as an older brother stripped away, causing him to object to his sister's admiration of Priscilla. And then, at the most inopportune moment, Schult happened to pass by. Unable to take back his words, the situation had soon spiraled out of control.

"When you add it all up, the truth's pretty obvious," Al continued. "It's no one's fault, really. I'd just call it bad timing…or maybe just your stars were bad."

"Hmm? Did you figure something out, Sir Al?" Schult asked as Al nodded to himself thoughtfully. Schult turned and looked up at him, tugging at the hem of his vest.

"You're adorable, looking up at me like that," Al commented.

“Huh? What do you mean?” Schult asked. “It’s unfair to keep secrets from me! I want to know too! And I also want to see your face, Sir Al!”

“You’re really hung up on that, huh? It ain’t that big a deal. You really…” Al intended to simplify the situation by describing it as a case of adolescent sibling rivalry. He didn’t want to further drag out the story and embarrass this boy who loved his sister so much.

People were slowly beginning to gather, drawn in by Priscilla’s extraordinary beauty and captivating presence. Many of them were younger onlookers who were originally there after being caught up in the energy of the sibling rivalry. Al figured the situation would get out of control as the commotion escalated and more people began to flock around them. If there’s any moment to wrap up this mess, it’s now, he thought.

Then, a sudden declaration came forth, seizing control of the entire conversation and dominating the scene:

“Very well. Then, this is war.”

The sudden declaration of war left everyone, except Priscilla who held the reins of power, in a state of shock. Of course, Al and Schult were no exception. However, for the siblings, unexpectedly thrust into opposing roles, the astonishment was perhaps even greater.

The older brother’s face grew pale as his eyes widened in disbelief. The younger sister was genuinely taken aback, unable to fully comprehend the situation. Their whispered utterances of confusion made them look exactly identical in their panic.

Unperturbed by their reactions, Priscilla unfurled her fan as she proceeded to command everything within earshot of her voice. Priscilla was an unquenchable flame, engulfing everything in her path and dying it all red. Al wondered if this was really the right crowd for Priscilla to display this side of herself to. However, he couldn’t bring himself to interrupt her.

“We’re going to war. Both sides should be well prepared.” Her smile as she declared war was so magnificent, it silenced any objections.

“Just outta curiosity, why are you playing war?” Al asked, standing behind Priscilla.

“I am not playing. Do not selfishly dismiss it as a mere game based on your own perspective. When there is a clash of differing opinions and military power is involved, it can be considered war, no matter what,” Priscilla said, dismissing Al’s doubts. She peered down into the garden where the preparations for “war” were underway.

“Military power, huh?”

“Schult said that the brother made the first move,” Priscilla explained.

The commotion, which began with a trivial sibling rivalry, had unexpectedly, and quite literally, made its way into Barielle Manor. The siblings at the center of the commotion, along with every other boy and girl they considered friends, had been assembled and brought to the mansion in a dragon carriage.

There, the children, mesmerized by the unfamiliar surroundings and atmosphere of their lord’s mansion, were gradually being acquainted with the intricacies of war. Needless to say, this was not a war that would require actual swords or shields.

“Well, it’s a big relief to see wooden swords and mud balls and such,” Al admitted. “Knowing you, Princess, there was no guarantee the children wouldn’t have been given actual swords.”

“If you give them tools they cannot handle, they shall not be able to achieve their true potential,” Priscilla explained, “Not only are they not warriors, they haven’t even trained to be soldiers.”

“If you’d suggested giving them weapons if they had even a little training, I’m afraid you’d have been roasted.”

“Why would I suddenly go up in flames? Your words make no sense,” Priscilla countered, raising a shapely eyebrow at Al’s remark as she questioned the meaning of “roasted.” Al shrugged off her question, redirecting his attention to the children diligently "preparing for war," as they had been instructed. It was war, after all, and so they had been divided into two distinct camps.

In essence, there was an Eastern Army and a Western Army, led by the older brother and the younger sister, respectively. Although there were exactly 15 members on each side, the older brother's side boasted a higher average age since they were predominantly his friends. The male-to-female ratio was also skewed in favor of his faction, which unofficially suggested their higher probability of victory.

Of course, that wasn't to say that there were no boys on the sister's side. However, with Schult as one of them, despite his fervent enthusiasm, victory would be a challenge. "Let's do our best and work together to prove how amazing Lady Priscilla is!" he exclaimed with unwavering confidence.

Schult had naturally developed more slowly in comparison to other children his age. In addition, due to Priscilla's deliberate attitude towards him, he struggled to maintain a serious demeanor. He was highly unqualified to act as an effective soldier. His gusto could be described both as amusing and painful to watch. However, on the other hand, it was hard to believe that Priscilla was oblivious to these circumstances.

"Why the long face?" Priscilla said, gently touching her own lips.

"You can't see through my helmet! How could you possibly know what I look like, Princess?" Al demanded to know.

"Well, perhaps if I had never laid eyes on your face before," she retorted, "but we both know that is not the case, do we not?"

"Tch," Al clicked his tongue at her cutting remark, unable to find a suitable response as her gesture and cherry-red lips drew his gaze. The memory of that inevitable moment when she had glimpsed his true countenance came rushing back. However, Priscilla and Al played different roles. Despite their pretenses, neither could deny the fact that they had been caught in a moment of vulnerability.

"You questioned the purpose of this war," Priscilla addressed the silent Al. She sat in her chair, propping herself on her cheekbone. Al closed one eye at her words, having assumed that this conversation was over. Priscilla looked at the children below, and continued, "When both parties possess unwavering convictions, times will arise in which they must cross swords, even amongst parents and siblings. Blood ties alone do not dictate where one's resolve is tested."

"I get that, but is it really necessary to ask them that question now?" Al inquired. "Regardless of the little sis' excitement, the big bro probably didn't expect it to become such a big deal."

"As I have already informed you," Priscilla reminded him, dismissing his opinion with the same logic as before, "it was the brother who displayed his military prowess first."

Al scratched his head, unable to articulate his thoughts any further. He understood the cause of the siblings' quarrel and the brother's sense of obligation, but he couldn't agree with the brother's decision to use violence. So is this a form of punishment?

"But if big bro wins this 'war', won't that defeat the whole purpose?" Al asked.

"Indeed, if the older brother triumphs, it would," Priscilla acknowledged. "However, the morale favors the side of the sister. Plus…"

"Plus what?"

"The sister's side has received a little strategic advice from my end." This new information caught Al off guard, shattering his pessimistic expectations.

To be honest, Al did not know if Priscilla was familiar with battle tactics. He could not know, yet he held lofty expectations for her, believing there was nothing she couldn't accomplish. After all, this fearless Scarlet Princess seemed to possess an uncanny knack for receiving favor in all events. Precisely for that reason…

"Everything in this world is made for my convenience," Priscilla declared. And indeed, it truly appeared as if the entire world was united in advocating for her philosophy.

With these winds seemingly blowing in Priscilla's favor, Al couldn't help but voice a question. "Princess, do you happen to have a brother?" The query slipped out before he could contain himself, and he immediately regretted the possibility of upsetting Priscilla with his words.

However, regardless of Al's inner turmoil, Priscilla narrowed her eyes. "And just what makes you think that all of a sudden?" she challenged.

"Ah, well honestly, it just kinda hit me," Al explained. "It's like you understood the reason for the siblings' fight from the get-go, and then, uh…"

"Do not stumble over your words there," she said curtly. "Are you simply seeking my attention?"

"Well, you were pretty hung up on the big bro's antics," he continued. Yet, as he was speaking from a mere idea, he struggled to verbalize it, even to himself. Yet the more he pondered it, the more it made sense.

Thinking back, he recalled the first time Priscilla said she was going to Krufuna. It was not a mere whim on her part, nor due to Schult's perceived shortcomings. Rather, the decision came after hearing the details of the siblings' quarrel. The more he thought about it, the clearer it became.

Upon hearing Al's guess, Priscilla became unusually silent, keeping her mouth shut. Surprised by her uncharacteristic composure in response to his accurate assumption, Al leaned forward and peered into her face. However, in an instant, the tip of her fan extended and pressed under his chin.

"Ow, ow, ow, ow!" Al winced as Priscilla's scorching punishment seared through his curiosity. "Agh! Ow! W-Wait, Princess!"

"Do not gaze upon my face with impure thoughts," Priscilla warned.

"It is natural for men to be captivated by my beauty, but those who desire more must be willing to pay the appropriate price."

"That's no reason to carbonize someone's vocal cords, damn!" Al grumbled in pain and frustration.

Having had his sense of superiority scorched by her scathing response, Al shrugged and withdrew, rubbing his throat in discomfort. Priscilla let out a small sigh as Al retreated, and replied, "I had numerous siblings. Older brothers, younger brothers, older sisters, younger sisters."

"Wow, I can't even imagine," Al commented, pondering Priscilla's family structure with a tilt of his head.

Priscilla responded to his reaction. "Hmm? What exactly is so difficult for you to grasp about it?"

"I know I asked if you had siblings. But seriously, Princess, you don't strike me as the kind of person who fits into the typical family portrait," Al confessed. "You don't really give off that big or little sis vibe, y'know? It's like my brain gets all buggy and glitchy when you tell me you fit in both categories."

"What was that, a 'bargain' on words from beyond the Great Waterfall?" Priscilla asked, a slight chuckle escaping her lips as she attempted to wield her recently acquired vocabulary. However, Al wasn't oblivious to the subtle undercurrent of nostalgia in her words.

Nostalgia, yes, nostalgia. I'm honestly surprised to know that even the Princess gets nostalgic about things. Not to mention hearing how many brothers and sisters she got. Or how she spoke of them in past tense…

"Lady Priscilla! Everything is ready to go!" Schult's voice rang out from the garden below as Al and Priscilla's conversation came to a close. Looking around, the scene revealed the children adorned in their valiant "war" attire deployed on either side of the garden, each exuding a fierce determination to prove their prowess.

It was evident that both the younger sister’s camp, already brimming with high morale, and the older brother’s camp, initially hesitant to engage in battle, now displayed a remarkable level of ambition.

“Things are gonna get messy,” Al commented with an unexpected touch of excitement. Priscilla rose from her chair in response.

“That is precisely why it was well worth the effort,” Priscilla proclaimed. Her profile as she spoke, and the fleeting emotion that passed through her eyes, captured Al’s attention. But before he could decipher its meaning, Priscilla thrusted her fan forward and continued, “Both sides must exert their utmost effort. For those who cannot abandon their wills, the only path to prove themselves is through victory. So, let the battle commence.”

“I am off!” called Schult.

The shrill cries of the children filled the air, echoing in response to the commanding voice of the Scarlet Princess. The “war” had begun within the grounds of Barielle Manor, with the brother and sister locked into fierce battle. Watching this scene unfold, a realization dawned upon Al regarding his earlier concern.

What he detected in Priscilla’s profile was the subtle flicker of anticipation. There was an expectation in her eyes, a glimmer of hope that she might witness what she desired.

5

“So what the hell was all that commotion about earlier?” the man grumbled, tilting his head as he stroked his stubble-streaked chin, his face flushed with booze.

He was a towering man with blazing red hair, sporting a shirt without any armor over his moderately fit physique. It gave him a distinct appearance different from his usual worn-out demeanor. However, it was questionable whether that was the impression he wanted to give.

That evening, on the balcony of Barielle Manor, Al found himself in a rather uninspiring encounter with a man, rather than in the presence of Priscilla or Schult. It wasn't that they had prearranged this meeting. They just happened to be in the same place at the same time, quietly spending the evening. Neither of them sought to seek out or avoid the other's company. Sometimes, a man simply needed a moment such as this on an empty balcony to reflect on things.

"Well, it's a complicated thing for dudes our age, y'know?" Al began to explain.

"What?" asked the man. Al shook his head and answered the man's frowning gaze with a gentle shake of his head.

"What I mean is, men are always going through puberty, y'know?" Problems keep piling up as we get older, but deep down, it's the same basic stuff. In the end, we're still asking ourselves, 'Who am I?' It's like we're stuck in this eternal adolescence.

"Well, whatever," the man grumbled. "And you still haven't answered my question, have you?"

"Oh, Princess's whim?" Al asked. "I'm still trying to figure that out myself, bro. It's a mystery to me."

"You're awfully laid-back for a supposed knight of the Sun Princess, huh," the man scoffed.

"Give me a break, bro. I've told you before, I'm not a knight," Al said dismissively. The man stayed silent.

Al detested being referred to as a knight, even in jest. He harbored a deep prejudice against those in the knight profession, considering them little more than chumps. And it wasn't only Al who held such resentment. Neither he nor Priscilla intended to glamorize their relationship with each other. Besides, this guy must also hate any topic involving knights and whatnot. After all…

"You're the father of the Knight Among Knights, Reinhard van Astrea," Al pointed out.

"Tch," the middle-aged Heinkel Astrea clicked his tongue in disgust at the reminder. His frown, unkempt stubble, and simple attire were far from impressive, but upon closer inspection, one could see that he indeed shared similar features to the renowned Sword Saint, with his well-defined face and blazing red hair.

This was only natural, given the fact that they were father and son by blood. Of course, there was no question that their relationship was certainly a complicated one. Otherwise, he would not have been able to serve a master from a different camp than his own son.

Heinkel, still silent, took a swig directly from the bottle in his hand. He was now a member of the Priscilla Camp, joining the ranks alongside those contesting for the royal selection. Nevertheless, Al had no idea what role he played. That was up to Priscilla. It was hard to fathom that his involvement held no significance.

“That ain’t really how I measure things, nor how I think,” Al concluded.

“But if you keep on like that, you’re gonna cause people trouble,” Heinkel remarked. “If Lady Priscilla is dead serious about the throne, she can’t afford to become some queen that nobody understands.”

“Not my concern, bro,” Al said, leaning against the balcony railing. He gently patted the area where Priscilla, fresh in his memory, had been leaning, and spoke with determination. “For Princess, I’ll do whatever it takes to make her win.”

Upon hearing Al’s reassurance, Heinkel glanced at him briefly, and sneered, “Well, isn’t that something. I thought you didn’t give a damn about the royal selection’s outcome.”

“Oh, come on, don’t go exaggerating,” Al said. “I think about it every day.”

“Right, let me rephrase that. I just assumed you didn’t give a damn about sticking your nose into the royal selection process. Lady Priscilla’s perfectly capable of handling everything on her own, right?”

"Oh," Al let out a voice expressing his amazement.

He was a bit taken aback by Heinkel's astute observation. Not because he said something unexpected, but because it revealed Heinkel's keen eye for what was happening around him. Nah, considering how Priscilla managed to see through my helmet twice today, perhaps I'm just not as hard-to-read as I thought.

"No. The reason I wear this helmet is because I already know that, isn't it?" Al wore his helmet with a sense of detachment, yet his overwhelming emotions remained palpable. Perhaps he should have become an actor instead of an outcast.

"Oh dear, you're refusing to answer this too," Heinkel remarked. "You're quite the secretive one, aren't you?"

"That's never been a secret," Al replied. "I mean, I hide my face. Ain't that normally the first thing you see? Well, you won't find anything interesting in my secrets. If anything…"

"If anything?"

"I think you and I are pretty much alike," Al shared, drawing from the bits of information he had heard about Heinkel's complex circumstances.

Between his legendary father, known as the Sword Demon, and his son, the Sword Saint, who was hailed as the greatest swordsman of all time, Heinkel was of a quiet generation, caught in the middle. A pathetic man afflicted by his melancholy and his position. A man deserving of intense sympathy. For Al painfully understood the fear of being overshadowed by one's own illustrious bloodline.

"You don't know a damn thing about me," Heinkel spat bitterly, wrinkling his nose.

"I knew you would say that, though!" Al chuckled wryly. It seemed that Heinkel neither desired nor cared to be understood. Al leaned his back against the railing, gazing up at the moon in the night sky.

"As far as I can tell, today's 'war' was just Princess's way of assessing things," Al said thoughtfully.

“War?”

“Let’s just call it boisterous merrymaking,” Al explained. “You got two people with their own stubborn opinions, rallying their buddies, breaking up into teams, then using all their might to prove their point. Ain’t that just what war is, bro?”

“Sounds like bullshit to me,” Heinkel scoffed. The use of obscene language was a telltale sign of him becoming drunk. The more drunk he became, the further removed from dignity and sincerity he grew.

Al observed this shift from the sidelines with amusement. Al didn’t drink, so he was unable to personally gauge the effects of alcohol. But the unappealing spectacle of an intoxicated stranger was enough to reinforce his aversion to it. In any case, Al’s examination of Priscilla’s awareness and intentions regarding the “war” served as a means of both affirming and analyzing her intentions.

“Princess had something she wanted to see, y’know? And she used that sibling showdown to figure it out,” Al commented.

“What the hell did she wanna see?”

“Unfortunately, she didn’t exactly spill the beans to me, so I can’t really say. My guess could be way off, y’know.”

“You’re useless,” Heinkel grumbled. “Might as well ask her to chop off your other arm.”

“Damn, you’re so vulgar when you’re drunk!” Al complained. “Someone with both arms intact might not get it, but this arm means a hell of a lot more to me than it would to y’all that still got both!”

It was a dispute that could have easily escalated to an all-out fight, yet Heinkel showed no remorse or apology. Not because he viewed others as unimportant, though. On the contrary, it was because he had little regard for his own self, which seemed to justify his reckless demeanor. In fact, Heinkel would gladly accept a duel that came about as a consequence of his outspokenness. However…

"I'm telling you, bro, once anyone finds out you're the father of the Sword Saint, they'll back off real quick," Al said.

"Tch." Heinkel averted his gaze and clicked his tongue in annoyance once more. No matter what they talked about that quiet evening on the balcony, they always seemed to circle back to the same question: Who am I? It was a question that nobody could escape.

A gruff, liquor-infused voice brought Al back down to earth as he gazed blankly at the night sky, contemplating the constellations above for which each of them were named. "So, you said she wanted to see something," Heinkel grumbled, his sky-blue eyes somewhat vacant as he gazed into his half-full bottle of liquor.

"Yeah," Al acknowledged.

"You also got something you want to see, Sir Al?" Heinkel asked.

"I'm surprised you're interested in me, bro. Thought you only cared about your own family." As soon as Al said this, Heinkel scowled and clicked his tongue once more, hurling his bottle of booze at Al.

Al ducked with a "Whoops" to avoid the spinning bottle as it sailed over the railing and into the garden, smacking the ground with a resounding crack. Heinkel turned away without sparing a glance, as if trying to distance himself from Al, who had clearly struck a nerve.

"Yes, I do," Al called out abruptly after Heinkel, walking away from the balcony. Heinkel paused for a moment, listening to Al's words without bothering to turn back. Al cracked a slight smile at his apparent curiosity, but had nothing more to add.

"I do have something I want to see," Al continued. "Princess in the bath!"

"Tch!" Another click of the tongue was the only way Heinkel could possibly respond to Al's mischievous joke.

"Well if that ain't the loudest tongue click I've ever heard in my life!"

“I am so happy that the siblings made up!” Schult beamed. His reaction was one of pure joy and innocence, with no uncertainty whatsoever. Priscilla closed one eye and drew her fan from the open bosom of her nightgown.

“Oh, so you think so too, Schult?” Priscilla asked.

“Yes, I do! I knew you could do it, my lady! I am so proud of you!”

With the tip of the fan, Priscilla gently lifted Schult’s chin and turned his head to the side, causing the boy to make a quizzical face. She could clearly see the reddish tint lingering on his right cheek. It was a visible remnant of today’s “war”, and what one might call a badge of honor.

“To me, considering a battle wound as a badge of honor is a reflection of one’s own shortcomings,” Priscilla remarked.

“Lady Priscilla?” Schult questioned.

“Does your cheek hurt?”

Tightly clenching his small fists, Schult demonstrated his unwavering determination. “It tingles a bit, but I’m fine! It was all part of our winning strategy!”

In addition to the redness of his cheeks, Schult bore scars all over his body from the war. He had scraped knees from falls, a bruised back from being hit, and possibly many other marks of battle. In moments of injury, pain often follows, and one may even shed tears. Indeed, Schult had shed a tear or two. However…

“This whole thing started because of me. Do you despise me?” Priscilla asked.

“Me? Hate you? Lady Priscilla? That’s impossible!” Schult exclaimed in disbelief.

“…”

"I was so happy to fight for you, my lady!" Schult's gaze shifted downwards as he marveled at his own modest display of bravery. "I would have been more scared than hurt if I just cowered in fear…"

His introspective posture, although typical of him, was at the same time as painful as the scars on his body. This mental anguish, however, was not particularly unique to Schult. It was a sort of "fever" that could afflict anyone, regardless of who they were.

"…"

After the tumultuous events of the day, Priscilla had finished her hot bath and lay on her bed. Schult, having changed into his own nightgown, nestled beside her—a customary routine that had become an endearing ritual. This small, adorable boy had become an indispensable cuddle pillow for Priscilla. However, Schult himself yearned for a more significant role than that of a mere cuddle pillow. A fact that Priscilla astutely recognized, as evidenced by the day's war.

The quarrel between the siblings, which Priscilla called a war, unfolded just as Priscilla had predicted. The younger sister's camp, guided by her counsel, emerged victorious. And Schult had played a significant role in securing their triumph. He was one of the first ones to fall, in a rather spectacular fashion, and left the other side bewildered.

"I thought my hard work would pay off, but I was wrong…" Schult said with a hint of disappointment. "Enemies appeared left and right. They were all over me… They were destroying me."

The title of the vanguard may have held a certain allure, but in Schult's case, the first sacrifice may have been more fitting. As the morale of the younger sister's camp dwindled, that of the older brother's only grew in strength and momentum. The sister's camp was driven back by the advancing forces of the brother's. However…

"Well, he is a big brother, after all," Schult said with a smile, acknowledging the reason for the brother's defeat. Despite countless setbacks endured by the sister's camp, once they finally reached their opponent’s leader, the brother hesitated to let his sister down in the face of victory. It was at that moment that Priscilla’s wiles came into effect, bringing the war to an end.

“The condition for victory is the downfall of the other team’s general,” Priscilla had explained. “Which means, if the opponent’s leader falls, even if you are the last man standing, if you manage to take down the other side’s leader, the victory is yours. Whether you win will be determined by the very last moment.”

In this respect, the sister heeded Priscilla’s words and displayed great courage. Priscilla’s advice was simple yet effective: “Your brother will hesitate to kill you in the very end. That is precisely when you should strike.” And indeed, true to Priscilla’s prediction, that is exactly how the conflict was resolved.

“In the end, it was amazing that the brother defended his sister from his teammates, even after she stabbed him,” Schult marveled. “That is why, as you said, Lady Priscilla, they were able to make up!”

However, the final outcome was not as heartwarming as the innocence Schult portrayed. The sister’s strategic move managed to topple her brother and his followers, who had been on the brink of victory. Naturally, they refused to accept defeat, instead directing their anger at the sister. Yet, it was the brother himself who bravely shielded her from their wrath head-on.

Originally, this situation came about due to the deep bond between the siblings. The brother could not bear to see his sister vilified, and the sister, amidst accusations and fear, reaffirmed her love and respect for her protective older brother. And thus, that was the conclusion they reached.

“…”

Pricilla maintained her silence. Despite witnessing the outcome, and the resolution unfolding somewhat as she had envisioned, an unsettling darkness lingered in her heart. In Priscilla’s mind, there were two potential outcomes: whether her advice would have proved effective or not.

Her intuition was right on the mark. The sister successfully stabbed her hesitant brother, thus claiming victory. However, this was not a triumph, but a certainty. It was proof of the elder brother's undeniable love for his sister. It was a war, albeit a false one. The death of the men may have been staged, and the wounds received may have been superficial, but nonetheless, it was still a war.

If she so desired, Priscilla possessed the power to incite and manipulate countless individuals to engage in real warfare, where real lives were at stake, just as she did today. She could sway naive, ignorant individuals like Schult, who mustered strength through blind faith. Priscilla was fully aware that she held that power, responsibility, position, and beauty. And the outcome of today's events only reinforced that. Why then won't the dark cloud in me dissipate?

"I knew I was not mistaken," Schult said as he sat beside Priscilla, lost in thought. The tone of his voice had suddenly dropped.

"Hmm?" Priscilla turned her attention to Schult. It was an unusual reaction for a normally cheerful boy.

Schult rubbed his cheeks with both hands. "Lady Priscilla, you looked kind of lonely," he mumbled with a hint of concern, dropping his gaze.

"Lonely? Me?" Priscilla asked with surprise.

"That is how it looked to me," Schult continued. "I thought you seemed a little lonely when you were watching that brother and sister…"

Could it be this child blames himself for not being able to mediate the siblings' quarrel? Does he blame himself for my own upset? If so, he couldn't be further off the mark. More so…

"Ha—" She gently put a hand over her mouth, but nevertheless, a breath escaped her, unexpectedly bubbling up from within.

"L-Lady Priscilla?" Schult stammered, taken aback.

It was a laugh that Priscilla had not intended, and one that Schult had unwittingly evoked. It was Schult's achievement that unveiled the true nature of the dark cloud lingering in Priscilla's heart.

"How dare you suggest that I, Priscilla, could be lonely? Oh, how dare you?"

"Wh-Wh-Wha—? I-I was wrong, wasn't I? I knew it…"

"No. I commend you, even though your choice of words may have been incorrect," Priscilla praised her young servant, suppressing his agitation. She placed her fan on the flustered boy's forehead with a smile.

Schult looked shocked at her statement, then patted his chest as if relieved. Foolish, ignorant, and thus innocent, Schult's crimson eyes may have caught a glimpse deep into the heart of the Scarlet Princess, continuing to burn with an intense, fervent heat.

"Schult, you must not divulge your observations about my emotions to anyone," Priscilla cautioned.

"About Your Ladyship appearing lonely?"

"I shall not admit to feeling lonely," she replied defiantly, "however, I do wish to avoid any misunderstandings. I order you to keep your mouth shut, my loyal servant with your radiantly burning eyes."

Schult's red eyes twinkled, and he paused for a moment before nodding his head. "Yes, I understand," he replied. Hearing his response, Priscilla placed her hands on her ample bosom, feeling the dark cloud gradually dissipate. How humiliating yet intriguing it is that this boy, Schult, was both correct and incorrect in his observations.

The siblings' war, driven by their love for one another, had ended precisely as Priscilla had foreseen. However, on the other hand, it was still not quite what she had hoped for. If one cannot conclude definitively that the thoughts, feelings, and love between siblings loses its radiance in the face of various factors, and their warmth and glimmer eventually gets overshadowed, then…

“Was it me who was lacking? Or was it you, Brother?” Priscilla murmured, gently poking the cheek of the sleeping child in her arms on her bed. She directed her question to a fragment of cloud that had dissipated within her heart. Naturally, there was no response. The opportunity to ask had long since slipped away. However, she held on to the feeling that an answer to her nagging doubts would come to light in the near future.

It would have been sufficient if I could simply forget about it and keep myself distant. However, if such a premonition were to resurface from the searing heat within my heart, the answer would undoubtedly find its way to me. Because after all…

“Everything in this world is made for my convenience.”

END

Short Story Collection 7

Lugunican Papers
(Edited Machine Translation)

1

???: “Shorty! Shorty Megan!”

A man walks down the hallway, his shoes thudding loudly. The people look at each other and quickly lose interest at the sound of his footsteps and his thick voice, as if to say, “Oh, here we go again”.

It is an everyday occurrence, a common sight, and not something worth talking about.

The man in question walked forward without paying any attention to the people around him, and opened the door of the room he wanted to go to with the momentum of almost breaking through the wall—

???: “—Shorty Megan! There you are!”

Shorty: “Huh? Yes, yes, yes, yes, yes, I am here, I am here, Shorty Megan is here, and I am alive and well!”

The door was opened and in the room, a small boy literally jumped up at the sound of the man’s voice.

He was wearing a large round hat that covered his head completely, and his bangs hid both his eyes. He was dressed in a pair of worn-out work clothes and shoes whose only selling point was their sturdiness, and it was obvious at a glance that they were worn out.

This is not because of a personal sense of beauty or a desire to be unique and not conform to the trends of the world, but because of a lack of all the elements: interest, wealth, and above all time.

This is evident in the fact that he never goes home, but instead sleeps in his workroom, which is piled high with miscellaneous papers and materials.

The boy— Shorty Megan, wiped the drool edge of his mouth with his sleeve, hurriedly turning to face the person.

Shorty: “Mo, Mo, Mo, Editor-in-chief Morgan? What are you doing here?”

Morgan: “Yes, of course! I’m Morgan Frantz, the editor-in-chief of the “Dragon Nation Newsletter” And Shorty, you’re my man, my reporter, my limbs. Which one is it?!”

Shorty: “Of course, Your man, your reporter, and all of your limbs.”

Morgan: “Of course you are! But! You’re a little toe at best! If you’re going to write an article like that, I’m not going to trust you with the role of the other toes, it would be too dangerous if I did!”

He was Shorty’s boss, editor-in-chief Morgan Frantz, who was getting angry, his distinctive eagle-nosed face turning red. He is responsible for the publication of a newspaper that circulates within the Kingdom of Lugunica, the “Dragon Nation Newsletter” He is also a fearless worker who knows nothing about compromise.

The editor-in-chief, who is not only tall but also loud and brash, is a genuine news addict who keeps a close eye on all the strange happenings in the kingdom and drooled over everyday events.

There’s only one reason why the news-addicted editor-in-chief went to the trouble of visiting Shorty, a small-time reporter. It means he saw Shorty’s article.

Shorty: “So you went all the way to… yes! I am honored by your praise!”

Morgan: “Compliment why would I give you one? Look at my face! Look at my face! 70%… or even 80% of my eagle nose is red. That’s the measure of my anger!”

Shorty: “Chief! It is 100% bright red!”

Morgan: “If that’s the case, I guess I’m angrier than I thought with this article!”

Barking, a dark red-faced Morgan throws a stack of papers in his hand at Shorty. It hit him in the chest and fell to the floor. It was an article that Shorty had stayed up all night writing.

It was a labor of his blood and tears, and this is how he treated it. In other words—

Shorty: “Is it that you want me to fix it?”

Morgan: “Oh, you idiot! All rejected! What are you getting a little greedy about? First of all, who’s going to be excited by the idea of a massive infestation of giant rats underneath the Royal capital? I was wondering if there would be any surprises along the way, but the closing words suck again! Tell me!”

Shorty: “—You’ll have to see for yourself if you want the rest of the story!”

Morgan: “Shut up! Don’t lead the curious reader into the dangerous underground! Just call the guards and have them exterminate them! What if some readers die or get sick from challenging the giant rats?”

Shorty: “In this case, is it a liability issue?”

Morgan: “Idiot! The problem is that we are losing subscribers to the Dragon Nation Newsletter!”

Shorty picks up the article on the floor, and Morgan sticks his finger in his nose.

Shorty liked Morgan’s ideas, even though they were based on values that could only be described as press addiction. This was because Shorty was also a news addict.

That’s why this article was also the result of his own hands-on research.

Shorty: “It was a great piece of work that interviewed people around the favelas and captured the details of the swarms of large rats that were breeding in large numbers under the royal capital. And now it's all been rejected?"

Morgan: "Of course! Back straight and chin up! —The motto of Dragon Nation Newsletter is!"

Shorty: "—We don't publish anything that doesn't make your heart tremble!"

Morgan: "That's all there is to it!"

Shorty stood up straight, and Morgan spat at him. Shorty gritted his teeth in frustration as his face was covered with a large amount of spit.

To be honest, Shorty did not hesitate to ask himself whether this was the right thing to do during his interviews.

Shorty: "But once you start something, you feel like you're losing money if you stop halfway…!"

Morgan: "I've always bought your resilience, but this time it's been shown in a bad way. Speaking of bad things, I have the same impression about the drawing in this article!"

Shorty: "What? You can't even draw? Aren't the drawings really good?"

Morgan: "It's too well drawn! It's like the horde of… giant rats that are about to move!"

Snatching the article out of Shorty's hands, Morgan opens the press picture in question wide.

In front of Shorty's eyes, a horde of rats… A realistic drawing of a horde of rats came into view. It was so close to the real thing that you could almost smell the animal scent of the rats in the air.

Rather, Shorty was overcome with the memory and fear of an actual underground encounter with a horde of rats, a sensation that was both visually and olfactorily ironed out.

Shorty: “Uhhgg…”

Morgan: “Don’t throw up on your own article! But a lot of readers are going to have the same reaction to your article, you know? It’s Lululara who drew this picture! didn’t She!”

Shorty: “Sh, she is somewhere here…”

Shorty points a wobbly finger to the corner of the room as he fought back nausea.

Following the movement of his finger, Morgan said “Yeah?” as his eyes widen. In the middle of a mountain range of piles of papers— there was the figure of a girl who was absentmindedly running her paintbrush across the pile.

Shorty: “Ooooh?! There you are, Lululara!”

Lululara: “Under here…”

Shorty: “What are you doing in this messy room? It’s… or rather, it stinks! It stinks! You haven’t bathed since you got back from the underground, have you? Oh, Uhhgg!”

The girl— Lululara took one look at Morgan, holding his nose and fighting the feeling of vomiting, and is silent. However, unlike her emotionless expression, her hand continues to draw in the notebook on her lap.

That was her role as a news illustrator for the articles in the “Dragon Nation Newsletter”.

However—

Morgan: “She is a real treasure… When she can make any event come to life in a picture, she can make even the most outlandish event convincing. Isn’t it a pity, Shorty?!”

Shorty: “Eh! Uh it is, it’s…”

Morgan: “Don’t look so glum, Shorty.”

Shorty was surprised by this sudden change of attitude, and he couldn't help but smile amiably. However, when Morgan saw this, he turned red in the cheeks as well as the nose.

Morgan: "We need to shake the reader's emotions, their true emotions. How can we do that if we can't even be honest about our own feelings, I know you don't!"

Shorty: "Uh…"

Morgan: "Shorty! What in the world did you join the Dragon Nation Newsletter for? Was it to chase a rat's tail and carve wrinkles between the brows of the subscribers of the Royal capital? What do you think?"

Shorty: "That, that's not true!"

Shorty took a strong stand against Morgan's pitying words.

Forgetting the fact that he was overwhelmed by the moment, he stared at his boss, who was forty centimeters taller than him. Shorty's head grew hot as if on fire, drowning out the amiable smile and putting his true feelings to the tip of his tongue.

So, when asked why he joined the Dragon Nation Newsletter—

Shorty: "I, too, want to write stories that make a difference in people's hearts… and the world! I didn't become a reporter to torment rat haters!"

Morgan: "What then! How can you waste Lulularа's valuable time and talent, and do it while you're napping in a pile of documents?"

Shorty: "If that was… then… then…"

Shorty grits his teeth at his boss's words and watches his partner, who always forgets to eat or sleep and devotes herself to painting, pointing out that he is giving Lulularа work that she does most certainly doesn't deserve.

Above all, Shorty himself was aware that his work was not commensurate with his passion.

Shorty: "…"

Shorty choked up as he felt such a surge of passion.

Out of the corner of his eye, he saw an article on the wall of his office. The article was not written by Shorty, but it was pasted on the wall as if it were an important piece of paper or a memorial.

The content of the article was a perfect example of what Shorty envisioned a "world-changing article."

And it is Shorty's deepest desire to write such an article—

Shorty: "—The Royal Selection."

Morgan: "What?"

Morgan's one eyebrow twitched as he heard Shorty's murmur. Shorty was able to make out a change in the sound mixed in with Morgan's voice.

To shake the heart of the editor-in-chief, wanting to make the heart of that "first reader" who sees the article before anyone else tremble.

Shorty: "I'm going to… interview the candidates for the Royal Selection! We will hear the real voices and get to know the real faces of the candidates for the Royal Selection, women who are shaking up this Dragon-friend Kingdom and who are the greatest concern of the people of the Kingdom!"

Morgan: "…"

Shorty: "Wh, What do you think?"

Shorty, who had chosen his topic with vigor, was anxious about Morgan's reaction to his silence.

A reckless choice, he might have been reprimanded for it, but Shorty's fears were shattered by Morgan's broad smile after a few moments of silence.

Shorty's eyes widen at the intensity, and Morgan's huge palm grabs him by the shoulder.

Morgan: "Good! Good, Shorty! That's what I'm talking about!"

Shorty: "Gyaah!, My shouldeerr!"

A large hand grabbed his shoulder, and Shorty screamed in pain as his bones creaked. But Morgan's eyes lit up with Shorty's screams.

Morgan: "The biggest concern of the people, the Royal Selection! It's been a few months since the start of the selection was announced, and at first, everyone was talking about it, but gradually the buzz had faded away. Let's try to turn the people's attention back to the Royal Selection by ourselves… Not bad! Not bad at all!"

Shorty: "Th, thank you!"

Morgan: "Shut up, you idiot! You haven't done anything yet! Don't be happy!"

Shorty: "Yes, yes, indeed! I'm an idiot!"

Shorty is lifted up, then immediately dropped and emotionally swept away, to which Morgan spits at him, "Good!" Morgan spits at Shorty and sticks his finger in the air.

Morgan: "Now that you've decided that, hurry up, Shorty! Don't let anyone else get the better of you! Get an interview with the candidates for the Royal Selection, and do whatever it takes to get the story out! I'll replace the rat article."

With that, Morgan grabbed the article on the giant rats and ran furiously out of the room. The wind he created sent the papers in the room soaring, and Shorty's long bangs were also ruffled.

But in the room, after the storm had passed, Shorty clenched his fists in passion.

He felt that he had spoken out of turn, but the passion in his heart was still real.

Shorty: I'm gonna do it, I'm gonna do it, I'm going to change the world! Lulularа, you're gonna be busy!

Lululara: "…un."

Shorty: "Huh? For me?"

As Shorty turned around looking enthusiastic with a puffed-up nose, Lululara tore off a page from her drawing book and handed it to him.

—There, Shorty was painted with blood running down his nose in excitement.

Shorty: "No, you have to say this out loud!"

Shoving a cloth up his nose, Shorty carefully folded the picture and put it in his pocket. Then he grabbed his interviewing gear and was ready to launch the next part of the interview.

Shorty: "I've been told that after the giant rats, the next candidates for Royal Selection… are not going to be as easy, but we're going to do whatever we can to make this interview a success! Let's go, Lululara!"

Lululara: "…See ya."

Shorty: "Don't just say "see you later", you're coming too!"

Shorty carries Lululara, who has curled up ready to shut down. Shorty carries Lululara on his back, and together with her art supplies, they leave the headquarters of the Dragon Nation Newsletter in an awkward position.

Lululara: "…Slow."

Shorty: "I'm not slowing down! I've heard that the candidates are beautiful, so I'm sure your creative juices will be flowing! It's going to be a huge deal!"

Shorty's adventure began, calling desperately to his apathetic partner.

His steps were heavy, and his partner was lethargic, but Shorty’s eyes were shining. It’s a perfect day to start writing an article that will move the world.

Shorty: “I see it, Lulularа… the blue sky is blessing our way forward!”

Lulularа: “it’s, cloudy…”

Shorty: “Look with your heart’s eye!”

2

Dragon Nation Newsletter is known as a small newspaper in the Kingdom of Lugunica.

The newspaper reports a wide range of emotionally-charged events in Lugunica, from happy news that decorates a peaceful life to a painful and sad occurrence in which someone lost his or her life somewhere.

However, no matter what kind of emotions it provokes, there is a core to the Dragon Nation Newsletter that can never be compromised. And that is—

Shorty: “We don’t publish articles that don’t make your heart tremble! It’s our company motto, Lululara.”

Lululara: “…Blub, Blub”

Shorty: “Will you stop blowing bubbles and listen to me? I know it’s a habit of yours, but you’re not supposed to do that in any of the places we’re covering.”

Shorty raises his fist and expresses his enthusiasm, while in front of him, Lululara’s face is devoid of motivation.

After leaving the office, the two discuss their plans for the interviews at a restaurant in the royal capital. Shorty is in charge of making the plans and explaining them, while Lululara is solely in the role of lending a silent ear.

Shorty: “We’re going to be going around to the candidates who are participating in the Royal Selection. Regardless, how much do you know about the Royal Selection, Lululara?””

Lululara: “…Royal selection?”

Shorty: “You look like you don’t know anything! Scary! The attitude of total disinterest in the public’s interest, even though you’re in a position to be involved with a newspaper, is scary! I’m also afraid of the attitude that you’re going to start drawing that scared look on my face!”

As you can see, Lululara is a “press illustrator” who makes her living drawing pictures for the newspaper. Her drawing skills are the stuff of genius, and she is a weirdo who cares about nothing else.

Shorty needed to successfully manage this long-standing and troublesome partner.

Shorty: “I’m going to tell you, my precious partner, about this upcoming interview topic. You can just dismiss it as an explanation to help me organize my thoughts.”

Lulularа: “…yes”

For the time being, Shorty clears his throat with a small cough, glad that he had gotten some rapport. Then he began to explain to Lululara about the Royal Selection and the participants.

Shorty: “First of all, the Royal Selection is a ceremony to determine the next ruler, which was proclaimed in the royal castle about six months ago. Three years from now, the king will be chosen from among the five selected candidates… So now we’re in the middle of a competition to see who will be the king.”

The story of the king and his bloodline falling ill en masse may be counted as one of the most recent and unshakable cases of Great Calamity in the Kingdom of Lugunica.

As a result, the kingdom is now without a king, and the Council of Sages is running the affairs of state instead. However, this is still an unhealthy situation. In order to solve this problem—

Shorty: “It’s a throne selection competition, or the Royal Selection for short. The five candidates for the throne are Duchess Crusch Karsten, Chairman Anastasia Hoshin, Baroness Priscilla Barielle, Felt-sama and Emilia-sama.”

Lululara: “Is that big?”

Shorty: “No, it’s a small number of people, considering the deadline… We don’t know how many candidates will be left on the day the Royal Selection is decided.”

Lululara tilted her head and didn’t seem to understand the true meaning of Shorty’s words.

It is easy to imagine that if the struggle for the next throne requires a candidate to have certain limited qualities, it is easy to imagine that a dark struggle, including assassination, would take place.

Shorty: “I mean, you can’t call yourself a candidate for the Royal Selection if you’re not deeply determined. In other words, all five of the selected candidates must be prepared to do something extraordinary.”

These are the candidates vying for the vacant throne. All will have extreme ambition.

Shorty: “Besides, all of them are women… In this case, I should say heroines. Crusch-sama is known as “Valkyrie”, Anastasia-sama has risen to prominence in the Kararagi City States… And Felt-sama who I heard rules the over the poor districts, most importantly, I heard that she has the “Sword Saint” with her.”

Lululara: “Mean… “Knight Amongst Knights”?”

Shorty: “That’s right… Oh, come to think of it, Sir Reinhard was painted by Lululara before.”

Lululara’s reaction reminded Shorty of one of her previous paintings.

However, it was not an interview. She happened to run into the “Sword Saint” while strolling around the capital on her day off, and he kindly agreed to Lululara’s request to use him as a painting subject.

In fact, Lululara seemed to be very enthusiastic about it, using her brush excitedly, and the finished picture was excellent.

That one is also securely packed in a Shorty binder at work.

Anyway—

Shorty: “If Sir Reinhardt pledges his allegiance to her, then Felt-sama must be an extraordinary person, and…”

Lululara: “…And?”

Shorty: “Emilia… sama is”

A feeling of dread envelops Shorty’s entire body as he tries to name the next candidate.

Shorty's face is bloodless and his shoulders tremble, which makes Lululara wonder, but if she knew the reason, she would be just as frightened.

One of the candidates for the Royal Selection is Emilia, a half-elf with silver hair and amethyst eyes, the same characteristics as the "Witch of Envy" who once drove the world to the brink of destruction.

She is said to be a demonic being, with a terrifyingly ferocious Spirit clad in a cold air that freezes everything in its path. Rumor but it is said that it has permanently frozen the land in the northern part of the kingdom and enjoys ruining the lives of the local people by causing snowstorms for fun.

Of course, she is not the "Witch of Envy" herself— but she is dangerous enough to be rumored to be the second coming of the "Witch of Envy".

—Up until now, there have probably been other reporters besides Shorty who have attempted to write about the same subject matter.

The biggest reason why none of these interviews bore fruit was none other than "Emilia".

If he was going to call this an interview with the candidates for the Royal Selection, we naturally need to hear from all five of them. However, everyone was hesitant to interview Emilia.

Shorty too believes that the biggest barrier to these interviews is his fear of Emilia.

Shorty: "…"

But seeing Shorty frightened, Lululara runs her paintbrush through her drawing book.

The fact that it is drawn, didn't help, and the fact that she is not worried at all surprised Shorty, but it still gives Shorty the nudge to come back to himself.

Shorty: “Change, the world…”

Shorty clenched his teeth together as he remembered the challenge he gave to Editor-in-Chief Morgan.

Shorty won’t lie about those words. Shorty didn’t just bite down on his back teeth, he bit down on his dream.

Shorty: “This is no time to be scared. I’ll do it, Lululara. I’m going to do my job.”

Lululara: “…And, That one?”

Shorty: “Oh, ah. Ahh, yeah, that’s right, that’s right, I know.”

Lululara hands Shorty the drawing she has finished. Shorty smiles at his own paleness and carefully puts the drawing away in his bag.

Shorty: “The last one is Baroness Barielle, or Priscilla-sama, who has had so many unfortunate marriages that she is known as the “The Bloody Bride”. She is still young and beautiful, and as a result, she has been married many times, but all of them ended in tragic love… She’s a tragic woman.”

Lululara: “…Tragic”

Shorty: “She has a good reputation in her territory, and people seem to love her calling her the “Sun Princess”. I guess she has a warm charm that makes people around her smile positively.”

From the standpoint of having heard various previous stories, Priscilla Barielle is the one whose situation Shorty would personally like to support the most.

A woman who is unfortunate enough to have to overcome the absurdity of her circumstances to achieve glory.

It is a heroic tale and a story of success that will be a heartwarming experience for all.

Shorty: “Whoa, whoa, not good. I have to be impartial. Above all, it would be disrespectful to the person who agreed to be interviewed in the first place.”

Lululara: “Other person…?”

Shorty: “Duchess Crusch Karsten”

Shorty shudders as he says this, anticipating the beginning of a full-fledged interview.

She is a leading figure in the kingdom and the most favored candidate currently in the Royal Selection.

Shorty: “To be honest, I was the one who thought it would be the most difficult, if not the most difficult emotionally. First of all, I didn’t think she would accept my request for an interview.”

After all, the other party is the most prestigious woman in the kingdom in terms of nobility, and she is a woman of great honor.

He thought it was only natural that he would be turned away at the door for an interview with a newspaper that was published primarily for the pleasure of the general public. In that case, he had planned to apply dozens or hundreds of times for an interview, waiting for the other party to lose their patience—

Lululara: “Can they do it?”

Shorty: “I don’t know… Crusch-sama is as martial as a woman can be. She made her father step down when he didn’t need to retire yet, she’s an ambitious woman.”

Otherwise, she would not be able to serve as a duchess who is called by the title of “Valkyrie”.

Perhaps the offer of an interview was just a calculated way to use Shorty. In that case, Shorty would be a pathetic sacrifice.

Shorty: “Even if your opponent is nobility among nobles, with a hundred battles under her belt, Don’t let it get to you…”

First, they will uncover the untold true face of the first Royal Selection candidate, Crusch Karsten.

Even if the first one might be their last interview, Shorty Megan would fight to the end. —They were prepared to do so with such a grim determination.

3

But, as it turned out, however, Shorty's dire predictions were unfounded.

Duchess Crusch Karsten agreed to be interviewed by the Dragon Nation Newsletter, not because of any perceived hostility toward the press in the recent past, nor because she wanted to make a spectacle of the industry.

On the contrary—

Crusch: "Well then, Shorty-san and Lululara-san have been working together for two years… even though you're so young, you're doing a great job."

Shorty: "No, no, really, it's not that big of a deal, ha ha ha…!"

Shorty, blushing at the unexpected praise, Shorty puts his hat back on more deeply.

In response to Shorty's reaction, a green-haired beauty with a graceful and elegant gesture was smiling with her hand over her mouth, saying, "Well, what a modest one".

As Shorty admired the casual gesture, he was aware that he was being swallowed up by the atmosphere of the place— or rather, of the other party and was inwardly flustered at what he had to do.

Shorty and Lululara were received at the Karsten family's mansion in the Noble District of the Royal Capital. They were ushered into the large, spacious parlor, where they sat their butts on the too-soft sofa, looking like fools.

In front of him is a beautiful woman who looks like a heavenly maiden, and he feels vague about whether he is dreaming or not.

Yes, a heavenly maiden, She was a woman who truly deserved such a description. Her long, luxuriant green hair hung loosely down her back, and her feminine, curvaceous body was wrapped in a graceful dress— the beauty of Duchess of Crusch Karsten was enough to make Shorty's brain burn.

Lululara: "hk"

Crusch: "Um, Is Lululara-san next to you, okay?"

Shorty: "I, I am honored by your concern, but yes. This is her normal behavior, so please overlook this…"

Shorty was not at ease with Crusch, who was tilting her head and looking at him with concern. But Lululara, who was working feverishly with her paintbrush next to Shorty, was far from ordinary.

By nature, Lululara honestly followed her own inclinations. To put it politely, when she finds a superb subject nothing can stop her, not even Shorty.

Because in those situations, Lululara's paintings were truly amazing.

Lululara: "…please"

Crusch: "Well, I can have it? This is… me, isn't it?"

Crusch's eyes widen as she graciously accepts Lululara's offered picture.

If you take a look at it, you will see that it is a picture of Crusch, perfectly depicted in Shorty's eyes. It is a work that deserves to be praised as perfect even by Shorty, who is accustomed to seeing Lululara's paintings. Lululara's ability to realistically depict what is right in front of her eyes is demonstrated perfectly.

Shorty: "I'd like to hang it in my room…"

Naturally, Shorty's mutterings were picked up by Crusch, who asked, "Huh?". Shorty, in his haste, to make up for the situation, searched for the right words to say.

Crusch: “Yes, I know, I think so too. She did such a good job of drawing it, Ferri-chan would want to hang it in their room also.”

Shorty: “I know, right…! I hope you found it okay?”

Shorty’s eyes widened as he nodded his head in affirmation of his true feelings. Then speak of the devil that person arrived and whispered a “Nyafufu”, sitting down next to Crusch.

And so the newest addition to the scene is also a scarily good-looking person.

IIf “beautiful” is a good description for Crusch, then “cute” would be a good description for this person. Her gestures, the way she looks at them, and her charm and sophistication are so refined that one cannot take one’s eyes off of her.

But don’t underestimate Shorty, he is a reporter for a newspaper. He has already done his research to find out who this girl —or rather, someone who looks like a girl is.

Shorty: “Kn, knight, Felix Argyle-dono, correct?”

Felix: “That’s right, but that’s not the way to address me. I prefer if you call me Ferris, but you’re welcome to call me Ferri-chan.”

Shorty: “Oh, umm, then Ferris-dono please.”

Felix: “Kufufu, How kyute.”

Felix— no Ferris, puts his finger to his lips and puts a smile on his face, is a man. His mischievous expression and gestures are misleading, but he is a man after all.

Crusch Karsten, a candidate for the royal selection, and Ferris, her knight.

The two people in front of them, who were in a master-servant relationship, were the subjects of Shorty and Lululara’s interview this time.

Crusch: “Ferris, I don’t want you to tease the two reporters too much.”

Felix: “Yesss, I’m sorry-nya, Crusch-sama. But it’s really well-drawn. Crusch-sama, did you take the time to model yourself to her?”

Crusch: “When you say that, it makes me feel like I’ve done something embarrassing… No, I didn’t. I’m sure she’s very good at observing things.”

Rebuking Ferris’ attitude, Crusch’s amber eyes look at Lulularा.

Instantly, Lulularа, mesmerized by the beauty in her eyes, started on a second piece. Shorty, not to be outdone, coughed a little and said

Shorty: “N, now that we have the honorable candidate for the Royal Selection, Crusch-sama, and knight, Ferris-dono, here, may I ask you a few questions for our interview?”

Crusch: “Yes, I am honored that you have taken the trouble to hear me. II am not sure if I will be able to meet your expectations, but I am grateful for your kind attention.”

Crusch bowed with a refined posture to Shorty, who chose his words carefully and asked a question.

He was impressed by the beauty’s beauty, even her bow, but more than impressed, awe struck Shorty’s entire body, causing him to let out a strange “oof” under his breath.

Felix: “Oh, Crusch-sama is too polite, he’s intimidated. You really must have a more relaxed attitude.”

Crusch: “It’s hard to relax… Be natural, you mean?”

Felix: “Mmm, Well, that’s not quite right, but I think that’s all right. Reporter-kun needs to be a little braver than that.”

Crusch and Shorty: “I, I understand…”

The two of them nodded in agreement as Ferris gave orders to both Crusch and Shorty.

Apparently, Ferris is the one who has the most authority here. Lulularа, who has the most freedom, seems to have decided to draw the master and servant together in the second picture.

Shorty: “Well then, Crusch-sama, you’re the leading candidate for the Royal Selection, and it’s been a few months since the selection began, so I was wondering if you could tell me how you’re doing.”

Crusch: “You’re welcome to be more natural with me.”

Shorty: “This, this is the best I can do for now…”

The reason Shorty was flabbergasted by Crusch’s ladylike demeanor was, of course, her beauty, but it was also her behavior that was at odds with his prior information.

The ambitious Duchess, also known as the “Valkyrie,” is a warrior who has ousted even her father. Her reputation does not match the beautiful woman in front of him. The only thing that matches her reputation is her beauty.

In front of Shorty, who was under this impression, Crusch lowered the corners of her eyes slightly and Crusch: “I think it’s a waste of recognition to say that I’m the most deserving of the Royal Selection. At the very least, I have a lot to learn, and I’m not sure I’m fit to sit on the king’s throne.”

Felix: “Crusch-sama?”

Shorty: “Huh? That’s what you think, huh? You’re not going to give up, are you?”

Shorty couldn’t believe his ears when he heard Crusch’s unexpected self-assessment of lacking confidence and unworthiness, much to Ferris’ surprise.

The coverage of a candidate for the Royal Selection is a complete disaster at the very beginning. Crusch Karsten, the leading candidate in the Royal Selection, confided to a reporter what was bothering her heart—

Crusch: "—No, please don't misunderstand me."

However, Crusch's dignified voice interrupted the confusion of the reporter and her Knight. Shorty was instantly surprised to find that his mind had calmed down.

It was a feeling that surprised even him. Breathless, mesmerized by the atmosphere the woman in front of him wore, and the fact that his mind was captivated.

Crusch: "I am still in the process of learning a great deal… and if there is one thing I have over all the other candidates, it is my family background. That alone will not be enough for me to fulfill the responsibilities of King. Therefore, I will keep on working hard."

Felix: "Working hard…"

Crusch: "May my inexperienced body become a vessel to bear the responsibilities of King. And may my closest followers and vassals lend me the help that I do not have."

Felix: "—Crusch, sama"

Gently, smiling, Crusch's hand rested on the shoulder of Ferris next to her, Ferris' eyes moistened, turning back to face Crusch.

Shorty also involuntarily experienced a feeling of warmth in his eyes at the beautiful sight of this master and servant.

Shorty: "…I think that's a very noble and thoughtful idea. But, changing the subject, could you tell us about the defeat of the White Whale? That feat was done in cooperation with the other Royal Selection candidates."

Crusch: "Oh, for that matter…"

Felix: "Nyafter all, Wilhelm van Astrea, the man who is indispensable to this feat and the greatest contributor to the subjugation of the White Whale, is in our camp!"

Ferris' eyes lit up in response to Crusch's reply. Although surprised by his vigor, this was exactly what Shorty wanted to hear.

Shorty: "Yes, I wanted to ask you about that too! You see, the two main characters in "Sword Demon Love Song" and the White Whale have a very close relationship…"

Felix: That's it! Hold on a second! I'll get you Wil-jii right now!

With that, Ferris jumps over the table and runs out of the room. Shorty is also nervous because he seems to be able to interview the "sword demon" in person.

Crusch gave a "Fufu" at Shorty's reaction.

Shorty: "Oh, no, I mean, I'm sorry! I know it's an interview with you Crusch-sama."

Crusch: "No, no need to be sorry at all. Besides, if it's about my followers or subjects, I think it's synonymous with interviewing me. Besides, I think Wilhelm's story should be widely known."

Shorty: "W, Well, if you say so… Oh, in that case, just one more thing."

He asks Crusch to take into consideration of his words, even though he expresses his brazenness.

If Ferris wasn't around, he feels he would be able to hear the pure opinion of Crusch. A few months have passed since the start of the Royal Selection, and many things have happened that have caused a stir in the kingdom—

Shorty: "Which camp is Crusch-sama most interested in right now?"

Crusch: "That's…"

The question caused Crusch to pause for a moment. However, the thought and hesitation were only for a moment, and it seems that the answer came quickly to her.

However, she remained smiling even as she spoke of her adversaries.

Then—

Crusch: "—I think Emilia-sama's camp, deserves the most attention."

And that was the answer.

4

Shorty: "Un… totally different from their previous reputation, the interview was very friendly from start to finish…"

Shorty muttered in exhaustion as he left the Karsten family's mansion after the interview.

In this case, the cause of fatigue would not be physical, but mental exhaustion. While his initial fears were unfounded, a sense of awe still remained more than he had imagined.

However, he could clearly say that the rewards were well worth the physical and mental exhaustion.

Shorty: "I didn't think the Wilhelm-dono's story would last that long, but…"

Shorty wanted to know more about the White Whale's defeat, and Wilhelm, with the Lord's permission, spoke very smoothly. However, it was surprising that most of his talk was about his love affair with his wife, the previous "Sword Saint" who was defeated by the White Whale and lost her life.

Lululara "…hk"

Shorty returned to the commoner's district, pausing in front of the fountain in the plaza, while Lululara, furiously working away with her paintbrush, blushed with excitement and was about to run out of pages in her brand-new notebook.

Apparently, the presence of Crusch and Ferris had a profoundly positive impact on her as well.

Shorty: “But I understand. After all… what you actually see and hear is totally different from the rumors.”

A masculine and ambitious duchess with a penchant for swordsmanship, Crusch, if one were to analyze Crusch’s prominent reputation, would seem to be a somewhat snobbish aristocrat, despite her family’s reputation for competency.

However, in reality, Crusch was always soft-spoken, well aware of her own inadequacies, and an ideal person who could stand up to others without compromising her ambition.

Shorty: “Whoever becomes king, I want them to be like that…”

Lululara: “…personal, feeling”

Shorty: “What? No, no, no, not at all! Reporters are fair! Reporters are impartial!”

When Lululara heard Shorty talking to himself, he panicked and denied it. However, Lululara, who had made Shorty so flustered, was oblivious to the situation and continued to work on her painting.

Sighing at the sight, Shorty put his hat back on deeply.

Shorty: “Anyway, I’ll summarize what we’ve covered, because it’s also our role to eliminate the gap between such rumors and the reality that arises from Misperceptions… that surround Crusch-sama.”

Lululara: “…hn”

Lululara rubs the bottom of her nose with her finger and hands Shorty the picture. Shorty looks at it and raises his eyebrows.

As expected of Lululara, a genius at drawing press pictures, and what she wants her readers to see.

—It was a beautiful master and knight image of the two of them leaning together, holding hands.

Shorty: “Yes, this is a good one. That’s what I’m talking about, Lulularа!”

Lulularа: “Happy, with beautiful girls…”

Shorty: “No, I’m not looking at them that way, and Ferris-dono is a man, okay?”

Although unsettled by the way they looked at him, and distorted his reporter’s soul, he had no complaints about the content of the interview and the quality of the news picture. —However, this is only the first interview.

Shorty: “We still have a long way to go… It’s especially important to be vigilant about the next subjects we cover next.”

Lulularа: “…that so?”

Shorty: “Don’t say that like you’re stunned! I really do! Because… the next candidate we’re going to interview is not from this country, it’s from another country.”

Shorty mentioned “…another country” and Lulularа looked as if she had never heard of them before. Shorty had already explained to Lulularа that this should not be the first time she had heard of them, but that was fine.

However, this time around, Lulularа must also share the same sense of urgency.

Shorty: “Anastasia Hoshin-sama is the Chairman of the Hoshin Trading Company, a powerful company in the Kararagi City States… she is one of the most powerful people in Kararagi. She has come all the way across the country to compete for the throne of the Kingdom of Lugunica… Do you smell that?”

Lulularа: “…I took a bath”

Shorty: “It’s not your smell! If you had smelled it in the first place, we would have been incredibly rude with Crusch-sama!”

In the first place, it was a mistake to ask Lulularа, whose nose might have been tricked by the paint fumes. Shorty's sense of smell for conflict was a sense that needed to be honed.

That is the division of roles between partners, and that is the role Shorty was supposed to play.

Shorty: "So far, if there has been any interference from other countries has only been from the Vollachian Empire to the south. In fact, before the Royal Selection, there are stories that representatives of the Council of Sages secretly went to Vollachia to sign a non-aggression pact."

Everyone assumed that it was the south that everyone should be on the alert for. Anastasia, who was now a candidate for the Royal Selection, is an unexpected threat from the west.

Then—

Shorty: "You can't help but feel that there's something fishy about the "Finest of Knights", Julius Juukulius, who has expressed his support for Anastasia-sama."

Lulularа: "…are they bathing?"

Shorty: "He's the one they call "Finest"! I would be a disappointment if they didn't bathe! Even if he's black-hearted, I hope he bathes!"

Of course, it would be better if he didn't have this gut feeling.

However, it is impossible to know the true reason why a promising talent, who is said to be highly trusted even in the Knighthood, would seek to install an influential person from another country in the position of king, for what purpose?

The Juukulius family is a family of knights that have been around for generations, and there was no record of them being disrespected by the Kingdom of Lugunica. Then there is one possibility—

Shorty: "Either Sir Julius is tremendously ambitious or he's a traitor…"

Lululara: “…Bad spot”

Shorty: “I don’t like it if that’s the case, so it’s like one of those things… what are they up to anyway? That’s what I’m trying to get at least a clue from this interview.”

Tightening his fists, Shorty renewed his resolve.

After the interview with Crusch, Shorty’s confidence and a new sense of purpose was awakened in him. It was to uncover the truth about the Royal Selection.

Needless to say, the rumors about Crusch differed greatly from her actual personality. Thus, there were no concrete principles for deciding who would be the next king.

The Dragon Nation Newsletter will serve as a guide for those who might have been misled.

Shorty: “—No, it’s not the Dragon Nation Newsletter, it’s us.”

Lululara: “Big time…”

Shorty: “That’s right! We’ve already started running. Then we have to keep running until we make it. I’ll do it. That’s why…”

Shorty pulled out a new drawing pad from his press bag and handed it to Lululara. She took it with a puffed-up nose and a twinkle in her eye.

Lululara is full of energy, and Shorty is full of a sense of purpose.

With this momentum—

Shorty: “—I don’t care what Anastasia-sama is up to or what plans she’s hiding. I won’t be fooled by her pleasant words, I’ll find out her true intentions!”

5

???: “My purpose? O’course it’s to get the Kingdom of Lugunica, ain’t it?”

Shorty: “Uhhgg…”

Shorty’s eyes widen at the words of the woman resting her elbows on the table and resting her hand on her chin.

She is a woman with a soft, gentle demeanor. Her mischievous expression, somewhat reminiscent of a noble cat, and her previous words shatter Shorty’s resolve directly.

Never before had he been affirmed with a big smile for his determined attempt to uncover his opponent’s innermost thoughts.

???: “What is it? That’s a very over-the-top reaction. It makes me so happy.”

???: “Anastasia-sama, you should not be so playful. I think it’s somewhat inappropriate.”

Anastasia: “Araa, they’re mad at me. My knight is too serious for that.”

The woman who sticks out her tongue is— Anastasia Hoshin, the young chairperson of a large company, The Hoshin Trading Company, who looks like the word “cute” dressed up in clothes.

She has long, wavy, light purple hair and wears fluffy furry clothes even in warm weather. Although short in stature and fragile in appearance, her light blue eyes are filled with a strong rebellious spirit, and one cannot help but be charmed by her uncomplicated persona.

Anastasia is as beautiful as Crusch, and Shorty wonders about the reasons for her selection as a candidate for the Royal Selection.

Shorty thought, No way, is it possible that they are screening candidates based on their appearance?

Anastasia: “Hm? You’re staring at my face, thinkin’ bout somethin’? If there’s something on yer mind, I’d like to hear it.”

Shorty: “No, I was just wondering what is going on, since both you, Anastasia-sama, and Crusch-sama are so beautiful.”

Anastasia: “Ara”

Anastasia put her hand over her mouth and rounded her eyes, her reaction made Shorty say, “Oh”, and he cursed himself for his bad habit of making careless remarks once again.

However, Anastasia laughed at Shorty’s words, and the person sitting next to her nodded.

???: “Well, I agree with you, Anastasia-sama, in addition to your great intelligence and business acumen, you are also a very attractive woman.”

Anastasia: “If ya don’t take it seriously, y’all be wasting the reporters’ time and effort in tryin’ to make the place more relaxed. Don’t cha think?”

???: “Mm… I am sorry about that. I should have taken more care on my part.”

Shorty: “Eh! Oh, uh, sorry, it, it’s so difficult to understand what’s going on here! Ha ha ha…”

Shorty apologized for his stream of words, and he fondled his hat and faked a wry smile.

What else could he do? The second candidate for Royal Selection — the master Anastasia, and her knight Julius Juukulius.

—The Royal Selection candidate interview tour is going much better than originally expected.

The candidate for the Royal Selection, shrouded in mystery, surely would not like such an interview. Shorty’s preconceived notions were repeatedly met with a flurry of offers for interviews.

Of course, there is a good chance that negotiations with the remaining three individuals will be very difficult down the road.

Shorty: “Now we have to make the most of our good fortune…!”

Fortunately, Anastasia, who was in the royal capital for a business meeting, agreed to be interviewed, and Julius, her knight, was also allowed to be present.

Lulularа, now standing in front of the two, is probably in agreement with him.

Shorty: “And by the way, was it… okay to do the interview in such an open area?”

Anastasia: “Hmm, we coulda welcomed em at our store, but that woulda made the reporters nervous, ya know? I didn’t want people thinkin’ I was threatenin’ em by asking em to write articles that would suit us.”

With that said, a smiling Anastasia turns her attention to the traffic in the royal city.

This place, where people come and go right in front of them, is the terrace of a coffee shop facing the main street. It was Anastasia’s hope to conduct the interview in such a public place.

Shorty’s intention was not to force an unwanted article on them.

The way Anastasia dared to be interviewed in a public place showed a strength not found with Crusch, which is more straightforward, and showed another aspect of Anastasia’s shrewdness.

Shorty: “But if that’s the case, then the statement about getting the kingdom is true…?”

Anastasia: “I ain’t hidin’ my true feelin’s, and I’ve said em in front of other candidates and the Council of Sages. …and I wondered if that child would look at me if I asked them something a little bit more dramatic.”

Shorty: “That child… Oh, you mean Lulularа?”

Anastasia’s gaze fell on Lulularа, who was sitting on a chair, holding her knees awkwardly, and she was painting with a paintbrush, ignoring the content of the interview.

Nevertheless, this was the best way to approach Lululara's work.

Shorty: "Actually, Lululara is at her best working in this style… and if you are not uncomfortable, please let me leave it this way…"

Lululara: "uncomfortable"

Shorty: "Lululara! Apologize with me now! Apologize… straighten your neck up."

Anastasia: "—What did I say to ya? I was going to continue, but ya were too quick, I didn't have time to interrupt ya."

He quickly grabbed Lululara by the neck and tried to make her lower her head, but failed because of the unusual strength in her neck. Anastasia laughed at Shorty's impatience.

Anyway—

Julius: "Well, I must say that she is very focused, Shorty-dono, may I take a look at her work? As a matter of fact, my brother paints too."

Shorty: "If your brother is… Oh, as long as you don't talk to her, I think she'll be fine with it."

Julius: "I guess, if I call out to her, it would disrupt her concentration?"

Shorty: "Rather, when I talk to her, she ignores me, which makes me feel worse."

Even though it is necessary for work, it is quite hard to be ignored for days, if not hours.

Julius, perhaps taking Shorty's response as a sign of Lululara's professionalism, said, "I understand" and went behind her back to observe her work without talking to her.

Should this be taken as pure curiosity, or should it be considered a check against the possibility of undermining Anastasia? The occasional exhale of admiration, "Indeed" may be an act to catch

Shorty off guard.

Anastasia: “You’re a child with a rich imagination. Maybe it would be better if ya became a novelist.”

Shorty: “What are you talking about? I’m a reporter, my job is to tell what I hear and see as it is. I’m not a writer who comes up with outlandish ideas and fantasies.”

Anastasia: “Oh? Well, If that’s what cha say, let’s just leave it at that.”

Her implied answer made Shorty feel like she was playing him every step of the way. If he continues to fall for her tricks, he will not be able to conduct the interview.

At this rate, the statement about taking over the kingdom is just a ploy to mess with Shorty.

Anastasia: “What, you thinkin’ I’m lying? But it ain’t a lie.”

Shorty: “Eh…?”

Anastasia: “Ya had the courage to apply for the interview, didn’t cha? But if we mislead em with lies and false pretenses, it would be disrespectful to their reporter spirit.”

Shorty: “…”

Shorty is breathless as Anastasia folds her hands in front of her face and gazes at him.

As usual, he was engulfed. But it was both surprising and inspiring for Shorty to be made to feel that way, not to think that they were lying to him.

Crusch drew Shorty in by talking about her own inexperience, saying that she was on the road to building up. Anastasia gave Shorty the impression of seeing something different, something spectacular.

It is a fascination that makes him want to hear more from her, both as an individual and as a reporter.

Shorty: “O, okay, so if you can answer some of my candid questions today, I’d love to hear from you…!”

Anastasia: “It’s a bit embarrassin’ to be so frank, though, ain’t it? Besides, it’s an opportunity for ya to write a good article… so we’ve added a little bit of extra flair to…”

Shorty: “A little flair, is it? What exactly do you…”

Shorty’s question as to whether or not they would do it was interrupted in mid-sentence.

The sound of the shoes was loud and clear. —Shorty learned for the first time that a person’s existence can even be affected by the sound of their shoes.

However, this sentiment is completely lost in the distance when the owner of the footsteps enters the scene.

???: “—You have got quite a lot of nerve calling upon on mineself, She-fox.”

Shorty’s throat tightened involuntarily as the indescribable heat burned his eardrums.

The beauty that appeared on the street and peered at Shorty and the others sitting in the storefront, the voice that was spun from her lips was full of magic that captivated the hearts of the audience, and Shorty was in fact captivated.

Shorty’s rigid appearance was met with a frown from the beauty’s shapely brow.

???: “What is it, child? It would be impolite to stare at mine face.”

Shorty: “Uaa! So, sorry…! I didn’t mean to…”

???: “If you are going to look, look with dignity. It is only natural that others should be attracted to mine beauty.”

The crimson-eyed, extravagant beauty presented herself with a fan in her hand.

She is violently beautiful, with dazzling orange hair adorned with jewels and a beautiful, busty body wrapped in a blood-colored dress. The features of her appearance and the air of absoluteness she wears— tell Shorty about this beautiful woman's true identity with her burning presence.

And then—

Anastasia: "Let me introduce ya, reporters. —She is a princess, a candidate for the Royal Selection, just like me."

Shorty could only reply in his mind, "I know who you are" as Anastasia said in an easygoing tone.

Shorty: "…"

And so, even as Shorty's thirst for sound and the illusion that his heart was splitting open, only the sound of Lululara's painting, her brush feverishly moving, was echoing incessantly.

—Only now he was seriously and deeply envious of Lululara, who could immerse herself in her own world.

6

Shorty: "I, I'm so happy to see everyone here, the weather has been so beautiful, and I'm struggling to think of how to thank you all for coming, but the sun is bothering my eyes, yes…!"

Shorty's heartfelt and honest words of greeting, which he managed to squeeze out with great effort, were mixed in with the second half of his speech, but if that was the extent of his roughness, it was amiable.

Even Chief Morgan, who is no stranger to the Dragon Nation Newsletter, would not be immune from a sense of urgency in such a situation. Shorty, on the other hand, is still a novice reporter.

Of course, this project was launched with a mindset of not using that as an excuse—

Anastasia: "—Reporter-san. you have a great reaction, Don't you think so, Princess?"

Priscilla: "I will admit that the child has a certain cuteness, but to agree with you is truly disgusting."

Anastasia: "Well, you're a very difficult person to deal with. I was expectin' that kind of attitude from ya."

When Anastasia put her hand over her mouth and smiled, the beautiful woman sitting opposite her narrowed her eyes disapprovingly, let out a small snort, and shook her ample breasts.

Shorty felt his preparedness shatter with a resounding sound in the face of both of them.

Of course, the beautiful woman facing Anastasia, —Priscilla Barielle, she is one of the candidates for the Royal Selection, competing for the throne of the Kingdom of Lugunica.

This means that two Royal Selection candidates will be face-to-face at this meeting.

And then—

Shorty: "This, This is so shockingly sudden, and without telling me"

Julius: "I'm sorry, it was Anastasia-sama's plan to be duplicitous, and I can not apologize enough to Shorty-dono and Miss Lululara."

Shorty: "I'm sorry you have to apologize Sir Julius. Hey, Lululara. Lululara?"

Julius apologizes on behalf of his master, but he is in awe of even that.

Shorty, suffering from severe heart palpitations, turned to his partner to at least share the heartache. But Lululara responded not with words, but with a picture taken from her notebook.

The picture depicted there was Shorty, foaming at the mouth and looking pale.

Shorty shrugs his shoulders as Julius apologizes on behalf of his master for his deviousness. Shorty asks his companion to agree with his shrug, and Lululara, who is less talkative, thrusts out a drawing she has finished to Shorty. When Shorty received it and checked it, he saw that the drawing was of Shorty's face, foaming at the mouth.

Shorty: "I'm glad you're having fun!"

Anastasia: "What's this? Woah, You're really good. Can I have this as a souvenir of today?"

Shorty: "P, please feel free… if you don't mind my face looking like that."

Shorty offered the painting to Anastasia due to its unexpectedly high praise.

It was a strange feeling to know that his flustered face would remain in Anastasia's possession, but Lululara was proud as a partner to know that she liked her painting.

Anyway—

???: "That's it, right? That's the start of the so-called "joint interview". Well, I'm relieved to hear that it's that way, because I'm pretty sure that on-the-spot interviews and the princess don't go well together."

A strange-looking man sitting behind Priscilla laughed and shrugged his shoulders.

We've already been introduced to them, but they look striking for different reasons than Anastasia or Priscilla's good looks, not that they're as handsome as Julius, or anything like that.

The man, Al, was dressed like a bandit, his face hidden by a jet-black helmet. Like Julius, a knight in the service of Anastasia, Al is a knight of Priscilla— though the man himself denies it.

Al: “I’m the princess’s clown. I’ve always hated knights. Oh, and I’m not talking about you, Finest-san, okay? I was just talking generally.”

Julius: “I do not feel nor think I was being provoked. Sorry, but, I have a fondness for knights. This, too, is a general statement, as Al-dono would say.”

Julius and Al exchange words of this nature as they stand behind each other’s masters.

As far as Shorty can see, the impression is that the masters are quite waspishly talking with each other, but not so much between these two, it seemed.

Shorty: “It helps… That you two Knights are not as argumentative, my heart couldn’t take it…”

Frankly, the situation is tantamount to being duped by Anastasia, but they were at least willing to give that much consideration.

Priscilla: “—It is understandable that you would try a different flavor to the interviews with the candidates for the Royal Selection than the one that preceded it.”

Shorty’s mind was completely distracted by Priscilla, who crossed her arms and quietly opened up the conversation.

She proudly flaunts her breasts on top of her slender arms and looks around at everyone here in turn: Shorty, Lululara, Al, Julius, and finally glances at Anastasia.

Priscilla: “I simply do not understand this combination. She-fox, why did you choose to pair mineself with you?”

Anastasia: “Hm… I guess so. For sure the other two woulda’ done the same thing. I don’t think either Felt-san or Emilia-san would have refused if I had been the one suggestin’ it. But…”

Priscilla: “…”

Anastasia: “I thought that the princess would best understand the intentions of my proposal.”

Anastasia smiles softly as she puts her raised finger to her lips. Shorty’s cheeks somehow relax at the silence.

—Shorty Megan, somehow turn this current adversity into an opportunity.

Priscilla: “—Well, no matter. There are those who deny that playing petty tricks is an evil thing to do, but unlike them, myself is not one of those obstinate people. The She-fox’s schemes have their own meaning.”

Al: “Oh, Woah. The princess can break too. That business owner over there is really good.”

Al whistled Anastasia’s praises in response to Priscilla’s slowing down of the pursuit. Anastasia responded, “Great” to which Julius put his hand on his chest.

Julius: “Thank you for your understanding. Now, Shorty-dono I know this is somewhat different from what you had originally planned, but would you be willing to continue the interview?”

Shorty: “Huh? Oh, yeah! Yes, you can count on me! At first, I was surprised and nervous and my legs and back were shaky, but if I retreat now, my journalistic spirit will become corrupted and burst! Thanks again for this!”

Anastasia: “Yes, yes, please treat us well.”

Priscilla: “Hard work is a virtue of children. Strive to work your hardest.”

With the willingness of both of these camps, Shorty was finally able to get himself back in the right frame of mind to cover the interview.

Once he was in the right state of mind, the questions he needed to ask came to him quickly. First of all, a question to Priscilla, who joined in late, the same question that he asked Anastasia earlier.

Shorty: So, let me ask Priscilla-sama first. I have already asked Anastasia-sama, but I would like to know what you intend to do after becoming King."

Priscilla: "Ho, what did the She-fox answer with?"

Priscilla raised an eyebrow at Shorty's question. Her gaze then flicked to Anastasia, and she waved her hand, meeting her gaze.

Anastasia: "My answer is the same as it was at the castle. Unless the princess has forgotten."

Priscilla: "If thyself is obedient to thy greed, there will be no room for that platitude to change."

Anastasia waves her hand in the air, and Priscilla opens the fan she has pulled from her breasts.

From Priscilla's answer, it appears that Anastasia's declaration at the castle regarding the reason for her participation that she would obtain— the Kingdom of Lugunica was true.

No doubt about it, but still, what spectacular Greed, Shorty couldn't keep his mouth closed.

Shorty: "I am amazed at the grandiose ideas of Anastasia-sama, but Priscilla-sama. But, what the public wants to know what all the candidates for the Royal Selection are thinking about going into the Royal Selection."

The Royal Selection has commenced, and the battle to determine the next king has already begun.

However, many of the royal citizens, including Shorty, are not content with just knowing the mindsets and personalities of the candidates participating in that Royal Selection, or even how they intend to lead the Kingdom into the future.

Information is easily transmitted, its form changed, and even its color and fragrance repainted.

Thus, three candidates for the Royal Selection were contacted for interviews —and Shorty was already greatly ashamed of himself because of the difference between their previous reputation and their personalities.

Priscilla is not a fragile maiden tinged with tragedy and misfortune.

She was a maverick with a magnificent temperament and charm, clad in a crimson reminiscent of both bright flames and fresh blood.

—What does she envision for the future of the kingdom?

Priscilla: "—Do nothing"

Shorty: "Huh?"

Shorty, who had been anticipating what the answer would be, was taken aback.

His mind goes blank, and Priscilla's reply reverberates over and over again.

Shorty: "N, nothing? Doing nothing means…"

Priscilla: "You can take it at face value. Mineself has no particular interest in the kingdom or its subjects. All things in this world belong to mineself from the beginning."

Shorty: "…"

Priscilla: "Mineself does not wish to disturb the harmony of nature. Of course, I will take care of maintaining and pruning. But the world is beautiful as it is. —This world is made for mine convenience. Therefore, if mineself is on the throne, there shall also be prosperity."

Priscilla's nonchalant answers seeped into Shorty's brain as she rested her chin against her hand.

It was so absurdly ridiculous in its logic that it seemed like a joke that deserved to be laughed out of the room. It was a prideful idea, a fantasy that not even the pinnacle of the kingdom could truly hold.

However, what seemed like a joke did not sound like a joke to Shorty.

It is not because Priscilla is frightening that he is unable to laugh it off. It is because Shorty's soul accepts that the words she utters were not untrue

Anastasia: "As usual, the princess's logic scares me… If that were true, everyone but us would have no reason to oppose her."

Priscilla: I'm sure. The other wishes can be fulfilled without them ascending to the throne. But your Greed is the only thing that cannot be compromised. —Therefore, You are mine enemy.

Anastasia: "Ara, thanks for the high praise. I think of the princess as an enemy, too."

Despite her composed appearance, Anastasia's retort was equally sharp.

Since both candidates for the Royal Selection were unexpectedly interviewed at the same time, one would have thought that they would have a somewhat more relaxed conversation, but such expectations were quickly discarded.

Shorty: "Although, that's why it's worth getting to the heart of the matter…!"

As for Priscilla's statement earlier, it is necessary to choose the right words so that they are not misinterpreted. But it's only a matter of right and wrong, no need to dramatize the facts.

Unmistakable statements from the candidates for the Royal Selection, thoroughly reporting the full extent of their true intentions.

Shorty: "What are your impressions of the other candidates?"

Anastasia: "At the moment, the most promising person is Crusch-san, ain't it? She's in a solid position, but the question is how much support she'll get for her policy."

Priscilla: “That young girl from the slums was the embodiment of the boast, was she not? She is the pinnacle of fools whose aspirations have only become so great that they cannot see their own shortcomings. If she continues to be a fool, there would be nothing to see.

In response to Shorty’s question, Anastasia and Priscilla lay out their words.

Is not interrupting the other’s statements a sign that there was no room for disagreement there? Shorty frantically wrote down the two quick-witted responses in his memory.

Crusch and now this is a response on Felt. Then—

Shorty: “—How do you feel about the fifth candidate, Emilia-sama?”

Anastasia and Priscilla: “—Irrelevant”

The question, which was prepared to cut deep, was answered with one simple word.

Shorty, breathless, and flushed with the intensity of those single, simple words, his mouth agape.

Shorty: “Wh, what is the reasoning behind that?”

Anastasia: “I don’t need to tell ya, but Emilia-san’s origins are a stumbling block to begin with. A half-elf… with silver hair and amethyst eyes would be a perfect example of tragic features if there were one”

Priscilla: “It is not a matter of questioning one’s qualifications. Whatever their nature, the common people are ignorant. They can only judge by what we want to see and hear.”

Despite the differences in the words they put together, the meaning of their story is the same.

The situation surrounding Emilia, the last of the candidates for the Royal Selection, is grim and is no longer in question as to her state of being.

And it was a feeling that Shorty himself had.

Shorty: “I’ve heard that Emilia-sama, like Anastasia-sama and Crusch-sama, were instrumental in the subjugation of the White whale, which was one of the three great Witchbeasts, and the defeat of a Sin Archbishop…”

Anastasia: “It’s not strictly speaking Emilia-san’s own work, but that of her knight. And the wounds of the “Witch of Envy” is not so shallow that it can be wiped out just by that. Right, Julius?”

Julius: “It is rather unfortunate to say.”

When Anastasia turned to Julius for affirmation, he shook his head, his long-lashed eyes downcast.

Julius: “I don’t know how much both the White whale and the battle with the Sin Archbishop will touch the hearts of those who listen. However, as Anastasia-sama said, one cannot expect much.”

Al: “It’s a shame. If you don’t get any recognition for all that, it’s not like you can say what you’re doing it for. Do you do it in order to just lose?”

Julius: “Al-dono, that’s not the right way to put it…”

Al: “Not good? That’s the way it’s supposed to be. But what’s the difference between what you and I are saying? You and the princesses agree on that, don’t you?”

Julius wrinkled his brow, and Al acted somewhat hypocritical. With his only arm— his right one, he used his hand and fumbled with the seam of his helmet, making a ticking, metallic sound.

The dry sound seems to represent the unchangeable reality that awaits Emilia, and Shorty too felt somewhat depressed.

However—

Priscilla: “In all things, there are winners and losers. However, the conditions of victory are determined by one's self. It is not a matter that can be easily determined based on external factors."

Al: "Princess?"

Priscilla: "There is no doubt that the half-demon is not worthy of being discussed as an adversary in the Royal Selection. Is everyone involved so stupid that they can't understand that? Mineself does not believe so."

The opinion of Al, the follower, is so overridden by Priscilla, the master.

Al was indeed surprised to hear this, and tilted his head and said, "Oi, Oi"

Al: "I didn't expect to get shot in the back. Don't you agree with me, right Princess?"

Priscilla: "The process is the same, but the conclusion is different. The same can be said for the mindset of that half-demon."

Al: "So, Princess, you're saying the girl doesn't want to be king? You're saying she has another goal in mind?"

Priscilla: "Otherwise, it would not make sense. Besides—"

Al's slightly heated tone was laced with a hint of desperation.

Shorty wonders about that, but doesn't have time to interject. But that is just Shorty's situation. Shorty's situation is nothing compared to the powerhouse that is Priscilla's.

Anastasia: "—I'll have to preface this by saying that if things are gonna continue as they are"

Priscilla: "Hmm"

Priscilla's eyes narrowed and she snorted at Anastasia as she continued.

The fact that she did not dismiss it as misguided suggests that they were of the same opinion. This means that both parties share the same perception of Emilia.

Anastasia: “Interesting and fun, don’t cha think? It’s a game that was doomed to defeat right from the start, but Emilia-san and her camp still took on the challenge. They gotta plan to turn this situation around. Ain’t that what you’re sayin’?”

Priscilla: “If your intention is to participate in the war for the sake of fixing the numbers, then you are not worthy of being in mine eyes. If you prove yourself worthy, you will naturally be reflected in mine eyes.”

Smiles and taunts, are two conflicting reactions, but Shorty is strangely moved.

For some reason, the emotions that both Anastasia and Priscilla expressed toward each other, both of them seemed to be expectations.

Al: “Damn, I feel like I’m being stepped on. It would be better if the princess really stepped on me, instead of my feelings.”

Julius: “Al-dono, we are both in front of the press. As a knight, you should be careful what you say.”

Al: “Thanks for the heads up. But I’m not a knight and I don’t want to be one.”

Julius: “That is regrettable. I truly mean it.”

In response to Julius’s meditating answer, Al rattles the seams of his helmet to scare him off. Behind the gesture, the original franticness is nowhere to be seen. Or maybe Shorty was wrong about that, as well—

Shorty: “Thank you very much for your valuable words. Now… if you could, please tell us how you feel about the opposing candidate, the person in front of you…!”

Al: “…You got a lot of courage, Reporter-san.”

Shorty asked a no-nonsense question, to which Al responded with genuine admiration. It was a question that made Julius chuckle, but there was no way not to ask it.

Both parties are right in front of each other. This is the perfect opportunity to express their true feelings without any judgment.

In fact, Anastasia and Priscilla probably thought it was a question that would be asked.

Anastasia and Priscilla looked at each other and opened their mouths at the same time.

Then—

Anastasia: “…I’ll kick ya out.”

Priscilla: “…Break you by mine hand.”

They exchanged hostility, which could be considered the greatest praise at the moment.

7

Shorty: “Th, th, th, that shortened my life…”

Lululara: “…Tired”

Lululara pats Shorty on the back as he leans back in his chair, his face an ashen shade of gray.

Holding her knees in her chair, Lululara was unusually attentive to Shorty, perhaps a little more aware of how much work Shorty had put in to get through the interview.

In fact, it was a marvelous interview, as evidenced by Lululara’s overflowing creative spirit.

The number of news illustrations depicting Anastasia and Priscilla from various angles were the best to date, and Editor-in-Chief Morgan was pleased with the quality of the work. Some of them include a shot of Julius and Al, their followers, and they are a perfect record of the coverage.

Shorty: “But this bias now, Lulularа… you have a rather strong interest in their looks.”

Lulularа: “…Is a misunderstanding”

Shorty: “If you compare the number of pictures of the two candidates for the Royal Selection, with Sir Julius, and Al-dono, it’s not very convincing! I mean, you only drew one picture of Al-dono!”

Lulularа: “…Draw only what makes heart tremble, like you said”

Lulularа used the “Dragon Nation Newsletter” as an excuse for dodging Shorty’s challenge. Shorty could scarcely resist.

The only thing is that there was one moment when Lulularа’s heart was shaken as well as Al’s.

Lulularа: “…drew it, because it looked so, serious.”

Shorty: “Al-dono is serious… Yeah, he looked serious.”

The piece Lulularа captured of Al is from a moment of his disagreement with Priscilla.

Shorty was caught off guard by Al’s response to a question about another candidate —Emilia.

Shorty: “—. After we are done with these interviews, maybe we can do a deep dive on the knights of the Royal Selection candidates, as it would be interesting to learn more about Emilia-sama’s camp, and its knight.”

Lulularа: “But, next one is more important”

Shorty chuckled at Lulularа’s eagerness to move from one subject to the next.

Shorty: “I still think Lulularа is a sucker for good looks. I think you’re obsessed with your next interview subject.”

Lululara: “Who is the next one?”

Shorty: “You know it, but you’re just oblivious! …No, maybe it’s the knight that you’re obsessed with, you’re not seriously forgetting!”

Lululara: “…Didn’t, hear you”

Shorty: “It… doesn’t matter why! It’s also a problem that you didn’t listen!”

Shorty laments the unreliable memory of his beloved partner, pen in hand, as he summarizes the content of the interview before it slips out of his memory.

However, unexpectedly, they were able to interview Priscilla at the same time, bringing the total number of candidates for the Royal Selection interviewed to three. Two more to go, and the next target of the interview will be—

Shorty: “—Felt-sama, she also has an unusual background, though she’s been overshadowed by Emilia-sama”

Lululara: “…Color!”

Shorty: “It has nothing to do with your paintings, it’s different, meaning unusual! Actually… Felt-sama is an orphan who grew up in the streets of the poor districts of the Royal Capital. —I mean, she’s just like us, Lululara.”

Shorty says this to Lululara, who is holding a drawing book in her lap, looking straight into her eyes.

Both Shorty and Lululara, who now work as reporter and news artist respectively for the “Dragon Nation Newsletter,” were originally abandoned by their parents and were among the children of the poor, scavenging for garbage in the slums of the city.

Most of the time, the children are stuck in that environment and end up doing evil or being preyed upon by the wrongdoers. Fortunately, Shorty and Lululara were spared from such a fate.

Both of them have earned their current positions by being recognized for the talent and passion they possess.

The same can be said for Felt. —However, her current situation is a lofty one, beyond the bounds of imagination.

Shorty: “There are many rumors flying around about Felt-sama, many of which are untrue. I’d love to ask her questions about that too… but it’s her knight that’s getting the most attention!”

Lulularа: “…Saint!”

Shorty: “Yes! The “Sword Saint” Reinhard Van Astrea, …He is the knight who supports Felt-sama, and his declaration of support has a huge impact.”

For many of the people who read the Dragon Nation Newsletter, the Royal Selection candidates who will live in the royal castle are above the clouds. This was no different for the royal family when the king was alive and well.

Therefore, if there is a celebrity that the people are interested in, it is the one whose name they have heard most often. In this respect, Reinhard, the “Sword Saint” of this generation, has the greatest influence in the kingdom.

Even the people of the capital are more interested in the “Sword Saint” than the king. The difference is even more obvious when it comes to the people outside of the capital who don’t have the opportunity to interact with the royal family or look up at the royal castle.

Shorty: “Of course, Felt-sama will use the influence of Sir Reinhard to win the Royal Selection, Because many are dazzled by the prestige of the “Sword Saint”, …that’s why!”

Lululara: “Why…?”

Shorty: “We will not let that prestige deter us, and we will truly find out what Felt-sama has to offer!”

Shorty’s fists clenched in determination, Lululara understood how far he was willing to go, and she held up her drawing pad with an unmotivated look and leisurely movements.

Fortunately, the coverage up to this point has been going smoothly, but it is hard to say that everything has gone according to plan, and that it is all just a result of the circumstances. So from here on out, they will be striving to make up for it.

No matter how dazzling the “sword saint” may appear, Shorty’s journalistic heart of steel was still trembling—

8

???: “—Welcome to the Astrea domain, to the both of you, reporters.”

And so Shorty and Lululara were greeted by a fiery young man. He is an unexpectedly beautiful young man with blazing red hair and blue eyes that encapsulate the clear sky.

Shorty had previously admired the quality of one of Lululara’s paintings of him before, and the subject himself greeted Shorty and Lululara who had come to interview him with a smile.

The “Knight Amongst Knights” greeted the guests —but their attire was far from knightly.

Shorty: “S, Sir Reinhard… right?”

Reinhard: “Yes, that’s right. Thank you for coming all the way from the royal capital.”

The young man —Reinhard, nodded to Shorty, who forgot his nervousness and faltered in surprise.

He was dressed in a white shirt and black trousers, a light, rustic look, without the uniform that indicates his position as a knight or member of the Royal guard. He is smiling with a towel around his neck, and he does not even have his “dragon sword,” a synonym for “Sword Saint,” at his waist. But, looking carefully, you can see that he has it propped up on the ground beside him.

It was a sign that he had shed his “Sword Saintness”.

The proof is in the fact of what he was doing right before he greeted Shorty and Lulularaa—

Lulularaa: “…You’re gardening?”

Reinhard: “Oh, that’s right. I’m taking care of the garden and flower beds at the mansion. This morning, I finally got the buds to bloom…”

Lulularaa: “…Pretty”

Lulularaa tilted her head and Reinhard answered her question by indicating the flower bed with a hand. Reinhard was proud of himself, and the flower bed behind him was a magnificent sight.

The flowers in bloom were red, white, and yellow petals. The most eye-catching feature of the garden is the colorful flowerbeds, but the carefully tended trees and shrubs also look like a work of a skilled craftsman to the untrained eye.

As one would expect from the “Sword Saint”, he was also very skilled in pruning the garden and using scissors for that purpose—

Shorty: “No, no, no! I’m impressed, but do they usually let you do that? I mean, you’re the “Sword Saint”, and you’re gardening!”

Lulularaa: “…Complaining about saint?”

Shorty: “I couldn’t and wouldn’t do anything so rash!”

Shorty’s eyes widened as he complained about the seemingly wasteful use of the “Sword Saint”. Immediately, he was hit by Lulularaa’s signature ladder removal, and he hurriedly pulled the ladder back himself.

Reinhard laughed a little at their exchange, took off the protective gloves he had on, and—

Reinhard: “I see, I guess tending a garden doesn’t suit the “Sword Saint”‘. What do you think I should do?”

Shorty: “Let me see, since Sir Reinhard is so famous that there is no one in the kingdom who doesn't know him, the usual way is to go around the country with you, sell your face and name, and get the support of the powerful nobles."

Reinhard: "—Yes, that's right, Felt-sama."

When Reinhard himself asked Shorty how to make effective use of Reinhard, Shorty listed the measures he could think of. However, what Reinhard said after that caught Shorty completely by surprise.

Involuntarily, Shorty sputtered, "Huh?" and followed Reinhard's meaningful gaze. —Shorty's gaze leads him to the person standing behind Shorty and Lululara.

It was a young servant girl who met them at the nearest town and guided them to the Astrea mansion. They took advantage of her hospitality and talked about this and that on the way to the mansion.

What did Reinhard call this young girl with dazzlingly beautiful golden hair, black ribbon, strong-willed red eyes, and distinctive protruding fang from her mouth—

Shorty: "Ah, uh, eh, oh…?"

Felt: "Oooh, he's confused. Haha, look at his face."

The girl can't hold back her laughter as she points at Shorty, opening and closing his mouth with a pucker and his eyes going blank. At this behavior, Lululara also looked at Shorty.

Lululara: "…funny"

Shorty: "Not at all! It's not funny!

Shorty retorts loudly to Lululara's all too heartless remark. The young girl was laughing so hard that tears were welling up in the corners of her eyes. Then Reinhard sighs and says

When Shorty peeled his eyes away from Lululara's too heartless comment, the girl was startled. However, Reinhard called out to the girl again and again with "Felt-sama".

Reinhard: “Felt-sama, I think it’s time to stop the antics, please. Shorty-dono and Lululara-san will be exhausted if you go any further.”

Felt: “Alllright, alllright. I thought I was startin’ to understand ya a little better, but you’re still naggin’ me, aren’t cha?”

Reinhard: “I think I’ve become more flexible. So I did not stop you from welcoming them.”

Felt: “Ya had Flam and Grassis lookin’ out for me. You’re still stiff enough.”

The young girl responds to Reinhard’s smile by sticking out her tongue. —She is in a position to treat Reinhard with disrespect and still be respected.

Above all, the name, which is repeated so many times that there is no mistaking it, is—

Shorty: “— It is an honor to meet you, Felt-sama.”

Felt: “Heh, thanks for the greeting, it’s makin’ my ears itch.”

Shorty, who managed to bite back his surprise and bowed, to which Felt responds by scratching her ear.

At first glance, she appears to be just a simple town girl, but she is the fourth candidate for the Royal Selection.

Compared to the simultaneous coverage, however, this is about as good as it gets—

Lululara: “…Here”

Shorty: “Lululara!”

As Shorty gasps in nervousness, Lululara unexpectedly presents Felt with a page from one of her notebooks. Felt takes it with a raised eyebrow and looks at the picture.

Then—

Felt: “Buhaha, Ha-Ha-Ha! Look at this, Reinhard!”

Reinhard: “This is… ha”

Reinhard cleared his throat as he peeked at the painting from behind, as Felt called out to him, gushing.

Shorty’s mouth was agape at the Knight’s response.

Shorty: “Even Sir Reinhard? What did you give them, Lululara!”

Felt: “Ha-Ha-Ha-Ha!”

Felt laughing hysterically and Reinhard was unable to hold back his laughter.

As Shorty’s gaze wandered between the two and Lululara, Reinhard showed him the picture in question with a smile on his face. The person depicted was none other than Shorty.

Shorty, dumbfounded with eyes wide open and mouth agape, gazed at Felt in dismay.

Lululara: “…Masterpiece”

Shorty: “Yeah, Thanks as always!”

Shorty shouted a desperate thank you to the boastful Lululara holding up her paintbrush.

9

Shorty: “Once again, thank you for making time for us today…”

Felt: “Ya look like you’re not happy. Well, I don’t mind, since ya made me laugh earlier.”

Shorty: “Thanks…”

Shorty’s reply is one word as he is ushered into the reception room of the Astrea mansion and receives his welcome.

This is due to his difficulty handling Felt, stemming from the events that just happened. Of course, there is a sense of tension in dealing with a candidate for the Royal Selection, but it is much less oppressive than with the previous three.

Felt: “—? What’s up?”

Shorty: “No, no, it’s nothing.”

Felt: “How can ya stare at someone’s face like that and say it’s nothin’?”

Felt leaned forward and looked into Shorty’s face, his cheeks tensing at the look she was giving him, and Shorty felt a faint pang of disappointment.

It seems that if one is a candidate for the Royal Selection, he or she must have the qualities that distinguish them from other candidates, —the qualities that make them stand at the pinnacle of the nation.

For example, Felt picked up Shorty and Lululara dressed as a servant, but even if the same thing had been done by the other three, they would not have been able to completely fool them.

—Unfortunately, that is not how he feels about Felt.

Considering her background, there was no opportunity for her to hone her qualifications. It would be fair to say that this was inevitable, but he couldn’t help but feel a sense of disappointment.

She is not yet ready to compete shoulder to shoulder with the previous three.

This means that Felt and Emilia are almost certain to be eliminated, leaving Crusch, Anastasia, and Priscilla to compete for the throne.

So the interview with these last two people, including this moment, is like a game that has already been won.

Felt: “—Ain’t it a bit early to be finished judgin’ me?”

Shorty: “Huh”

Felt: “Nah, I know it when I see it. Ya look so obviously disappointed.”

Shorty falters as Felt’s lips curl and her gaze sharpens.

It is outrageous to undermine the credibility of a reporter with such a brazen attitude when the role of a reporter is to let the subject speak his or her mind.

Shorty: “—hk”

Shorty was about to apologize, but thought better of it.

It would be pointless to mend things now. Rather, he will get on with the topic that has been broached.

Shorty: “Did you develop that eye for people from living in the slums?”

Felt: “Heh? You’re suddenly askin’ me a tough question. But I like it when people look at me that way.”

Shorty: “Thank you.”

Felt: “So, did livin’ in the slums make me stronger? Yeah, I guess it did.”

Felt was not offended that someone had so cavalierly stepped into her past. On the contrary, she seemed to accept Shorty’s brazenness in a friendly way.

With a hand on her chin, crossing her legs, Felt’s gaze is directed out the window. The royal capital where she grew up is far, far away under the distant sky.

Shorty looked over at Felt’s face, thinking of her hometown, and saw the complex emotions in her red eyes.

Shorty: “…You miss the capital and the slums.”

Felt: “Ah? Not at all. I don’t even want to remember the slums. I hate ‘em”

Shorty: “What?”

Felt: “It’s just ya gettin’ swept up in the mood. I don’t miss’em, when I’m away from the slums is all a blessin’ in disguise. —You guys gotta feel the same way.”

Felt scratched her head roughly, her lips forming a line. Shorty, hearing this, almost replied, “That’s true, but…” before choking up.

Shorty: “I’m saying it now that Lulular and I are from the slums…”

Felt: “It’s ain’t a big deal that I saw right through ya. You’re right, livin’ in the slums, I’ve got a habit of watchin’ people. I’ve always been in the business of pickin’ the pockets of the stupidest people.”

Shorty: “Um, Lululara and I are reporters, you know…”

Felt: “That’s why I’m being honest with cha. If I wanted to lie or say whatever I thought was appropriate, I wouldn’t have agreed to the interview in the first place. Ya can write whatever ya want.”

Shorty was feeling let down as Felt proudly confesses her past criminal behavior.

Without a doubt, this fact reflects badly on Felt’s Royal Selection influence. However, Shorty, who is also from the slums, does not seem to be willingly complicit in the crimes she committed.

Driven by necessity, people do evil in order to survive. This is the future that Shorty and Lululara might have had, and in fact, even Felt has not continued to do so.

How could he be proud of his work when he reveals the unavoidable circumstances of her crimes and stated that it was true?

Shorty: “I will write down the facts. I’ll see if I can write an article about it later… Huh? My pen is…”

Felt: “This? You’re usin’ some pretty nice stuff, aren’t ya? I bet I could sell it for a pretty good price, right?”

Shorty: “I thought you were retired!”

Felt, smiling, shows off Shorty’s favorite pen, which Felt had somehow taken from his hand and waved it in the air. Shorty was impressed and amazed by her brilliant handiwork.

Reinhard: “—Felt-sama, Shorty-dono, and the others are in a tight spot.”

Then Reinhard interrupts, opening the entrance to the reception room.

Reinhard, with a silver tray in his hand, brought in steaming cups, which he served to the table between Felt and Shorty.

Reinhard: “I think it’s a virtue that you don’t bother to hide it, Felt-sama, but you don’t have to go out of your way to mention it in such a blatant way. Now, the pen.”

Felt: “Teh, I guess the sermon is startin’ again. In general, I…”

Reinhard: “This is an instruction from Rom-dono and Ezzo.”

Felt: “Gua…”

Perhaps the added remark was effective, but then Felt’s expression lost its composure. She then handed Shorty’s pen to Reinhard in frustration.

Reinhard laughs at the situation and turns around to return the pen to Shorty.

Reinhard: “Here you go. And please do have some tea. It’s something I’m learning…”

Shorty: “No, no, no, not at all! Tea that is brewed by the “Sword Saint”! A very rare opportunity, yes. I would love to take it home and watch it evaporate!”

Lulularа: “Stupid…”

Shorty: “It’s just a joke to lighten the mood.”

Lulularа's one-liner in return brings Shorty back to his senses. After all, shouting is good for mental stability.

Anyway, not wanting to yell too many times, Shorty cleared his throat softly.

Shorty: "I apologize for not waiting for the arrival of Sir Reinhard and starting the conversation early."

Reinhard: "Oh, don't worry. I heard you."

Shorty: "Was that so? Then that's a relief… What? Do you mean the conversation we had here? In the kitchen?"

Felt: "Oh, for cryin' out loud. If you take his comments seriously, we'll never get anywhere and we'll never finish. I got other things to do later today."

My interest in Reinhard's words is insatiable, but with Felt telling him he has plans for later, they cannot talk for too long. It was important to know Felt's intentions for the Royal Selection.

Shorty: "—So, once again, What do you intend to do as king, Felt-sama?"

Felt: "I'm goin' to destroy the invisible traditions of this country."

Shorty: "…Yes?"

Shorty stops writing in his notebook once he hears the answer that came back to him without any hesitation. What did Felt just declare that she would destroy?

Shorty: "This country's, invisible traditions…?"

Felt: "All the unreasonable things that are taken for granted, all the things that I've seen, heard, talked about, and I don't like. The slums are one of those things I don't like."

Shorty: "…"

Felt: "'cause It's the way it's supposed to be, and the way we are supposed to think. No wonder it's so hard for the poor to live in the slums. But I don't like the fact that those who are just born on top are forever winners and those who are just born on the bottom are forever losers."

Before he can fully digest the meaning of the words, her opinions are spoken one after another from Felt's mouth. Shorty tries to get closer to Felt's true meaning as he digests them little by little.

If you cut out the superlatives, it is just an act of a young orphan girl, born and raised in the slums, who speaks of her bitter, jealous impulses toward those who were born and raised elsewhere.

But Felt's eyes and tone of voice held a much greater, weightier, and adamant will.

Felt: "Maybe ya don't expect much from me anyway, did cha?"

Shorty: "—hk"

Felt: "Heh, words become cheap when ya string'em together properly, don't they? It was good on my part not to be so careless and misleadin'. In fact, there is hardly anyone who expects anythin' from me. That's right. I am a little girl who grew up in a poor neighborhood. I'm not as respectable as the other candidates."

Felt cut him off, shook her head, and said, "No."

Felt: "I'm sure it's better than the half-demon-neechan, but that's the kind of level I'm talkin' about. No one expects anythin' from me. If that's the case, then I got nothin' to lose."

Shorty: "Is that why you are challenging the invisible traditions?"

Felt: "If someone doesn't punch'em in the face, ya can't even make 'em bleed. I'm goin' to beat them up first anyway. I'm the one who got that damn ticket. I won't know if anyone will follow after me until I try."

Felt concludes so using the wild, brash, back-alley style.

Ridiculous and lacking in specifics, Felt's arguments were, however, painfully familiar to Shorty, who was also from the slums. Perhaps even to Lulularа if she was listening.

At the same time, Shorty stumbled over the potential Felt had.

Before the interview, he felt disappointed and discouraged with Felt, who seemed to have no chance to win the selection. As usual, —Felt did not have the dignity of a King that Crusch and the others had.

However, when it comes to whether she looks like a powerless girl with nothing at all, no.

—In Felt, he felt the determination of a person who is ready to take on the challenge and the will of a reformer who is willing to make change.

Unlike the gifted who have already been perfected and born to shine, Felt's vessel is still in the process of taking shape.

Perhaps the vessel will not be fired even after the Royal Selection is settled. But if her vessel is ever completed and seen by the public—

Reinhard: "—The day will come when something invisible will be destroyed. Can we have such expectations?"

Shorty: "Sir Reinhard…"

Reinhard was the first to come to the same conclusion as Shorty did.

Reinhard looked at Shorty and Lulularа with his blue eyes, then back at Felt, who was sitting in front of him.

Reinhard: "In fact, Felt-sama is in the process of trying many things as we speak. For example, I am probably part of what she is trying to destroy."

Lulularа: "…you want to destroy Saint?"

Felt: "It ain't that big of a deal, Reinhard, don't be weird."

Reinhard: “But I wanted to make it widely known that I was the first thing that Felt tried to destroy, so I didn’t want to hide it if possible.”

Felt: “Scary. What are ya talkin’ bout, man?”

Reinhard’s smiling gaze is gentle, and Felt’s voice is truly harsh as she responds.

As far as it appears so far, they are two people who have formed a rather strange master and knight relationship. So far, the relationship between the Royal Selection candidate and the knight has been good, with minor differences, but each has one thing in common.

However, one can sense a rift between Felt and Reinhard that cannot easily be described simply as a good relationship. Not sour or unfriendly, but tense, as if they were in the middle of a stormy wind.

Reinhard: “Shorty-dono, I take care of the garden and flower beds because I am obeying Felt-sama’s orders”

Shorty: “W, well is that true?”

Reinhard: “Yes. She told me to try growing some flowers. Unfortunately, I have the “Divine Protection of Horticulture”, so it’s not a difficult challenge as it is trial and error…”

Reinhard breaks off there and looks at his palm. He was wearing protective gloves and had been tending to his garden. His hands had been washed to serve the guests, and although there were no dirt stains on them, his eyes were filled with the clear signs of his work.

Shorty saw the “Sword Saint” Reinhard’s gardening efforts as a waste of time and effort.

Reinhard: “I actually feel like I’ve changed my mind. Maybe the transformation of this world can come from the accumulation of small things like this.”

Felt: “You’re an arrogant bastard… I praised yer flower beds for a minute, and ya immediately got on my case.”

Reinhard: “It is a pleasure to hear that, since it was given to me by Felt-sama”

Reinhard replies without hesitation to Felt, who blurts it out while resting her chin on her hand.

It was a surprising comment even for Shorty to hear, and Felt was no exception to that. She looked at Shorty with a bitter look on her face, as if regretting that she had seen his face.

Shorty: “You’re staring at me!”

Felt: “Shit, I’m really not seein’ the point of this interview. If it’s just going to make me annoyed, there’s a limit to how much I’m willin’ to lose.”

Reinhard: “Don’t worry, the Dragon Nation Newsletter has one of the highest circulation rates in the capital. I am sure that the strategy of Rom-dono and Ezzo is correct.”

Felt: “Hey! Don’t ever, ever write what this idiot said earlier!”

Felt shows her sharp fangs and calls Reinhard an idiot.

What does Felt think of Reinhard, that she would let the “Sword Saint” tend to the garden, serve as a waiter, and then call him an idiot?

Shorty: “What does Felt-sama think about Sir Reinhard…”

Felt: “Oh? were ya half asleep? —This is Reinhard.”

Shorty: “—ah”

Felt: “It’s nothin’ more, nothin’ less. He doesn’t listen to me, but he talks a lot. He gives me a headache.”

Felt crosses her arms as she exhales loudly through her nose, and Reinhard, standing behind her, says nothing in response, only slightly relaxing the corners of his eyes.

Shorty, noticing Reinhard's reaction, reflected on his own life and realized that he, too, had been corrupted by the "invisible traditions" described by Felt.

He thought he understood the prejudices and preconceived notions that were prevalent in the kingdom, such as the differences in status between the aristocratic and impoverished districts, the categories of nobility, commoner, and destitute, and the prejudices and preconceptions that they created.

However, as Shorty continues to interview candidates for the Royal Selection, he is continually reminded that he is neither smart nor well-informed.

Finally, Felt, who also came from the slums, made the same realization.

—Shorty's and other people's illusions about Reinhard van Astrea, the "Sword Saint", is one of the things that Felt is trying to destroy because she doesn't like it.

Shorty: "Felt-sama, what do you think about where the Royal Selection is going?"

Felt: "…"

Felt's red eyes narrowed as she stared at Shorty, who had asked her a question.

Straightening his back, Shorty met her gaze directly. Here, his initial disappointment in Felt was gone, and all that remained was a strange sense of anticipation.

What in the world will this poor orphaned girl from the favelas show us in the future? Such is his hope.

Shorty thought that this might have been the decisive push that made Reinhard choose Felt.

Felt: "Well, I think the rest of'em are pretty good. When I first saw'em at the castle, I didn't know what they were like 'cause I didn't know anything about'em…"

Born and raised in the slums, it was not until Felt announced her participation in the royal selection and decided to live in Astrea Manor that she began to receive a decent education.

Shorty remembers it too. In the beginning, he couldn't even read or write, and he couldn't even stand on the same stage without bridging the gap between what he knew and what he should have known.

Felt has continued to fight through a series of frustrating experiences, but has not been corrupted by them.

Felt: "Right now, that Duchess has got the upper hand, followed by the merchant. Even though they joined in huntin' the whale, it's goin' to be tough for the half-demon-nee-chan. I don't know about that woman in red, but…"

Shorty: "…"

Felt: "I'm just as good, if not better, than her in terms of reputation. The future is bleak, and whether I can make up for this in three short years is my challenge."

Shorty was impressed with the accurate analysis of her own situation.

Her grasp of the state of the competition is proof that she is not throwing the game away, and that she is determined to do everything in her power to win.

However, the road ahead is a difficult one. That is undeniable, as she too realizes it.

Shorty: "Have you decided on how you are going to fight?"

Felt: "For the time bein', I ain't gonna win by copyin' the others. I gotta do what only I can do. That's why…"

Shorty: "So?"

Felt: “In the meantime, I’m hittin’ up every single black market guy I can. I’ve got a meetin’ with some of their higher-ups after this.”

Shorty: “That’s an unexpected answer!”

Shorty exclaimed to Felt, who laughed hysterically and gave an unexpected answer.

Shorty’s reaction was met with a “ha ha ha” from Felt, while Reinhard, standing behind her, put his hand on his forehead. Shorty, however, is the one who wants to cover his face.

One of the candidates for the Royal Selection is cozying up to the Black Market and wants to win the Royal Selection.

Shorty: “And it’s too good to be true, no one is going to believe this…!”

Even if Shorty showed it to Chief Morgan, he might think that he had fabricated the story. Surely, one would not expect such a big confession with so little thought put into it.

Shorty: “…”

While Shorty is thinking, Lululara is silently brushing strokes in her notebook.

Her interest never left Reinhard, and she has been making a number of news illustrations for Felt as well. At last, she has become aware of the importance of being a news illustrator, and has understood the rule that she should draw all of the subjects she is covering.

Unfortunately, this is not the case; Felt’s way of doing things suited Lululara’s taste.

Just as Shorty changed his perception of Felt, the same thing happened to Lululara. The fact that she painted a picture and the quality of the picture is proof of Felt’s considerable talent.

And then—

Felt: “So? What else do you want to know about why I’m in the Royal Selection… what I’m going to do?”

Shorty: “I’ve been asking the others… what is your impression of the other candidates for the throne, Felt-sama?”

Felt: “The other guys. I told ya that earlier. I think they’re great guys.”

This is Felt, who calmly completes her own analysis, which is not to be discounted.

Perhaps for other candidates, she likely has an assessment that is worth listening to. Though she was not present at any of these events, she is no doubt also an excellent strategist who puts in the work.

If possible, Shorty would like to talk to someone else in the Felt camp as well.

Anyway, Felt scratched her cheek as she thought about it and said, “That’s about right.”

Felt: “I haven’t talked to her much, but that Duchess is a tough one. When she saw me at the castle, she was the only one who didn’t judge me. I was told that she was originally the favorite, but I ain’t lettin’ down my guard… Well, I guess that’s not the only reason she was lookin’ at me.”

Shorty: “I see, Crusch-sama is… what about Anastasia-sama and Priscilla-sama?”

Felt: “The merchant… Anastasia has got a good eye for detail. I got in her debt the other day, so I’m not sure how that will sound. But I’m sure it was worth more than the price I paid. I trust ‘em not to get greedy in their dealin’s. Also, that woman in red is…”

There, Felt broke off her speech and wrinkled her nose in genuine displeasure.

Felt: “Not about it bein’ good or bad, just that I will fuckin’ kick her ass.”

Shorty: “That’s incredibly personal! …Priscilla-sama is such an extremely intense person.”

Felt: “Heh, I guess that’s one way to put it. Besides—”

Felt held her tongue, and makes him wait slightly longer for the last person —Emilia’s evaluation.

TIt is taking a long time for her to formulate an answer. However, unlike the one to Priscilla, there is no hostility there. It seems to be a different sentiment from the animosity toward the half-elf.

Felt laughed at Shorty, who was waiting anxiously in front of her to see what it might be.

Felt: “That’s the half-demon-neechan. Ya should go see her with yer own eyes. You’ll see more clearly than any of the others that the rumors ain’t to be trusted.”

Shorty: “W, what a letdown…!”

Felt: “Well, I don’t hate her. I owe Nee-chan a lot, ya know.”

With her hands folded behind her head, Felt kept her opinion of Emilia to herself. At the very least, Felt made Shorty notice there was a possibility that she had been involved with Emilia.

Shorty felt a sobering sense of purpose when Felt pointed out that he should go and see them in person.

The Emilia camp, which from the beginning of this project had been considered the most challenging emotionally —finally, the interview with the other Royal Selection candidates was over, leaving her as the last one.

And then—

Lulularа: “I drew it…”

As she said this, Lulularа noisily tore another page out of her drawing book.

Felt accepts the news painting again with an amused “ show me, show me”. She must have gotten a taste of the picture of Shorty from earlier.

Felt’s eyes lit up in anticipation, wondering what kind of laughs Shorty would be able to provide this time—

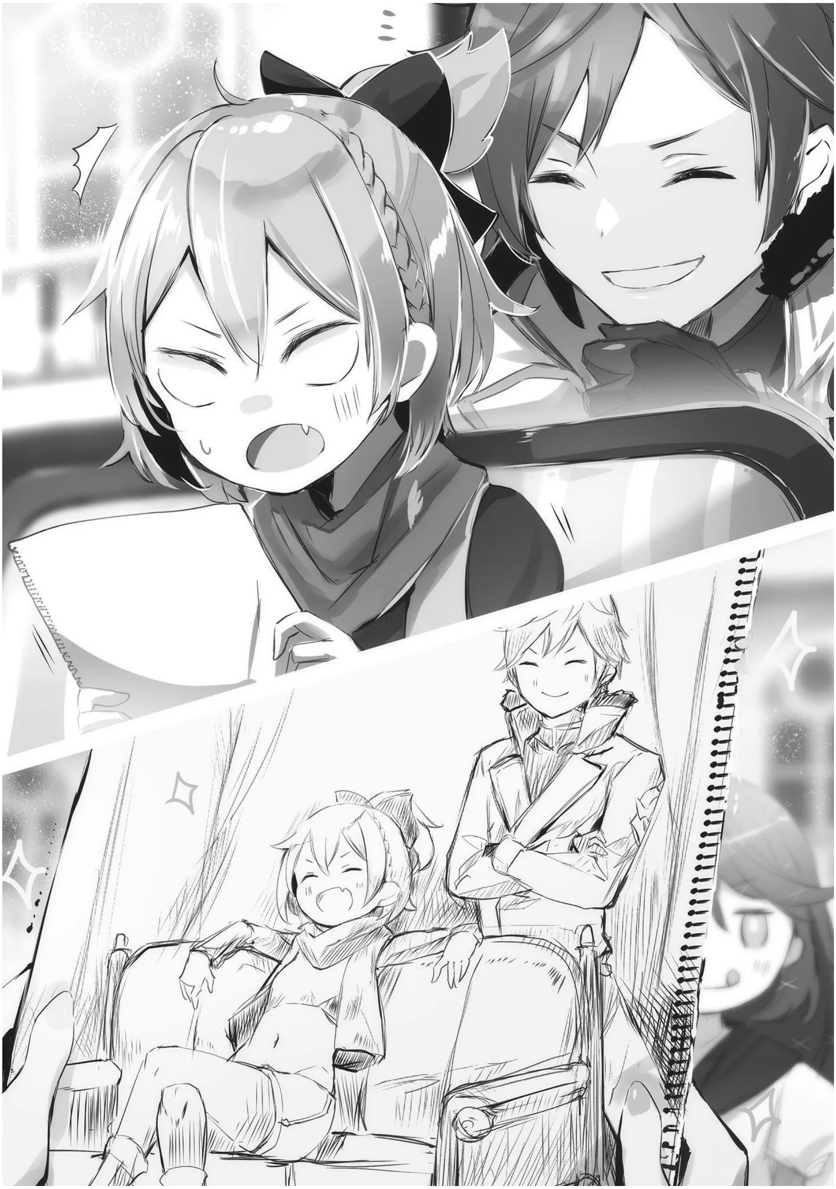
Felt: “Ack”

Reinhard: “This is”

Felt frowned, and Reinhard, peering at the painting from behind, was amazed at the picture and laughed.

Shorty also sneaks a peek at it to see what kind of picture was painted, and is pleased with it.

The picture depicted Felt slumped on the sofa with Reinhard behind her, with a soft expression on his face. —A moment of their awkward master and knight relationship.



—An idea and a little bit of inspiration led to a series of interviews with the candidates for the Royal Selection.

These interviews, which have taken an immense toll on Shorty's body and mind, are now approaching the final chapter of the project.

At last, the final candidate for the Royal Selection, and the person who is considered the biggest hurdle to this project, is challenged.

Emilia is rumored to be the second coming of the "Witch of Envy," —the worst of the world's disasters that nearly destroyed the world, and she is known as a Witch who is not afraid to act hedonistic and wicked.

Of course, Shorty is more than aware of the unreliability of preconceived notions and previous information. Even so, the rumors about the "Witch of Envy" are irresistible.

Even Lululara, who has no interest in anything but painting, shudders at the mention of the name "Witch of Envy" so the fear that has seeped into the royal people - or rather, into people around the world —is understandably well-founded.

For this reason, she will be at an overwhelming disadvantage in the Royal Selection, so what sort of thoughts and objectives does she have in mind as she aims for the Lugunican throne?

To find out, Shorty and Lululara went to the Mathers domain—

???: "My name is Natsuki Subaru, and I am the thundering gale, the unyielding guide!"

With a shout, he thrusts the fingers of his right hand into the sky and stands with his left hand on his hip.

Shorty's eyes went blank as he was greeted by someone with short black hair and vicious eyes, not knowing where in the world he could have gotten his welcome customs.

The fact that the mysterious name of the dark-haired boy was the same name as the person Shorty wanted to talk to did not seem to register at this moment.

That is why Shorty's response to the name of the boy in front of him was delayed. —It was a name that as a news reporter living in this era, he should not have missed.

Shorty: "…"

Shorty, stunned, is at the stop of the hired Dragon Carriage.

They were going to visit the "industrial city" of Costuul, one of the five largest cities in the Kingdom of Lugunica, and the residence of Margrave Roswaal L. Mathers was located close to the city. The plan was to go to Costuul, and interview Emilia there.

Shorty's start was unexpectedly thwarted—

Shorty: "Um, Natsuki Subaru-dono you said right?"

Subaru: "Huh? Oh, yeah, no doubt I'm Natsuki Subaru. In case you were wondering, the two of you came to interview me, Emilia-Tan… No, I was knighted, Emilia-sama…"

Shorty: "I knew it! You're the one who helped defeat the White whale and Sloth, aren't you?"

Subaru: "Woah!"

Shorty involuntarily fell forward, and the boy —Subaru was forced to jerk back at the forward momentum. Shorty's excitement did not subside, puffing out his nose as he approached.

Shorty: "I've heard so much about you! I was wondering if I could ask you a few questions?"

Subaru: "No, no, of course, we're going to have you do that, but this time we're going to talk about Emilia-tan's story rather than mine."

Shorty: “I’ve heard that you have crossed camps to ask for cooperation and have successfully defeated a great enemy! Where did you get that much trust… and negotiating ability!”

Shorty, closing the distance with a snort and a curious look on his face, was hit on the back of the head. He looked to see that it was Lululara who had done it, brandishing her notebook.

She lowers the corner of her round eyes and shows Shorty her banged-up notebook.

Shorty: “That hurt, you used the corner!”

Lululara: “Hmm, too much, trouble.”

Shorty’s eyes fluttered at Lululara’s unusual reprimand, and he realized what he had done and hurriedly turned his head forward. Then he saw Subaru smiling at him.

Instantly, the heat rises quickly from his neck, his face becoming hot.

Shorty: “I, I’m terribly sorry…! I’m so sorry! I completely forgot myself!”

Subaru: “Ooh, no problem. To be honest, I was a bit intimidated, but on the other hand, I could feel your enthusiasm.”

Shorty: “You, can you forgive me? Oh, thank you so much! Sir Natsuki…”

Shorty, apologizing flatly, was moved by Subaru’s kind words. Then, as he was about to accept Subaru’s hand, Shorty bent down deeply at the waist and—

???: “—You, get away from Subaru immediately, I suppose!”

Shorty: “Waai…!”

A high-pitched voice from nearby, an invisible shockwave, and Shorty’s body sailed lightly through the air as he was struck by it. Subaru, awestruck by the sight, turned around to see a small figure standing there.

???: “There is no room for letting one’s guard down, In fact. Indeed, Subaru would not have enough lives if it were not for Betty, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Be, Beako, you…”

???: “Hmm, It seems you are so amazed and grateful that you are speechless. In fact. If you can’t talk, at least express your gratitude for Betty through your actions and attitude, I suppose.”

As she says this, the girl in the dress with luxuriously curled hair outstretches her hands to the flustered Subaru. Subaru reaches out his trembling arms to her, —and pinches her red cheeks.

???: “Gyaa! What are you doing, In fact, Subaru! Betty just saved your life and doesn’t deserve to be treated like this, I suppose!”

Subaru: “You idiot! It’s true that my life is as unreliable as fluffy cotton wool, but I’m still brave this time! That’s the two interview staff!”

???: “what’s that? In fact.”

With her cheeks pinched, the girl looks at Shorty, who was blown away past Subaru.

Shorty, who was blown away helplessly, crashed into a hedge and was being pulled by Lululara by his outstretched leg. Subaru rushed up to him in a panic.

Subaru: “You, you all right, Shorty-san? Sorry! My Beako made a terrible mistake!”

Shorty: “I, I’m fine, I’m fine… It’s not uncommon for a Dragon Nation Newsletter reporter to run head first into something…”

Subaru: “It’s going to make a great story! Anyway…here we go”

Subaru pulls Shorty’s body out of the hedge in place of the powerless Lululara. Shorty is covered in leaves, some of them tangled in his long bangs that hide his eyes.

Subaru: “Hey, Beako, apologize for being so rash. I’m sorry.”

???: “B, but this pipsqueak is at fault for being misleading, as well, I suppose…”

Subaru: “Don’t go making up excuses!”

In front of Shorty, Subaru scolded the stubborn little girl. But when Shorty saw the increasingly stubborn girl turn her face away, he intervened, saying, “Well, it’s okay”.

Shorty: “Don’t worry about it! See, I’m fine.”

Subaru: “No, I’m definitely going to make her apologize! Because this is an educational experience! Come on, Beako!”

???: “Nugu gugugu… Betty will never apologize, In fact…!”

Subaru is trying to get the girl to apologize, but the girl, who has her head squeezed, is resisting. It is a funny exchange, like that of a parent and child, but Shorty feels like he is missing someone.

Hesitant to interfere, and at a loss for what to do—

???: “—Natsuki-san, Beatrice-chan, what are you doing in front of our guests?”

The deadlocked atmosphere was brought to an end by a soft voice filled with dismay.

Subaru and the girl, who were engaged in a back-and-forth battle, turned around at the sound of his voice and changed their expressions with an “Oh”. —Standing where they looked was a young man with distinctive gray hair and green attire.

At the appearance of the calm-looking young man, the girl named Beatrice, lowers her eyes.

Beatrice: “Ugh, it is not what it looks like, I suppose. There are unavoidable circumstances for this…”

???: “Are those circumstances a good enough reason for both of you to leave our leafy guests alone?”

Beatrice: “You’re a prickly and unforgiving man, I suppose! Hrumph”

Beatrice turns away with a pouty look on her face after being candidly corrected. Subaru, patting her on the head, also looks disappointed. Shorty is impressed by the way he does it.

As soon as the young man appeared, Subaru and Beatrice both became quiet.

???: “I’m sorry for the trouble that these two have caused. I will make sure to have a word with them.”

Shorty: “uhh, well, thank you, And you are?”

???: “My name is Otto Suwen. Weell, I’m with the two people behind you…”

Shrugging his shoulders, the young man —Otto looks a mixture of pride and disappointment, while Subaru and Beatrice sulk behind him, saying “What is it?”.

However, the intense tremor that hit Shorty did not make him aware of these two’s circumstances.

Shorty: “Oh, Otto Suwen-dono, is it?”

Otto: “—? Yes, that’s me, but…”

Shorty: “Ehh! Sor, I’m so sorry!”

Otto tilts his head, and Shorty hurriedly kneels down on the spot. Shorty then pulled the sleeve of Lululara, who was standing there in a daze, and made her kneel as well.

Shorty: “Lululara, Lululara, get on your knees! If he gets in a bad mood, he’ll gnaw your head off!”

Otto: “I don’t bite, though! What sort of things did you hear about me?”

Shorty: “The militant internal affairs officer who is wanted for threatening a powerful noble in his hometown of Picoutatte, wiped out bandits nesting in Mount Gina, and burned down a Margrave’s mansion to negotiate a pay raise.…”

Otto: “It’s one thing to say those things, but isn’t this too terrible!”

Otto, raising his voice, however, does not deny his reputation for them. In other words, he knew what he was talking about. It was information that Shorty thought was eyebrow-raising until he had seen the real thing.

But there is no doubt that he has managed to contain and completely tame Natsuki Subaru, who accomplished the defeat of the White Whale and Sloth.

Shorty: “Oh, please don’t kill me…”

Subaru: “Oi, Oi, Otto, you, no way…”

Otto: “I’m not going to take it! Or rather, don’t get carried away Natsuki-san, and help me clear up the misunderstanding! This is getting out of hand!”

Subaru and Otto argued with each other, with the small and trembling Shorty in between them. Sighing at the sight of these three, Beatrice suddenly noticed Lululara’s hands as she crouched down.

Lululara, kneeling on the ground, was moving her paintbrush at a furious pace. Realizing that the object of her paintbrush is herself, Beatrice brushes away her own hair.

Beatrice: “At the very least, portray Betty in all of her splendor, In fact.”

Lululara: “Draw, little one…”

Yes, she nodded in satisfaction at Lululara’s answer as she moved her paintbrush.

11

—Although there was a stumbling block at the start.

Subaru: “Once again, welcome, you two. Welcome.”

Leaving the Dragon Carriage stop, Subaru holds out his hand in a renewed attempt at a welcome.

Contrary to the grandiosity of his reputation, Subaru treats him with a much more friendly attitude as he shook his hand.

His relationship with Beatrice, who was always holding his hand, made no sense to Shorty at all.

Subaru: “Well, I was so excited when I heard that someone had asked to do an interview. After all, image strategy… and public relations can make the difference between winning and losing in an election campaign.”

Shorty: “Excited… Image…?”

Otto: “Oh, those are just some words used by Natsuki-san sometimes, you could call them Natsuki speak. He claims it’s his native language, but it’s…”

Subaru: “Well, I mean my thoughts and feelings. You can just tune it out if you want to.”

Subaru, responding with a laugh, seems to have a very positive outlook on this interview, as evidenced by his welcoming attitude. Otto, the internal affairs officer, seems to agree, showing no hostility toward Shorty and Lululara.

Shorty: “But I didn’t expect to be picked up by… some of the most important people”

Subaru: “In fact, Emilia-Tan herself wanted to come, but the rest of the camp stopped her because they thought her sudden appearance would scare you two off.”

Shorty: “It was you, wasn’t it?”

As for Shorty, just the fact that Subaru, a knight of the candidates for the Royal Selection, came to pick him up was enough of a surprise, but he couldn't help but be surprised when he was told that it could have been more than that.

Subaru: "Oh, you're still freaked out, Emilia-tan is not a scary person to deal with at all."

Beatrice: "Even so, it is human nature to bow down to authority and position, I suppose. Both Subaru and Emilia are still lacking in that area of thinking, In fact."

Otto: "I agree with you on that. I hope this time they will learn from this."

Otto rubbed his brow with his fingers and muttered sadly.

In addition to what Otto has to say about this, Subaru and Beatrice's words and actions are also noteworthy. It may be natural for Otto to say, since he is a member of the camp, but—

Shorty: "In the eyes of you three, what kind of a person is Emilia-sama?"

The question was, in some ways, quite insincere. It cut too close to the heart of the matter to be casually thrown out in the middle of being escorted, as a bit of banter before reaching the mansion.

Shorty: "…"

Shorty held his breath, expecting a stern response from the three silent parties, as he had expected.

Subaru: "—Well, she's an angel. Cute and hard-working, an angel to say the least."

Shorty: "Uh?"

However, after a moment of thought, Subaru's answer was this.

Beatrice: "Subaru… The little reporter is dumbfounded. I suppose. He is not saying what you think he is, In fact."

Subaru: “No, I thought that is what he meant. Then what would Beako say?”

Beatrice: “It’s obvious, I suppose. Emilia is a dimwit with bottomless optimism, In fact”

Subaru: “Isn’t Emilia-Tan a little too out of touch in Beako’s mind?”

Beatrice pulls on Subaru’s sleeve, her opinion also not in line with Emilia’s earlier publicity. Shorty was puzzled by this point, and Otto scratched his cheek with his finger with an “ah”.

Otto: “I understand the purpose of your question, Shorty-san. In general, I’m aware of how Emilia-sama is regarded by the public.”

Shorty: “Hee! Please don’t be angry.”

Otto: “I’m not angry, though! Anyway! Many of the previous perceptions are simply untrue. This is an opportunity for you to show that.”

Otto, though not as aggressive as Subaru, shared Subaru’s expectations for this interview, to which Subaru nodded his head and said, “That’ s right”.

Subaru: “We have to improve her image in order for people to understand the real Emilia-Tan. So, please write a good article, Shorty-san.”

Shorty: “I, I will only report what I see with my own eyes and hear with my own ears. Even if I am threatened by the militant Internal Affairs officer, I will never be deterred…”

Otto: “I’m not going to threaten you! Ugh… I wonder what my reputation will be like by the time the Royal Selection is over.”

Beatrice: “Don’t waste your time thinking about such pointless things, I suppose.”

Beatrice explains the impermanence of the world to Otto, who laments it.

As Shorty watched these exchanges, there was something that he sensed strongly from all three. That is, all three have a favorable impression of Emilia and are dissatisfied with her current situation.

It was a rebellion against the environment that surrounded her, a half-elf with silver hair and amethyst eyes.

The anger they feel, if it is justified—

Shorty: "…The real Emilia-sama."

The difference between the previous rumors and reality, Shorty has never been more painfully aware of it in this project.

There was a radical difference in impressions of Crusch, Anastasia, Priscilla, and Felt. So, could the same thing happen with Emilia?

The more he thought about it, and the more anxiety and anticipation he felt, the more he thought—

Shorty: "I can't wait to meet you in person."

Lulularа: "…W, What, you scared me."

Shorty's muttering, his fists clenched, reached only Lulularа, who had known Shorty for a long time. What did she see in Shorty's muttering?

As soon as she started moving her paintbrush, there was no doubt that Lulularа's interest was piqued.

So, following the lead of Subaru and the others, Shorty and Lulularа headed for Margrave's mansion, where Emilia was waiting for them. However, on the way there, they found themselves in the middle of a strange situation.

???: "—Ooh? Ya bastards came'ta the wrong place, didn't cha?"

Suddenly, a wild voice sounded, and a shadowy figure came running out of the grass with great vigor.

It was a fierce-looking figure with golden hair and sharp fangs bared. Shorty's eyes widened at the sudden appearance and gasped, "Eh".

Subaru: "Whoa, a bandit!"

Beatrice: "This is a terrible thing that's happened, In fact… The end of the world, I suppose…"

Subaru: "What? On a road near a big city like this?"

—Shorty is momentarily left speechless by the situation, while Subaru and Beatrice, their faces turning pale, embrace each other and slump into a heap on the spot.

Seeing Subaru and the others, the blonde bandit sniffed in a good mood and said, "Heh."

Bandit: "Well, it looks like ya know what's goin' on. If ya don't want ta get hurt, you're going ta have to be a good boy and give me what I want."

Shorty: "Heeii, please spare my life, please spare my life…"

Looking down at the trembling Subaru and the others, the boy licked his lips with cruelty. Quickly protecting Lulularа behind him, Shorty looked back at Otto for help.

It was then.

???: "—That's enough, scoundrel."

The air around them was completely taken away by the unexpected sound of a voice like a silver bell.

Shorty's eyes widened to see what was going on, and the bandit turned to them with a grim "Ooh?" Then there was a rustling sound, and a new figure appeared.

A beautiful girl with shimmering silver hair, jewel-like amethyst eyes, and an appearance that is unforgettable —Shorty forgot to breathe at the sight of her.

The girl, under the gaze of everyone, pointed a finger at the bandit with authority.

Girl: “I’m not going to overlook any more of your misdeeds. Get away from Subaru and the others.”

Bandit: “Ha! Don’t cha tell me what to do, Who the hell are ya? … No way!”

Girl: “Yeah, that’s right, no umm. I am… I am…”

Bandit: “—?”

The girl’s bravado quickly faded in front of the bandit, who was bracing himself. She stiffens in her finger-pointing posture, furrowing her shapely brow.

And then, surreptitiously approached Subaru.

Girl: “…Subaru, Subaru, what was the next word?”

Subaru: “…That’s “Emilia, the next candidate for the throne of the Kingdom of Lugunica.” Emilia-Tan.”

Emilia: “…Oh, right. Yeah, Okay. Umm.”

After exchanging a few words with Subaru, still slumped in a heap, the girl returned to her original position as if she had regained her composure, coughed lightly, and then continued.

Emilia: “I am Emilia, the next candidate for the throne of Lugunica. In the name of the moon, I’ll punish you!”

Bandit: “AH, Aaaah! Oh shit! It’s Emilia-sama, a candidate for ta Royal Selection. This ain’t gonna happen!”

Upon hearing the girl’s words, the fearful bandit prostrated himself on the spot. Seeing this, the girl nodded deeply and looked at the stunned Shorty and the others.

Emilia: “Well, I guess that’s that. Are any of you hurt?”

The smiling girl —no, if what she had just said was true, there was no doubt as to her true identity. Above all, her identity was clear from her distinctive appearance.

Shorty: “E, Emilia-sama, is it?”

Emilia: “—! Yes, that’s right. I just so happened to be Reaaally close by…”

The girl —Emilia answered with her chest puffed out. However, right after she answered, Emilia, crouched down, holding her stomach with an “ugh”.

Immediately rushing to Emilia, Subaru shouted, “Emilia-tan!”.

Subaru: “What’s wrong all of a sudden, are you okay?”

Emilia: “Uh, no, I’m fine. It’s just that when I lied to them my stomach suddenly started hurting…”

Beatrice: “This is… surely because he made you do something you aren’t suited for, In fact. Subaru, enough…”

Subaru: “Don’t give up, stupid! We’ve made it this far. We have to finish it…”

Subaru and Beatrice were in a state of panic around Emilia. Shorty seriously wondered how he should react since everything was being overheard.

But, the best solution to Shorty’s problem was—

Otto: “No, there is nothing good about this mess, this is a farce!”

It was Otto Suwen, who couldn’t resist shouting.

He quickly approached Subaru, much to the amazement of everyone there.

Otto: “Natsuki-san! I thought you rejected this plan! Why are you insisting on continuing it!”

Subaru: “It was too good to throw away! We’ll be saved by a dashing Emilia-Tan after we get tangled up with some thugs! It’s a reenactment of how Emilia and I met!”

Emilia: “Hey, Subaru. I don’t remember saving you like this…”

Otto: “It’s Emilia-sama who is in this condition! Can you please stop talking about your dreams?”

Subaru: “It’s true that meeting Emilia-Tan was a dream come true, but that wasn’t a dream.”

Otto grabs Subaru by the collar and shakes him, whereupon Emilia interjects from beside them.

While shorty was still left behind, one thing became clear. Emilia’s character was the one that Subaru and the others had told him about just prior to the meeting.

Emilia: “Both of you, stop fighting! Otto-kun, Subaru has thought hard about this, so don’t be too angry with him!”

While Otto is shaking his Subaru back and forth, Emilia is yelling at him, and from her earnest appearance, she does not give the slightest impression of the cold and cruel incarnation of a Witch.

She gave the impression of an ordinary girl at the mercy of the events in front of her.

Bandit: “Yo, Beatrice… any chance this bein’ a mistake?”

Beatrice: “It goes without saying, I suppose. Originally, it was a foolhardy plan to get Emilia to lie, In fact. As expected, the plan is a mess, I suppose.”

Bandit: “Damn, ya mean “Overly elaborate Gazzorena”?”

The bandit —or rather, the boy playing the role of a bandit raises his lowered head, scratches his blond hair, grumbling, and then, next to him, Beatrice sighs crossing her short arms.

Shorty: “Um, you’re all from the same camp… right?”

Garfiel: “There ain’t no point in hidin’ it now, is there? That’s right. My amazin’ self is Garfiel Tinsel, “The Strongest of Shields”. Remember, I ain’t no bandit.”

The boy —Garfiel, clicks his sharp fangs and proudly announces his name.

His performance as a thug was quite impressive, but because he exuded an extraordinary spirit, Shorty was relieved to know that his impression was not mistaken.

Anyway, these were all part of Emilia and company’s plan to create a grand impression—

Lulularа: “…farce.”

Shorty: “Shh! Shh, Lulularа! I was about to say it too, and then I stopped!”

Shorty turned to look at Lulularа, alarmed by her frankness. Shorty then looked back at Emilia and the others, who had just settled their argument.

Subaru, his clothes in disarray, was thrown to the ground, where Emilia offered to help him to her lap. With that in the background, Otto gave a sideling glance to them, then bowed his head to Shorty while repositioning his hat.

Otto: “Well, sorry you had to see something so unsightly. As for this…”

Shorty: “No! I mean, I didn’t see anything! …Well, I can’t say that, I think I have to respond in some way…”

Otto: “That’s true. Well, the only thing I can say is that I’m sorry for the confusion it has caused you.”

For the umpteenth time today, Otto laments greatly as he rubs his fingers across his brow.

Even though they have only been acquainted with each other for a short time, Shorty could guess what his position in this camp is like.

The various saga-like rumors surrounding him may have been spread while he was speaking up for those around him.

Otto: “Even so, it’s true that most of the wanted people and the bandits have been crushed…”

Garfiel: “Otto-bro, the Capt’n, and Emilia-sama are sorry for what happen’d. ain’t it bout time ya stopped complainin’?”

Otto: “It’s self-serving… to begin with, Garfiel, you and everyone who went along with this is going to get a lecture from me later.”

Garfiel: “Gah! Talk bout pokin’ the snake.”

Garfield gritted his teeth and regretted his gaffe. Suggesting that Otto’s position in the camp is that of a chaperone and advisor.

And while Shorty is still solidifying these impressions, the one impression that has yet to be solidified is that of—

Emilia: “Um, I’m sorry for all the confusion. No one meant any harm…”

Shorty: “Eh, um, yes. I understand that, I think.”

Emilia: “Really? I’m so glad. I’m reaaally relieved.”

It was Emilia who smiled and patted her chest as if relieved.

It was only a few minutes ago that he decided that he would like to meet and talk with her in person. Shorty’s mind was stirred up by the sight of the real thing.

The Witch resurrected in the modern age who froze the forests of her homeland and brought snow to the Mathers’ territory on a whim —What about the woman with such a reputation?

Beatrice: “It’s just as what was said before, In fact …You’re a bottomless dunce, I suppose.”

Beatrice, who had come up next to Shorty, said so with a pout on her lips.

In his current opinion, There were more missing factors than in the previous personal evaluation, but Shorty couldn’t dispute them either.

Emilia: “—?”

Emilia tilts her head curiously, even though she is being talked about herself.

This was especially true when Shorty was surrounded by the carefree atmosphere she exuded.

12

???: “Dear guest, please don’t be mistaken. As for that little farce, Ram and the others told them not to do it. So it would have been entirely up to Emilia-sama and Barusu.”

The woman who brought the tea was a maid, who reminded him in a terribly cold tone.

Shorty and Lulularа were once again led to the mansion where Emilia was staying after the farce on the road was over, and as they were ushered into the parlor, a pink-haired maid brought them tea.

The maid’s first words were to Shorty and Lulularа, without so much as a greeting.

Shorty was so intimidated that he could not respond to her, and the fact that Lulularа’s paintbrush never stopped painting the maid was proof that she was more than just an ordinary servant in the mansion.

Shorty: “That was a very shrewd maid. …I thought the maid there was a lot more like a Witch than Emilia-sama was because of that tone of voice.”

Lulularа: “…Drew it.”

Shorty: “Ah, you drew it? That’s great, you’re so fast… very intimidating.”

The picture of the maid who left the room clearly captured not only the neatness of her appearance, but also her oppressiveness, which is impossible to describe in writing. Although it is unlikely to be used as a news illustration this time around, it is a work of pure quality that should be preserved.

Shorty and Lulularа were enjoying the hospitality.

Emilia: “I’m sorry to keep you waiting. Subaru, had to go change clothes.”

Emilia appears in the parlor. She is accompanied by Subaru, who has changed clothes behind her, and Beatrice, who is holding his hand.

It is an ideal combination of a candidate for the Royal Selection and her knight side by side.

Shorty: “But, Beatrice-sama is…”

Beatrice: “Yes, Betty and Subaru are one and the same, In fact. Our relationship is a special one that no one can sever, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Actually, yes. No joke, if I’m too far away from Beako, I’ll pop and die. Oh, and please keep this off the record. It might be my…”

Shorty: “Oh, you mean… don’t talk about it. I understand.”

Beatrice is immediately positioned on Subaru’s lap on the sofa. Emilia, seated next to Subaru, does not say anything about the two of them, so it seems that everything is normal.

Shorty, for his part, said nothing as if it were business as usual; Subaru’s tone was light, but it was obvious from listening that it was not a lie or a joke of any kind.

Shorty accepts it, the stage is set, and he bows his head to Emilia and the others once again.

Shorty: “Once again, thank you for taking the time to interview with us. We have already spoken to the other Royal Selection candidates and have asked them about their positions…”

Emilia: “Yes, I’ve heard. So I guess that means we’re the last ones, right?”

Shorty: “Yes. I don’t want to be misunderstood, I didn’t have any ulterior motives for the order of the interviews—”

Shorty’s words were interrupted as he tried to explain what had happened so far.

That was because he was taken aback by the scene in front of him.

Emilia: “—First of all, thank you for coming to hear what I have to say. I’m also happy to talk to someone who is willing to listen to me properly, so thank you.”

Shorty: “…”

That said, Emilia, sitting opposite him, bowed deeply.

Next to her, Subaru, rather than admonishing Emilia, bowed his head in the same manner.

The other Royal Selection candidates were relatively forthcoming and gracious in accepting Shorty’s interview. However, this was the first time someone had bowed to them with gratitude.

This is not so much a testament to Emilia’s modesty and courteousness as it’s indicative of their poor circumstances and deep preconceived notions of their situation.

In this way, being able to get honest interviews is something exceptional for Emilia.

Shorty: “Emilia-sama…”

Emilia: “Yes, what is it?”

Shorty: “Emilia-sama, Why did you decide to join the Royal Selection?”

Shorty found himself asking the question as if it had just slipped out of his mouth.

It may have been too straightforward and rude of a question to ask Emilia, who had accepted the interview just prior to it, with great politeness and courtesy.

Shorty’s intent in asking her that question is obvious without even thinking about it. —Emilia’s situation, as a half-elf, is just awful.

Even though she is a candidate for the Royal Selection, it is abundantly clear to anyone who sees her that she is doomed to defeat. In fact, even for an interview with such a young, unproven young man, they had to bow down to him in a polite manner.

The odds were slim to none. So why did she take on the challenge? Shorty’s question surely must reveal her intentions.

However—

Emilia: “—I didn’t give it much thought in the beginning.”

Emilia, replied, not angrily, and even had a smile on her face.

In front of the breathless Shorty, Emilia gently puts her hand on her chest and narrows her amethyst eyes as if thinking back on the “beginning” she had just uttered.

Emilia: “I was living in the forest and Roswaal came for me. That was the first time I heard about the Royal Selection and that the king was gone… At first, I didn’t know if I could handle such a big responsibility. I just accepted it for a selfish reason.”

Shorty: “For selfish reasons?”

Emilia: “It was kind of about family. It wasn’t at all about the kingdom or for the people around me.”

Sticking out her tongue a little in a bashful way. Emilia’s overly honest answer clearly would have a negative impact on her chances in the Royal Selection if anyone heard it.

There are already too many things to scrutinize with her.

But that would be a short-sighted way of looking at things. Her current tone of voice goes beyond that.

Shorty: “In other words, you think differently now?”

Emilia: “Yes… Subaru and Beatrice, beside me, as well as Ram and Otto-kun, Garfiel and Frederica, Petra-chan, Ryuzu-san, and Roswaal. These are the people who expect me to be strong and push me forward even if I’m unreliable.”

As she answered, Emilia, moved her fingers on her chest. Only then did Shorty realize that what Emilia was touching was the crystalline stone that hung from her neck.

The crystalline stone is cracked and has lost its light, touching it lovingly, she said.

Emilia: “Everyone has been good to me, I’ve learned a lot in my own way, and I realize it’s a tough position to be in, as you Shorty-kun and the others are concerned about. But.”

Shorty: “…”

Emilia: “But I don’t want to give up. I want to do my best so that people can see exactly how I was born, how I was raised, and how I think.”

Shorty: “…”

Emilia: “I don’t want someone else to be told what they can or can’t do or what they can’t be because of me or anybody else besides them. That’s what I think now.”

Emilia said this as her amethyst eyes looked straight at Shorty.

This determination, spoken in faltering words by Emilia, struck a chord in Shorty’s mind. At the same time, Shorty was ashamed of his own prejudice.

Despite his desire to be as impartial and open-minded as possible, Shorty was still stuck in his rigid thinking.

As a half-elf with silver hair and amethyst eyes, Emilia must have struggled with more prejudice, preconceptions, and unbelievable obstacles than Shorty could ever imagine. Emilia, however, does not bemoan her situation unnecessarily, instead, she explains it plainly.

This simple explanation was her reason to move forward. —She is fighting on the side of those who are subjected to unjustified discrimination and suffering the same fate as herself.

There are plenty of other ways for people to cast people into categories and look down on them.

One does not simply have to possess the same characteristics as the "Witch of Envy" who once nearly destroyed the world. Those born in a bad area, with criminal parents, and those simply born poor can easily be branded as "weak".

And people can be surprisingly cruel to the "weak".

Shorty, who grew up in the slums, knew all about that too well.

Shorty: "So, Emilia-sama, are you saying, that you would save us."

It was an improper question from Shorty on behalf of the "weak".

Shorty, until a moment ago, was unrelated to Emilia's efforts in the Royal Selection, is shamelessly trying to be the first to run up the flag of salvation that she holds aloft.

What if Emilia had held out her chest and affirmed it?

In any case, it is impossible to know the answer in this case. Because—

Emilia: "But since I can't promise, that I could save anyone, I can't promise something so big as that."

Shorty: "…"

Emilia: "If two people want something, it would be nice if it's something they can share, but if it's not, then only one of them can have it, right? I can't help them both."

Shorty: "Then how are we supposed to be saved?"

Emilia: "Uh… I absolutely can't help you. But, I think it's strange that you say you want help since you can't get involved with the competition. So I won't let that happen."

Shorty: "…"

Emilia: "Yes, you're right. Let's leave the possibilities open. To everyone, fair and square."

Emilia nodded as if to confirm Shorty's clinging words.

Once the words were sorted out in her mind and spoken aloud, she did not try to take them back, but rather gave a straight answer to Shorty's question.

Shorty, in response, quietly rewrote his impression of Emilia further. And next to Emilia, who nodded her head—

Subaru: "E, Emilia Tan, You're doing great…"

Beatrice: "Naah! Subaru! Don't wipe your tears with the collar of Betty's dress, In fact!"

Subaru: "It's not tears I wiped, you idiot, It's snot… Dah!"

Beatrice: "That's even worse, I suppose!"

Beatrice head-butted Subaru, who wiped his eyes and nose with her dress.

Emilia's knight and his escort ruined the mood, but just as well. Since Shorty heard Emilia's, he wanted to hear something from her knight.

Shorty: "Natsuki Subaru-dono, why did you become Emilia-sama's knight? Is it because you share Emilia-sama's current beliefs?"

Subaru: “Me? …When I look back on how it all started, it was an ulterior motive.”

Shorty: “U, ulterior motive…?”

Subaru replied with a raised finger and without a hint of regret. Shorty rounded his eyes at the unexpected answer, and Beatrice shook her head.

But Beatrice did not even correct or silence Subaru’s words.

Subaru: “I caught a glimpse of Emilia-tan on the street, and I fell head over heels for her. And I was running around with all my heart to help her.”

Shorty: “So, you are in the position you are in now? B, but, Subaru-dono, you defeated the White Whale and Sloth, didn’t you?”

Subaru: “That was part of it too, trying to act cool for the girl I like.”

Subaru scratches his cheek with his finger and smiles shyly. There was no sense of deception, and there was no hint of a joke. In other words, the reason Subaru has become a knight and has achieved historical accomplishments over and over again is that he has fallen for Emilia—

Shorty: “Weren’t you at all surprised by Emilia’s appearance?”

Subaru: “No, I was surprised by how cute she was. I’m still surprised when I see her in the morning or when I see her without being mentally prepared for it.”

Emilia: “Jeez, you’re joking around like that again.”

Emilia reached out with her hand and lightly tugged on Subaru’s ear. Emilia’s cheeks flushed slightly at Subaru’s pained “ouch, ouch”.

Emilia: “Now that’s a joke, please don’t write about it in the article. Subaru, you get carried away so easily.”

Subaru: “I feel like it should be written in the sense that it’s meant to be a check on a love rival… no, this time, however, the goal is to improve Emilia-tan's image, so isn't it good that she's flirting with me?"

Emilia: "I'm not flirting. Also, I don't think I ever saved you Subaru…"

Subaru: "If I go into detail about that, my heart would creak…"

Emilia pouted her lips as Subaru defended himself with his ear pinched. Beatrice, who was sitting on Subaru's lap, watched the exchange between the two of them with a look of exasperation on her face.

In contrast to the poisonous atmosphere, Shorty was overcome with a sense of shock. At the same time, Shorty clenched his fists tighter in frustration.

On one hand, he was glad to hear Emilia's story here and now, but he also thought.

—Why was he the one here?

Shorty: "…"

Emilia earnestly spoke about her intentions, and her words certainly struck Shorty's heart. Without exaggeration, he could nod his head and say that it is a wonderful determination, thought, and resolve.

However, this impression was only felt by Shorty who directly spoke with Emilia and experienced her voice and eyes with his own body.

It is an extraordinary task to bring the same thing to the readers of the Dragon Nation Newsletter.

And it is not Emilia's fault, but Shorty's insufficient ability to do so.

If Shorty's writing were so well written that he could convey what he saw with his own eyes to all who read his articles, he would not have to suffer this agony.

Unfortunately, Shorty's current writing is not that good. Other than Shorty, it might have been possible for Editor-in-Chief Morgan, when he was still on the job, for that matter.

Because of his own shortcomings, he is unable to convey the information properly. This is the most dreadful situation for a reporter. It is the very situation that will determine a journalist's future.

If so, what could Shorty Megan do?

Aware of his own inadequacies, the "Dragon Nation Newsletter" reporter still had the truth that he needed to convey before his eyes, and what was he going to do—

Shorty: "—ah"

Shorty, who was at a crossroads in his life, looked at Lululara beside him, who was putting her heart and soul into her paintbrush, as if seeking salvation.

As usual, Lululara continues to paint the news paintings without regard for his reporting. That was the way she approached her work, and Shorty did not expect any support or comfort from her.

But Lululara is serious, continuing to confront the scene in front of her and keep her paintbrush moving.

Shorty gulps as he looks across at that vividly illustrated news painting.

Then, on impulse, he snatched the drawing book from Lululara's lap.

Lululara: "…hk!"

Shorty: "Sorry, Lululara! Let me see!"

Lululara was suddenly shocked as if half of her body had been torn off, clutching her forehead angrily, Shorty looked over the dozen or so drawings that had been made since this interview began —or rather, since he had met Subaru and the others at the station.

Shorty looked at each of the drawings and muttered, “Ahh, I knew it”.

Suddenly, Lulularа was shocked as if she had been stripped of her other half. While holding her bitingly angry forehead, Shorty looked over the dozen or so pictures that had been drawn since the beginning of this interview… or rather, since he had encountered Subaru and the others at the station. When Shorty looked at each of the pictures on there, he muttered, “Yeah, I knew it.”

Shorty: “This expression on Emilia-sama’s face.”

Picking up one of the press paintings, Shorty nodded his head as he lowered the corners of his eyes.

Then, with a sudden movement of his body, he turns to Lulularа, who is still trying to retrieve her equipment, and embraces her petite body in front of him.

Picking up one of the press pictures, Shorty nodded, lowering the corners of his eyes. He then stretched out his arms and turned to Lulularа, who was retrieving her work tools, and hugged her petite body from the front.

Lulularа: “…why”

Shorty: “Lulularа, thank you, thank you! Thanks to you! Thanks to you, I’ve seen the light! I’m no good. After all, without you, I would be completely and utterly useless!”

Shorty thanked Lulularа, her eyes wide and frozen, in front of him.

Thanks to her, a breakthrough was made. Although he still cursed his own lack of ability in many ways, he thanked the heavens that he had a partner in Lulularа.

Shorty Megan finally figured out what he should do as a reporter.

Shorty: “Emilia-sama, Subaru-dono! Please, tell me a lot about you two …No, not only about you two, but about everyone!”

Emilia: “You mean us? Not about Royal Selection?”

Subaru as well as Beatrice, who was sitting on his lap, tilted their heads in the same manner, and Shorty could not help but smile at their smiling faces. Shorty nodded vigorously.

Shorty understood Emilia's ideals and beliefs that she stood for.

So now Shorty just needed to make sure that people other than himself understood that—

Shorty: "—First of all, please let me fall in love with all of you!"

13

???: "—Shorty! Shorty! Is Shorty Megan here?"

A thunderous voice and the sound of heavy footsteps, and the door to the office was violently thrown open.

Instantly, the documents in the room were whipped up by the wind, and Shorty, who had been drowning in them, sprang to his feet. He jumped up, looked around, and looked up to see a tall, eagle-nosed figure standing at the doorway.

Shorty: "Wow, Editor-in-Chief Morgan! Yes! Yes, yes, yes! Shorty Megan, I'm right here, I'm here, I'm awake!"

Morgan: "Yes, that's right, Morgan Frantz, Editor-in-Chief of the Dragon Nation Newsletter! And you idiot! Of course, you're awake! The starting bell has rung! We're at work!"

Shorty: "Uhh, my apologies!"

Because of the height difference, Shorty, shouted out above him, holding his hat to his head. In his mind, he hurriedly chases away the drowsiness and tries to organize the work he has to do today—

Shorty: "Huh? My apologies! I was just trying to figure out what I'm covering today!"

Morgan: "What's the matter, Shorty? Don't you know what you're doing?"

Shorty: “I’m sorry! Uh, what was I supposed to be covering today?”

Morgan: “You idiot! Your job today is to rest! After any big job, you need to rest. Because.”

Morgan thrusts something into Shorty’s face as his eyes go blank. Shorty’s nose was suddenly pushed and he fell back, and something popped into his vision.

Shorty: “This, this, this, this is…”

Morgan: “Of course, it’s a copy of the Dragon Nation Newsletter! And more importantly, it’s an article! What’s in it?”

Shorty: “My article on the Royal Selection!”

Quickly snatching the “Dragon Nation Newsletter” from Morgan’s hand. —Shorty’s eyes light up, he gasps, and falls to his knees.

Morgan: “You have been busy, Shorty Megan!”

Shorty: “Because, because, because… Finally, finally, finally, my article is…”

Morgan: “Well, don’t let that get you down! Shorty Megan! The motto of the Dragon Nation Newsletter is!”

Shorty: “—! It will not be published unless it is an article that makes your heart tremble!”

Shorty responded to the red eagle-nosed Morgan’s words with a conditioned reflex. He even stood up straight, straightening his back.

In response to Shorty’s reaction, Morgan stroked his eagle nose and nodded generously.

Morgan: “—It was a good article.”

Shorty: “Oh…”

Morgan: “While touching on the assertions of each of the Royal Selection candidates, it focuses on the personalities of these women, something that has not been explored in depth before, is a novelty. It may not be enough for those who want to carefully follow the developments in the Royal Selection but…”

Cutting off there, Morgan clapped the frozen Shorty forcefully on the shoulder.

Morgan: “Even those readers will be stunned by the last sentence! Stay tuned for more information on the Royal Selection candidates in the next issue! …So you are going to continue?”

Shorty: “Y, yes, that’s the plan! No, I mean, with the chief’s permission… Hkya!”

Morgan: “You idiot! Don’t be so wishy-washy! Who can possibly stand in the way of this!”

Shorty’s small frame was knocked back easily by Morgan’s shoulder and plunged into a pile of documents. But, Morgan was so emotionally energized, that he didn’t bat an eye.

Morgan: “Good one, Shorty, you’ve earned your share at the table! In fact, I have received polite thank-you letters from the Royal Selection candidates. I’ll leave it to you to continue to interview these ladies!”

Shorty: “Oh, thank you… But, Editor-in-Chief, this interview is…”

Morgan: “Mm… Yes, I know what you mean. I’ll leave it to you and Lululara!”

After correcting his previous statement, Morgan taped the article to the wall of the room as if to slam it into place. Then he takes another look at the article, then turns his gaze to the corner of the room.

Morgan: “Nice news paintings. I knew I was right to pick you guys up!”

With that, Editor-in-Chief Morgan leaves the room with his big feet making loud footsteps.

He has an impressive personality, like a storm, and is truly a man of dignity befitting the leader of a group of news reporters.

Shorty: “Oh man, you’re no match for me… Oh, Lululara, thank you.”

Lululara: “…good, one”

Lululara struggles to pull Shorty out of the pile of papers, but manages to pull him out. Then they crawled out of the pile and looked up at the article on the wall.

—Shorty’s coverage of what he observed and heard during his visit to the five Royal Selection candidates. It features a selection of Lululara’s press drawings.

A softly smiling Crusch, Anastasia and Priscilla side by side, and Felt with the “Sword Saint” is an ambitious work of art. But, Shorty’s favorite is—

Lululara: “…had a good response.”

Shorty: “hm, I see. Yeah, I guess so. I’m glad it did.”

Shorty smiles proudly at Lululara’s words as they line up next to each other.

The picture that received the greatest response was a group painting of Emilia, Subaru, and the people from her camp who had gathered together.

Shorty could not tell the value of the painting —but he could tell that it was a priceless masterpiece.

That’s how good a piece this was.

Lululara: “…And this?”

Shorty: “That’s because I wasn’t good enough.”

Lululara: “—?”

Shorty: “My writing skills were not enough to convey Emilia-sama’s determination, resolve, and everything she wanted to say. There were too many obstacles in the reader’s mind to accept it.”

Preconceptions, prejudices, and many other things that have been interfering so far in Emilia’s life are going to negatively affect not only the woman herself, but even the writings that talk about her.

Sadly, Shorty’s writing did not have the necessary power to dispel that.

So Shorty thought. —How can we get rid of those obstacles?

Shorty: “That whole farce was really bad. But I was able to get that thing off my back.”

Lululara: “…The farce”

Shorty: “I took that one seriously, I thought that was the starting point… that Emilia-sama was someone completely different from the “Witch of Envy”.”

Lululara: “…”

Shorty’s prejudice against Emilia as being similar to the “Witch of Envy” was first shattered by the poor farce shown on the road.

The camp discussed and designed that poorly conceived farce to dispel the preconceived notions that went around about Emilia — but that was the point.

Emilia takes these things very seriously. It is the straightforward and honest Emilia who needs to be known by the many people of the Kingdom who remain unaffiliated with the Royal Selection.

Emilia, seeking fairness, doesn’t fully embrace and affirm her claims.

Preconceptions and prejudices, such things are sometimes useful. There should be as much value in not letting them cloud your judgment as there is in letting them mislead you.

Therefore, Shorty was not taking Emilia's side entirely. However, Shorty's journalistic answer is to appeal to her impartiality, saying that her arguments are worth listening to as well.

To do this, the first step is to make sure that Emilia is someone other than "Witch of Envy".

Shorty: "So this article was oriented toward touching on the goals of the candidates and their personalities. Of course, I'll dig deeper in future follow-up coverage."

Lululara: "…Gonna do it?"

Shorty: "Yeah that's right, aren't you glad, Lululara? You have all these people who are good art subjects."

Shorty shrugged his shoulders, and Lululara fell silent with a blank expression. Shorty smiled, seeing a hint of passion in her emotionless face.

They've known each other for a long time. —For more than ten years together, since the slums.

Without Lululara, Shorty would not have become a reporter for Dragon Nation Newsletter, he would have lived a much poorer life, or he would have died long ago.

It was an unremarkable white stone wall, and Lululara had painted a large painting on the wall —The power of the painting enchanted him, and he was driven by a sense of duty to not let her end up here.

Perhaps it was a similar passion to that of Subaru, who struggled for the sake of love.

Thus, when it comes to reporters, there are too many things in the world that lit a fire inside Shorty and would be a waste if he just ran around. That's why—

Shorty: "Still we have a long way to go, so let's keep working together in the future, Lululara."

Lululara: "…Can't be helped."

Shorty: "Yes, it can't be helped. Without you, I would still be a novice reporter."

Shorty smiled at Lululara, who slumped her shoulders as Shorty repositioned his hat.

Yes, this is just the beginning.

Fortunately, it was easy for them to apply for follow-up interviews with the Royal Selection candidates because of the good reception to their article this time around. In particular, they received a positive response from the Emilia camp.

One of the most important reasons was that Emilia's Knight, Subaru had recognized the value of the "Dragon Nation Newsletter".

As for him, he was very involved in the article on Emilia this time around. This is true of his many historic achievements, but most of all—

Shorty: "I didn't think there would be this much of a response to the "Lolimancer"."

Lululara: "…Think, mystery."

Shorty: "Y, you don't think they're mad at me, do you?"

All of the knights who were with the candidates for the Royal Selection all carry titles along with their spectacular achievements. Therefore, after much thought and consideration, he decided that Subaru should also be provided with something appropriate.

This was due in large part to Subaru's relationship with Beatrice — he assured him that he could not fulfill his duties as a knight without her partnership.

So Shorty dubbed him "Lolimancer" and the response was tremendous.

Perhaps in the future, the names Natsuki Subaru and "Lolimancer" will be inseparable.

Shorty: “W, what should I do, if they refuse to do an interview because of this…”

Lulularа: “…Too late now.”

Shorty: “Yeah, I know it is! It’s a job I don’t want to give this up to anyone else now…”

The more calmly he thought about it, the more he felt he had done something wrong, and he felt his blood run cold. Seeing Shorty’s pale face as he began to worry, Lulularа picked up her paintbrush.

Then, again in her usual fashion, Lulularа begins to illustrate Shorty’s turmoil.

Shorty: “Also, Lulularа… why do you draw so many pictures of me in the first place, especially when you only draw what you are interested in?”

Lulularа: “…well, you know.”

Shorty: “I don’t know! It’s just a weird feeling to have a bunch of paintings of yourself made by you!”

Shorty’s voice trails off at the eccentric attitude of his partner, tilting her head.

In the meantime, her paintbrush has not stopped. To begin with, his initial problem still hasn’t been solved.

Shorty: “So, what should I do… should I bring them an apology gift after all? But if he’s not mad at me, then I’m just causing trouble… Wow, I’m afraid of what’s to come!”

Lulularа: “…go for it.”

Shorty: “You know, Lulularа, you’re no stranger to this!”

Lulularа waves her small hand, and Shorty sees it and screams.

Behind them, in a pile of documents, Shorty's written coverage remains unorganized, and it slowly begins to tilt.

Shorty and Lulularara's names will remain as the first to interview the Royal Selection candidates at the heart of the contentious Royal Selection, which will involve not only the Kingdom of Lugunica but also neighboring countries for a long, long time to come—

Shorty: "Waah…?"

Lulularara: "…Kyuu."

For the two of them, pressed together by the crumbling pile of documents, and happily lost in the confines of the office, that is another story. —A story for another time and place.

As a side note, the issue of the Dragon Nation Newsletter, in which this article appeared, became the best-selling issue of all time, and much of the public waited with baited breath for further news of the Royal Selection candidates.

END

Lugunican Papers Extra

1

Shorty Meigan, a reporter for the Dragon Times, was taking on the biggest challenge of his short life with extremely high expectations.

The challenge was to interview the candidates for the royal selection that would elect the next heir to the throne, a historic moment that would change the face of the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica.

The royal selection encompassed a three-year-long electoral battle among the five candidates—a topic of mystery that captivated the attention of the kingdom.

Their personalities, backgrounds, and beliefs were all under the scrutiny of the public eye. Rallying up the public's enthusiasm was the inevitable task that fell to Shorty. His goal was to find out how each candidate really felt and make them known throughout the kingdom.

Undertaking this great feat together with Lululala, a news artist, sent Shorty on a journey full of peaks and valleys as he interviewed the five candidates of the royal selection. And after a long and winding road of turmoil and emotion, he had ultimately reached his final destination.

The last candidate he needed to interview was someone who caused much fear and trepidation among many journalists, except for Shorty.

"Lady Emilia is a very kind-hearted person."

After making his way to the Mathers estate with pathetic resolve, Shorty clasped the delicate hands of the young girl working in the mansion and pleaded with her to understand the situation.

She was a pretty girl with bright orange hair adorned with a large ribbon. She wore a stunning maid uniform and her large eyes sparkled in earnest.

The grand estate was the residence of the margrave, Roswaal L. Mathers, and was used as the base of the candidate, Emilia. Acting as the benefactor for Emilia's bid for the throne, Margrave Mathers was known as one of the most eccentric figures in the kingdom. He was a man decorated with the nickname "Demi-Human Lover," and rumor had it that despite his odd personality he possessed extraordinary magical abilities.

Perhaps that would explain the reason behind his decision to support Emilia despite her troubling physical likeness to a certain silver-haired half elf.

Anyway…

"Excuse me, miss, but you wouldn't happen to be a demi-human, would you?"

"No, I'm not… Oh, do you mean the rumors about Master Roswaal? That's got nothing to do with me," replied the maid. "If anything, Master Roswaal has nothing to do with me."

"Don't you think that's a rather nonsensical response?"

The young girl was sharp, grasping the intent of his questions with quick replies. However, some of her more irrational answers were fueled with emotions.

It seems that this maid called Petra—hates her master, Roswaal.

"But you don't think of Lady Emilia like that do you?"

"Of course not. Sister Emilia is…" began Petra. "I love her so much. But Subaru makes it a little complicated though…"

"Sorry? Do you mean Mister Natsuki Subaru?" asked Shorty.

At the mention of his name, Petra leaned forward. Now he had her attention. "Yes! Lady Emilia's knight is so cool and handsome!"

Her burst of enthusiasm struck a chord with Shorty.

Watching the scene play out before her, Lulululala ran her brush across her notebook. It seemed that something Petra said struck something within the artist and had unknowingly become her muse.

In Shorty's eyes, she was a sweet girl with a promising future ahead of her.

"How did you become a maid, Petra?" he asked.

"Me…? Ok, but don't tell anyone about this, got it?"

"Oh, is it a secret? I was hoping to include your story in the article for this interview, but…" Shorty nodded. "Ok, I won't tell a soul."

Shorty knew that these were the type of stories that were key to painting more color into his news article.

"Mister Subaru and Lady Emilia saved my village…" Petra's voice slightly trailed off. "From the Witch Cult."

"What?! You mean the incident where they defeated a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult?"

Petra shared with the young journalist the story of Emilia's knight, Natsuki Subaru, who had been involved in the eradication of the Sin Archbishop of Sloth. And before that attack, she talked about the part Subaru played in the defeat of the White Whale, one of the Three Great Witchbeasts. The maid recounted how the knight's reputation quickly became known across the kingdom after defeating the two major disasters that had plagued the world for so many years.

"I get it now…" said Shorty. "So it was because of his heroic acts that you came to this mansion…"

"Huh?" Petra shook her head. "That's not it at all. Subaru and Sister Emilia are usually pretty unreliable and careless, so I have to be here to help them."

"Eh?"

Shorty couldn't help but catch glimpses of love far beyond her years reflected in her eyes. He could see that she yearned for something, yet at the same time, her tender affections and hopes were lost in a wave of worry and fear.

“I’m very good at what I do. I figured that it would be better for those two if I worked here. Plus…” she added. “I get to work together with people I look up to and wear a cute maid uniform.”

“Huh, I guess you can make money and have fun too, right?” asked Shorty as he ran his fingers over his bangs.

Petra smiled and nodded confidently, replying with “Yes, that’s right.”

At that moment, Shorty felt a strong sense of connection with Petra. How could he put it into words?

“I think I get where you’re coming from. Hmmm, how should I put it? It might be arrogant of me to say it, but I just want to wish Lady Emilia and Mister Subaru all the best in their endeavors. They give me the impression that they want to help everyone.”

Shorty was honest about what he felt. Petra’s round cheeks flushed red, and she laughed as if she was showing off her treasures.

“That’s right!” she said. “That’s my Subaru and Sister Emilia.”

She said it so charmingly that Lululala immediately started working on her next illustration.

2

“I was talking with Petra and she mentioned that she was happy to work with a certain someone she admires…”

“Is that what Petra said? How embarrassing.”

The tall, beautiful maid with long, golden hair—the third maid in the mansion, Frederica—softly touched her cheeks in reply.

After his first shrewd impression of Ram, followed by the adorably confident Petra, there was still one more person he wanted to talk to in the mansion. Honestly, she was the most maid-like out of all of them.

Living up to Shorty's expectations, Frederica gently held the sides of her skirt and curtsied. "Speaking of which, I heard that my incompetent younger brother caused you some trouble. I heard that Mister Subaru, Lady Emilia, and even Miss Beatrice, were present too, but… I apologize for his behavior."

"Oh! No, not at all! I heard it straight from the horse's mouth." Frantically waving off her abrupt apology, Shorty tilted his head in confusion. "Hang on a sec…"

It seemed that Frederica was apologizing for the farce that took place after he and Lululala arrived in the town nearby when Subaru and Emilia guided them to the mansion.

But who was she referring to? Could she have meant…?

Shorty's lips parted as he realized Frederica's relationship to Garfiel.

"By any chance are you the sister of Sir Garfiel?"

"Yes, I am. He's my brother and we both work here at the mansion."

"Oh, I didn't know that! Actually, Sir Garfiel and Mister Otto were kind enough to allow me to interview them."

Upon closer inspection, Frederica and Garfiel did share similar features such as their hair and eye color. The two sibling's most striking feature were their sharp fangs. Seeing Garfiel's left quite an impression on Shorty that he wouldn't soon forget. But what impressed him the most about him, was the manner in which he was interviewed.

"Sir Garfiel was more than happy to answer my questions, which really helped me out!"

"…I'm sure he got carried away with himself. I hope Otto kept a good rein on him."

Shorty looked around sheepishly and replied, “Errr, you can read the article later for more details…”

“—. I guess I’ve got my answer then.” Frederica sighed gloomily.

She was as pretty as a picture, but in regards to her brother, her concerns weren’t far-fetched. Shorty would need to consider how much of Garfiel’s interview to include in the article.

“It’s hard to tell where reality and fantasy meet,” said Shorty. However, regardless of the length of his footnotes, some parts of Garfiel’s story remained consistent.

“There’s no mistake that Sir Garfiel adores Lady Emilia and Subaru.”

Hearing Shorty’s answer, Frederica glanced down and gently nodded. “I’m sure that’s true…” she murmured. “I also feel that way about them.”

Garfiel talked a lot about his activities, but he would always finish his answers accompanied with gratitude and hope for Emilia and Subaru.

Her brother’s words brought a smile to Frederica, who previously called him an incompetent brother.

“How did you come to be at the mansion, Miss Frederica?”

“I was um… Master Roswaal L. Mathers gave me a home here. I have been in his service for more than ten years now. It’s thanks to him that I have gotten to know Lady Emilia.”

“I see. And what do you think of her?”

“As I told you before, I love her as if she were my own sister. Besides that…”

“Yes?”

Shorty noticed Frederica’s distant look and waited for her to continue. She paused for a beat, then smiled. “Nothing,” she said.

"She's the one that might be able to turn my wish into a reality. And although that's not the reason why I stay here, I am rooting for her wholeheartedly."

"…May I ask you about your wish?" asked Shorty.

Her smile was so striking that Shorty was tempted to ask her what was on her mind.

Of course, her smile was frantically being drawn in a sketchbook by the mute Lululala. Unfortunately, it would not be possible to include all of her drawings in the article since a large part of conveying the thoughts and events to the reader rested on Shorty's penmanship. —For that very reason, I want to know what she's thinking about.

Shorty didn't want to miss anything important to the story.

"My wish is for everyone to have a place where they belong… I intend to serve my master with that very intention in mind." she replied sincerely.

From her fangs to her origins, Frederica's honesty echoed the same sentiments that had come up with his interview with Petra. The name "Demi-Human Lover" came to Shorty's mind.

Roswaal was called the Demi-Human Lover because he liked to have demi-humans as his followers and servants and provided them employment. In Lugunica, there was no difference between humans and demi-humans, but in truth, this was nothing more than an illusion.

Frederica had chosen to fight this reality and decided to serve Roswaal.

This was probably connected to Emilia's interview when she talked of her aspirations to become queen so that she could give everyone a choice.

"I've served Lady Emilia for my own reasons. I suppose this doesn't speak well of her character though, does it?"

"…I think it's difficult to entrust one's dreams and aspirations to a single person."

Shorty smiled bitterly at his own answer and shook his head at Frederica. Shorty had his own dreams as a journalist. Even if he couldn't make them come true on his own, he couldn't imagine giving up and letting go of his dreams.

Even if there was someone who could turn them into reality, he knew it was something he wanted to fulfill himself. It would have to be someone exceptional who he could entrust such an important part of himself to…

"I do understand what you're saying. I can only hope that you can one day trust Lady Emilia with your future aspirations. I'll be happy if you write about that."

Shorty thought that Frederica's pride in giving way to her own ambitions was the most convincing comment on Emilia's character.

3

Shorty read over the notes from the interviews that filled his notebook, and Lululala puffed her nose and murmured in agreement.

"I knew I was going to get a lot out of that interview…" murmured Shorty.

"…got lotsa good drawings," murmured Lululala.

Normally, Lululala could fill up an entire sketchbook or two if the mood struck her. But undergoing this trip to interview the candidates for the royal selection was unlike anything she had ever done before.

Several sketchbooks full of illustrations were lined up across Shorty's desk. He had the luxury of pondering which illustrations would best accompany his articles.

"My first priority is to feature the candidate's quotes, but…"

"…But what?" asked Lululala.

"If possible, I'd like to also include quotes and interviews from their supporters as well."

The closest people to the five candidates were those in the position of being called knights. However, Shorty felt that it was not the candidates themselves or their knights, but the people around them who drew a closer connection to the readers of the Dragon Times.

That's why it was so useful to hear from those individuals.

"Urgh! Why is there so much blank space staring back at me! If I could just write down what I heard, then I could recount it all as it happened. That would be the best way to go about this article, but…!"

Shorty mumbled away to himself when he suddenly felt a sharp pain in his neck. He looked up to see Lululala holding a paintbrush in her hand. Using the hardened tip of the brush, she poked Shorty's neck.

"Careful! That thing is hard enough to kill someone, ok?"

"Cuz you say stupid stuff, you get what you deserve."

"Are you saying I'm an idiot…?"

Lululala glared at Shorty, leaving him at a loss for words.

But with a reproachful look in his eyes, Shorty guessed what she was trying to say. "Yeah, you're right… I was wrong to think I could tell this story from just what I heard and saw. That's not real journalism. How naive and stupid of me."

"No kidding. So stupid."

"It is up to the reporter to tell the truth more clearly, more deeply, and more honestly than what one actually sees or hears. If I can't do that, then I'll never reach my goals!"

If he couldn't entrust others with his dreams and aspirations, then it was up to him to reach them.

Thanks to Lululala’s painful jabs, Shorty understood this and felt grateful for her support. In a way, Lululala was to Shorty as the people who supported the candidates were to the candidates. She was important to him because she kept him from straying down the wrong path. In her own way, she was helping him reach his dreams.

“I’m glad you’re here, Lululala… Ouch! Why did you jab me again?!”

Lululala pushed the tip of the brush harder this time. Shorty shouted, but for some reason, she didn’t answer him.

With tears in his eyes at her attitude, Shorty once again immersed himself in his journals and notebooks, thinking about what kind of article he would write.

“However, there’s just one thing… I don’t think I’ll be able to keep my promise to her…”

Lacking the space on the page, he was forced to edit down the contents of the article—meaning he wouldn’t be able to include the story about the Head Internal Affairs Official of the Emilia Camp.

Shorty felt sorry that he didn’t have enough space to keep the official’s tales of heroism.

END

Sword Identity (2.5 and 3)

10

—In the center of the Demon City of Chaosflame, a strange atmosphere engulfed the Crimson Lapis Castle.

Yorna: "…"

Deep within the tower of the castle's highest floor, Yorna Mishigure, the beautiful woman, listlessly observed her visitor.

She was the ruler of this Demon City, and one of the Nine Divine Generals who stood at the summit of the Vollachian Empire's military—most of all, she was currently in a position risking revocation of that title. Though, even when placed into a situation where her foundation wavered, the elegant expression of Yorna, who reigned over the Demon City, did not darken in the slightest.

That was also a matter of course.

It was not that she lamented the results of maintaining her own way of being, nor was it that she was permitted to do so as a General First-Class of the Imperial Military where cowardly soldiers were not permitted. However, Yorna's attitude held no connections to such weak-minded ideas.

Yorna's way of being was to detach herself from all incidents, and look down as she proceeded down a path paved by violent anger.

So then, that was merely the unchanging tale of being surrounded on all sides by a ferocious hostility.

Madelyn: "—Answer this dragon. Respond carefully."

A lovely voice called out to the silent Yorna, who was fiddling with the golden kiseru in her fingertips.

In front of Yorna, sitting on her knees atop the wooden floor, the owner of the voice was a young girl of a small stature. Sat in the center of the hostility dominating the castle tower, the girl had two black horns growing out of her bright sky-blue hair, and her golden eyes were fixed directly on Yorna.

However, those who would misjudge this young girl as merely a little child, were either fools who barely observe the situation, or pacifists who, by nature, did not measure the opponent's threat.

Unfortunately, Yorna was neither of those. Therefore, there was no way she would misjudge the level of danger this young girl posed.

Not to mention…

???: "…Yorna, sama."

On the balcony of the castle tower, the life of her attendant, Tanza, was still on the line.

Holding Tanza's head in its mouth, the enormous flying dragon threatened them with a ferocious roar. The rulers of the sky known to not bear any thought for people, one of them had grasped power over Tanza's survival.

Additionally, it was not just that one flying dragon perched on the castle tower. Countless flying dragons were using the roof and balcony of the castle tower to rest their wings, with their golden eyes pointed at Yorna.

Identical to the young girl in the center, with eyes of a golden hue —.

Yorna: "You, just what were you called again?"

Madelyn: "—? This dragon's name? Then, Madelyn Eschart. Burn it into your memory."

Yorna: "Madelyn Eschart… hmm, that is quite a high collar name, isn't it?"

Madelyn: "…"

The young girl, having responded with “Madelyn”, narrowed her golden eyes which matched the flying dragons. From Yorna’s point of view, they bore a striking resemblance to the quality of a dragon, that glint in the eye unique to the creatures of a rough temperament.

Of course, taking Tanza’s life hostage while accompanied by innumerable flying dragons, they were a group that were quite overpowering in negotiations. Nobody would believe that that was a nature which avoided conflict.

In any case…

Yorna: “It would be incorrect to say that you are on your own, but it was on His Excellency’s orders that you came to my place, wasn’t it?”

Madelyn: “His Excellency… Does that mean the most eminent man on the surface?”

Yorna: “—. Generally speaking, that is true.”

Madelyn: “In that case, yes… Wait, is that wrong? The one to directly tell this dragon was different from His Excellency. I was told by a senile old fool with a mustache.”

Yorna: “A person with a mustache…”

At Madelyn’s surprisingly honest answer, Yorna frowned her finely shaped eyebrows in rumination. Since it had seemed she was hesitant to respond, Madelyn slightly sharpened her gaze, and,

Madelyn: “I, the dragon, have answered your question. Now, make up your mind on where you stand.”

Yorna: “My goodness, what a passionate invitation. By the way, you are a magnificent Flying Dragon Tamer. Even in my memories, I have no recollection of someone who was obeyed by this many flying dragons. By what means have you tamed so many dragons?”

Madelyn: “—Is that an insult?”

That moment, Madelyn’s pupils narrowed, and the atmosphere of the wide castle tower grew chilly.

In Vollachia, where a warm climate persisted throughout the year, there were not many chances to experience the cold. If there were, they were an alarm to one’s very life unrelated to the temperature, an appeal from one’s instincts when facing a strong opponent.

Madelyn: “Dragons, do not obey anyone. Do not think of the dragon’s benevolence as obedient loyalty towards a master.”

Yorna: “…I understand. As expected, the dragonkin are not like us at all.”

Madelyn: “—Answer me. Lord of the stone castle.”

The glint in her eyes remaining unsaid, Madelyn pressed Yorna to make a decision.

Madelyn declared her intent to not continue any further with this idle chatter. As Yorna observed that, she removed her kiseru from her mouth, and once again directed her eyes towards Tanza on the balcony.

The fangs of the flying dragon were thrust at the life of Tanza, and as her dark eyes exchanged gazes with Yorna…

Yorna: “—Tanza.”

Tanza: “…Yes.”

Yorna: “Do you love me?”

At the question that seemed out of place, Tanza widened her dark eyes.

However, Yorna’s voice did not sound like a joke or prank. That was probably something Tanza also understood. A faint light resided within the girl’s widened eyes, and she deeply nodded.

Seeing that, Yorna silently smiled, and…

Yorna: “There you go, now return home without bringing back anything at all. —This is my castle.”

Madelyn: “—You have outraged this dragon.”

At Yorna’s inflammatory words, Madelyn stood up, turned to face the flying dragons, and waved her hand.

The contents of her directions were plain and simple, they were a command to “Shut the mouth”.

The giant flying dragon closed its mouth, and its force crushed Tanza’s head as if it were an egg. A light sound rang out, and the young girl’s head was easily demolished—was not what had happened.

Flying Dragon: “—Kiryararahhh”

Suddenly putting power into its jaw, the flying dragon gave a low roar as it tried to crunch Tanza. Its fangs were like sharp blades, however they did not pierce Tanza’s soft skin, and instead, the source began to fissure.

With that excessively absurd sight before her eyes, Madelyn widened her eyes in astonishment.

Madelyn: “WHA’DID’YA DO?!”

Yorna: “—. Your word-choice is really quite lovely.”

The momentary shock passing through her tongue, Madelyn caught her breath at what Yorna had pointed out. Although, at the occurrence of those unforeseen circumstances, the dragonkin did not merely demonstrate a foolish charm of just freezing up.

Madelyn : “—Hk.”

Holding her breath, Madelyn reached her hands out to the satchel on her back. Her white fingertips undid the latch of the satchel, and she grasped the revealed handle and wrenched her wrist. —Directly after, there was a sound made from the weapon unfolding.

That was a weapon meant to be thrown, carving smooth curves as it flew through the air, and it was known as the Flying Wing Blade. It was a hunting tool that, when thrown in order to spin at high speeds, would draw an arc through the air as it returned.

However, when held within Madelyn's hands, that was too big to be a match for the small girl's stature.

Madelyn: "RAH—!!"

Tightly gripping the Flying Wing Blade, Madelyn released a horizontal sweeping attack.

It was not that she had thrown it, rather, there was a tremendous shockwave accompanying the flash of the blade's sweeping attack, and the tower of the Crimson Lapis Castle had become a rampaging storm. It rushed directly towards Yorna, who sat on the chief seat.

However…

Yorna: "You truly entered my castle without knowing anything at all, didn't you?"

Madelyn's attack turned over the wooden planks of the floor as if it was tearing through flesh and blood. While remaining seated on the tatami chair, it was abruptly cut off in front of Yorna, who did not make even the slightest move.

The unclear phenomenon did not allow the Flying Wing Blade's fierce attack to reach Yorna. The revolving blade was obstructed by an invisible wall, protecting Yorna, and the wall behind her was torn apart, breaking through the castle tower.

Madelyn widened her eyes at the situation, and immediately after, the flying dragon's roar reached her eardrums. —No, it was not anything as valiant as a roar. That, was a flying dragon's shriek.

What entered Madelyn's vision as she turned around, was Tanza, who had raised her hand while on the balcony. With a face of mute amazement, the deergirl appeared to have torn out the fang with her hand and was now grasping it.

The roles had reversed for the definite predator, and the flying dragon was writhing in pain as the girl had literally preyed on its fang.

At the two unusual events of that reality and Tanza's reaction, Madelyn caught her breath…

Yorna: "To look away when you are before me, tis quite a cold thing."

Madelyn: "—Hk?!"

Directly after, the tooth of the geta Yorna wore on her feet thrust into the side of Madelyn's face.

Kicked away by an intense impact, Madelyn's body flew directly backwards. Then, bouncing off the floor, Madelyn crashed into the wall with a violent force, and half of her body was buried into the wall.

Having received the kick defenselessly, Madelyn did not comprehend planning against defenses to her attack. Though, Yorna, who had kicked Madelyn flying, had also narrowed her eyes at that unforeseen reaction.

From how it looked, Madelyn was around the same height as Tanza. However, what had received the impact from Yorna's kick, was far heavier than even a man large enough that she would need to look upwards to see his face.

It was just as if there was an unusual mass compressed into that small body.

Madelyn: "JEEZ, now I'm REAL ANGRY…!"

Uprooting the half of her body that was buried in the wall, Madelyn's voice quaked with anger. Any chance to comment on the change of her smashed-up tone had already gotten away.

Even so, now that they had begun, neither of them had the choice to cut corners.

Yorna: “…”

Yorna placed her kiseru to her lips, and Madelyn took a deep breath big enough to fill her small body.

Purple smoke and air, each filling their lungs with something different, the two of them exchanged gazes, and at that instant…

—A tremendous shockwave blew up the interior of the tower of the Crimson Lapis Castle.

11

???: “At this time, my failure has caused a great burden, for that, I offer my deepest apologies!”

Saying that, the young man vigorously struck his forehead against the table before him—No, pitching forward enough that a solid sound reverberated throughout the assembly hall, he sincerely apologized with a deep bow.

With brown skin and green hair, the person had a dauntless face with strong purpose in his eyes. Regardless of the details leading to that apology, the fact that he was able to meet them safely like this was a relief to everyone present.

At any rate…

???: “I sure was startled when that slush spilled out of the chrysalis! If you hadn’t hardened like that, there would be no helping the apprehensions about whether you could make it as an associate!”

Open-heartedly laughing, Cecilus expressed a somewhat unscrupulous thought as he reminisced on the incident from just before.

In reality, concerning the treatment of the chrysalis, there had been an uproar in the fortress for a while. Even Goz had just barely informed them that the death of a person with prospects of becoming an Imperial General would be a dishonor to the Emperor worthy of great shame.

Fortunately, within the chrysalis as it overflowed with a viscous liquid, the original form of the young man in question was contained.

Cecilus: “Well, this is just to confirm, but you are indeed Kafma Irulux-san, right?”

Kafma: “Yes! I am General Second-Class Kafma Irulux! After the height of the disloyalty that my tribe had toward His Excellency the Emperor was overlooked, the fact that I missed the chance I have been bestowed to recover… I am ashamed of my own lack of virtue!”

Cecilus: “Uwaa, you’re one of those terribly serious types. That personality probably isn’t my cup of tea. What do you think, Anya?”

Arakiya: “Die.”

With a loud voice, apologizing for his own oversight, the young man—Kafma Irulux, at his situation, Cecilus asked for the thoughts of Arakiya, who was seated to his side. And because of that, he had received an answer just as he had asked.

Aside from Cecilus, who pouted his lips at their usual exchange, Goz raised an “Yes!” with a bold voice. Stamping firmly on the floor of the assembly hall, he patted Kafma on the shoulder with his large hand.

Goz: “Lift your head, General Second-Class Kafma! I am not well versed in the customs and manners of the Insect Cage Tribe, but I hear that you have taken in a new insect. That is your matter. Even so, it is probably in order to clear the name of your tribe.”

Kafma: “General First-Class Goz, but… I am…”

Goz: “I do not doubt your consciousness, nor do I doubt your loyalty towards His Excellency the Emperor. It is something that not only I, but First-Class Generals Cecilus and Arakiya have also recognized. That is how it seems.”

Chiding the persistent Kafma, Goz turned back to Arakiya and Cecilus seeking agreement.

However, Arakiya did not return that so easily. Meeting Kafma for the first time, Arakiya did not have the answer Goz was looking for. And yet, even though he thought she was going to say at least something,

Arakiya: "…"

Cecilus: "Oh dear, your poor speaking never does seem to improve. Anya, with that kind of condition, how would you take care of yourself when neither Chisha nor I are there; I can only worry about the hardships that would surround you."

Giving a sidelong glance to Arakiya, who was unable to choose her words on the spot, Cecilus laughed with a carefree face. Then, with a rather indifferent look, he clapped his hands, saying "Indeed, indeed, there's no doubt!", and,

Cecilus: "It's just as Goz-san said, Kafma-san's hard work is quite a big deal. I couldn't do it even if you told me to. I mean an act like letting an insect into your own body!"

Kafma: "…Is that, an insult towards the Insect Cage Tribe ? "

Cecilus: "Huhh?! Even though I was extremely direct in my intention to praise you!"

Frowning, Kafma investigated Cecilus's true intentions. Raising both his hands at Kafma's doubtful gaze, Cecilus shook his head in denial.

Cecilus: "Don't misunderstand. Ways of mastering strength vary between people, and there are schools of thought for all kinds of different suitabilities. I'm a self-taught swordsman, but if the way of being for the Insect Cage Tribe is to coexist with insects, there's nothing incorrect about building your strength in that direction. After all, I think there's nothing particularly good or bad about my training methods."

Kafma: "That is… my apologies. I had taken a far-fetched viewpoint."

Goz: "There's no helping it. Cecilus's speech and conduct are always insolent after all.”

Arakiya: “Agreed.”

Cecilus: “What what what? Even though I intended on having a reasonably serious conversation, no one is taking my side?”

Cut off from the backs of Goz and Arakiya, Cecilus appeared to be making a surprised face. However, from Arakiya’s perspective, what was really surprising was that he thought she would take his side.

Something like Arakiya taking Cecilus’s side, that was absolutely impossible.

Especially if during the big battle, Cecilus exposed his defenseless back…

Cecilus: “You won’t hesitate to attack me. Well, even supposing you had that chance, since you wouldn’t be able to make anything of it, it’s an impracticable theory… it’s something like a contract for the sale of unpeelable dragon skin.”

Arakiya: “You talk too much.”

Cecilus: “Then, why don’t you try your best to shut me up?”

Faced with a provocative smile, Arakiya averted her gaze as she put up with the irritation. Reflected in the corner of her eye, she could see Cecilus shrug his shoulders with his hands tucked in his sleeves.

He was becoming a source of increasing displeasure for Arakiya.

Goz: “Well, let’s get on with it.”

With that, seeing that conversation reach a stopping place, Goz cleared his throat as he corrected the topic.

Goz put his hand to his stern face riddled with scars, and glanced down towards Kafma. Straightening his posture at that gaze, a tension remained on Kafma’s face, and,

Kafma: “Yes. What is it, General First-Class Goz?”

Goz: “Do you understand why you have been summoned to the eastern front like this?”

Kafma: “—. My ears had vaguely heard about it while I was in the chrysalis.”

Cecilus: “Wow, he can properly hear even when in that mushy liquid.”

Placing his hand over his mouth, Cecilus secretly started talking to Arakiya. Ignoring that, Arakiya watched attentively over the development of the matter.

Crossing his big arms, Goz gave an “I see” and a serious nod at Kafma’s response.

Goz: “If you have already heard, then this discussion shall be quick. The objective of this military campaign is to suppress Yorna Mishigure’s insurrection based within Chaosflame. Then, depending on your participation there…”

Kafma: “The missing seat of the Ninth, the next suitable person shall be decided.”

Goz: “That is correct. I have recommended you to His Excellency as a worthy individual.”

Clad in golden armor, puffing his chest up in pride, Goz boasted as though on Kafma’s behalf.

The endorsement of Goz, who was an active Divine General, since there was a demand for the vacant seat of the Ninth, there was no doubt that it would push him to want it desperately.

However, Kafma’s expression did not clear up upon hearing that, and Arakiya tilted her head in confusion.

Arakiya: “Do you not want it?”

Kafma: “—. No, I must clearly say that that is incorrect. Only, whether I am really that suitable, there is more than enough room for doubt.”

Arakiya: “Whether you are really that suitable…”

Kafma: “I have not atoned for the fact that the brethren of my tribe rebelled against His Excellency. In spite of that, to be requested to take the position of the Nine Divine Generals who serve as His Excellency the Emperor’s daggers…”

Arakiya: “…Even though you want it, you give up?”

Unable to understand the thinking of Kafma, who cast his head down, Arakiya unintentionally interjected.

Whether or not her voice had conveyed her doubt, the questioned Kafma stiffened his cheeks as if he had been reproached. However, for Arakiya, who did not have the choice to give up, his hesitation was truly incomprehensible.

There was something wanted, and there was the position needed for that purpose, so, there was the chance to acquire that.

In that case, there was no reason to not at least try. Try, and if it is not reached…

Arakiya: “Then, all you can do is die.”

Goz: “…Of course, do not fear death. If you fill the vacant seat of the Nine Divine Generals, I suppose General First-Class Arakiya will not have any objections?”

Arakiya: “…The person that fills it will fill it. Isn’t that all there is to it?”

Asked for her opinion, Arakiya honestly answered what she thought.

In truth, whether Kafma became the Ninth or not, Arakiya did not really care. Of course, it would be a different story if he was aiming for Arakiya’s position, and was trying to steal the seat of Cecilus.

Goz: “The current roster has been going for a long time, but even the Nine Divine Generals have had replacements… Though, I certainly did not expect Balleroy to drop out.”

Cecilus: "After all, Balleroy-san was a good person. He practically never made an unpleasant face when socializing with me, even at the stuff that I say, and since he was a good person, it's natural that he died."

Goz: "Balleroy supported a rebellion against His Excellency. He cannot be called good."

Cecilus: "I guess it's like that for someone like Goz-san, though."

Putting his hands on the back of his head, Cecilus gave a wry smile at Goz's aggressive tone.

The former Ninth was Balleroy Temeglyph—plotting to rebel against Vincent, he was a man who bravely lost his life, but Arakiya did not hate him either.

He was a well-spoken man, and he took the consideration to change his attitude based on who he was dealing with. He adequately discerned a distance with the untalkative Arakiya, and honestly, he was quite an easygoing conversational partner.

Given that usually, the one keeping her company was a man who did not consider even a single one of her feelings, she thought that of Balleroy even more.

Therefore, it had shocked her to hear that Balleroy had participated in a rebellion, and had lost his life.

Cecilus: "I never thought that Balleroy-san would be defeated by a knight of the Kingdom. If I take the head off of Julius-san, Balleroy-san may be able to rest in just a little bit of peace."

Goz: "The head of a Kingdom knight, hm? That certainly can't be your true intention."

Cecilus: "Indeed. Even if I behead Julius-san, Balleroy-san probably wouldn't be especially happy. —Though, it would probably a different story if it was the head of the Sword Saint -dono."

That instant, Arakiya, Goz, and Kafma all reflexively stiffened their bodies in response to the alarm bells going off from their instincts.

The source was Cecilus, who gazed into the empty sky, and the clear aura of swordsmanship overflowing from his entire body.

Vollachia's strongest swordsman pictured somebody within the empty sky, and the remaining waves of the aura of his swordsmanship directed towards them…

Arakiya: "…"

She did not like the look on Cecilus's face as he thought about the opponent who was beyond the national border.

Arakiya harbored a strange indignation for the likes of Cecilus and that Sword Saint. Arakiya was the one who would kill Cecilus, and take his seat of First.

It was just as if he was completely ignorant of his surroundings, such behavior could only be described as aggravating.

In any case…

Goz: "General Second-Class Kafma, I understand your thoughts, and that you feel like you are bearing a lot of weight on your shoulders. However, this opportunity does not take your circumstances into account. That is just the kind of thing it is."

Kafma: "…I understand, General First-Class Goz. What about the candidates apart from myself?"

Goz: "—. There is someone in the same position as you; they were endorsed by Prime Minister Berstetz."

Kafma's expression harbored apprehension at the serious reply of Goz, who was crossing his big arms. The fact that it was the endorsement from a civil officer instead of a military officer was probably a point that made him uneasy.

Goz: "We are already substantially past the arranged time of convergence. His Excellency is lenient with those who demonstrate ability, but my heart is not as big as His Excellency's. If we do not pour our heart and soul into ridding His Excellency of his troubles as soon as possible…"

Cecilus: “Now now, is it not the Vollachian way to not complain if results are achieved? Things like tardiness, you’ll think of it as a rather cute kind of flaw if you look back on it later.”

Goz: “In that case, if both parties produce results, then the one who is punctual would be valued higher.”

Cecilus: “Goz-san sure is quite good at allegory.”

Displeased due to the tardiness of the other candidate, Goz’s sharp tongue caused Cecilus to yield.

He probably did not really intend on arguing about the behavior of others. As soon as Cecilus gave up on advocating, he looked towards the assembly hall’s window, and let go of all intention to share any more opinions.

Seeing that, Arakiya looked towards Kafma once again, and,

Arakiya: “So then, what will you do?”

Kafma: “—. By “what will I do”, you mean?”

Arakiya: “Will you become a Divine General? Will you choose not to?”

He was not Cecilus, but ultimately, Arakiya did not have interest in how Kafma would proceed.

However, since Goz was the commanding officer of this operation, Kafma’s choice would probably have an effect on Goz’s thoughts. That was why it would be best for him to decide promptly.

Compromising even though there was something he wanted. She could not give even a smidgen of endorsement to that kind of thinking, but…

Arakiya: “It would be fine if you did as you pleased.”

Cecilus: “—Ah. Anya, Anya, do you have a moment?”

Arakiya: “…I don’t.”

With that, the voice of the obstinate Cecilus called out to Arakiya, who was urging Kafma to decide.

It was something she wished to ignore, but she knew that if she did not respond, he was a man who would continue to call out to her until she responded. Therefore, Arakiya reluctantly shifted her consciousness towards Cecilus.

When she did, Cecilus rested his chin in his hand on the table, and while pointing outside the window with his vacant hand,

Cecilus: “A flock of flying dragons has come from the sky, but they aren’t something that I would be allowed to kill, right?”

Indeed, with a carefree attitude, he gave quite an indifferent report on the abnormal situation.

12

Arakiya: “…”

Cecilus: “Woah, there’s an overwhelming thirst for blood. Y’know, it’s not often that you see this many flying dragons, even in Mezoreia.”

Arakiya: “Shut up, die.”

Within the maelstrom surrounded by fierce golden gazes on all sides, the tone of Cecilus and Arakiya’s conversation had not differed from usual.

On the other hand, there were the soldiers of the fort who clutched their weapons, with their feelings of tension swelling upon seeing the situation of being surrounded at a distance.

Since they were people of the Empire, there were too many chances to count for them to become aware of the ferocity of flying dragons. Occasionally called Flying Dragon Cataclysms, there were instances where flying dragons would completely devastate a settlement when they met for breeding season.

All of a sudden, a flock of flying dragons numbering over thirty had appeared. So, the soldiers’ caution could be easily understood.

Goz: “Settle down! They are not enemies! They are allies!”

Appealing with a loud voice, Goz proceeded forth as he kept the soldiers in check.

In the center of the fort’s courtyard, the flock of flying dragons had majestically perched themselves on the outer walls and lookout platforms. In the midst of the rough atmosphere’s domination, there was a single young girl standing at the center of the flock of dragons.

The young girl had slowly gotten off the back of a flying dragon, and was standing on solid ground; that girl must be…

Goz: “—You must be Madelyn Eschart. I have heard about you.”

Madelyn: “…About this dragon?”

Goz: “This dragon…?”

That moment, unable to comprehend her reply, Goz furrowed his brow.

The girl who had replied to Goz could not have been any more than half of his size. Her outward appearance was also young and cute. However, there was no diffidence whatsoever in her gaze as she looked up at Goz’s huge body.

Only, he could feel that she was trying to evaluate what the Living Being known as Goz was.

On the other hand, Goz was similarly trying to evaluate the young girl. —He could ascertain that based on the great number of flying dragons obeying her, she was not merely the young girl that she appeared to be.

The young girl was loved by flying dragons for no reason, such a thing could not be. The evidence of that was…

Goz: “It should not be possible, but those horns… could it be, you are a dragonkin?”

Madelyn: “…Correct.”

Goz: “SO THERE WERE SURVIVORS…!”

The two black horns sprouting from her head, the affirmation of the truth associated with that, had shocked Goz. However, that shock of Goz was not shared by the two Divine Generals behind him who were tilting their heads in confusion.

Instead, the one to share in Goz’s shock was Kafma, who was surveying the flock of flying dragons.

Kafma: “General First-Class Goz, a dragonkin… is that true?”

Goz: “At the very least, that is true according to the person in question… they are a race that has already perished, but I have heard that the dragonkin were able to establish bonds with earth dragons, water dragons, and flying dragons.”

Kafma: “Establish bonds with flying dragons… that is incredibly hard to believe.”

Goz: “Though, how else would you explain what is before our eyes?”

At Kafma, who was choked up for words, Goz jerked his chin towards the flying dragons.

Resting their wings at the fort, the flying dragons held back their ferocity as they patiently stood by. Even if one made use of Flying Dragon Taming to be obeyed by a flying dragon, they would only be able to establish a bond with one flying dragon. In other words, leading this many flying dragons, Madelyn’s secret could not be explained by Flying Dragon Taming.

In that case, it was natural that the girl’s—No, that the possibilities for Madelyn Eschart’s true identity were limited.

Goz: “Just where did Prime Minister Berstetz find such a girl…?”

As his shudders rode through his tongue, Goz clenched his molars as he thought about how Berstetz was a man with limitless connections.

As Berstetz had disclosed at the conference a few days ago, Madelyn neither had any military experience, nor did she have any guarantee for her lineage. Though, it was utterly unbelievable that he had found a talent who was not already in power.

The dragonkin were an existence with such an extraordinary history. Then, from just where in the world had that girl hatched out from an egg…

Kafma: "—Hk, General First-Class Goz!"

Just as Goz had thought that, the situation began to move.

Beside him, Kafma had widened his eyes, and he extended his arms out forward, which had been tattooed with the unique tattoos of the Insect Cage Tribe. Ahead of those arms, Madelyn unsheathed the Flying Wing Blade from the satchel on her back.

The Flying Wing Blade was far too big for the girl's body, and she fastened its sharp blade onto Goz's thick neck.

Then, Madelyn looked up at Goz with eyes that were the same hue as his armor, and,

Madelyn: "Do not insult this dragon. Those eyes of yours, they are an insult towards this dragon."

Goz: "…"

As if she had guessed the true thoughts within Goz's eyes and expression from moments ago, her voice was filled with rage.

The prideful dragonkin would never tolerate any scorn or disdain towards herself. She would put washing away any disgrace over her own life. It was precisely because of that way of being that led to the downfall of their kind.

In the time before the dragonkin themselves had perished, they had driven over ten other races to extinction. Though, since Madelyn had existed, it should probably be said that the dragonkin had not actually perished.

However, their destiny would also depend on Madelyn's actions in this place.

Kafma: "…Enough with this tomfoolery. I, too, have yet to become familiar with showing mercy."

At Kafma's quiet warning, Madelyn glanced down towards her own neck.

Creeping up the girl's pale neck, were green thorns extending from Kafma's arm. The thorny vines that had fired out while he was in the state of chrysalis, those were twining around Madelyn's neck.

It seemed that these thorns were the power of the new insect that Kafma had taken in when he had become the chrysalis. However, just as he had said himself, he was still far off from mastering control of the trembling vines.

Flying Dragons: "—Kiryararahhh!"

In addition, an abrupt uproar began among the flying dragons, as a threat was posed towards their esteemed daughter.

The flying dragons surrounding the fortress grew lively, their ferocious roars began to resound, and the soldiers which Goz had previously calmed down started to tense up; the atmosphere that seemed like they were going to draw their weapons even now still propagated.

At this rate, it was not unlikely for blood to spill among the soldiers enacting the attack on the Demon City.

Before that could happen, it was when Goz was concerned that he must restore the atmosphere in this place.

Cecilus: "Now now, everyone, calm down. —Don't you think that you're troubling Goz-san?"

And, saying that as he stepped in wearing his zori, the figure's brief comment engulfed the atmosphere of the entire fort.

Dressed in a kimono and leisurely readied, the conduct of the young man, Cecilus, had not changed from how it was before. Only, if there was one point that was different, it was that the hilt of his blade was in his hand.

—With just that, Cecilus Segmunt dominated the atmosphere of the entire fortress.

Madelyn: "—Hk."

As the swordsman walked forward, Madelyn widened her eyes.

Even more than the thorns which directly threatened her life, even more than Goz who disgraced the dragonkin's pride, Madelyn's eyes were captivated by the figure of Cecilus, who was merely walking at leisure, and she became unable to move.

Then, Kafma also noticed the fear spreading in his thorns, and it was the same for the flock of flying dragons, who had ceased their roars and had reclined their wings.

For the young hero of the Insect Cage Tribe, for the survivor of the dragonkin, for the ferocious rulers of the sky, all of them protected themselves before the natural disaster, and they could do nothing but pray for their lives to be saved. —In that case, Cecilus was the natural disaster itself.

The walking natural disaster known as the Blue Lightning, that was the swordsman named Cecilus Segmunt.

Madelyn: "Wh-Wha'th'heck, you…?!"

Cecilus: "Wha'th'heck? Just now, did you say wha'th'heck? Is that some sort of dragonkin dialect?"

Madelyn: "People like you are friggin' weird!!"

(Important Translation Note: Within this section, there is a substantial amount from the Comic Alive version of the story that is cut from the Tanpenshuu Version. Both Versions are Translated Below, and both end up back at the same point. So you can choose to read both versions, or just read one.)

Comic Alive Version (Long, More Action, Recommended)

Tanpenshuu Version (Much Shorter)

Comic Alive Version

Madelyn: “People like you are friggin’ weird!!”

At Cecilus, who cocked his head in puzzlement, Madelyn howled that in a loud voice.

Just as Cecilus had said, the impression given off by Madelyn’s speech was quite different than it had been just before. However, faster than Goz could touch on that, the situation had changed.

Kafma: “Guh…! Stop!”

Raising a cornered voice, the next moment, his thorns also pulsated in vain.

In an attempt to shut out the impulses, Kafma’s arms swelled up, and the thorn Insect that nested within his body rampaged, instinctively aiming towards the enemy.

That wild eruption simultaneously gave rise to other wild eruptions. That is to say, an eruption of the flock of flying dragons, and their esteemed dragonkin daughter who led them.

Kafma: “STOOOOOOP—!!”

Kafma was trying to suppress the Insects wriggling around within his body, but he could not stop the rampage of the Insects which were instinctively rejecting death.

The overflowing thorns winded around as they approached Cecilus, and for an instant, the flattened grounds of the fortress were blanketed by purple flames.

Those were…

Cecilus: “This is fascinating! Maybe it’s because I’ve never had a face to face encounter with plants before. No, this is an Insect, isn’t it? I have an inexhaustible curiosity in what kind of insect it is!”

While leaping a great deal backwards, Cecilus shouted with joy as he evaded the fierce attack of the thorns.

Kicking off the ground in order to slide on the soles of his zori, Cecilus left the thorns that were closing in on him like a surging sea behind using his speed, fast enough to overtake even the wind itself. Kafma’s thorn attack was suitable in quantity to gain total control over the floor, but Cecilus’s steps overcame that easily.

However, after evading the fierce attack of the thorns, the second wave assailed Cecilus.

Madelyn: “CHHAAAAAAA—!!”

Swooping down from directly above, was Madelyn spinning vertically with all her might.

Both arms gripping the Flying Wing Blade, the power of an attack similar to that of a sword slammed down; it had aimed to strike down Cecilus, and receiving the direct hit, the ground itself caved in as if it was trampled upon by a colossal beast.

A tremendous shockwave quaked the whole fortress and the earth below, and the cloud of dust that blew violently shrouded their vision.

However, even that shockwave could not catch up to the lightning speed which could overtake the wind.

Cecilus: “Ta-Ta-ta-ta-ta-tan, ta-ta-ta-tan!”

And, chiming his tongue within his mouth, Cecilus’s figure ran through the air.

Of course, Cecilus was the human referred to as the Blue Lightning. It was not that he was so inhuman that he could run through the sky. Only, he was just using the footholds of the sky.

The footholds of the sky—by using the heads of the flying dragons that rushed towards him as footholds, Cecilus was able to run around in the air.

Cecilus: “If this was before the people of the Flying Dragon Squadron, I wouldn’t be able to do something so rude, after all.”

Given the nature of Flying Dragon Taming, the relationship between dragon rider and flying dragon would become something even greater than the likes of a blood connection. Engaging in an act of savagery like walking over the heads of flying dragons before those people, getting cursed in return would be unavoidable.

Therefore, there should not have been a chance to skip about using the heads of an established flock of flying dragons.

Furiously, the attacks kept firing at Cecilus, who was running up in the air.

Madelyn: “—Hk!”

Stepping with both her legs onto the caved-in ground, Madelyn bent her waist and threw the Flying Wing Blade.

The Flying Wing Blade furiously spun at a high speed, drawing an arc through the air, and assaulted the defenseless back of the mid-air Cecilus. Madelyn’s armament was not designed with the goal to cut through material things, but with the vigor of throwing it with her extraordinary back strength, that power could probably bisect a human body.

That seemingly intense attack had reached Cecilus, who was still stepping on the heads of flying dragons, and…

Cecilus: “A-ha-ha-ha-ha-ha-ha! I feel a bit dizzy—!”

Placing his feet atop the revolving Flying Wing Blade, Cecilus’s body spun at a high speed.

Standing atop the Flying Wing Blade as it flew in, at the literal exhibit of a superhuman feat, the soldiers could do nothing but watch in mute amazement.

Even if the incident that had occurred could be explained through words, it was a spectacle which the brain refused to comprehend.

Though, only those who did not lose their fighting spirit there would be able to reach the realm of those who knew the apex of the battlefield. —That was regardless of whether they desired it or not.

Cecilus: “Oohhhh—!”

Even now, the Insects which the host had lost control of continued to rampage, and the ivy of the thorns reached out towards the sky.

The thorns, spread out like a web, interrupted the path of the Flying Wing Blade, and they were ferociously broken before that destructive power, producing a sound like that of glass shattering. However, the amount of thorns was not normal, so even if one, two, or three were broken, then the areas surpassing ten or twenty would dampen the power of the Flying Wing Blade.

As a result, the Flying Wing Blade was entangled in the thorns, and on top of that, Cecilus gave a “Huhh?” as his body was blown away due to inertia. The dragon’s eyes would not overlook that.

Madelyn: “I’m not gonna let’ya get away!!”

Pulling down the broken thorn ivy and using it as a foothold, Madelyn’s body ascended to the sky.

Her objective was Cecilus’s back, and towards the opponent who had made fun of her time after time in a span of merely ten seconds, she would finally land a blow of anger…

Goz: “GET THIS OVER WITH ALREADY!”

A voice angrier than the rage burning within Madelyn washed hers out from directly above.

Madelyn’s head, which had its vision so narrowed that it could only see Cecilus, was grabbed by Goz's palm, who had run up the thorns the same way she had. Then, after the young girl groaned out an "Uah", Goz kicked the thorns and took a nosedive, mercilessly slamming her entire body into the ground, forming a second large hole.

The back of her head blasted into the ground, and half of Madelyn's body was buried into the earth.

Doing that, a heat wave scorched the back of Goz, who had planned to take control of the situation through sheer force.

Slowly turning around, Goz's vision was met by the heat of the red flames thunderously flaring up.

What was vigorously burning, were the thorns of Kafma which had filled the courtyard of the fortress. Then, the one who had done that was Arakiya, who was standing beside the fainted Kafma.

Using her unusual power, she burned away Kafma's thorns in one go. Goz wondered whether Kafma had fainted due to the influence of the Insects, or if it was due to Arakiya's attack.

Either way…

Goz: "Everyone, you do not understand your own positions! It is outrageous for both General Second-Class Kafma, and Madelyn Eschart, who is not even a General ! And then, Cecilus, that goes for you as well!"

Cecilus: "Ehh?! Me too? Even though I was one-sidedly attacked?!"

Folding his big arms, Goz raised an angry voice as Cecilus appeared right beside him.

After he was blown away by the Flying Wing Blade's inertia, even though his footholds of the thorns should have been burned away by Arakiya, it was an enigma how he had somehow returned safely.

However, aside from the suppression of the burned thorns, it seemed like she had the intention to erase Cecilus's footholds, and even Goz saw Arakiya frown when she laid eyes upon his safety.

Goz: “However, you two must settle your problems on your own. Leaving that aside…”

While speaking, Goz set aside the problems between Arakiya and Cecilus, and at the bottom of the big hole that he had made, he looked down at Madelyn as she slowly got up.

Madelyn: “…”

With half of her body having been buried in the dirt, Madelyn glared at the overhead Goz with a sullen face. But, although her hair and clothes were dirty, it seemed the girl did not have any striking wounds.

Contrary to the expectation that with such a sufficient power, the blow to the back of her head was that which no one would be surprised if she died, the lively Madelyn’s stamina even caused Goz to raise his eyebrows.

Goz: “If you have survived, I will hear what you have to say. Madelyn Eschart, have you calmed your head?”

Madelyn: “…Do not let that monster anywhere near this dragon.”

Goz: “That’s, indeed. Cecilus.”

Cecilus: “Was the monster you mentioned just now supposed to be me? No no, I think there are adequate words that are far better to properly represent me, but monster… isn’t that a tad cruel? Hey, Anya.”

Arakiya: “I don’t care.”

At Arakiya, who turned her face away, Cecilus expressed his discontent by saying “Ehh, How cold!”

Though, it was not as if she did not understand the feelings of Madelyn when she called that Cecilus a Monster. Both Goz and Arakiya had the confidence that they could stop the previous recklessness of both Kafma and Madelyn.

However, in a sense, it could be said that Cecilus restored order to the fortress without using his own sword. If asked if he could do the same thing, Goz would think it to be difficult.

Most of all…

Goz: “In the first place, the quarrel just now was also caused by your existence, though.”

Cecilus: “Come on, naturally those are false accusations! All I did was be there! As an actor, I feel blessed that merely my appearance is enough to enchant people, but I am firmly opposed to being labeled a bad guy after my one-sided vigilance! That is absolutely no good! Anyway, what even was it?!”

Arakiya: “You are a nuisance just by being here…”

Arakiya fell back as she grabbed the collar of Cecilus, who was obstructing the progression of the conversation.

While taking advantage of her consideration, Goz lent a hand to Madelyn, at the bottom of the hole. Even though Madelyn slightly hesitated, she took Goz’s hand, and climbed out of the hole.

Goz: “Well then, please calm your flying dragons. The soldiers of the fortress will not lower their weapons. I want to avoid any further unnecessary quarrels among allies. Do you understand?”

End of the Comic Alive Version. You can either read the Tanpenshuu Version Below both versions converge

Tanpenshuu Version

Madelyn: “People like you are friggin’ weird!!”

Raising a high voice akin to a shriek, Madelyn fell back a great deal. Removing the thorns from her pale neck, storing the insects away within his body, Kafma also caught his breath as he looked at Cecilus.

With both of their—No, with all the gazes inside the fortress converging on him, Cecilus tilted his head.

Cecilus: “Umm, I don’t hate receiving all this attention, but isn’t this direction a little different from the kind that I desire?”

Goz: “I will personally hear you out on your dissatisfaction later. Fortunately, it seems like she has calmed her head.”

Showing gratitude to the dissatisfied Cecilus as he patted his shoulder, Goz looked at Madelyn as she narrowed her pupils. While her entire body was on guard towards Cecilus, she reacted to Goz’s gaze.

Goz: “I apologize if my eyes were impolite, Madelyn Eschart.”

Madelyn: “…Do not let that monster anywhere near this dragon.”

Goz: “Very well.”

At the demand of Madelyn, who glared at Cecilus, Goz nodded his chin just as she had wanted.

Ceclius often caused problems, but this time, he had worked in the right direction. Him being useful in aspects apart from battling on the battlefield, Goz recalled that it was a rare experience.

Goz: “Most of all, there are instances where things get complicated just by Cecilus’s presence, but…”

Cecilus: “Come on, if you’re going to praise me, thoroughly do so until the very end, Goz-san! I’ll sulk if you don’t properly praise me, y’know! You must not be too strict, absolutely… right, Anya?!”

Arakiya: “You are a nuisance just by being here…”

Immediately ruining the part where he was useful, Cecilus’s collar was grabbed by Arakiya as she fell back. While taking advantage of Arakiya’s consideration, Goz put his hands on his hips and looked at Madelyn.

That they had fulfilled what they wanted to say, Goz jerked his chin to the surroundings as if it to indicate that, and,

Goz: “Well then, please calm your flying dragons. The soldiers of the fortress will not lower their weapons. I want to avoid any further unnecessary quarrels among allies. Do you understand?"

End of the Tanpenshuu Version. You can either read the Comic Alive Version Above both versions converge

Both Versions Converge (Direct continuation of both preceding versions, translated from Tanpenshuu 7)

Goz: "Well then, please calm your flying dragons. The soldiers of the fortress will not lower their weapons. I want to avoid any further unnecessary quarrels among allies. Do you understand?"

Madelyn: "—. Understood."

With a nod, Madelyn signaled with her eyes to the surrounding flying dragons.

It was not that she had called anything out to them in order to control them through a signal, instead, rather, it was the form of their bond permitting communication through the eyes.

As she naturally accomplished that, Goz was able to easily recognize her as a real dragonkin. At Goz's gaze, Madelyn narrowed her eyes with a "What?",

Madelyn: "Pointed towards this dragon, those eyes are rude."

Goz: "I apologize for my impoliteness. That and, it seems I have yet to introduce myself. I am Goz Ralfon, and with this fortress as our base, His Excellency the Emperor has appointed me as the commanding officer for the attack on the Demon City."

Madelyn: "…I, the dragon, am Madelyn Eschart."

Goz: "Ahh, I am aware. As for the others… I will explain later."

Arakiya had gone through the trouble of keeping the problem child at a distance. There was no need to expressly bring Cecilus up again and provoke Madelyn.

Madelyn repeatedly glanced over to Cecilus out of worry, and in order to obstruct her gaze, Goz changed where he stood, and,

Goz: “So, why were you late to arrive? For the military, many troops aim to move as a single living creature. If there is someone who throws that pace into disorder, that body will become unable to function.”

Madelyn: “…”

Goz: “It would be troublesome if the wings moved independently from the limbs and tail. Do you understand?”

While saying that, Goz explained with reference to Madelyn’s body—the characteristics of her body as a dragonkin apart from her black horns, the small wings sprouting from her back.

He had aimed to make the explanation easy to understand, but Goz’s common sense was just another thing cultivated within the Imperial Military. At least, Goz did not think that was everything. Only, since she was obeyed by the flock of flying dragons, Madelyn should understand the importance of acting as a group.

In reality, at Goz’s explanation, Madelyn slightly nodded her chin.

Goz: “I see. It is good that you understand. Well, let me ask once again. Just what in the world were you doing? If it is just that you got lost along the way, then…”

Madelyn: “—I, the dragon, was in the Demon City.”

Goz: “…What?”

It would have been fine if she was just unfamiliar with the geography, and was delayed in converging.

However, her reply betrayed his expectations, and looking up to Goz, who did not believe his ears, Madelyn repeated the same explanation once more.

Madelyn: “I, the dragon, was in the Demon City. —That woman, she told me to convey something.”

Goz: "…"

That instant, Goz hesitated on whether he should reprimand Madelyn.

However, that which should take priority here was not correcting Madelyn's common sense, nor was it her arbitrary actions that disregarded the strategic plan. The maximum priority was the careful examination of the information she had returned with.

Having mentioned "that woman", Goz immediately guessed just who that was referring to.

Therefore…

Goz: "Let us hear it. Just what in the world did that she-fox tell you?"

Madelyn: "—The lives of the soldiers who fled the fortress."

Goz: "…"

Madelyn: "The soldiers who fled the fortress, until all of them lose their lives, she has no intention of stopping."

Goz narrowed his eyes at the words Madelyn conveyed dispassionately, and he placed his hand over his mouth. While feeling the sensation of his beard in his palm, he silently ruminated.

Kafma: "The soldiers of the fortress… It can't be, General First-Class Goz!"

Goz: "I understand. —Though, I have my doubts on what the purpose of starting this rebellion was."

Goz gave a low response to Kafma, who raised his voice upon hearing the same report.

Killing all the soldiers of the fortress, Yorna Mishigure was disturbing the reign of Vincent, the Emperor. Just what was she thinking when she started this insurrection, and just what did she intend on using to conclude it?

It was none other than Madelyn who had spoke about a part of that, but…

Goz: "—Before we invade the Demon City, there is now a need for us to consult His Excellency."

Then, with a shameful state of mind, Goz glared over at the Demon City visible in the distance.

13

???: "—The lives of the fortress' soldiers, was it?"

???: "I would have to say that it is out of the question, isn't it? Such a demand, I can hardly even call it a demand."

Hearing the information sent from the fortress on the front lines of the Demon City, even the Crystal Palace of the Imperial Capital silently wavered.

Sitting at the desk furnished inside the rather bland office, Vincent looked away from the stern face of Goz which was visible through the mirror, and went into careful thought.

Facing the mirror in his place, Chisha Gold spoke to Goz.

The completely white man worked as the Emperor's Military Advisor, and as he caressed his sharp chin with his hand,

Chisha: "It is the way of the Empire to value those who are strong… Be that as it may, it would be troubling if people thought that all sorts of recklessness will fulfill their selfishness. First of all, speaking of that logic…"

???: "It would be strange if all my desires weren't fulfilled, right?!"

Chisha: "…"

Vincent: "Goz, shut that imbecile up. He is a nuisance to the discussion."

In place of the silent Chisha, Vincent issued instructions to the other side of the mirror. Then, there was a response of "As you wish", and he subsequently understood that the frivolous voice had grown distant.

The Conversation Mirror was an indispensable Meteor for communication over long distances, but its only flaw was that complete idiots who he had taken the trouble to keep at a distance were able to exchange words with him like this.

In any case…

???: "—It may be a little rash to dismiss General First-Class Yorna's demands as merely a joke."

Vincent: "Ho, even though that is information brought back by the one you endorsed, you are quite devoted."

???: "In this situation, the source would be more important than the one who brought it back, wouldn't it? Of course, I cannot say that I do not see this as favorably as the recommender."

Vincent: "Hmm. Rather than the one who brought it back, the one who sent her back with it would be more pertinent."

Snorting his nose, Vincent's sharp gaze was met by a bow from Berstetz, whose face was deep with wrinkles.

Gathered in one room of the Crystal Palace were the Prime Minister, the Military Advisor, and the Emperor. Carefully examining the information sent across the Conversation Mirror, it could be said that there were enough intellectuals to inform the group attacking the Demon City of their next course of action.

Naturally, the first thing on the agenda was to determine the intentions of Yorna Mishugure, who had used Madelyn Eschart to deliver a message.

Chisha: "I find it difficult to laugh it off as merely an act of disturbance. After all, if it was not for Madelyn-dono acting independently, that demand would not have had a chance to be conveyed."

Berstetz: “I wonder about that. In war, the way of ending it would have been something thought of at the time of commencement. I may be lacking in knowledge, but would it not be the same for an insurrection? In other words…”

Vincent: “From the beginning, she had planned to present a compromise to end the battle, hm?”

The three of them faced each other, and here they surmised the true intentions behind Yorna’s clear demand.

Of course, the worst answer would always be that it was thoughtlessly at random, but Vincent did not see that as a serious possibility. For the Nine Divine Generals chosen as the height of military power, he was consistent in his plans to make each of their intentions come true.

The only exception to that was the First, Cecilus Segmunt.

The problem was…

Vincent: “—What does this have to do with the lives of the fortress’ soldiers?”

At the start of this insurrection, the definitive way of ending it was the demand for the troops of the fortress. Only, they had not been chosen as a sacrifice to interfere with Vincent and the Imperial Capital.

There was a reason why they must be sacrificed. That was the presumed course of events.

Vincent: “Status on Groovy Gumlet, who was dispatched to the west?”

Chisha: “There is kindling for a revolt on-site. It is not a situation we can move.”

Vincent: “Olbart Dunkelkenn, who was absent from the conference?”

Berstetz: “I heard that he is dealing with an epidemic in his village.

He also said that he was getting older, but he has been working for over twenty years longer than I have. I don't think I can say anything too reckless."

Vincent: "Is the fortress in the immediate vicinity of the Demon City, ruled over by Yorna Mishigure, Chaosflame?"

Berstetz: "Indeed. The furthest reaches of the Empire, one of the few places where demi-humans and tribes deliberately choose to migrate to. Despite that, since nobody except Yorna-dono causes such problems that seem problematic, let me just say that it is an abnormal land."

Vincent: "Three hundred of the fortress' soldiers have died, and there were ten remaining individuals missing."

Berstetz: "The horrific situation was enough to make them want to turn away. Without leaving out a single person, it seems all of them had their heads carefully crushed. —Your Excellency?"

Indifferently grasping the information he should continue to contemplate, Vincent had an unusually long thought.

Even if he called it a "long thought", that would not exceed ten seconds for Vincent. The Emperor's brain would draw the best conclusion for everything in an instant, so it was just unusual for a thought to take ten seconds.

And then…

Vincent: "—The survivor of the dragonkin, you did well to find her."

He threw in a topic that would catch Berstetz off guard, however, Berstetz's expression did not waver.

With a "No, no", the gray-haired old man shook his head,

Berstetz: "The discovery and assignment of talents who are hard to come by, that is an indispensable factor of the Empire's prosperity, after all. I, too, am extremely relieved that I was able to fulfill part of my duty as Prime Minister by recommending a talented individual like that to Your Excellency.”

Vincent: “Hm, you say some clever things. However, this time I shall let you be of use to me.”

Berstetz: “As you wish.”

Displaying loyalty to the extent of transparency, Berstetz deeply bowed. Seeing that with his own eyes, Vincent called out to his right-hand man with “Chisha.”

Chisha: “Yes. What is it, Your Excellency?”

Vincent: “Head for the location. You should have already realized what I desire.”

Chisha: “You are evaluating me too highly. Simply giving me a clear order would allow me to complete this without any unnecessary worries.”

Vincent: “If you display a half-hearted face, it will be taken advantage of. At most, you should worry about that.”

Not receiving a full report, Chisha covered his face with his hands in a grandiose gesture that his hopes had been suppressed. Of course, Vincent did not retract his opinion there, nor did he glance at the dejection of the Emperor’s right-hand man.

Instead, Vincent once again directed his attention to the Conversation Mirror.

Vincent: “As you heard. That which you must do has not changed. Capture the Demon City, and inform Yorna Mishigure that she has overstepped her bounds.”

Goz: “Yessir! I understand! …That and, Your Excellency…”

Vincent: “What?”

On the other side of the Conversation Mirror, the attitude of the vigorous Goz became gentle. At Vincent, who frowned at that appearance, Goz puffed up his thick chest, and, Goz: “Forgive my rudeness for taking up your time. General Second-Class Kafma Irulux has requested to be granted a direct exchange of words with Your Excellency.”

Vincent: “Kafma Irulux? I don’t mind. It would be best for him to step before the mirror.”

Goz: “Yes, Immediately! In the meantime…”

Cecilus: “Hello Hello! Your Excellency, Your Excellency! There’s something I want to ask!”

Turning up to replace Goz was Cecilus, who should have been pulled back.

Misjudging the distance with the Conversation Mirror, the strongest swordsman of Vollachia had his face reflected quite largely on the mirror’s surface, and he quite literally ignored the proper sense of distance with the Emperor as he hurled out words.

Vincent: “If there was someone who could behead you, you would be punished on charges of disrespect.”

Cecilus: “You’re talking about things that can’t happen again! So, this is something I wanna hear, and even though it seems like we’ll be directly clashing with Yorna-san soon, is there anything you would like me to tell her?”

Vincent: “…”

Cecilus: “Come on, Your Excellency, doesn’t Yorna-san just want you to pay her some mind? This may be the final chance in this life, and I was thinking that she may be glad if you had some words that I could tell her so we can fight with no regrets.”

For a reason in a completely different dimension than the concerns of an ordinary person, Cecilus declared that he wanted to be given the Emperor’s words. Due to the difference with Goz’s formal register from just before, Vincent unconsciously let a laugh slip.

Of course, merely letting that slip, he did not let anyone see his figure with loosened lips, but…

Vincent: “Fine, there are some words I will have you deliver. It would do you well to carefully fulfill your role as a messenger.”

Cecilus: “Gotcha, you can leave it to me! How very extravagant, this is undoubtedly the feeling of being a messenger for His Excellency the Emperor.”

Vincent: “Do not mess it up. Then, when that is over you can promptly return to your original duty. You are—”

Cecilus: “—The drawn blade of Your Excellency. Of course, I’ll certainly bear that in mind.”

He was usually a hopelessly insensitive man, but for his judgment to be good here like this, he must have worked every part of his brain. Unfortunately, there were too many things Vincent had to do, so he was unable to investigate that thoroughly.

The Military Advisor and the Prime Minister, while receiving both of their gazes, Vincent solemnly chose his words.

The words to deliver would be straightforward, and above all else, would make the intention clear, so putting in some disdain towards the way of being of the rebel in question, they would be—.

Vincent: “Deliver my words alongside a blade. For that is precisely the meaning that should dwell within my blades.”

14

—Firing the opening shot of the decisive battle, lightning ran through the neighborhood that had become a battlefield.

Where many demi-humans chaotically existed alongside each other, the Demon City of Chaosflame was aptly teased to be the Chaotic City.

Buildings without a sense of unity crowded together, and the townscape had scaffoldings and extensions to buildings whimsically repeated over each other, so the name Chaotic was an adequately strange embodiment for it.

Even if one did not have a shred of interest in the scenery of the city, that sense of disorder would captivate one's eyes for a while. Although, that attention would not last long due to the noise pollution of the shadow running directly below.

Cecilus: "Well, it sure feels good to be the first to arrive, as expected! The rare chance to battle a fellow Divine General, there's no way that I'll let that slip! Ah, messing around with you is a different case though, Anya!"

Arakiya: "Die."

Kicking off the ground with the sole of his zori, the impudent speech of Cecilus as he fiercely cut through the wind thawed the city. Keeping up with that speed, Arakiya replied as she frowned her finely-shaped eyebrows.

It may sound like a terribly leisurely conversation, but both of them were among the Empire's strongest, and the events that occurred around them in this period were extraordinary enough to live up to their value.

Cecilus: "Whoa there, all you minor characters, excuse me. The main act is ahead of here, so let's settle this in between the lines!"

Then, accompanying a logic incomprehensible to a normal person, a slashing attack ran through the sky.

Lighting that could be missed by blinking struck down the figures blocking the path one after the other, and being unable to be touched by anyone, even its afterglow could not be caught up with as it scattered a bloody air.

And, for those lucky enough to not being standing in the lightning's path…

Arakiya: "In the way."

The incessant downpour of flame orbs that accompanied that direct phrase thoroughly burned through every bit of hostility that leaked out.

The one to accomplish that, her own legs clad in flame, was the Spirit Eater, who was flying without the need to flap wings like a bird or flying dragon would.

Cecilus and Arakiya, the two Divine Generals were unbeatable, and they traversed the townscape of the Demon City with a tremendous vigor. However…

Cecilus: "Even though this a rare rematch with Yorna-san, I don't get why I had to be accompanied by a kid like you, Anya!"

Arakiya: "I should be the one saying that."

Cecilus: "Goz-san sure doesn't have faith in us. If things go wrong now and Yorna-san goes to the other side, then I really don't understand why you came with me, jeez!"

Quarreling without any intention of cooperating, Arakiya sighed as she faced Cecilus.

Arakiya going together with Cecilus was the result of obeying Goz, the commanding officer. Honestly, since Arakiya did not have the brain to think about tactics, she was only able to make any objections based on emotion.

Regardless, if the tactics were for the sake of winning, she would reluctantly take on the role of Cecilus's chaperone. Ideally, it would be very nice if the victory was in a way that made Cecilus bitter.

For that purpose, ending it with a swing and a miss like this would be the easiest, but…

???: "—You've been behaving terribly restlessly, haven't you?"

Coming out of the city gates, Cecilus stopped in his tracks as he brazenly ran down the main street.

The owner of that voice was standing dauntingly in the middle of the main street as she fixed her eyes on them, a glamorous woman clad in a kimono. —At a single glance, Arakiya grasped that she was a formidable enemy.

Arakiya: “That’s…”

Cecilus: “Yep, that’s right, Anya. —Greetings, Greetings! Long time no see, Yorna-san!”

With her legs transformed into flames, Arakiya controlled her stance mid-air. Cecilus moved ahead of that floating girl, and gave a big wave of his hand to the woman blocking their way—Yorna Mishigure.

At Cecilus’s cheerful greeting, Yorna shook the kiseru within her hand, and,

Yorna: “Same as always, you are a man with a big voice. For you to be dispatched to me again, His Excellency must take quite a liking to you, doesn’t he?”

Cecilus: “His Excellency to me? No no, that’s not it, that’s not it. Whether he takes a liking to someone or not isn’t something you can gauge. That’s why he has a frown all year round! He is the peak of pessimism!”

Yorna narrowed her eyes at Cecilus, who put his finger on his brow as he spoke his thoughts.

From Arakiya’s perspective, those were thoughtless words with no value of listening, but with a face that seriously received that reply, Yorna glanced over towards Arakiya.

It was just as if those eyes were asking Arakiya for her opinion, and were a little troubled.

Yorna: “I believe it is my first time meeting you. Do you know about me?”

Arakiya: “I’ve heard. Arakiya. Best regards from now on.”

Yorna: “It was curt, but you properly introduced yourself. How very polite of you.”

Waving her arm and rolling up the sleeves of her kimono, Yorna dropped to her knees on the spot and gently bowed. She had given a courteous reception to that polite introduction, and she continued to speak with "So then", and,

Yorna: "Excuse me, there was a dragonkin girl who showed up here some time ago, did she pass on the message?"

Arakiya: "Message…"

Cecilus: "Ah, yes yes, we heard! It's the thing Madelyn-san told us about. Of course, Goz-san properly raised an inquiry about it to His Excellency."

Cecilus vigorously patted his own chest, and gave a powerful answer to Yorna's question. Yorna's eyebrows quivered at that reply, and a slight heat of emotion flashed within her gaze.

From Arakiya's eyes, it seemed like that was a glimpse of her hopes.

In that case, Yorna would probably be disappointed.

The reason was…

Yorna: "What was His Excellency's reply?"

Cecilus: "It was for the lives of all the soldiers from the fortress, right? Ahem. —It is needless to take this into consideration. You can atone for your foolish hopes through your own blood. That's what he said. Did I resemble him?"

After clearing his throat, Cecilus made an impression of the Emperor, Vincent. Such a thing was daring, but his imitation did not resemble him in the slightest. It was dubious if he was even trying to imitate him.

Arakiya was shocked at that recklessness, and Yorna, whose hopes were eradicated, took a small sigh, and,

Yorna: "Then, my answer is plain and simple… atonement shall be had through blood. The blood spilled from those who I love, through one-thousand-fold of that blood."

Cecilus: "Eh, it seems like we angered her. Anya, do you think it's my fault?”

Arakiya: “For the most part, it’s the fault of Cecilus and His Excellency.”

Feeling the sensation of the heat in the atmosphere simmering, Arakiya tightly gripped the long and narrow wooden branch in her hand.

Seeing Yorna leisurely shake her head as she silently raised her fighting spirit, Cecilus played innocent saying “My my, I’m beat”, and drew his katana of a blueish white blade.

Cecilus: “Well, I had intended on fighting from the start, so I think this saves me quite a bit of hassle! Alright, I’ll have you as my opponent, Yorna-san!—Blue Lightning, Cecilus Segmunt.”

Arakiya: “—Spirit Eater, Arakiya.”

Ceclius leaned forward, and Arakiya increased the vigor of the flames her legs were clad in.

Facing both of their fighting spirits head-on, Yorna smiled without showing even a hint of fear,

Yorna: “—The Flamboyant, Yorna Mishigure. Won’t you do your best to vibrantly entertain me?”

15

The clash of weapons could be heard coming from the center of the city, and at that intensity, Goz knew that the true battle had begun.

As expected, Yorna had gone to the main gate; that reasonable decision was not surprising. Of course, even if she came towards them, he would engage her as one of the Nine Divine Generals using all of his power.

Goz: “It seems like First-Class Generals Cecilus and Arakiya have encountered Yorna Mishigure.”

???: “Unh, Is that true? How did you…”

Goz: “You can tell if you strain your ears. The clash of weapons can be heard.”

At Goz’s words, Kafma, who was running beside him, widened his eyes in surprise. He put his hands to his ears, and strained them as Goz had said to do, but,

Kafma: “Did you really hear it? Even in the midst of this melee?”

Goz: “Sound has all sorts of peculiarities. I may look like this, but I am quite fond of musical instruments.”

He was often told he was not suited to it, but Goz enjoyed music. Listening and playing, he thought of both rather fondly. Additionally, the occasion where he met his wife was actually a recital.

Music was something that enriched Goz’s life. Therefore, Goz was able to provide support when it came to the sounds of the battlefield.

The fact that he was born with ears able to recognize sounds on a level higher than average could be called one of the few treasures Goz had.

Goz: “However, this town is more troublesome than I had heard.”

Kafma: “Yes, I feel the same way.”

While speaking, Goz and Kafma advanced into the Demon City at the vanguard of the Imperial Soldiers. Meeting them as they stormed in from the back gate, the structure of the monstrous city of Chaosflame seemed to lead the invaders astray.

It was likely that the creator did not design it with any intentions of obstructing invaders. However, that townscape was just cobbled together based on each miscellaneous thought, and the feeling on that day.

So then, the people who lived in such a chaotically jumbled town, were residents befitting of the term chaos.

???: “OOOOOOHHHH—!!”

And, howling as they charged in, the residents of the Demon City did not seem to wield typical weapons.

Without wearing full armor, these people were no less powerful than the regular soldiers with just their vigor and morale. That was not a mere recklessness, the definite power that supported them was…

Kafma: “—The secret art controlled by General First-Class Yorna.”

Goz: “I am unfamiliar with the details of the technique, but all the residents of the Demon City possess an unusual strength. Therefore…”

Cutting off his own words, Goz jerked his chin forward, indicating towards the group of soldiers who directly intercepted the charge from the residents. —No, they tried to intercept it.

???: “Uwaaaaaa—?!”

The subsequent instant, five of the Demon City residents, each with a red flame alight in a single eye, blew away some soldiers readied with a large shield. Even after that, the charge of the man pushing forward could not be stopped.

Such a scene unfolded at each battle formation attacking the city.

Kafma: “That is the source of the Demon City’s impregnability…!”

Goz: “Yes, that’s right. It may vary slightly in each individual, but it seems all of the residents of Chaosflame have strength equal to ten soldiers. Therefore, General Second-Class Kafma, the power of both you and I is required.”

Kafma: “…”

Firmly gritting his molars, Kafma stroked his tattooed arms in dread. Seeing the hazy unease in that gesture, Goz questioned him with “Do you have any fear?”

Hearing that, Kafma suddenly raised his face, and,

Kafma: “The likes of fear, I have not!”

Goz: “However, in that case, why did you tell His Excellency that you are not qualified to be a Divine General?”

Kafma: “That’s…”

Breaking off his words, a grimace was etched into Kafma’s earnest face.

Before the battle had started, Kafma had spoken directly to Vincent across the Conversation Mirror, and had refused the promotion to Divine General recommended by Goz.

As the recommender, he certainly felt disgrace. However, Goz was not asking for an apology from Kafma. That was something Kafma understood.

What he wanted was not words of apology, but rather the intentions of Kafma who had reached that decision.

Kafma: “I thought that it was for His Excellency’s… not just that, but for the Vollachian Empire’s sake. During the times that are important, it would be difficult for an insufficient General to act in accordance with His Excellency’s will.”

Goz: “—. So, do you not intend on aiming any higher than this?”

Kafma: “No, this is just about my weak-minded self of the present.”

With a light housed in his dignified eyes, Kafma spoke as he looked directly in Goz’s face.

Declining the position of the glorious Nine Divine Generals, that was the resolve of the General Second-Class who took the path of righteousness and brought disgrace to Goz Ralfon, Kafma Irulux.

If he did not recognize that, the honor of Goz, who was appointed for the position of General First-Class, would collapse.

Kafma: “—Without hesitation, for the glorious sake of the Sacred Vollachian Empire, and the one who rules over it, His Excellency the Emperor!”

At Kafma’s grandiose declaration, Goz laughed with a “Fuhahahahaha!”, and,

Goz: “In that case, puff out your chest, General Second-Class Kafma. —Only when you achieve a military service that you and those around you are satisfied with, will I be able to regain my honor from recommending you for the Ninth ! “

Kafma: “Yes! Absolutely!”

Giving that response, transparent insect wings sprouted from Kafma’s back, and his slender body soared high up to the sky.

Seeing that in the corner of his eye, Goz hoisted his specialized weapon—his golden mace, and magnificently joined the battlefield. Violently rampaging, for the sake of demonstrating the eminence of His Excellency the Emperor, he played his instrument at loud volume.

What remained was…

Goz: “—Here, you are at the mercy of His Excellency. No matter the outcome, if it is to His Excellency’s wishes, we troops shall obey and wager our lives.”

16

At the sizzling smell of the burning battle, Madelyn Eschart snorted her nose.

The fight had broken out in the distant Demon City, a large amount of blood was spilled, and lives were lost in vain.

However, that was not a rare thing. No matter the place, lives would be lost, and no matter the place, blood would be spilled. That was no different in the fortress where Madelyn remained.

Madelyn: “…”

There was a terribly deep stench of blood hanging in the air of the fortress.

As if it had been exposed to a fierce attack, the entire fortress seemed to be in a partially destroyed state. The gathered soldiers had departed for battle, and the ones who remained were the minimum amount, so it was likely that this building would be abandoned.

It would be preferable for her to flatten it as a distraction from her worries, such a thought had floated to her head, though.

Madelyn: "I'm being friggin' stupid, aren't I? I, the dragon, should act more dignified."

Cautioning herself, she calmed her heart, which had become emotional.

Going on an emotional rampage, and snapping to bite at anyone was something she must not do. It was not that it was a bad thing, but she had heard that it was something which would deny her welcome to the world of humans.

She did not really intend on pandering to humans, but it would be troublesome if she was ostracized from them since they were so large in number.

In addition…

Madelyn: "…No one friggin' told me that such a human would be there."

As she muttered, Madelyn thought of the blue-haired man who wore the katana on his hip.

He was a person with an easygoing attitude and a smile that would not fade, but Madelyn understood that that man was an aberrant monster with a single glance. That superficiality, too, must have been a mimicry.

That was a negative emotion that Madelyn, descendent of the dragonkin, should have never experienced.

Dragons were always mighty and magnificent, and they must reign at the summit of all living things. In spite of that, she was overawed by that single person.

Madelyn: “It’s because I, the dragon, am still friggin’ small.”

Staring down at her hand, Madelyn’s murmur was filled with frustration.

If she displayed the intrinsic power of the dragonkin, she would have no reason to be afraid of merely a single human. However, Madelyn was still young, and as a dragonkin she was unripe. For that reason, she had disgraced the honor of her race.

In order to clear away that disgrace, she would eventually have to confront that katana user…

???: “—Aha, I see. That is indeed a figure that can be recognized at a single glance. Even having wings sprouting from your back, I am certainly impressed.”

Madelyn: “Kyaa!”

Leaning against the broken wall of the fortress while absorbed in her thoughts, Madelyn received a jolt to her shoulders. Her expression turned sour upon letting out an unpleasant voice to the person who had called out from behind her.

Madelyn scowled at the man quite a bit taller than herself, who had insolently mentioned her wings.

Madelyn: “Are you bluntly evaluating this dragon’s wings? Don’t get carried away, lowly human.”

Man: “Dear me, I have been terribly rude, allow me to apologize. It seems a little bit of my common curiosity had come to my mind.”

Giving a bow out of consideration, a prominent man with a pure-white impression answered Madelyn.

Rather, his strange appearance would be better described as having nothing except white. His hair and face were white, his clothes and shoes were all white, his appearance was just as if he had deliberately abandoned his own Color.

It could be said that the man clad in the shiny golden armor could be understood at a glance, but indeed, it was certainly an outward appearance that could be understood at a glance. Without a doubt, that person was precisely who Madelyn was supposed to converge with at the fortress.

Man: "…"

Narrowing his pupils, the man's calm attitude irritated Madelyn.

Yet again, this was someone who possessed the courage to not waver with Madelyn as their opponent. The glistening mistress of that stone castle, the man of golden armor who she met at the fortress, that man who smelled like the forest and that naked woman, it was the same for each of them.

Even leaving out that abnormal katana user, there were a plentiful amount of unpleasant people.

There were probably dragons who would extoll them as brave warriors. However, Madelyn had not matured to that extent. She believed that dragons were to be feared and respected.

Therefore…

Madelyn: "You, crouch down."

Man: "…Crouch down, that is a rather odd thing to say. For what reason should I do such a thing?"

Madelyn: "Never mind that, just crouch down. Will you not listen to this dragon?"

Pointing to the exposed dirt on the ground, Madelyn gave an unyielding order.

The man hesitated for a moment at that order, and then obediently crouched down on one knee. Then, as it finally seemed like she was looking down on him, Madelyn crossed her arms and got arrogant.

Madelyn: “Do not speak as if you are above this dragon. You and those other guys don’t understand the greatness of this dragon.”

Man: “—. By the way, these other people you speak of are?”

Madelyn: “The guys who were in this fortress. The man with shiny golden armor, and the naked woman. There was also that katana user.”

Man: “They are quite the memorable bunch, but having to clean up after them like this makes me want to resent the alignment of the stars. —Most of all…”

Madelyn: “—?”

Madelyn frowned as the man who had assumed an air of importance cut his words off there. Then, the man looked up at Madelyn as he kneeled, and on that white face, the sole color of his golden eyes wavered.

Man: “Somehow, it seems that it is my job to go around cleaning up after them. Regarding your anger, I am foolishly wondering about whether I should comply with it.”

Madelyn: “…”

Madelyn understood that the man, directly looking into her eyes, did not seem like his heart was kneeling, so she sensed that it had become meaningless for her to physically look down on him.

Unlike dragons, humans were liars. —Even without any vassalage in their hearts, they could kneel before someone without hesitation.

Madelyn: “…That’s enough. Stand.”

Man: “Oh, are you already satisfied?”

Madelyn: “I understood that crouching down means nothing for you. From now on, I’ll teach you about this dragon’s greatness.”

Man: “If you do that, I would feel truly very grateful. Whoops, I almost forgot to say.”

Gaining Madelyn’s permission, the man wiped his knees as he stood up, and bowed once again. She was sick and tired of that gesture, but her dignity prevented her from flaring up at that attitude of paying courtesy.

Giving a dubious smile, the man began to introduce himself as he looked down upon Madelyn.

Man: “My name is Chisha Gold. I have received the orders of His Excellency the Emperor, wise and arrogant, and I have directly obeyed them to reach this far away place. Please, I look forward to working with you.”

Madelyn: “Understood. This dragon will not introduce herself.”

Chisha: “I would be troubled if I did not know you, but I have indeed heard about you, Madelyn-dono. —Now then, where shall we begin? We do not have much time left.”

Looking all around the vicinity, the white man—Chisha, plainly asked.

Madelyn snorted her nose at those words, and then pointed to her nose. Therein lay the reason why the trouble had been taken to leave Madelyn far away from the battlefield.

Therefore…

Madelyn: “This dragon’s nose shall serve its purpose. I’ll teach you that I’m just of a different quality from the rest of you.”

Displaying her sharp fangs, in accordance with the pride of the dragonkin, Madelyn declared so.

17

???: “She has said that she will not stop until the fortress’ soldiers have all been rooted out. I have informed Cecilus to reply with “atone with your blood”, but you should understand what you have to do.”

With that, he wondered if being ordered to the on-site location should be called proof of trust. Or, perhaps he should lament about the undeserved pressure he was receiving from a powerful person he should not disobey; he struggled to make a judgment.

Even if he wanted to consult someone about this matter, he had ascended to a position where there was no one above himself he could consult. With a position he had not particularly desired, he found himself feeling terribly suffocated.

In any case, there were responsibilities that came with the position he was in. He must carry out the necessary work.

At the very least, those were the professional ethics of the man known as Chisha Gold.

Chisha: "Though, this appears to be a somewhat poor situation."

Madelyn: "—? Did you say something to this dragon?"

Chisha: "No, I was merely talking to myself. Please don't worry about me."

Shrugging his slender shoulders, Chisha's answers prompted a curt "Is that so?" from Madelyn. From there, she placed her hands on the ground, and promptly returned to sniffing her nose to chase down the smell.

That keen work ethic was something out of following the example of the many other Divine Generals. However, Chisha thought that looking at it from a pure outside perspective would probably receive the worst responses. After all, Madelyn, who appeared to be young, was sniffing the bare earth, and Chisha was following from behind her as she crawled around.

The dragonkin had a strong sense of self-importance, and they showed no mercy to those who dishonored their pride.

That rumor had not differed from his first impression, but that changed immediately as they came here.

Madelyn got offended by people looking at her horns and wings with curious eyes, however, it did not seem like her pride was especially damaged when seen crawling around on the bare earth.

That area could probably be called a difference in the sensitivities of humans and dragonkin. Thanks to that, it could be said that this manhunt would proceed fine if Chisha ignored the lack of respectability.

Chisha: “If Groovy were here, that lack of respectability would likely be forgotten, but… His Excellency is also persistently ill-natured. I do not think that he designed this expedition for this purpose, but…”

As one of the Nine Divine Generals, the sense of smell of the hyena-man Groovy Gumlet, was preeminent even among fellow demi-humans of beast-human lineage. He could probably catch someone if they fled from one end of the Empire to the other, so much so that that unfunny funny anecdote was circulated about.

And contrary to expectations, Chisha knew that it went beyond a kind of joke.

Chisha: “Even when I am substituting for His Excellency, if I do not devote one hundred percent, he will see through me.”

From the perspective of Chisha, who during times of emergency worked as Vincent’s body double, Groovy’s sense of smell was the ultimate indicator of whether he had been successful in the substitution.

Just as one would expect from the person Vincent had named to be the first to join the Nine Divine Generals, outside of Chisha and Cecilus, who were pieces under his control from the start.

As a stand-in to carry out Groovy’s function, Chisha was slightly doubtful of Madelyn’s ability. The duties of a Divine General cannot be fulfilled simply by being a rare dragonkin.

—Currently, Chisha and Madelyn are pursuing the survivors of the fortress which was in a catastrophic state after experiencing an attack from Yorna Mishigure.

However, they were not looking for outsiders who reported on the destruction of the fort, but the ten missing names who truly seemed to have escaped the disastrous scene—the survivors from hell.

Chisha: “The fortress suffered annihilation, and it was reported that three hundred soldiers were massacred. However…”

In military terminology, the word Annihilation had a slight difference that the general perception of the word.

Among troops, the word Annihilation meant a state where the ability to continue any further combat became difficult. That definition varies from nation to nation, but in the Vollachian Empire, if ninety out of one hundred people die, it can be considered annihilation.

In other words…

Madelyn: “There are ten survivors. That’s what you, and the most eminent man on the surface are thinking.”

Sniffing her nose, Madelyn picked up on the end of Chisha’s thoughts as she followed the scent. At her words, Chisha responded “That is so.” and propped his finger up to his chin, and,

Chisha: “Taking the disastrous scene of the fortress and the fact that their opponent was General First-Class Yorna into account, one would expect a lesser amount, but just who is it that remains, I wonder. Besides…”

Madelyn: “Besides?”

Chisha: “You may find this surprising from General First-Class Yorna, but she has a habit of loosening up on her final move. As you know, she even went as far as driving you away and entrusting you with a message, Madelyn-dono.”

Madelyn: “It-It ain’t like I got driven away!”

Chisha: “ain’t?”

In a flurried state, Madelyn’s change in speaking style caused Chisha to tilt his head. Though, Madelyn immediately mended her expression, and while displaying the sharp fangs within her mouth,

Madelyn: “Don’t friggin’ pry… Don’t pry into unnecessary things. Trying to peer behind this dragon’s scales will just result in your life being shortened.”

Chisha: “My goodness, I shall keep your advice within my heart… I fully understand the meaning of that advice, but may I quickly ask something?”

Madelyn: “…”

Suddenly turning to face forward, Madelyn resumed the manhunt on all fours. Considering the fact that his request was not verbally declined as a good thing, Chisha let out a “Now…” and went into rumination.

Madelyn Eschart had been recommended for the Nine Divine Generals by Berstetz. With her peculiar traits as a dragonkin, the details of how she made contact with Berstetz were unclear.

In the first place…

Chisha: “Madelyn-dono, what were the details of you undertaking this duty on this occasion?”

Madelyn: “…I heard that senile old fool’s request. If I accepted that request, he said he would become an ally of this dragon.”

Chisha: “An ally, was it? Prime Minister Berstetz would?”

Madelyn: “Was that his name? If you mean the second-most eminent man on the surface, then yes.”

If the Emperor was called the most eminent man on the surface, then calling the Imperial Prime Minister the second-most eminent man would not be considered as a mistaken thought, at least within the Vollachian Empire.

For the Nine Divine Generals, who held equal influence as the Prime Minister in military affairs, Cecilus, who had the seat of First, had let his own influence weaken.

Not to mention, there was nobody who thought that Cecilus was the second-most eminent man within the Empire.

Cecilus: “Ehh? I’m eminent? Please stop that, Chisha. Do you think I’m concerned with titles saying I’m eminent or not? My position of General First-Class, too, was given to me just because I’m strong, and in the first place, being an eminent person doesn’t really suit the leading actor. Rather, that sorta person seems like the one to get cut down!”

And, he clearly imagined the response of the person in question within his mind.

As expected from a relationship that had persisted for ten years, he was fed up with the fact that he had recreated him more than he needed to.

Madelyn: “But, it’s just as that senile old fool said.”

Leaving Chisha’s inner thoughts aside, Madelyn suddenly muttered that.

Chisha raised his eyebrow at that mutter, and Madelyn sniffed as she continued to face forward,

Madelyn: “This dragon’s blood is rare. Those I meet on the surface would probably look at this dragon unusually. They would ask to know about this and that, but I’ve been told to not take offense and gnaw their heads off.”

Chisha: “I see. I, too, would like to stay out of getting my head gnawed off.”

Madelyn: “Are there still things that you want to ask this dragon?”

Chisha: “Hmm, that is indeed the case.”

Since she had divulged that Bersetz had put an idea in her head, and also about the warning he gave her, Madelyn wanted Chisha to demarcate that he had no further intentions of having his questions answered.

Even for Chisha, it was not like Vincent had expressly ordered him to investigate her.

Therefore, it would not matter at all if he relinquished the opportunity to ask questions here.

However…

Chisha: “Yes, there are still things I would like to ask. Contrary to expectations, I have quite a nervous temperament, so in order to calm my small heart, I think that just gaining knowledge would be satisfactory.”

Madelyn: “You say some clever things. Don’t bother this dragon with useless questions.”

Chisha: “That is a matter of course. —Your origin, education, family structure, beliefs, favorite book, fighting style, the ecology of the dragonkin, the hometown of the dragonkin, what you like, what you dislike, your sense of justice, your sense of hatred, the number of times you eat per day, your sleeping hours, favorite food, dominant arm, dominant eye, whether you are diurnal or nocturnal, as well as many other various things.”

Madelyn: “…”

Chisha: “However, if I had to choose what I wanted to ask the most from among those…”

Chisha enumerated the things he wanted to know at length, then Madelyn stopped in her tracks and turned to look at him like he was a weirdo. That was a bit regrettable, but he thought it was the natural response, and continued.

Turning towards Madelyn, who was motionless as hatred floated to her eyes…

Chisha: “—Your name, I wonder about who gave it to you?”

Madelyn: “…Huh?”

Chisha: “I’m referring to your name. Madelyn Eschart, your name.”

That seemed to have been quite unexpected, as Madelyn's eyes greatly wavered with bewilderment and shock.

In accordance with her appearance, it was a childish reaction. Berstetz was prepared to make her hate her surroundings and keep her ignorant as a means to avoid having secrets exposed.

In reality, Chisha did not think he was gaining information that was hard to come by.

Only…

Chisha: "There are legends that the dragonkin, who are said to have perished, used to live together with a Dragon. I hear that among the Dragons, there are some that can understand words. Madelyn-dono, I have a suspicion that you received your name from a Dragon…"

Madelyn: "—Yer wrong."

Chisha: "Hm?"

Madelyn: "This dragon's name, it was somethin' this dragon received from her family."

Tightly placing her small hand onto her chest, Madelyn responded as if she was hiding something.

Chisha narrowed his eyes at the gentle sound of those words, as if they were delicately handling something fragile, and he easily believed that it was not a lie. In the first place, she probably would not lie.

Lies were the weapons of the weak, the invisible claws and fangs for the purpose of opposing the strong.

As a strong individual, she possessed visible claws and fangs, and had no reason to lie as a descendent of the dragonkin.

Madelyn: "…"

Thinking on the other hand, regardless of the name Madelyn, when touching on the family name of Eschart, what kind of benefits could be had? Chisha grew fed up with himself as he calmly thought about that.

Only, from the tone of her voice and side of her face, Chisha could sense that the Family which Madelyn was thinking of, was probably something truly irreplaceable to her.

In regards to that point, there was no difference between humans and dragonkin. —No,

Madelyn: "—For that reason, this dragon came to the surface."

Within the quiet words that followed, there was a cold heat that others must absolutely not pry into.

Upon hearing that, Chisha once again concluded that there was no difference between humans and dragonkin.

No matter what blood flows through them, no matter what lifestyle they pursue, the way of being for a Revenger was the same for all.

—The hatred that would not fade from within Madelyn's eyes, it was as if it was trying to make Chisha aware of that.

Madelyn: "…We're here."

When Chisha reached his conclusion, Madelyn stood back up after crawling on all fours. She clapped the dirt off her hands and nodded towards the entrance to the mountain trail, which led to the deep recesses of the mountains, dense with trees.

Giving a loose glance to the surroundings, the land was not located in a convenient place for habitation.

Madelyn: "There's humans that smell like the fortress, and a stench of blood mixed in. The people we're looking for are here."

Chisha: "Hm, I see. However, going inside the mountains would take quite a lot of effort. Personally, I don't have too much confidence in my legs."

Madelyn: "This dragon doesn't care about such things. Then, will you give up?”

Chisha: “No, no. Only, the trees and dirt here are wild, and it seems to be a mountain where no one is ever called in to tend to it… if Madelyn-dono would smoke out the people we are looking for from the mountain, it would be immensely helpful.”

Madelyn: “—Smoke them out from the mountain.”

The people they were looking for were lurking in the mountains, so a mountain hunt was unavoidable.

Unfortunately, there were no collaborators but Madelyn who could help Chisha with his duty this time. He wanted to lament about the harsh work environment, but most of the personnel were allocated to the attack on the Demon City, so he could not be rash with his words.

In that case, Chisha frantically worked his head, as he must take the best measures possible.

With the outstanding senses of his only collaborator, Madelyn, they uncovered the hiding place of the people they were looking for. Next up was to quickly smoke out the people they were looking for from the forest using her predominance.

Accepting Chisha’s request…

Madelyn: “—Do you find this dragon’s methods to be rough?”

Her golden eyes lit up with a blaze, and the girl turned back towards Chisha with her mouth forming a semi-circle.

That moment, as if beckoned by the girl’s smile, the sound of magnificent wings flapping descended from the high skies. Many of them piling on top of each other, it was a sight greater than the rumors that Chisha had heard, and they made a sound of splitting the very wind.

A flock of flying dragons totaling greater than thirty, that had descended to stand within Madelyn’s surroundings.

Madelyn: “This dragon’s hunting is ferocious. Don’t complain about it later.”

Madelyn gave a reminder to Chisha as she stroked the neck of the flying dragon that had descended to stand next to her. Accepting that dragonkin’s show of force, Chisha nodded with a “Yes”.

Then, taking a step to Madelyn’s side, he turned to face the forest.

Chisha: “It is unclear how much of the situation the fortress’ soldiers understand, but those who escaped from General First-Class Yorna, and those who are hiding in the forest cannot be unrelated. Consequently…”

Madelyn: “—?”

Cutting his words off, Chisha closed his eyes. Then, taking in a large breath…

Chisha: “—SOLDIERS OF THE EMPIRE, HIDING IN THE MOUNTAIN!! IF YOU HAVE PRIDE IN YOURSELVES AS SWORD WOLVES, COME OUT HERE AND GIVE YOUR EXPLANATIONS!!”

Madelyn: “…”

Chisha’s loud voice rattled the atmosphere, and reverberated even beyond the mountains.

This was not mercy or tolerance, but a necessary rite. To give a chance to explain themselves, at least for them to explain themselves as soldiers, in order for them to have a chance to protect their honor.

Whether providing that chance was something he should do, the scales within Chisha were not tipped to either side. Only, what had happened in that fortress, what had led to Yorna’s insurrection, Chisha had a guess.

If his guess was correct, then Chisha thought there would be no need to show them mercy.

Chisha: “Madelyn-dono, let us wait for a bit. If there is still no movement, I will leave you to deal with it, Madelyn-dono.”

While hearing his own voice echo within the mountains, Chisha sat down underneath a nearby tree. Looking at Chisha’s behavior, Madelyn exhaled quietly,

Madelyn: “Humans are so sluggish… Let me ask one thing.”

Chisha: “Whatever you like.”

Madelyn: “…A bit, what’s that?”

Madelyn frowned as she asked her question, and all of the flying dragons that had descended also titled their heads.

While observing the leadership of the girl who was obeyed by flying dragons, Chisha rubbed his own brow at Berstetz’s callous enforcement of ignorance.

A bit. Even though he had instructed that to Madelyn, she did not wait for a bit.

Then, exactly one moment later, the flying dragons attacked the mountain where the cowards hid. They probably tasted it there. The ferocity of flying dragons, and the terror of the dragonkin.

—As per the law of iron and blood, they would never show mercy to those who twisted their pride.

18

With a graceful swing of the arm, her white fingertips tore through the air.

She had movements which seemed like refined dancing, however, it brought about an unusual phenomenon that seemed like a dream or illusion.

???: “Dance.”

—The road bounced like a living creature, and the buildings hurriedly moved side to side like they had been freed from their restraints.

???: “Sing.”

—The scaffolds that had been spread throughout the city lost security and rained down, they were freed from the lack of freedom in a free fall, and freely began to fly around the air.

???: “Destroy.”

—The brick buildings, the colorful glasswork, as well as the cultivated trees and flowers, their original way of being was bent, and freely transformed into a rampage.

Right in the middle of the wide and large street, in the surroundings of Yorna as she waved around the kiseru in her hand and danced, the townscape changed its form, buildings and scaffoldings danced in the air, and trees and flowers blocked the way like soldiers.

???: “This is…”

???: “Well, ever the same, it feels unpleasant to have no idea what you’re doing! But at the same time, it’s a work of art that I can’t take my eyes off of! It is indeed quite splendid!”

With the ominous sight right before her eyes, Arakiya was considerably astonished. But, seeing Cecilus act in his usual manner beside her, she immediately discarded her discomposure.

She understood that the Flamboyant, Yorna Mishigure, was a powerful person who should not be looked down on.

Arakiya: “Besides, if it’s a weird technique, the old man is also like that.”

Using someone she knew as an example, Arakiya suppressed her own astonishment.

Seeing Arakiya recover at his side, Cecilus took one step forward—and disappeared.

Yorna: “—Hk.”

Then, the disappeared Cecilus appeared before Yorna's eyes, and his katana, unsheathed at lightning speed, quickly made its way through the many obstacles that came up to block his way, and finally arrived at Yorna's slender neck, ready to slice it off.

However…

Cecilus: "Ahh, ever the same, your neck has quite the solid protection."

Yorna: "Rather, it is your way of doing things that is ever the same. Haven't you learned from our past encounter that you cannot cut off my neck?"

Cecilus: "Nah, it's because the me from last time and the me this time are different. To be constantly developing every second of every day is the special privilege of the leading actor. Rather, every time I rise to the stage, I get more handsome!"

Yorna: "You are a man whose impudent speech never ceases."

Receiving Cecilus's blade on the back of her nape, it did not cut through even a thin layer of skin, let alone Yorna's whole neck. The result of the slashing attack was that of a faint red mark.

Cecilus had said that he had not been able to kill her in the past. — He had been speaking literally.

Yorna: "Shi!"

Directly after, Yorna repelled the katana with her kiseru, and fired her elbow at Cecilus's gyrating body.

Cecilus dropped down in the blink of an eye to dodge that, but chasing closely behind his afterglow like arrows were countless bricks—parts of the houses that had been taken apart, fired at Cecilus one after the other.

As they missed him, they bore large holes in the ground, and it was just as if there was a rampaging storm of cannonballs. Then, within those flying objects that rained down incessantly, it became clear that the bricks were only the beginning.

Cecilus: “Whoa, this has turned into quite the flashy development!”

Yorna: “At the rare chance to entertain the Empire’s strongest, I have no intentions of cutting corners.”

The innumerable scaffoldings that were laid out across the city came falling down on Cecilus, who was looking up overhead.

One by one, the great mass suddenly drew near him, for the purpose of crushing the lone man of Cecilus, the structure of the city changed and ungrudgingly came down on him, and came down on him, and came down on him—.

Cecilus: “Ta-Ta-ta-ta-ta-ta-ta-ta—!!”

As the gigantic attacks rained down, Cecilus acted not carefully, but fearlessly accelerated and evaded them.

The ground would quake each time the scaffoldings hit the ground, and the lighting would run through and trample the disarrayed scaffoldings. Then, while Cecilus was putting his life on the line by challenging the foot race…

Arakiya: “I’m also here.”

Swinging the branch in her hand, Arakiya felt the heat of death of the Micro Spirit she had captured within her body.

The ability of the Spirit Eater was to burn through the lives of captured spirits and manifest them. The Micro Spirit she had captured in preparation for the battle with Yorna, she would release the glimmer of its death here.

The Demon City that was extolled for its impregnability, it was for the purpose of defeating that land’s mistress in one fell swoop.

—Instantly, with Arakiya at the heart, an inferno that engulfed hundreds of meters began to overflow.

Yorna: “—This is…”

Burned by the heat and vigor of the overflowing inferno, Yorna raised her eyebrows in surprise.

Usually, flames would spread gradually, and the range of that spread was somewhat enlarged, but Arakiya's flames did not burn sluggishly.

She had captured the Micro Spirit of Fire, and using its accumulated power, the other Micro Spirits in the range to feel the sensation within the atmosphere all ignited together; it was a technique to thoroughly burn in one fell swoop.

With the high speed of the inferno's expansion and its tremendous firepower, Arakiya herself transformed into flame, and aimed for the enemy.

This was Arakiya's fighting style after capturing the Micro Spirit of Fire—.

Yorna: "I had not felt that she should be disdained as a mere girl, but…"

Arakiya: "I'm good at thoroughly roasting things."

Within the thunderous spread of flames, a bright red shone in Yorna's eyes as they harbored caution. Receiving that gaze, Arakiya felt no resistance to her explosive inferno.

The town and objects, within all sorts of things that were burning, the scorching heat of the flames did not reach Yorna.

Cecilus's blade had been unable to take off her head, as if her white skin had repelled it, and the flames were also—.

Cecilus: "Anya! Hey! I'm going to get cooked as well, you know?!"

Arakiya: "…I'll take up that opportunity."

Cecilus: "Argh, jeez, you aren't getting the message! I'm so sick of it!"

While getting shrouded in the same inferno, Cecilus's blade hummed as he ran, cutting the building directly before him in half in the blink of an eye. Jumping onto that cross section, he ran up, escaping the flames that scorched the ground and reached the skies of the city.

Jumping into the eye of the storm of raining scaffoldings and building materials, slashing attacks surged forth like a bolt of lightning.

—That instant, all of the objects were minced up, and made useless.

In that time, Arakiya, who had transformed into flame, approached Yorna, and drove a kick of enormous firepower into her.

Yorna: "—Hk."

Drawing an arc of flame that extended past the length of Arakiya's legs, it mowed down the city as if tongues of flame were licking it. Grazing past the buildings and roadside trees, the kick drew near Yorna as it burned everything along the way, and it turned the Demon City into hell itself.

However…

Arakiya: "No one is here?"

At the spectacle of burning the Demon City to ashes, Arakiya realized that there was not a single victim.

The Micro Spirits in the surroundings, too, she did not feel a fluctuation of their lives. As far as she could tell, there was truly nobody in Arakiya's range aside from Yorna.

That is to say, this was evidence that the city's residents had placed all of their trust in Yorna, and believed that she could defend them from the enemy directly attacking.

Yorna: "They all knew that you would be coming directly. Thus, it is logical that I would entrust those children with the back areas of the city. —One or two members of the Nine Divine Generals, I can hold them back on my own."

Arakiya: "Incredible confidence."

Yorna: “That is my nature. Your eyes are wavering, aren’t they?”

The heel of her thick-soled footwear negated the curtain of flames, and pierced into the chest of Arakiya’s formless body. The fluttering hems of her kimono cut through the flame, and her counterblow split Arakiya vertically in half.

Of course, Arakiya, who had assimilated into the flames, was not vulnerable to physical attacks. Even if a sword thrust through flames, those flames would not be extinguished. And yet…

Arakiya: “I am, wavering?”

Yorna: “If you are this strong, it is the Vollachian way to do what you want to do… you see, it does not appear like you are enjoying yourself. Far from it, actually.”

Arakiya: “…”

Yorna: “It seems like you are lost, wavering about why you are here.”

Yorna stepped into the road, and the thrust of her palm blew away the side of Arakiya’s face. The scattered flames gathered, and her vanished head immediately returned to normal.

However, more than the fist, it was the words that bestowed a stinging pain to Arakiya’s chest.

Yorna’s way of speaking seemed just like she had seen through Arakiya, and so Arakiya felt a tremor within her heart…

Cecilus: “Please stop that, Yorna-san. Anya’s heart will quickly get uncomfortable.”

Just then, Cecilus’s voice interrupted, and the sole of his zori slipped through and fastened to Yorna’s abdomen. Immediately after, Cecilus put strength into his knees with a “Yo”, and Yorna’s tall figure was easily pushed upwards, fiercely kicked into the air.

And then, jumping up to chase after her, Cecilus’s unparalleled slashing attack rushed towards Yorna.

A merciless sword attack, while the vital spots of Yorna's body were exposed to that,

Yorna: "You are a man who never learns."

Cecilus: "Uwa, even this doesn't work! I thought it was surely something like the Divine Protection of Earth Spirits and that it would connect if you detached from the ground, but…"

Yorna: "—. Actually, it is surprising that you seem willing to learn."

Cecilus: "Of course, the real thrill is to focus as I try to search for an opportunity to win. Something like fighting without thinking about anything, that would be more like Anya."

Cecilus's slashing attack of lightning speed roared, and Yorna received that blow to her chest without stopping it. However, her voluptuous breasts rejected the cutting ability of the katana, and Cecilus protected against the counterattack using his scabbard.

The scabbard creaked as it received the backhand blow, and Cecilus's body furiously soared through the red sky.

Arakiya: "Cecilus!"

Following Cecilus with her eyes as he flew, Arakiya immediately looked back towards Yorna. However, an arm reached out and grabbed Arakiya's neck. It was Yorna, who had returned after being kicked up into the air.

With her white fingers, she gripped Arakiya's slender throat, her throat, which should have had no true form.

Arakiya: "Ack…"

Yorna: "It is because you are wavering. Your appearance blurred, and your true form shifted to a state able to be grasped. —You, for what purpose do you fight?"

Arakiya: "…"

Yorna: "Personally, I fight for love. What about you, for what reason have you burned this city?”

If strength could be directly connected to something one was holding, that was proof of Yorna’s strength.

Feeling as if she had been asked, Arakiya’s mouth repeatedly gasped, and visions from days long past appeared on the back of her eyelids—she was reminded of the existence of utmost importance to her.

No matter when, no matter where, the existence at Arakiya’s core would not change. —However, could it be said that Arakiya burning the city like this was truly for her sake?

Cecilus: “—Like I said, please don’t make Anya think about these things, Yorna-san.”

With a flash, the slashing attack cut directly in front of her, and sliced down towards the arm of Yorna which was gripping Arakiya’s neck.

Just like with her neck, her arm had not been cut off. However, a dull sound came from Yorna’s arm with that crushing blow, and Arakiya’s body was snatched away when her grip loosened. Looking at the fallen back Arakiya, holding her waist, her savior had been Cecilus, whose nonchalant face was enough to be abhorrent.

Even though to embrace Arakiya, who was still assimilated with the flames, was the same thing as holding flames in one’s arms, his nonchalant face still did not crumble.

Yorna: “—. Personally, the people I find hardest to understand are gentlemen like yourself.”

Cecilus: “Ehh, am I really that hard to understand? I was proud that His Excellency and Chisha both thought of me as hard and easy to deal with, but…”

Yorna: “Your arms are burning, do you not feel pain?”

With the sound and smell of flesh burning, the flames went through the kimono to burn his arms, however, Cecilus’s smile did not waver. Even with Yorna's question, he jested with a "Mmmmm", and,

Cecilus: "Instead of getting panicked due to the pain here, wouldn't it be way cooler to boldly smile?"

Yorna: "…"

His skin and flesh burning, while a smell akin to the heat reaching his bones was set adrift, Cecilus did not feel shame nor fear, but instead made a claim in accordance with his own philosophy.

Then, as he wore his smile, he gently caressed the head of Arakiya, whom he held within his arms,

Cecilus: "That and, I request that you refrain from giving Anya any needless ideas. I'm not denying those who attach great importance to the reasons and significance of fighting, but…"

Yorna: "Do you think that such things are unnecessary for strong individuals?"

Cecilus: "No, no, my own strength and the strength of others are different things, after all. The reason I don't want to make Anya think about that is because Anya becomes regrettably weak when she thinks about stuff."

Arakiya: "—Hk."

Being spoken of in an incredibly blunt manner, Arakiya immediately tried to object.

Though, her voice did not come out. The reason for that was probably because of the relationship between Yorna and the city's residents—Yorna, who held back the front lines by herself, trusting in her were all of the residents who protected the places she could not reach. It was because she was envious of that firm relationship.

The mutual trust between herself and her former master, she would be lying if she said she had not thought about it.

However…

Cecilus: “Anya, I won’t tell you to not think about it. But there is a separate time and place for that. Whether you become a leading actor or a minor role, that entirely depends on you, Anya.”

Arakiya: “…I don’t, understand.”

Cecilus: “For now, just act as a single sword. Or perhaps, would the master of Anya’s heart wish for you to die here?”

Arakiya: “…”

While his burning arms continued to make a smoldering sound, Cecilus posed that question with a grin on his face.

She did not like that face of his, she thought she should continue to seriously scorch his burnt arms, but she stopped. It was a very painful topic, but Arakiya’s true master would not desire that.

Besides, she did not want Cecilus to laugh at her and say “I knew you’d be up to it!”.

Cecilus: “Anya, how many Micro Spirits do you have captured?”

Arakiya: “…One hundred and twenty four.”

Cecilus: “Very well. Then please kill Yorna-san one hundred and twenty four times. —As the two highest ranking members of the Nine Divine Generals, that is the purpose requested of us.”

Giving a straightforward reason for fighting, Cecilus sheathed his katana. Then, with a “Yo”, he lifted Arakiya’s body, put his arms within his burnt sleeves, and entered a stance of watching from behind.

Seeing Cecilus’s series of movements, Yorna placed her kiseru to her mouth, and,

Yorna: “I thought without a doubt, you were a man who was only good for killing, but…”

Cecilus: “Yes?”

Yorna: “I was surprised that without using a katana, you were quite good at bringing her back to life.”

While exhaling purple smoke and narrowing her eyes, Yorna caused Cecilus to raise his eyebrows. From there, the Empire’s strongest man bent over laughing “Ha-Ha-ha”, and,

Cecilus: “In the end, I am nothing more than a swordsman. I can’t pull off a feat like reviving someone. If Anya came back to life, that’s entirely because of our long relationship. That and…”

Yorna: “That and?”

Cecilus: “Anya is seriously quite strong. After all, she even gives me the shivers every once in a while!”

Saying that with a face completely bereft of ill intent, Cecilus was detestable. So much so that she thought it would have been better if she scorched his head instead of his arms.

But, she would not do that. Since she would not do that, she would instead have something to say…

Arakiya: “Cecilus.”

Cecilus: “Yes?”

Arakiya: “—Die.”

Cecilus: “You really can’t honestly say “thank you”.”

As before, thinking that she wanted him to die, Arakiya’s entire body began to dazzlingly emit light.

Without thinking of the consequences, she performed the powerful move of invigorating all of the captured Micro Spirits within her body—laying her eyes on that, Yorna slowly shook her head, and,

Yorna: “You, too, fight for the sake of love, don’t you?”

Arakiya: “…Probably, you’re completely wrong!”

Saying that as she glanced over at Cecilus, Arakiya howled and charged forth.

The next moment, with the offense and defense of the Demon City of Chaosflame, the greatest destruction and light shrouded the battlefield.

And then…

19

Receiving the unleashed force of a frontal kick, his body was blown away and slammed against the wall. Then, together with his cries of pain, the sole of a shoe swung downward and slammed the collapsed man's head against the floor.

His front tooth chipped off on the floorboards, and while listening to the shrieks of the man vomiting blood, the eyepatch-wearing man who had done that titled his head, and commented that "This ain't a challenge at all".

The setting was a room in some Imperial Soldiers' barracks, and the two men who had quarreled were both Imperial Soldiers in red.

Be that as it may, it unfolded rather one-sidedly. It was not a surprise attack or sneak attack. Both of them wielded weapons, and began to cross swords at the same time. The difference in sword power was as clear as day.

Generally, there were no enemies among Privates and First-Class Privates. —That was the true strength of the man named Jamal.

???: "If you were a bit smarter, you would probably be promoted to General without a hitch."

Jamal: "Shut the fuck up, Todd! Here you should just honestly praise my strength!"

Todd: "I thought I did praise your strength. No one doubts your sword skills, man. Well then…"

Shrugging his shoulders at the discontent hoarse voice, the person who Jamal called Todd stepped forward. Crouched down in that place, looking at them was the pitiful man who could not move after Jamal trampled on his head.

Most of all, whether this man could truly be called pitiful or not, would depend entirely on his following response.

Soldier: “You-You guys… this sort of conduct towards a fellow regular soldier…”

Todd: “Oi oi, aren’t you the one who attacked first? As far as I can see, Jamal merely countered your attack. For us to feel sympathy for you in your ragged state after that is… I guess that it’s safe to say that you didn’t find our questions to be convenient.”

Soldier: “—Hk.”

Jamal: “Hey, don’t try to run away. If ya mess around, you’re gonna have to match with me, ya know?”

Looking down on the man, whose face had gone pale, Jamal touched the eyepatch on his right eye. It was an obvious intimidation tactic, but the results were immediate. In reality, he probably thought that Jamal was capable of anything.

The man’s spirit withered before their eyes, and Todd nodded with a “Thanks”.

Todd: “Well, let’s continue from the earlier question. —You’re a survivor of the fortress that General First-Class Yorna destroyed, right? Why did General First-Class Yorna do such a thing?”

Soldier: “It-It’s because she’s crazy! You must’ve heard the rumors! Even before, that woman was… Gah!”

Jamal: “It’s a General First-Class, pay some respect. You think this is a bar and I’m your close pal?”

The longsword in Jamal’s hand danced, and the man, who was now down one ear, screamed out in pain. Vulgar comments were Jamal’s speciality, but this was his exception, to be particular about the hierarchy.

Thanks to that, the man would probably be even more careful in his answers.

Todd: “Because she’s crazy, I certainly understand that. Only, this is just my theory, but no matter how crazy someone may appear, even they would have their own logic. Even actions that may look meaningless to an outsider, that would be logical for them. Do you understand?”

Soldier: “ah, ah…”

Todd: “In other words, even General First-Class Yorna’s violence this time, I would guess it had the reason of a First-Class General’s logic. So, for the soldiers of a fortress to be massacred, I suspect it would be based on resentment.”

To become not just a massacre, but an exhaustive massacre, would require more deep-rooted motives.

When he began investigating, he found out that Yorna likely demanded the escaped soldiers. The Emperor refused that, and the result was a military conflict unfolding in the Demon City.

However…

Soldier: “If-If you… know that… what will happen…?”

Jamal: “Ah? If you’re worried about that…”

Todd: “Well, wait a minute, Jamal. I don’t really mind if you talk to him. —Depending on the situation, I think I can put an end to this war.”

Holding Jamal back by putting a hand over his chest, Todd faced the man with a smile.

While the man was gasping and fighting the pain in his chest and ear, he looked up at Todd with pleading eyes.

Todd: “If the origin was resentment, then the way you apologize changes. There’s nothing that would get on someone’s nerves more than being apologized to by someone who doesn’t know what they are apologizing for. Besides, we might be able to offer you a way to save yourself."

Soldier: "I-In… what way…?"

Todd: "It isn't anything difficult. Once we understand what happened, we'll make a report to the superior officers. Then, as the mediation of the internal struggle progresses, we can overlook it if you happen to disappear somewhere."

Catching his breath at Todd's proposal, the man gave him a probing look. However, though he had messed up on acting suspicious, Todd had no more particular plan than what he had said.

Ultimately, he had no interest in this man's survival or course of action. Currently, Todd's interest was in what had caused Yorna Mishigure's insurrection, and securing the information that could put an end to it.

To speak further, using that information to make an achievement, he could profit off the situation.

For that purpose, he had gone out of his way to cross a dangerous bridge and search for the fortress' survivors, and cleared out the barracks to create a situation where they could directly speak to people. It would be troublesome if it was not useful.

Soldier: "…At the beginning, we were just killing some time."

As if Todd's sincerity had reached him, the man accepted it and began to speak little by little.

That had been the impetus of this rebellion, and the cause which led to Yorna massacring the soldiers of the fortress, and the reason why she demanded the heads of the survivors and everyone involved.

Hearing the contents of that, Todd understood that it was just about what he had imagined.

As expected, the origin of Yorna Mishigure's violence was resentment, and it was righteous indignation.

Soldier: “Th-That’s all of it. Well, are you satisfied?”

His tone grew rough halfway through, and the man who ended his speaking with a heated manner of speech posed a question to Todd. At that man’s gaze, Todd stroked his chin as he gave a “Yeah” and nodded.

Todd: “Yeah, I’m satisfied. If I speak of such a situation, I think the superior officers would also lend me an ear.”

Soldier: “In that case…!”

Todd: “Only, you were a bit unlucky, man.”

At Todd’s added statement, the man was dumbfounded as he widened his eyes.

He probably did not comprehend the meaning of Todd’s words. Due to his poor perception, the man ended up needing to pay with his own life. He should have realized it sooner.

Next to Todd, hearing the same story, Jamal had been looking at the man with eyes filled with disdain from the bottom of his heart.

Todd: “Even though I thought it may end up like this, my bad, my bad.”

Todd stood up as he shrugged his shoulders, and the severed head of the man rolled at his feet. It was trivial. Jamal swung his sword, and beheaded the man in the blink of an eye.

Jamal: “Fucking prick. What a disgrace to the proud soldiers of the Empire.”

Todd: “You know, I don’t have the slightest idea of what your self-evaluation system is.”

Tilting his head, Todd firmly stretched out his body.

Quite literally, the man did not have any luck. As was his verbal slip at the feet of Jamal, and the same with the fact that Todd and Jamal had captured his whereabouts in the first place.

There were other escaped soldiers that had been located, but he had also been in the position easiest to lure out.

Most of all…

Todd: “Can’t say that the other two will be lucky for long, though.”

Jamal: “Yeah, let’s tear ‘em apart.”

Todd: “Hold on, don’t kill just as a distraction from your own worries. We need to hand this over to a superior officer, and it’ll become one of our distinguished achievements.”

At that identification, Jamal’s entire face exclaimed that he did not like it. Suppressing that nagging face with his hand, Todd sighed at his future brother-in-law’s recklessness.

Acting in a way unbefitting of himself by crossing a dangerous bridge like this, all of it was to do a meritorious deed for the sake of returning to the Imperial Capital. It was nothing other than for the sake of returning to the lovely woman who awaited him there.

For that purpose…

Todd: “—I have to at least take care of this hard to manage brother-in-law. In return for that, after I finish taking care of him, your heart will kindly thank me, after all.”

20

???: “—For the incident on this occasion, it began when the soldiers of the fortress tortured a deer girl to death, and then proceeded to disgrace the corpse. If the beast people under the protection of the Demon City are killed, how enraged would the mistress of that city be? Somehow, that was completely outside their expectations.”

Straightening his back, busy with paperwork in his office, the handsome black-haired man—the Emperor, Vincent Vollachia received such a report, and Chisha, who had returned, awaited him to respond with words.

He was not waiting for words to show appreciation for the hard work. Rather, he was pragmatically awaiting further instructions.

With Chisha before him, Vincent stopped his hand that was turning the pages of the documents, and without lifting his gaze,

Vincent: “So that was the origin for the massacre of soldiers who were present at the fortress?—Who disclosed this?”

Chisha: “Three of the escaped soldiers revealed it to a unit of soldiers that had converged. A Private First-Class who grasped the situation restrained one of them, and reported to his superiors. One of them died, and the other two have been secured.”

Vincent: “Send the two who were captured to the Demon City, to Yorna Mishigure.”

Not displaying his momentary hesitation, Vincent controlled the fate of the escaped soldiers, and Chisha silently obeyed.

They were part of the impetus for Yorna’s insurrection this time. At best, they would die a violent death, and become a consolation for the blood spilled during this battle.

At that brutal way of thinking, Chisha personally felt disgusted with himself. Even though he should have a more gentle and quiet disposition.

Leaving the conflict within Chisha’s heart aside, Vincent continued as his eyes ran over the official documents.

Vincent: “In addition, track down the one who appointed the General of that fortress, as well as all of the relatives. We will issue the news in due course.”

Chisha: “I am also aware of that. Incidentally, Your Excellency, this is about the soldier who captured the escaped soldiers, but…”

Vincent: “There should be a reward. You can bestow whatever reward they desire.”

Chisha: “I thought you would say that, so I have asked them directly. Of course, not with this face though.”

At those words, Vincent lifted his gaze from his documents to Chisha for the first time.

It was nice that he had captured his interest, and Chisha imagined the two soldiers he had directly met within his mind. The duo of the eyepatch wearing man with a rough atmosphere, and the gentle man who gave off a friendly impression.

With little information, they had reached the escaped soldiers, decided that they should report that spinelessness to the higher-ups, and had acted appropriately, all of those points were worthy of praise. Of course, he thought they should be compensated appropriately, but—.

Chisha: "—The people of the Empire must be strong."

Vincent: "…What?"

Chisha: "That's what one of the soldiers told me when I asked what they wanted for their reward. The ideology of the Vollachian Empire, he said that he was doing naught more than following it."

It was strange, since the one to declare that was the rough soldier who appeared to be ambitious.

Soldiers earnestly devoted themselves to the Empire's law of iron and blood, and what is more is that they detested cowardly soldiers who went against it. So much so that they would say they did not need to get rewards for their blood.

Of course, his partner at his side made a face seeming dizzy after he said that, though.

Vincent: "The people of the Empire are strong, is it?"

For the subjects of the Vollachian Empire, it was natural that everyone knew the principle of the Sword Wolf.

Hearing that one again, and repeating it with his tongue, Vincent slightly narrowed his eyes. Within those narrowed black eyes were all the profound thoughts of His Excellency the Emperor, and even Chisha was unable to read them.

Perhaps what was closest to that true essence, with principles rather than words, was a swordsman who did not think about things with logic, and who was completely divorced from his sense of responsibility and obligations to his position.

In any case, the genesis of the matter on this occasion, the management of its conclusion had ended to some extent. For the other points that needed to be reported, Chisha clapped his hands together saying “Indeed”.

Chisha: “I accompanied Madelyn Eschart, and I have no criticisms of her ability or strength, she is of a caliber worthy to be installed as a General. Only, without any military experience, and the fact that she is backed by Prime Minister Berstetz is difficult; I have my concerns about that.”

Vincent: “Since Kafma Irulux, who Goz recommended, declined, we do not have the freedom to put those with ability and backbone aside. Even if she has the support of that person.”

Chisha: “…I just think that there is no need to deliberately drink poison.”

Vincent: “This is your purpose, the purpose of the Divine Generals, my purpose.”

While speaking, Vincent once again turned his gaze towards his desk, and his hand began turning the pages of the documents again.

Demonstrating his attitude of no longer having any intention to continue the conversation, Vincent’s obstinacy and his audacity to be the first to put his hand into the ashes where heat yet remained caused Chisha to heave a sigh.

That he was that kind of person, he had become fully aware of that over the course of their long relationship, but…

Vincent: “—At the latest, two more years.”

Chisha: “Your Excellency.”

Before excusing himself from that place, Chisha was stopped by Vincent’s quiet words. However, without responding to Chisha’s call, Vincent remained immersed in his paperwork.

Had he merely spoken to himself, or had that been a problem posed towards Chisha?

Whichever it was, he did not draw out any further words. —For himself, who understood that, himself, who understood that and could do nothing about it, how terribly abhorrent he was.

For what purpose, was he even here? He wondered to himself.

Chisha: “…It is not like me. For goodness sake, I’m beginning to think I’m cursed.”

While reminiscing about such things, as a dagger of the Vollachian Emperor—No, the swords were the others. Therefore, Chisha acknowledged himself not as a sword, but just as a trusted friend, and he left the office.

Chisha: “…”

The sky that peered through the hallway’s window was blue to a detestable extent, and it seemed just as if the extent of the lives wiped out every day within that magnificent view below did not weigh on his mind.

Chisha: “For goodness sake…”

—As one of the Sword Wolves, he could not help but think he was terribly cursed.

21

Cecilus: “Ah! Anya, you only cooked the fried eggs on one side again!”

Arakiya: “…If you want both sides fried, do it yourself.”

Inside the shack, Arakiya glared at Cecilus as he complained about the meal on the table.

A meal for two was laid out on the humble table, each having tableware of different colors laid out. In order to differentiate them from each other, the cupboard had been arranged with tableware of different colors.

She absolutely did not want to use Cecilus's tableware by mistake. Nonetheless, since Cecilus did not wash his dishes, it was not possible to completely avoid touching them.

Not to mention, it would be difficult to minimize the amount she had to touch them today.

The reason was…

Cecilus: "Ahhhhh~"

Arakiya: "…"

Cecilus: "Anya, come on now, my mouth is wide open. Ahhhh~"

Being pestered with that, Arakiya grabbed Cecilus's fork out of irritation. Then, she stabbed the fried eggs on his plate, and quite literally shoved it into his mouth that was awaiting food like a baby bird. She did it with enough force to fracture his front teeth, but Ceilus easily grasped the fried eggs in his teeth, and satiated himself.

If he was that skilled, he probably did not need help eating, and he was also good at pestering.

Since Arakiya burned Cecilus's arms, that pestering would continue until that wound recovered.

Because they lived together, she was ordered to deal with that amount of trouble.

Cecilus: "Nom nom… mm, it tastes good. If you exclude the fact that you only ever fry one side, Anya's cooking ability is nothing to scoff at. I can assure that as someone who knows how you've improved over the years."

Arakiya: "It would be different with Chisha, but Cecilus's assurance…?”

Cecilus: “Ah! Your face has no faith in me! You know, I have an eye for these things, Anya. Without that, I wouldn’t be able to separate old swords and excellent swords. I also have an eye for people, you know.”

Arakiya: “…Seems like a lie.”

Since he could not move his arms in the sling, Cecilus made an unpleasant expression of “Ehhh” as he swayed from left to right.

Disregarding that, Arakiya tried to quickly finish the part-meal part-torture session, so she brought the freshly made scorching hot food into Cecilus’s mouth one after the other. It was displeasing that he had dealt with that so skillfully.

To pass the time of that brutal breakfast, they also…

Cecilus: “However, did Yorna’s insurrection end in failure this time as well? Well, even His Excellency and company are doubtful about how serious she was to begin with, but…”

Arakiya: “…The cause was the deer human who died.”

Cecilus: “Indeed, yes yes. Chaosflame is the destination for those with special circumstances, so if you poke them playfully, you will get a befitting retaliation. Even if you don’t think that you will lose your fingers by sticking them in the nest, that’s something you should understand.”

Giving a cackling laugh, Cecilus made an indifferent comment on the insurrection. Only, Arakiya cast her eyes down at that comment, causing Cecilius to raise his eyebrows with an “Oh?”

Cecilus: “What’s wrong, Anya. Is there something bothering you?”

Arakiya: “Yorna, was strong.”

Cecilus: “She was, wasn’t she? Nah, I didn’t understand that trick this time either. Even though I thought I would be able to cut her head off, I still messed up.”

Arakiya: “Though, it’s the same with that ridiculous power.”

The city that could change its form in quick succession, and the overwhelming robust health of Yorna, who did not know what it felt like to be destroyed. Of course, that was also an abnormality, but it was her way of being that caused Arakiya’s heart to waver.

It annoyed her, but just as Cecilus had said in the midst of the battle, she dropped the idle thoughts and fought. However, looking at it in the end, Arakiya’s wavering—that problem had yet to be solved.

For what reason did she fight? Having been told that, Arakiya suddenly thought.

Arakiya: “Cecilus, why do you fight?”

Cecilus: “…”

Arakiya: “…What’s with that face?”

Trying to face her own problems, Arakiya asked a question and received a strange face from Cecilus. After a short while, she slowly realized that it was Cecilus’s face of surprise.

With that strange surprised face, Cecilus shook his head side to side with a “No, no”, and,

Cecilus: “It’s extremely surprising that you want to know something about me, Anya, so when you said that I was astonished. If I’m not mistaken, this is the first time since we were kids, isn’t it?”

Arakiya: “—. After all, even if I didn’t ask, you would talk as you pleased.”

Cecilus: “Indeed. I would have already told you about plenty of stuff such as the food I like, or my beliefs, or my resolve as the leading actor, but now you ask for what purpose I fight. Ha-Ha-ha.”

Arakiya: “Will you not answer?”

Cecilus: “No, I’ll answer. —It’s because I aspire for the Heavenly Sword.”

Cecilus responded quietly, and with tranquility harbored in his eyes, he gave off an impression completely different to the person who was usually two or three times more noisy.

Every once in a while, the man called Cecilus Segmunt would display a face like this.

Hard to decipher, just like lightning which had no true form, a disposition which one’s eyes could not keep up with.

That was something she also felt within her life-long master, and the Emperor of this country, Vincent. That which Arakiya felt was the peculiar way of being for those who stand in a dimension wholly different to that of the ordinary person.

Their positions, and what they could see, were different; it felt as if they were trying to make that known.

Arakiya: “Cecilus.”

Cecilus: “Yes?”

Arakiya: “Die.”

Cecilus: “Why do you say that? Just now, I answered your question honestly without any obligation to do so!”

Cecilus’s noisy racket caused that atmosphere to vanish, and Arakiya heaved a sigh.

Then, feeling as though she had gained a slight bit of relief, Arakiya grimaced.

The master who Arakiya lovingly thought of, and the Emperor, were essentially on the same level. Those people and Cecilus, it was probably a relief to not need to view them on the same dimension.

Without a doubt, that was enough of a condition to irritate her.

Cecilus: “Nevertheless, it seems like I’m going to keep calling you

Anya for a while.”

Arakiya: “—. Before long, I’ll make you retract it.”

Cecilus: “In the time you’ve been saying that, seven years have already passed, though. Ha-Ha.”

Laughing in an easygoing tone, Cecilus opened his mouth again with an “Ahhh~”. With a sour look, Arakiya tossed a grilled fish that had not had its bones removed into his mouth.

While skillfully sorting through the flesh and bone with his tongue and teeth, the strongest Sword Wolf of the Empire laughed.

—The existence at the summit of the pack of Sword Wolves, while thinking about the far away Heavenly Sword, eating the fish that had been caught, grilled, and laid out on the table, he laughed in a good mood.

END

The Scarlet League

1

“Very well. Then, this is war,” the woman proclaimed, stunning and red as blood, proudly brandishing a raised fan in her hand. Those in her presence and anyone who heard her declaration found themselves filled with astonishment, perplexity, and in some cases, fervor. However, there was one unifying thread woven through them all—that being that each one of them were very young.

The enchanting woman’s resounding voice carried across the gathering of young boys and girls, all in their teens, with only a slight variation in age. On top of that, as children, they were far from war-savvy. Rather, they were simple boys and girls from the city. And while not entirely removed from the conflict, they were not expected to join the battlefield themselves. It was an audacious act to declare war to such youths, even attempting to draw them into its clutches.

An act that, even if said as a joke, could easily be misconstrued as malicious intent. Regrettably, however, in this particular instance, the person making the declaration showed not the slightest inkling of speaking in jest. The person was a tyrant for whom even the slightest suggestion of dissent would have the offender’s hand chopped off at the wrist. Be that as it may…

“We are going to war. Both sides should be well prepared,” declared the captivating Priscilla Barielle, repeatedly and with a distinct air of amusement. Her iron-helmeted squire, observing from behind, couldn’t help but think that perhaps it was more than the fear of losing his remaining arm that deterred him from challenging her outrageous words.

2

Several hours before Priscilla’s declaration of war…

“Lady Priscilla! We have a problem beyond my control!” The shrill voice of a child reverberated throughout the grand mansion. It wasn't due to the sheer volume of the cry, but rather because the maidservants had sporadically thrown open the doors and windows to ventilate the building.

The desperate tone in the voice carried a sense of urgency. However, having already figured out its identity, the women all pursed their lips into a smile and returned to their work. Amongst them, only one individual sat up heavily at the sound of the high-pitched voice while scratching their neck.

"Well, well, seems Schult's as peppy as ever today," remarked a man in a black iron helmet, rising from the comfort of the sofa where he had been resting with a hint of irritation. In contrast to his head, which was fully concealed with jet-black steel, the armor protecting his body from the neck down was noticeably lacking. On his feet were customized sandals that looked so out of place, they would surely be seared into one's memory.

Despite his eccentric appearance, however, only a select few were aware of the true nature of the role he fulfilled. In fact, it would be accurate to say that he himself hardly grasped what his position was. "Princess calls me a clown, but is she gonna pay me?" he wondered.

He knew that his mistress was very generous with the wages she paid her attendants. She was never known to be stingy, and her propensity to properly compensate them for their hard work had earned her their respect and admiration. However, his compensation did not come in the form of a monthly salary deposited into an account, so she must have handed it to him in some other way. But the exact details of this arrangement escaped his memory.

"I hadn't really thought about it. I don't really desire much, and she usually gives me pocket money when I ask," he thought. "But maybe I'm just a useless old man with a crappy resume and no savings." Saddened by his unintended self-analysis, the man headed for a room in the building without hesitation.

Considering the identity of the owner of the high-pitched voice and the nature of its cries, he had only one destination in mind. And sure enough, his intuition proved to be correct.

"I tried my best, but nobody would listen to me! At this rate, it will be all my fault that Your Ladyship's… Your Ladyship's…reputation will…!"

"Hmm, my reputation?"

"Th-They will doubt you! I can't bear it!"

Peering into the room, the man's gaze fell upon the hunched figure of a petite back. Clenching his tiny fist in frustration and trembling impishly was a boy with pink hair, a distinguished butler of the mansion who wore short trousers that complimented him well. This was Schult.

Seeing him in all his childish glory, and his valiant efforts to navigate the challenges before him, he had a charm that made one want to tenderly take care of him. The adoration bestowed upon Schult by all the attendants of the mansion was not only due to his age, but because of his own personality. Yet the attendants themselves were hesitant to openly express their affection for Schult, not because of their overwhelming workload, but for another, more fundamental reason. Namely…

"Your demeanor sure is adorable as always. Say, how can someone so small worry so much about me?" remarked Priscilla, the owner of the mansion, her narrowed eyes fixated on Schult as she doted upon him. Seated in a gaudy chair, her elbow resting on the armrest with her hand placed on her cheek, Priscilla lent an attentive ear to Schult's heartfelt plea, with a book she had been reading left on her lap.

Priscilla, who was surprisingly well-read, dedicated much of her leisure time to reading. Princess's time devoted to reading is sacred to her. Interrupting her during this time is like stepping on a landmine that triggers relentless verbal abuse. In fact, I wouldn't be surprised if that person gets sent to the guillotine and bites the dust. Of course, the exception being Schult, that is.

"Wait, don't the maids get let off the hook too?" the man wondered aloud. "Which means, the only one getting special treatment is me, the one being abused."

Priscilla, having caught Al peeking into the room from the hallway, called out, "I thought I heard a crude, unusual voice. And indeed, it is you, Al."

"Well, this sucks," Al muttered to himself. He bowed his head as he appeared. Although he hadn't necessarily been trying to hide, he was well aware of Priscilla's unpredictable temperament, akin to the volatility of her own stock price—a frightening thing to say the least. One wanted to take as much time as possible to carefully gauge her mood.

Fortunately, Priscilla chose not to address his eavesdropping. Instead, she simply cocked her chin, and said: "Enlighten me, pray tell. Are you also here to bring me yet another report with a look on your face suggesting the end of the world?"

"Of course not, Princess," replied Al. "You think I'd work as hard as Schult without this helmet on?"

"Even if you did, such unsightliness shall not stir my heart in the slightest."

"Huh?!" Schult blurted out, unable to contain his curiosity at this particular part of Priscilla and Al's exchange. "Lady Priscilla, have you seen Sir Al's face?!" His curiosity having gotten the better of him, Schult immediately clamped his hands over his mouth in remorse for his lack of composure.

"I really am a mess, aren't I?" he lamented. "I should become a bug that does nothing but chirp…"

"Foolishness," Priscilla chided. "I have no desire for insects within the confines of my abode. If you wish to avoid being trampled upon, hatch into the best version of Schult as fast as you can."

"I will grow up!" he vowed.

"Seeing you in such haste, it is indeed adorable."

Al stepped forward, placing a hand on Schult's drooping head from behind. To Al's surprise, the child seemed more delighted than repulsed, a testament to his innocence. I really do hope this kid feeds on the favor of those around him in the future, and grows plump and fat.

"So, what's your complaint today, Schult? Princess making unreasonable demands again?" Al inquired.

"What do you mean 'again?'" Priscilla asked indignantly, furrowing her shapely eyebrows. "When have I ever made an unreasonable demand of Schult? Whenever he laments as such, it is usually due to his own self-indulgence."

"His own self-indulgence, huh?" Al chuckled, appreciating the cuteness of Priscilla's remark. "Well, that's pretty likely." He turned to Schult and tilted his head. "What's up? It's not unusual to see you all flustered, but I can't turn a blind eye to an emergency that affects the Princess's reputation. Tell me what happened."

"Well, you see…" Schult began.

"If I recall, you were supposed to accompany the maidservants into town this morning," Priscilla interjected.

"Surprise! I did!" Schult exclaimed. His reaction was to clutch his small chest, as if she had struck a chord.

Al, who had never witnessed someone exclaim "Surprise!" in such a manner, stared blankly out the window and mumbled, "Into town, huh?" In this case, the town Priscilla was referring to was Krufuna, located in the mansion's vicinity.

The city of Krufuna, which wasn't too far from the Barielle residence, held great significance and prosperity within the Barielle Domain. To be precise, it would be more accurate to say that it was Priscilla who made it flourish.

"I heard things were pretty bad when ol' Leip was the lord," Al remarked to himself.

The tyranny of Baron Leip Barielle, Priscilla's late husband and the former lord, was so extreme that it was almost impressive to watch from the sidelines, while the people suffered both body and soul. That's when Priscilla, Leip's "beloved wife," gallantly emerged to save them with her benevolent governance.

In retrospect, one could almost perceive Leip's excessive arrogance as a calculated strategy intended to boost Priscilla's future popularity. But from Leip's perspective, who died after succumbing to mental deterioration and a near-bedridden state, such an assessment would serve as nothing more than a rhetorical argument not worth entertaining.

"Schult, what did you do in Krufuna?" Priscilla asked.

"I-I was…utterly useless!" Schult moaned, biting his lip, his slender shoulders burdened by a weight too heavy to bear. The incident occurred earlier that morning when he accompanied the maidservants on a shopping trip.

"So basically, you couldn't mediate a siblings' argument about Princess?" Al summarized.

"Y-Yes…" Schult admitted, nodding slightly in agreement. Regret filled his eyes, growing moist with remorse. Al gazed down at him and tapped his helmet thoughtfully as he pieced together the details of what transpired. According to Schult, that was the crux of the matter.

While en route to Krufuna with the maidservants, Schult came upon a boy and girl quarreling in the streets. If it had simply been a trivial argument, Schult would have paid them no mind. However, it became evident that the two, presumably brother and sister, were engaged in a dispute concerning Priscilla.

“The older brother was saying bad things about Lady Priscilla! And the little sister was arguing back with tears in her eyes. But while they were arguing, the younger sister was pushed away…” Schult explained.

“And you just had to butt in,” Al remarked. “But that brother sure had guts if he wasn’t intimidated by the sight of you, Schult.”

“Huh?” Schult looked at him quizzically. Yet it went without saying that he belonged to Priscilla’s entourage. Schult was a well-known figure in the Barielle Domain, and there likely wasn’t a single soul in Krufuna who would not recognize him. The boy had indeed displayed remarkable audacity to continue slandering Priscilla, even in the presence of Schult. He seems like the daring type of individual that would have been beheaded had he been born in a different era.

“Of course, I’m sure not even the Princess would do something so tyrannical—”

But before he could finish his sentence to defend what was left of her sense of righteousness, Priscilla was on her feet. “I shall make my way to Krufuna!” she declared.

“Wait, wait, wait, wait, wait! Calm down, Princess! You can’t do that!” Al protested, attempting to appease her anger. Sure, there’s nothing more foolish than for citizens to criticize their lord so openly in public, but—

“After all, they were only kids, right?” Al continued, “Those siblings weren’t much older than you. Right, Schult?”

“Yes, that is right!” Schult agreed. “The brother was just a little older than me.”

“See! No matter what he said, would you really behead a—”

“Foolishness!” Priscilla said, placing her fan against Al’s throat before he could utter another word. Al, immediately silenced, felt a scorching heat searing his larynx from the outside, causing him to holler and roll over in agony.

“Ow! Ow, ow, ow, ow! Ain’t this a bit too much?!” he moaned, clutching his scalded throat under Priscilla’s piercing, fiery gaze.

“Too much, you say? If you cannot even comprehend the intentions of your mistress, then there is no point in keeping a fool like you by my side. Do not take your position for granted,” Priscilla stated coldly, unfurling the fan that had left a mark on Al’s throat.

“For granted?”

“Do not take it for granted that I will continue to keep you in my company,” she threatened. She concealed her mouth with the fan as Al groaned. “I am not as short-sighted as you seem to believe. However, Schult will not stop crying about his lack of strength. If I do not take action, my reputation as a lord will suffer.”

“What do you really want?” Al asked.

“I simply wish to alleviate my boredom,” she confessed. “Additionally, I would like to know exactly what insults were spoken about me.”

“Sounds like you.” Al dropped his head in disappointment, convinced by Priscilla’s characteristically straightforward response. He then scanned his surroundings with a quizzical look. “By the way, where’d Schult go?”

Just as Al was about to search for the vanished Schult, a voice rang out directly behind him. “Sir Al! Here you go!”

“Huh?!” As Al spun around to face the voice, his face was doused with a deluge of water. Upon closer inspection, a breathless Schult was holding a flower vase that had been on display in the hallway. He had carefully removed the flowers, using the remaining water to drench Al. Dripping wet with water that smelled and tasted distinctly of plants all over his helmet, he could do little more than stare in shock at Schult’s abrupt and unanticipated act, asking, “Why?”

“You were burning up, Sir Al,” Schult responded innocently. “So I thought I should cool you down…”

“I see…” Al nodded at Schult’s explanation, then turned his attention to Priscilla with a snap of his head. “I’m gonna wipe down my helmet. Gimme a moment, ‘kay?” he requested, indicating the need to postpone their departure.

3

“And that is why I have come here to see for myself,” Priscilla declared, crossing her arms and causing her opponents to stiffen before her. Al sympathized with them from the depths of his heart. He sympathized, but there was little he could do about it. He had no power to stop her, nor had he intended to in the first place.

“You’d have to be a real wise guy to speak openly of the Princess,” Al remarked. In truth, it was a rarity for Priscilla to even listen to Al’s opinions, despite his role as her loyal servant. In fact, she hadn’t even waited for his return after cleaning his helmet drenched with vase water. Once he heard that Priscilla and Schult had already departed the mansion, he hurried after them. By the time he caught up, Priscilla was already standing before her intended audience.

“Ah… Oh…” A boy of around thirteen or fourteen stood there, eyes filled with fear as they darted around under Priscilla’s piercing gaze. With red-toned hair and freckles, he was a rather ordinary looking boy with no remarkable features. For a boy like this to receive a sudden visit by the lord of the land, he would surely wilt away. Even more so given the reason for her visit.

“The Sun Princess…! Wow, it really is the Sun Princess!” Beside the boy was a girl, bouncing up and down in excitement, hand over her mouth. She appeared around ten years old, and wore her hair in two red pigtails. Based on Schult’s earlier explanation at the mansion, these two were most likely the brother and sister in question—the siblings who had been arguing about Priscilla.

“And it’s the big bro who was bad-mouthing the princess…” Al muttered to himself. The expected scenario would have been for the sister, in defense of Priscilla, to confront her brother, who had been bad-mouthing her. Then, Schult would have joined forces with the sister, only to be defeated. Had the roles been reversed, however, with the older brother chastising his sister for her ignorance, there wouldn't have been a problem.

Yet this was not the case. It was a much more delicate matter. Not to mention, the boy's age is also a concern. Priscilla's surprisingly patient with children, but this boy looks like he's teetering on the edge of her tolerance. But when push came to shove…

"Would I have to put my life on the line to prevent rumors of her cutting down one of her subjects from spreading?" Al said to himself. "It'll sure be a pain to convince the Princess, though." In fact, it would require more than just pain—it would be a matter of life and death.

Regardless, Al stepped onto the scene on that late afternoon, ready to intervene at a moment's notice, fully alert for potential confrontations. Just then, Schult spotted Al and called out, "Sir Al! You caught up with us! Um, is your helmet okay? Did it get rusty or damaged?"

"Nah, don't worry, it's fine," Al replied. "Well, if it does break, just use your savings to get me a new helmet that suits me more, 'kay?"

"A new helmet?" Schult asked, "But I think a hat would suit you better! It would be more fashionable. Plus, we would be able to see your face, Sir Al!"

"That curiosity's one of the things that makes you so adorable, y'know, Schult," Al remarked, glancing at the inquisitive young boy who eagerly desired to see his face. Then he turned his attention to Priscilla. "So, what's up with you, Princess? Already making the kids cry?"

The stunning, sharp-tongued Priscilla dismissed him with a single word: "Foolishness." She then elaborated, "Do you truly believe I would engage in such behavior? I simply clarified the nature of my visit to them."

"The nature of your visit? How so?" Al inquired.

"I heard that he slandered me, and I was curious to know what kind of nonsense he had concocted."

"How I pity them…" Al mumbled.

It's awkward enough for the accused to know that his words had reached the person in question. However, to be confronted directly about it is undoubtedly an unbearable situation. Not to mention, the fact that the person in question happens to be the lord of the land in which he lived. He must feel like he's on thin ice.

The girl, unaware of her brother's distress and unable to comprehend the gravity of the situation, made a heartfelt plea to Priscilla. "Sun Princess! My brother is so mean! He said bad things about you! Please scold him! Tell him it's not nice!"

If Priscilla were to grant her request, there was a high probability that the boy would face more than a simple scolding. However, it was impossible for this girl to understand that.

"Hmmm, a scolding from me, you say?" Priscilla mused. "That sounds like quite an interesting proposal. What do you think, Schult?"

"U-Um… well, you see," Schult stammered, "it was my fault for not handling the situation properly. So it would be a bit odd for you to do it, my lady…"

"You are not being very articulate," Priscilla chided. "Can you not speak up?"

"I-I want you to watch me do my very best, Lady Priscilla!" Schult exclaimed, standing tall in front of Priscilla. Mustering his courage, he turned to face the boy, his face flushed with determination.

Al observed the scene beside Priscilla in admiration. Schult had apparently reached the same conclusion as him, although from a completely different perspective—that this matter should not be left up to Priscilla.

Schult looked up at the boy, who was only slightly taller than him.

“Why did you have to say such mean things?” he demanded. “Priscilla is incredibly beautiful and charming! And she is smart, too… There is nothing wrong with her!”

“W-Well…” the boy stammered.

“That’s right!” the sister chimed in. Encouraged by Schult’s words, the girl joined in on proclaiming Priscilla’s beauty to her brother. “Whenever I said something nice about Lady Priscilla, you always denied it! Just look at her! She’s so incredibly gorgeous!”

Priscilla, being complimented on her beauty by these two young children, did not so much as flinch under the boy’s uneasy gaze. She proudly and unabashedly displayed her bold and blazing beauty to the public. However, the boy’s gaze held a mix of complex emotions, contradicting what she had been told earlier. It appeared the tension he felt was not solely due to her lordship, but also because he was faced with the beauty of a woman that his eyes couldn’t help but admire.

“Well, he doesn’t seem to hate you, Princess,” Al observed, “but… ain’t it just that typical youngster bravado? Y’know, refusing to admit that someone’s a looker even though everyone else says so?”

“I fail to see the point of your analogy,” Priscilla remarked, brushing off his words, “but I suppose I have a good idea of his motivations. Al, do you happen to have any siblings?”

“Me? Nah, I’m an only child.”

“Then it would be futile to expect you to comprehend,” Priscilla retorted. Al grimaced at being told off so bluntly. However, his expression remained hidden beneath his helmet, invisible to the eyes of others.

“Cease your frowning. Your gloom is stinking up the air,” Priscilla ordered, despite being unable to see Al’s facial expression.

“Wha?!” he blurted out, startled.

Ignoring him, Prischilla stepped forward. The boy, cornered by both his sister and Schult, timidly retreated, shrinking once more under Priscilla's commanding beauty and power. However…

"You two siblings both have red hair, I see," Priscilla observed, combing her fingers through the petrified boy's red locks.

"Huh?" The boy appeared startled by the gesture. "Your sister's hair is a brighter shade of red while yours appears to be a tad darker, but it's safe to say they belong in the same category," Priscilla continued her observation, to which the girl eagerly affirmed.

"There aren't many kids with red hair," the girl continued, "so I told my brother how lucky we were to look just like the Sun Princess! But he got really mad at me for saying that."

"Simply having red hair is quite a rarity," Priscilla explained, "so it tends to attract the attention of others around you. Some people will pick on you over the most trivial of things. Has that happened to you?"

"You mean like people saying mean things? Yeah. But, when that happens…" the girl's voice trailed off. Priscilla's question seemed to have triggered a memory, and the girl's gaze shifted toward her brother.

The meaning behind her look was clear. Before today, the girl's brother would have stood up to any criticisms regarding their hair. That is, until a certain red-headed Sun Princess named Priscilla Barielle appeared.

"So that's it, huh," Al deduced, finally grasping the core of the siblings' dispute, albeit long after Priscilla had. In short, the brother's antipathy toward Priscilla stemmed from jealousy. "At first, he was the one defending his sister when she got picked on for being a redhead. Guess that all changed once the Princess entered the picture…"

The boy must have felt his self-respect and pride as an older brother stripped away, causing him to object to his sister's admiration of Priscilla. And then, at the most inopportune moment, Schult happened to pass by. Unable to take back his words, the situation had soon spiraled out of control.

“When you add it all up, the truth’s pretty obvious,” Al continued. “It’s no one’s fault, really. I’d just call it bad timing…or maybe just an unlucky star.”

“Hmm? Did you figure something out, Sir Al?” Schult asked as Al nodded to himself thoughtfully. Schult turned and looked up at him, tugging at the hem of his vest.

“You’re adorable, looking up at me like that,” Al commented.

“Huh? What do you mean?” Schult asked. “It’s unfair to keep secrets from me! I want to know too! And I also want to see your face, Sir Al!”

“You’re really hung up on that, huh? It ain’t that big a deal. You really…” Al intended to simplify the situation by describing it as a case of adolescent sibling rivalry. He didn’t want to further drag out the story and embarrass this boy who loved his sister so much.

People were slowly beginning to gather, drawn in by Priscilla’s extraordinary beauty and captivating presence. Many of them were younger onlookers who were originally there after being caught up in the energy of the sibling rivalry. Al figured the situation would get out of control as the commotion escalated and more people began to flock around them. If there’s any moment to wrap up this mess, it’s now, he thought.

Then, a sudden declaration came forth, seizing control of the entire conversation and dominating the scene:

“Very well. Then, this is war.”

The sudden declaration of war left everyone, except Priscilla who held the reins of power, in a state of shock. Of course, Al and Schult were no exception. However, for the siblings, unexpectedly thrust into opposing roles, the astonishment was perhaps even greater.

The older brother’s face grew pale as his eyes widened in disbelief. The younger sister was genuinely taken aback, unable to fully comprehend the situation. Their whispered utterances of confusion made them look exactly identical in their panic.

Unperturbed by their reactions, Priscilla unfurled her fan as she proceeded to command everything within earshot of her voice. Priscilla was an unquenchable flame, engulfing everything in her path and dying it all red. Al wondered if this was really the right crowd for Priscilla to display this side of herself to. However, he couldn't bring himself to interrupt her.

"We're going to war. Both sides should be well prepared." Her smile as she declared war was so magnificent, it silenced any objections.

4

"Just outta curiosity, why are you playing war?" Al asked, standing behind Priscilla.

"I am not playing. Do not selfishly dismiss it as a mere game based on your own perspective. When there is a clash of differing opinions and military power is involved, it can be considered war, no matter what," Priscilla said, dismissing Al's doubts. She peered down into the garden where the preparations for "war" were underway.

"Military power, huh?"

"Schult said that the brother made the first move," Priscilla explained.

The commotion, which began with a trivial sibling rivalry, had unexpectedly, and quite literally, made its way into Barielle Manor. The siblings at the center of the commotion, along with every other boy and girl they considered friends, had been assembled and brought to the mansion in a dragon carriage.

There, the children, mesmerized by the unfamiliar surroundings and atmosphere of their lord's mansion, were gradually being acquainted with the intricacies of war. Needless to say, this was not a war that would require actual swords or shields.

"Well, it's a big relief to see wooden swords and mud balls and such," Al admitted. "Knowing you, Princess, there was no guarantee the children wouldn't have been given actual swords."

"If you give them tools they cannot handle, they shall not be able to achieve their true potential," Priscilla explained, "Not only are they not warriors, they haven't even trained to be soldiers."

"If you'd suggested giving them weapons if they had even a little training, I'm afraid you'd have been roasted."

"Why would I suddenly go up in flames? Your words make no sense," Priscilla countered, raising a shapely eyebrow at Al's remark as she questioned the meaning of "roasted." Al shrugged off her question, redirecting his attention to the children diligently "preparing for war," as they had been instructed. It was war, after all, and so they had been divided into two distinct camps.

In essence, there was an Eastern Army and a Western Army, led by the older brother and the younger sister, respectively. Although there were exactly 15 members on each side, the older brother's side boasted a higher average age since they were predominantly his friends. The male-to-female ratio was also skewed in favor of his faction, which unofficially suggested their higher probability of victory.

Of course, that wasn't to say that there were no boys on the sister's side. However, with Schult as one of them, despite his fervent enthusiasm, victory would be a challenge. "Let's do our best and work together to prove how amazing Lady Priscilla is!" he exclaimed with unwavering confidence.

Schult had naturally developed more slowly in comparison to other children his age. In addition, due to Priscilla's deliberate attitude towards him, he struggled to maintain a serious demeanor. He was highly unqualified to act as an effective soldier. His gusto could be described both as amusing and painful to watch. However, on the other hand, it was hard to believe that Priscilla was oblivious to these circumstances.

"Why the long face?" Priscilla said, gently touching her own lips.

"You can't see through my helmet! How could you possibly know what I look like, Princess?" Al demanded to know.

"Well, perhaps if I had never laid eyes on your face before," she retorted, “but we both know that is not the case, do we not?”

“Tch,” Al clicked his tongue at her cutting remark, unable to find a suitable response as her gesture and cherry-red lips drew his gaze. The memory of that inevitable moment when she had glimpsed his true countenance came rushing back. However, Priscilla and Al played different roles. Despite their pretenses, neither could deny the fact that they had been caught in a moment of vulnerability.

“You questioned the purpose of this war,” Priscilla addressed the silent Al. She sat in her chair, propping herself on her cheekbone. Al closed one eye at her words, having assumed that this conversation was over. Priscilla looked at the children below, and continued, “When both parties possess unwavering convictions, times will arise in which they must cross swords, even amongst parents and siblings. Blood ties alone do not dictate where one’s resolve is tested.”

“I get that, but is it really necessary to ask them that question now?” Al inquired. “Regardless of the little sis’ excitement, the big bro probably didn’t expect it to become such a big deal.”

“As I have already informed you,” Priscilla reminded him, dismissing his opinion with the same logic as before, “it was the brother who displayed his military prowess first.”

Al scratched his head, unable to articulate his thoughts any further. He understood the cause of the siblings’ quarrel and the brother’s sense of obligation, but he couldn’t agree with the brother’s decision to use violence. So is this a form of punishment?

“But if big bro wins this ‘war’, won’t that defeat the whole purpose?” Al asked.

“Indeed, if the older brother triumphs, it would,” Priscilla acknowledged. “However, the morale favors the side of the sister. Plus…”

“Plus what?”

“The sister’s side has received a little strategic advice from my end.”

This new information caught Al off guard, shattering his pessimistic expectations.

To be honest, Al did not know if Priscilla was familiar with battle tactics. He could not know, yet he held lofty expectations for her, believing there was nothing she couldn't accomplish. After all, this fearless Scarlet Princess seemed to possess an uncanny knack for receiving favor in all events. Precisely for that reason…

"Everything in this world is made for my convenience," Priscilla declared. And indeed, it truly appeared as if the entire world was united in advocating for her philosophy.

With these winds seemingly blowing in Priscilla's favor, Al couldn't help but voice a question. "Princess, do you happen to have a brother?" The query slipped out before he could contain himself, and he immediately regretted the possibility of upsetting Priscilla with his words.

However, regardless of Al's inner turmoil, Priscilla narrowed her eyes. "And just what makes you think that all of a sudden?" she challenged.

"Ah, well honestly, it just kinda hit me," Al explained. "It's like you understood the reason for the siblings' fight from the get-go, and then, uh…"

"Do not stumble over your words there," she said curtly. "Are you simply seeking my attention?"

"Well, you were pretty hung up on the big bro's antics," he continued. Yet, as he was speaking from a mere idea, he struggled to verbalize it, even to himself. Yet the more he pondered it, the more it made sense.

Thinking back, he recalled the first time Priscilla said she was going to Krufuna. It was not a mere whim on her part, nor due to Schult's perceived shortcomings. Rather, the decision came after hearing the details of the siblings' quarrel. The more he thought about it, the clearer it became.

Upon hearing Al's guess, Priscilla became unusually silent, keeping her mouth shut. Surprised by her uncharacteristic composure in response to his accurate assumption, Al leaned forward and peered into her face. However, in an instant, the tip of her fan extended and pressed under his chin.

"Ow, ow, ow, ow!" Al winced as Priscilla's scorching punishment seared through his curiosity. "Agh! Ow! W-Wait, Princess!"

"Do not gaze upon my face with impure thoughts," Priscilla warned. "It is natural for men to be captivated by my beauty, but those who desire more must be willing to pay the appropriate price."

"That's no reason to carbonize someone's vocal cords, damn!" Al grumbled in pain and frustration.

Having had his sense of superiority scorched by her scathing response, Al shrugged and withdrew, rubbing his throat in discomfort. Priscilla let out a small sigh as Al retreated, and replied, "I had numerous siblings. Older brothers, younger brothers, older sisters, younger sisters."

"Wow, I can't even imagine," Al commented, pondering Priscilla's family structure with a tilt of his head.

Priscilla responded to his reaction. "Hmm? What exactly is so difficult for you to grasp about it?"

"I know I asked if you had siblings. But seriously, Princess, you don't strike me as the kind of person who fits into the typical family portrait," Al confessed. "You don't really give off that big or little sis vibe, y'know? It's like my brain gets all buggy and glitchy when you tell me you fit in both categories."

"What was that, a 'bargain' on words from beyond the Great Waterfall?" Priscilla asked, a slight chuckle escaping her lips as she attempted to wield her recently acquired vocabulary. However, Al wasn't oblivious to the subtle undercurrent of nostalgia in her words.

Nostalgia, yes, nostalgia. I'm honestly surprised to know that even the Princess gets nostalgic about things. Not to mention hearing how many brothers and sisters she got. Or how she spoke of them in past tense…

“Lady Priscilla! Everything is ready to go!” Schult’s voice rang out from the garden below as Al and Priscilla’s conversation came to a close. Looking around, the scene revealed the children adorned in their valiant “war” attire deployed on either side of the garden, each exuding a fierce determination to prove their prowess.

It was evident that both the younger sister’s camp, already brimming with high morale, and the older brother’s camp, initially hesitant to engage in battle, now displayed a remarkable level of ambition.

“Things are gonna get messy,” Al commented with an unexpected touch of excitement. Priscilla rose from her chair in response.

“That is precisely why it was well worth the effort,” Priscilla proclaimed. Her profile as she spoke, and the fleeting emotion that passed through her eyes, captured Al’s attention. But before he could decipher its meaning, Priscilla thrusted her fan forward and continued, “Both sides must exert their utmost effort. For those who cannot abandon their wills, the only path to prove themselves is through victory. So, let the battle commence.”

“I am off!” called Schult.

The shrill cries of the children filled the air, echoing in response to the commanding voice of the Scarlet Princess. The “war” had begun within the grounds of Barielle Manor, with the brother and sister locked into fierce battle. Watching this scene unfold, a realization dawned upon Al regarding his earlier concern.

What he detected in Priscilla’s profile was the subtle flicker of anticipation. There was an expectation in her eyes, a glimmer of hope that she might witness what she desired.

5

“So what the hell was all that commotion about earlier?” the man grumbled, tilting his head as he stroked his stubble-streaked chin, his face flushed with booze.

He was a towering man with blazing red hair, sporting a shirt without any armor over his moderately fit physique. It gave him a distinct appearance different from his usual worn-out demeanor. However, it was questionable whether that was the impression he wanted to give.

That evening, on the balcony of Barielle Manor, Al found himself in a rather uninspiring encounter with a man, rather than in the presence of Priscilla or Schult. It wasn't that they had prearranged this meeting. They just happened to be in the same place at the same time, quietly spending the evening. Neither of them sought to seek out or avoid the other's company. Sometimes, a man simply needed a moment such as this on an empty balcony to reflect on things.

"Well, it's a complicated thing for dudes our age, y'know?" Al began to explain.

"What?" asked the man. Al shook his head and answered the man's frowning gaze with a gentle shake of his head.

"What I mean is, men are always going through puberty, y'know?" Problems keep piling up as we get older, but deep down, it's the same basic stuff. In the end, we're still asking ourselves, 'Who am I?' It's like we're stuck in this eternal adolescence.

"Well, whatever," the man grumbled. "And you still haven't answered my question, have you?"

"Oh, Princess's whim?" Al asked. "I'm still trying to figure that out myself, bro. It's a mystery to me."

"You're awfully laid-back for a supposed knight of the Sun Princess, huh," the man scoffed.

"Give me a break, bro. I've told you before, I'm not a knight," Al said dismissively. The man stayed silent.

Al detested being referred to as a knight, even in jest. He harbored a deep prejudice against those in the knight profession, considering them little more than chumps. And it wasn't only Al who held such resentment. Neither he nor Priscilla intended to glamorize their relationship with each other. Besides, this guy must also hate any topic involving knights and whatnot. After all…

"You're the father of the Knight Among Knights, Reinhard van Astrea," Al pointed out.

"Tch," the middle-aged Heinkel Astrea clicked his tongue in disgust at the reminder. His frown, unkempt stubble, and simple attire were far from impressive, but upon closer inspection, one could see that he indeed shared similar features to the renowned Sword Saint, with his well-defined face and blazing red hair.

This was only natural, given the fact that they were father and son by blood. Of course, there was no question that their relationship was certainly a complicated one. Otherwise, he would not have been able to serve a master from a different camp than his own son.

Heinkel, still silent, took a swig directly from the bottle in his hand. He was now a member of the Priscilla Camp, joining the ranks alongside those contesting for the royal selection. Nevertheless, Al had no idea what role he played. That was up to Priscilla. It was hard to fathom that his involvement held no significance.

"That ain't really how I measure things, nor how I think," Al concluded.

"But if you keep on like that, you're gonna cause people trouble," Heinkel remarked. "If Lady Priscilla is dead serious about the throne, she can't afford to become some queen that nobody understands."

"Not my concern, bro," Al said, leaning against the balcony railing. He gently patted the area where Priscilla, fresh in his memory, had been leaning, and spoke with determination. "For Princess, I'll do whatever it takes to make her win."

Upon hearing Al's reassurance, Heinkel glanced at him briefly, and sneered, "Well, isn't that something. I thought you didn't give a damn about the royal selection's outcome."

"Oh, come on, don't go exaggerating," Al said. "I think about it every day."

"Right, let me rephrase that. I just assumed you didn't give a damn about sticking your nose into the royal selection process. Lady Priscilla's perfectly capable of handling everything on her own, right?"

"Oh," Al let out a voice expressing his amazement.

He was a bit taken aback by Heinkel's astute observation. Not because he said something unexpected, but because it revealed Heinkel's keen eye for what was happening around him. Nah, considering how Priscilla managed to see through my helmet twice today, perhaps I'm just not as hard-to-read as I thought.

"No. The reason I wear this helmet is because I already know that, isn't it?" Al wore his helmet with a sense of detachment, yet his overwhelming emotions remained palpable. Perhaps he should have become an actor instead of an outcast.

"Oh dear, you're refusing to answer this too," Heinkel remarked. "You're quite the secretive one, aren't you?"

"That's never been a secret," Al replied. "I mean, I hide my face. Ain't that normally the first thing you see? Well, you won't find anything interesting in my secrets. If anything…"

"If anything?"

"I think you and I are pretty much alike," Al shared, drawing from the bits of information he had heard about Heinkel's complex circumstances.

Between his legendary father, known as the Sword Demon, and his son, the Sword Saint, who was hailed as the greatest swordsman of all time, Heinkel was of a quiet generation, caught in the middle. A pathetic man afflicted by his melancholy and his position. A man deserving of intense sympathy. For Al painfully understood the fear of being overshadowed by one's own illustrious bloodline.

"You don't know a damn thing about me," Heinkel spat bitterly, wrinkling his nose.

"I knew you would say that, though!" Al chuckled wryly. It seemed that Heinkel neither desired nor cared to be understood. Al leaned his back against the railing, gazing up at the moon in the night sky.

"As far as I can tell, today's 'war' was just Princess's way of assessing things," Al said thoughtfully.

"War?"

"Let's just call it boisterous merrymaking," Al explained. "You got two people with their own stubborn opinions, rallying their buddies, breaking up into teams, then using all their might to prove their point. Ain't that just what war is, bro?"

"Sounds like bullshit to me," Heinkel scoffed. The use of obscene language was a telltale sign of him becoming drunk. The more drunk he became, the further removed from dignity and sincerity he grew.

Al observed this shift from the sidelines with amusement. Al didn't drink, so he was unable to personally gauge the effects of alcohol. But the unappealing spectacle of an intoxicated stranger was enough to reinforce his aversion to it. In any case, Al's examination of Priscilla's awareness and intentions regarding the "war" served as a means of both affirming and analyzing her intentions.

"Princess had something she wanted to see, y'know? And she used that sibling showdown to figure it out," Al commented.

"What the hell did she wanna see?"

"Unfortunately, she didn't exactly spill the beans to me, so I can't really say. My guess could be way off, y'know."

"You're useless," Heinkel grumbled. "Might as well ask her to chop off your other arm."

"Damn, you're so vulgar when you're drunk!" Al complained. "Someone with both arms intact might not get it, but this arm means a hell of a lot more to me than it would to y'all that still got both!"

It was a dispute that could have easily escalated to an all-out fight, yet Heinkel showed no remorse or apology. Not because he viewed others as unimportant, though. On the contrary, it was because he had little regard for his own self, which seemed to justify his reckless demeanor. In fact, Heinkel would gladly accept a duel that came about as a consequence of his outspokenness. However…

"I'm telling you, bro, once anyone finds out you're the father of the Sword Saint, they'll back off real quick," Al said.

"Tch." Heinkel averted his gaze and clicked his tongue in annoyance once more. No matter what they talked about that quiet evening on the balcony, they always seemed to circle back to the same question: Who am I? It was a question that nobody could escape.

A gruff, liquor-infused voice brought Al back down to earth as he gazed blankly at the night sky, contemplating the constellations above for which each of them were named. "So, you said she wanted to see something," Heinkel grumbled, his sky-blue eyes somewhat vacant as he gazed into his half-full bottle of liquor.

"Yeah," Al acknowledged.

"You also got something you want to see, Sir Al?" Heinkel asked.

"I'm surprised you're interested in me, bro. Thought you only cared about your own family." As soon as Al said this, Heinkel scowled and clicked his tongue once more, hurling his bottle of booze at Al.

Al ducked with a "Whoops" to avoid the spinning bottle as it sailed over the railing and into the garden, smacking the ground with a resounding crack. Heinkel turned away without sparing a glance, as if trying to distance himself from Al, who had clearly struck a nerve.

"Yes, I do," Al called out abruptly after Heinkel, walking away from the balcony. Heinkel paused for a moment, listening to Al's words without bothering to turn back. Al cracked a slight smile at his apparent curiosity, but had nothing more to add.

“I do have something I want to see,” Al continued. “Princess in the bath!”

“Tch!” Another click of the tongue was the only way Heinkel could possibly respond to Al’s mischievous joke.

“Well if that ain’t the loudest tongue click I’ve ever heard in my life!”

6

“I am so happy that the siblings made up!” Schult beamed. His reaction was one of pure joy and innocence, with no uncertainty whatsoever. Priscilla closed one eye and drew her fan from the open bosom of her nightgown.

“Oh, so you think so too, Schult?” Priscilla asked.

“Yes, I do! I knew you could do it, my lady! I am so proud of you!”

With the tip of the fan, Priscilla gently lifted Schult’s chin and turned his head to the side, causing the boy to make a quizzical face. She could clearly see the reddish tint lingering on his right cheek. It was a visible remnant of today’s “war”, and what one might call a badge of honor.

“To me, considering a battle wound as a badge of honor is a reflection of one’s own shortcomings,” Priscilla remarked.

“Lady Priscilla?” Schult questioned.

“Does your cheek hurt?”

Tightly clenching his small fists, Schult demonstrated his unwavering determination. “It tingles a bit, but I’m fine! It was all part of our winning strategy!”

In addition to the redness of his cheeks, Schult bore scars all over his body from the war. He had scraped knees from falls, a bruised back from being hit, and possibly many other marks of battle. In moments of injury, pain often follows, and one may even shed tears. Indeed, Schult had shed a tear or two. However…

“This whole thing started because of me. Do you despise me?” Priscilla asked.

“Me? Hate you? Lady Priscilla? That’s impossible!” Schult exclaimed in disbelief.

“…”

“I was so happy to fight for you, my lady!” Schult’s gaze shifted downwards as he marveled at his own modest display of bravery. “I would have been more scared than hurt if I just cowered in fear…”

His introspective posture, although typical of him, was at the same time as painful as the scars on his body. This mental anguish, however, was not particularly unique to Schult. It was a sort of “fever” that could afflict anyone, regardless of who they were.

“…”

After the tumultuous events of the day, Priscilla had finished her hot bath and lay on her bed. Schult, having changed into his own nightgown, nestled beside her—a customary routine that had become an endearing ritual. This small, adorable boy had become an indispensable cuddle pillow for Priscilla. However, Schult himself yearned for a more significant role than that of a mere cuddle pillow. A fact that Priscilla astutely recognized, as evidenced by the day’s war.

The quarrel between the siblings, which Priscilla called a war, unfolded just as Priscilla had predicted. The younger sister’s camp, guided by her counsel, emerged victorious. And Schult had played a significant role in securing their triumph. He was one of the first ones to fall, in a rather spectacular fashion, and left the other side bewildered.

“I thought my hard work would pay off, but I was wrong…” Schult said with a hint of disappointment. “Enemies appeared left and right. They were all over me… They were destroying me."

The title of the vanguard may have held a certain allure, but in Schult's case, the first sacrifice may have been more fitting. As the morale of the younger sister's camp dwindled, that of the older brother's only grew in strength and momentum. The sister's camp was driven back by the advancing forces of the brother's. However…

"Well, he is a big brother, after all," Schult said with a smile, acknowledging the reason for the brother's defeat. Despite countless setbacks endured by the sister's camp, once they finally reached their opponent's leader, the brother hesitated to let his sister down in the face of victory. It was at that moment that Priscilla's wiles came into effect, bringing the war to an end.

"The condition for victory is the downfall of the other team's general," Priscilla had explained. "Which means, if the opponent's leader falls, even if you are the last man standing, if you manage to take down the other side's leader, the victory is yours. Whether you win will be determined by the very last moment."

In this respect, the sister heeded Priscilla's words and displayed great courage. Priscilla's advice was simple yet effective: "Your brother will hesitate to kill you in the very end. That is precisely when you should strike." And indeed, true to Priscilla's prediction, that is exactly how the conflict was resolved.

"In the end, it was amazing that the brother defended his sister from his teammates, even after she stabbed him," Schult marveled. "That is why, as you said, Lady Priscilla, they were able to make up!"

However, the final outcome was not as heartwarming as the innocence Schult portrayed. The sister's strategic move managed to topple her brother and his followers, who had been on the brink of victory. Naturally, they refused to accept defeat, instead directing their anger at the sister. Yet, it was the brother himself who bravely shielded her from their wrath head-on.

Originally, this situation came about due to the deep bond between the siblings. The brother could not bear to see his sister vilified, and the sister, amidst accusations and fear, reaffirmed her love and respect for her protective older brother. And thus, that was the conclusion they reached.

"…"

Pricilla maintained her silence. Despite witnessing the outcome, and the resolution unfolding somewhat as she had envisioned, an unsettling darkness lingered in her heart. In Priscilla's mind, there were two potential outcomes: whether her advice would have proved effective or not.

Her intuition was right on the mark. The sister successfully stabbed her hesitant brother, thus claiming victory. However, this was not a triumph, but a certainty. It was proof of the elder brother's undeniable love for his sister. It was a war, albeit a false one. The death of the men may have been staged, and the wounds received may have been superficial, but nonetheless, it was still a war.

If she so desired, Priscilla possessed the power to incite and manipulate countless individuals to engage in real warfare, where real lives were at stake, just as she did today. She could sway naive, ignorant individuals like Schult, who mustered strength through blind faith. Priscilla was fully aware that she held that power, responsibility, position, and beauty. And the outcome of today's events only reinforced that. Why then won't the dark cloud in me dissipate?

"I knew I was not mistaken," Schult said as he sat beside Priscilla, lost in thought. The tone of his voice had suddenly dropped.

"Hmm?" Priscilla turned her attention to Schult. It was an unusual reaction for a normally cheerful boy.

Schult rubbed his cheeks with both hands. "Lady Priscilla, you looked kind of lonely," he mumbled with a hint of concern, dropping his gaze.

"Lonely? Me?" Priscilla asked with surprise.

"That is how it looked to me," Schult continued. "I thought you seemed a little lonely when you were watching that brother and sister…"

Could it be this child blames himself for not being able to mediate the siblings' quarrel? Does he blame himself for my own upset? If so, he couldn't be further off the mark. More so…

"Ha—" She gently put a hand over her mouth, but nevertheless, a breath escaped her, unexpectedly bubbling up from within.

"L-Lady Priscilla?" Schult stammered, taken aback.

It was a laugh that Priscilla had not intended, and one that Schult had unwittingly evoked. It was Schult's achievement that unveiled the true nature of the dark cloud lingering in Priscilla's heart.

"How dare you suggest that I, Priscilla, could be lonely? Oh, how dare you?"

"Wh-Wh-Wha—? I-I was wrong, wasn't I? I knew it…"

"No. I commend you, even though your choice of words may have been incorrect," Priscilla praised her young servant, suppressing his agitation. She placed her fan on the flustered boy's forehead with a smile.

Schult looked shocked at her statement, then patted his chest as if relieved. Foolish, ignorant, and thus innocent, Schult's crimson eyes may have caught a glimpse deep into the heart of the Scarlet Princess, continuing to burn with an intense, fervent heat.

"Schult, you must not divulge your observations about my emotions to anyone," Priscilla cautioned.

"About Your Ladyship appearing lonely?"

"I shall not admit to feeling lonely," she replied defiantly, "however, I do wish to avoid any misunderstandings. I order you to keep your mouth shut, my loyal servant with your radiantly burning eyes."

Schult’s red eyes twinkled, and he paused for a moment before nodding his head. “Yes, I understand,” he replied. Hearing his response, Priscilla placed her hands on her ample bosom, feeling the dark cloud gradually dissipate. How humiliating yet intriguing it is that this boy, Schult, was both correct and incorrect in his observations.

The siblings’ war, driven by their love for one another, had ended precisely as Priscilla had foreseen. However, on the other hand, it was still not quite what she had hoped for. If one cannot conclude definitively that the thoughts, feelings, and love between siblings loses its radiance in the face of various factors, and their warmth and glimmer eventually gets overshadowed, then…

“Was it me who was lacking? Or was it you, Brother?” Priscilla murmured, gently poking the cheek of the sleeping child in her arms on her bed. She directed her question to a fragment of cloud that had dissipated within her heart. Naturally, there was no response. The opportunity to ask had long since slipped away. However, she held on to the feeling that an answer to her nagging doubts would come to light in the near future.

It would have been sufficient if I could simply forget about it and keep myself distant. However, if such a premonition were to resurface from the searing heat within my heart, the answer would undoubtedly find its way to me. Because after all…

“Everything in this world is made for my convenience.”

END

Volume 30

Chapters 55-59B

Chapter 55:
The Cacophony of the Demon City

1

—At the heart of the Demon City of Chaosflame, the Crimson Lapis Castle collapsed, shadows overflowing.

That was the true nature of the thunderous roar that rocked the city, and the nightmarish spectacle witnessed through the eyes of those present.

Blending within a single stone of crimson lapis, red and blue colors danced. And the gorgeous Castle, fashioned from stacking these precious stones of whimsical beauty, crumbled as easily as a castle made of sand.

To those who knew the Demon City and to the residents of the Demon City, it was a shock, equivalent to that of the heavens falling.

What should not have come to pass had indeed happened, to the point of blurring the line between dream and reality—and this was no exception for those less familiar with the Demon City.

???: "…"

The tremors also spread to a room in a traveling inn that was prepared for outside visitors to the Demon City.

Some stared bug-eyed, glaciated in place; some stiffened their whole body in utmost alertness; some shrieked, having fallen on their rear; some drew nearer to each other, as to protect themselves from the quaking.

However, despite the differing reactions, the identity of what befell them was the same "threat".

While held captive by it, seized by instinctive fear for a moment, the irreparable situation was—

??? & ???: "—Everyone, quiet down!"

That moment, a sharp, resonant, "overlapping" voice cut through the interval of time marked by rigidity caused by the threat.

The two voices which resonated within the room—homogeneous ones at that, struck their eardrums, rousing even those minds that had fallen into ceased thought.

The pair to emit a sharp voice were the black-haired figures, the ones before them raising their heads in a snap.

The two men, one with a bare face and the other with his behind an oni mask, each reached out their arm towards the overwhelming scene of collapse that could be seen outside the window.

Abel: "Do not stop! If we delay in dealing with that thing, we shall all lose our lives."

Vincent: "That which has swallowed the castle and is still devouring the sky altogether is a great glutton. If we do not do something here, the number of victims shall multiply in the blink of an eye!"

Everyone: "…"

Abel & Vincent: "—Kafma Irulux!"

As if their thoughts were the same, the two men's gazes converged on one person.

The brown-skinned man to whom those steady stares were directed—Kafma Irulux, was thrust into the midst of confusion, unknowing of which way to turn his gaze of bewilderment.

But the confusion would not prolong for long. Because—

Abel & Vincent: "Stop that shadow! Know that the price for your procrastination is the lives of the people of the Empire!"

Kafma: “—Yes!”

The moment he was presented with the action needed to be taken and the clear purpose of what needed to be done, the hesitation in Kafma’s eyes vanished.

Kafma placed his fist on his chest, bowed, and spoke,

Kafma: “I shall leave your side. May the Divine Protection of the Yang Sword be with you!”

Vincent: “Your work shall be my Divine Protection. Exert yourself to the very last.”

Kafma: “To the utmost—!”

Giving a powerful reply, Kafma headed straight toward the window.

Using that vigor for a leap, Kafma sliced through the window with his outstretched arm and rushed out, scattering shards of glass. Immediately after, Kafma’s back bulged out, and six transparent wings spread out from behind his cloak, which he had cast off.

Fluttering wings that gave the impression of being those of a winged insect’s, Kafma’s figure flew through the sky of the Demon City as if cleaving the sky itself.

The course was straight for Crimson Lapis Castle, which was set to be destroyed by the overflowing shadows.

Abel: “How many people did you bring?”

Giving a backwards glance at Kafma’s flight, the man in the oni mask—Abel, asked a pointed question. The question was directed at Vincent, a black-haired handsome man, who had received a bow from Kafma.

The man now occupying the throne of the Vollachian Empire narrowed his eyes slightly at Abel’s question.

Vincent: “My retinue is as you can see, Kafma Irulux and the absent Olbart Dunkelkenn. The other one would not be of much help.”

Abel: “No pawns to lay down. Perhaps travelling light has backfired.”

Vincent: “The responsibility you are accounting me for is exceeding absurdity.”

Once Vincent revealed his cards without hesitation, Abel uttered an inconsiderate comment. Vincent responded with a complaint, to which Abel did not take kindly.

Abel, his hand on his chin and his fingers tracing the bottom of the oni mask, pondered for a few seconds, then glanced at the others in the room—the ones who were unable to hide their unease at the threat.

The two girls, both young in appearance, were able to react to that gaze, even though they did not speak.

One of them was Medium O’Connell with blonde hair and blue eyes; and the other was Tanza, a deerperson in a kimono with round, quivering eyes. Neither of them would be the deciding factor in this situation.

The only one who could potentially be some sort of key actor would be—

???: “Ah, ahhh… Why, why, why, at a time like this…”

Medium: “Al-chin…”

The frightened voice gave no heed whatsoever to the quiet Abel’s stare.

Holding his head with his right hand, terrified of the scene outside the window but tormented by the dilemma of being unable to take his eyes off it, was a dark-haired boy, his face concealed by a ragged piece of cloth that had been messily rolled-up.

Of all the people Abel had with him, this boy was, in a sense, the one who had not shown his true depths, but given this terrified look of his, which did not appear to be an act, Abel was hesitant to include him in the plan.

It was not out of consideration for the feelings of the person. —It was purely an appraisal of uselessness.

Vincent: “If so, not many measures can be taken.”

The profile of Abel in careful deliberation was struck by Vincent’s words, the latter standing next to him.

Standing side-by-side, the two men looked out the window—or perhaps, they ought to be called two Emperors.

Abel exhaled, dismissing the sentiment that momentarily surfaced as trivial.

Vincent was right; not many possible measures could be taken.

And in response to Vincent, who would have reached the same conclusion, he voiced scant words—

Abel: “—Link up with Yorna Mishigure. We require her strength.”

2

Taritta, smelling a change in the situation, moistened her parched lips with her tongue.

The change in the air, the scent of the pursuers, the feeling on her skin of bloodlust and hostility directed at her; all of those of which appealed to her differently than they had just before, making her pause for a moment to make a decision considering these sensations.

She impetuously wondered whether they really were a good thing or a bad thing.

However—

Taritta: “—Neither of those matter.”

If her conclusion were the same, Taritta would not be deeply concerned.

She was aware that she was not very bright to begin with. If this were Mizelda, her older sister, she would probably be able to deduce the correct answer based on her instinctive intuition, even if their minds were not so different.

But Taritta did not possess the same sense of smell as her sister. Probably, she also lacked the quick wit. She had absolutely nothing.

Spending vast quantities of time worrying about it would eventually lead to endless hesitation about which answer was the correct one.

Therefore, she decided to just, not waver. Once the outcome was clear, she could agonize endlessly about the pros and cons of it.

Therefore, Taritta did not change her approach, regardless of the change in the atmosphere of her pursuers.

???: “Gah, guh…”

Taritta: “You can’t break free. No matter how strong you are.”

Tightened around the struggling man with bloodshot eyes, Taritta’s jacket blocked his respiratory tract.

The sheepman with his right eye ablaze attempted to escape his restraints desperately, but Taritta, having taken off her jacket to use its sleeve to constrict his neck, cut a tendon in her opponent’s arm, preventing him from acting.

Frankly speaking, she was greatly tormented by the robustness of her pursuers, who kept getting back up even after she had gouged out their vital areas.

Taritta: “Even if I don’t know how to deal with it, even I managed it one way or the other.”

???: “…”

Eventually, the man’s panting voice became inaudible, and his body, losing its strength, went limp. Choosing that moment, Taritta removed the jacket from around the man's neck and pulled his collapsed body to the side of the road.

Taritta sighed as she exhaled, and behind her, the bodies of her pursuers, having been strangled by her, were lying in a row along the walls of the street.

After realizing that strikes and knife attacks were ineffective and that strangulation techniques were effective, she ended up fighting them off with that single technique.

Although the pursuers had been blessed with unusual strength and stamina, they seemed to be novices in the art of efficiently applying such power.

Thanks to this, Taritta's skills pulled through and she was able to continue to properly neutralize her pursuers.

—If she could have just let him die, this affair would have been done and over with much faster.

???: "—Do not kill anyone."

With that phrase flashing across her head, Taritta was forced into quite the struggle.

Abel had given her those words of instruction just before she parted to serve as a decoy, to allow everyone to get away from the inn.

Considering the circumstances into which she was put, perhaps she should have objected by calling them reckless words at the time. But would someone with eyes as discerning as Abel's give instructions that could not be carried out?

Or perhaps he had given that instruction with the belief that Taritta was capable of following it?

If so, it would mean that Abel had perceived Taritta's ability.

Taritta: "…"

Just to what extent was Abel capable of seeing things?

Of course, one only had to look at the mysterious techniques that had struck Subaru, Medium, and Al to see that Abel was not a person able to anticipate every eventuality and move with perfect foresight.

If such a thing were possible, it would no longer be the work of a human being, but the work of an extraordinary being.

It was a realm of reasoning that should not be ventured into, something that could not be considered possible of being violated by a human being.

One could not help but think if a human being able to reach what was just beyond their reach existed, that too was a deliberation.

As one of the Shudraq, Taritta possessed the skill to take down any prey.

Abel would have known that Taritta had mastered the art of strangulation, which was not supposed to work on beasts, and the reason for this—

???: "—Well well, thiiis~ is quite the spectacle."

Taritta: "—Hk."

While ruminating over that, a voice slipped into a gap in Taritta's consciousness, stopping her in her tracks.

Abruptly jolted back to reality by this, Taritta turned around with a dagger in her hand. Then, hoping to drive a blow to the assassin who had closed in behind her without any cue—

???: "Wahwahwah, waitwait! Wait, will you! That's a taaad~ premature."

Taritta: "—You?"

???: "—Oh, are you alright? Have you calmed down? Is it okay if I put my arms down?"

Just as she was about to disable her opponent's limbs, Taritta stopped wielding her knife in an instant.

In front of her, holding his head and awkwardly attempting to defend himself, was an ashen-haired, effeminate man in a hooded blue robe.

He was a man with a handsome face however; the flame common to her pursuers was not burning in his eyes, and above all, the amateurishness of his demeanor made him seem harmless.

However, the fact remained that he had evaded Taritta's vigilance and stood behind her.

Taritta: "…"

Delicate Man: "Myyy~ oh my, guess I'm distrusted a whole lot. I happen to be just a regular guy passing by this place…"

Taritta: "…I don't think an ordinary person would be able to look at this and remain calm."

The self-proclaimed "harmless" delicate man, gave one more reason as to why it was impossible for her to let down her guard towards him.

Regarding the bodies of her pursuers lined up on the wall—unless he approached them and checked whether they were alive or dead, it would not be surprising if he believed them dead; yet he remained unfazed.

Unless his heart had gone cold, she could not come up with an answer aside from him being accustomed to them.

At Taritta's wary look, the delicate man smiled bashfully.

For a moment, she was almost distracted by the smile of the finely-featured man, but her wariness of danger won out over her reaction to his beautiful looks. When it came to handsome men with delicate faces, Flop was plenty enough.

—Right now isn't the time to be thinking about him.

Delicate Man: “Ohhh~ no, I’ve been seen through. I certainly wouldn’t say it’s a familiar sight back home. I told you it was quite the spectacle. —Well, Taritta-san.”

Taritta: “—Hk.”

Delicate Man: “Oh, don’t gut me, don’t gut me! I’m not the enemy, even if I seem suspicious!”

Her caution, that had begun to slacken for a moment until just before that, was instantly reinforced

The man of delicate features in front of her called out Taritta’s name with a cool demeanor, as if she were something like an old acquaintance of his. Of course, the man before Taritta’s eyes was no sort of acquaintance.

There should be no one Taritta was familiar with and would call her by name here; that information should not have been acquired by him.

The only ones that could have possibly given him that information were Abel and the others, who had separated from her, but—

Taritta: “You, have you met my family?”

Delicate Man: “—? You’ve come with your family? Hmmm~, I’ve heard the People of Shudraq don’t come out of the forest often, was there a change in the Chieftain’s policy?”

Taritta: “How do you know that I’m…!”

Delicate Man: “Whaaat’s~ that, feels like it the more you speak. That’s all.”

With a wry smile, the attitude of the delicate man towards Taritta seemed to have deepened in familiarity, but in contrast, Taritta grew more cautious of him, her feelings of displeasure intensifying by his eeriness.

There was nothing like a sign of hostility, or anything of the sort.

However, the intensifying eeriness, little-by-little, instilled in Taritta the dangerous impression that she should, at this juncture, eliminate him.

And Taritta had an inkling of how the planted seedlings of suspicion would sprout, what buds they would develop, and what flowers they would bloom.

The reason was—

Delicate Man: "—Disgrace of the Shudraq."

Taritta: "—Ah."

Suddenly, Taritta's consciousness went blank as she heard the words woven by the delicate man's lips.

Taritta: "…"

Why did this man say those words? —No, why does he know?

Because the man who had spoken those words to Taritta before had already—

Delicate Man: "It's a commandment, isn't it? For you, who became the Disgrace of the Shudraq, Taritta-san."

Taritta: "A, commandment…?"

Delicate Man: "It's about something which can be described as the alignment of the stars, or their guidance. It's like, about people having their own destiniiies~? I'm in the business of gazing at them."

Taritta was left dumbfounded, and the delicate man shook his head saying, "Ohhh~".

Then he put his hand on his own chest, and, with his two eyes, shot straight through Taritta,

Delicate Man: "I guess you could call it a commandment for us."

Taritta: “…”

Taritta swallowed a breath, her throat making a noise, at that pronoun being spoken in the plural.

The loudness of that noise was accompanied by the illusion that the whole world was quaking. —No, Taritta’s gulp did not make the world quake.

However, as a matter-of-fact, the world was quaking.

That was—

Delicate Man: “Hoooly~ crap.”

The delicate man let out a carefree sigh which conferred on him the impression of a happy-go-lucky person.

However, what happened was an event so extreme that his attitude could not express it completely.

—In the distance, the beautiful Crimson Lapis Castle, which stood at the heart of the Demon City, far away from Taritta and the delicate man, crumbled with terrific force, its red and blue light being covered by black darkness.

It was no figurative expression, for a truly black darkness covered the Crimson Lapis Castle.

Something beautiful, something radiant, was being painted over by something foul, something accursed.

Delicate Man: “Myyy~ oh my, how should I put it… This might be, a small bit I didn’t gaze.”

Taritta: “You—”

The delicate man gazed at the collapsing castle and the flood of darkness, using his hands as a visor.

She suspected that this man, who seemed so unconcerned, could possibly be the cause of that abnormal event. But as if sensing

Taritta's doubt, he shrugged his shoulders and said,

Delicate Man: "Feels awkward to mention this immediately after I talked about a commandment, but that and I got nothing to do with each other. In the first place, that's the Kingdom of Lugunica's problem, isn't it? That's outside my responsibility."

Taritta: "Outside your responsibility, the Kingdom of Lugunica…?"

Delicate Man: "Maybe that child isn't aware that they're a Stargazer? If that's the case, His Excellency's made quite the daring gamble… Maybe he had no choice in the hand he was dealt?"

Taritta: "I don't understand…! If you know something!"

Intending to intimidate him into answering, Taritta stepped in and grabbed the delicate man by the neck. She pressed the man's slender frame against the wall, and placed the blade in her hand against his white neck.

If Taritta were to flick her wrist, a great deal of blood would gush immediately from the man's neck.

The feel of the cold blade should have given the delicate man a sufficient foresight of his future.

Delicate Man: "Mayhaps my life or death's got little to do with what's going on…"

Taritta: "—Hk."

Delicate Man: "I don't think your side should be spending a lotta time here. I'm not gaziiing~ the stars, so it's just a hunch on my part."

And yet, the delicate man nonchalantly continued to stare into Taritta's eyes, ignoring the feel of the blade.

The most discomfort she had ever felt towards this man was felt at this moment. Without any clear rationale that could be put into words, the urge to just cut off the man's head flashed through her.

However, just before she surrendered herself to that violent impulse—

Delicate Man: "—Killing me won't make things better. It was the same last time around, no?"

—Those few words were enough to stop Taritta from actually ending it all with the knife she held in her hand.

Delicate Man: "Whoopsie!"

Taritta: "Please, get out of my sight! Right now…!"

Gritting her teeth, Taritta, still grabbing the delicate man by his nape, threw him onto the street.

The man managed to somehow roll using his long legs and break the fall, stroking his roughly handled neck with his hand, looking at Taritta's face with a "You sure it's fine?".

Delicate Man: "You may be slitting your own throat here, literally… You may never have the opportunity to run into me like this again."

Taritta: "Then, that's the best. Looking at your face, it's like…"

Delicate Man: "…"

Taritta: "It's like, are you in the mood to make me face a nightmare I've had many times…!"

With a feeling like that of a curse, Taritta gave a swing of her hand as if to dismiss the delicate man.

The gesture caused the man to sigh, looking toward the collapsing castle in the distance,

Delicate Man: "Apparently, unlike me, you've got a task to do. Thaaat~ may be the trump card to suppress that shadow."

Taritta: "Me…? I have such power…"

Delicate Man: "—A commandment's already been handed down.

You know that, right, Disgrace of the Shudraq."

Taritta: "…"

Delicate Man: "You're free to fulfill it or not. As someone who hasn't received one, I don't envy you for being able to follow the path, though."

After saying so, the delicate man pulled the hood over his head and turned his back to Taritta, and started running.

Fast, but not fast enough. Although she could catch up with him if she wanted to, Taritta had no desire to chase him.

The fact that, deep down inside, she did not want to be involved with him anymore was true as well.

But the biggest reason of all were the words he had left behind at the end—

Taritta: "—A commandment, has been handed down."

She wished she had no idea of what he was talking about. But she did have an idea.

And that idea had been endlessly, endlessly plaguing Taritta over the past few days.

She did not want to worry before taking action.

She did not want to dwell on unfruitful anguish.

???: "Taritta-chan!"

Taritta: "—Hk, Medium?"

As Taritta was holding her shoulders tightly, casting her eyes downwards, a familiar voice called out to her.

Turning around in a jiffy, Taritta saw a little girl running toward her, waving her hand in her direction—Medium, who had shrunk in stature, was coming toward her.

Medium: “I’m so glaaad~! We found Taritta-san safe and sound right away!”

Taritta: “Glad you’re safe and sound as well… are Abel and Subaru and the others safe? Moreover, what in the world…”

With Medium rushing toward her, Taritta cast a flurry of questions at her.

She had not expected her to be alone and looking for Taritta. Of course, it would be odd if she and Olbart were still playing hide-and-seek during the collapse of the Crimson Lapis Castle, but it was not as if they had a break to discuss that.

At Taritta’s question, Medium gasped slightly,

Medium: “Abel-chin and Al-chin are safe! Subaru-chin and Louis-chan are missing! Also, we need to do something about the shadow that came out of that castle, so Taritta-chan, come as well!”

Taritta: “Subaru and Louis? And where do I…”

Medium: “From this moment on, we’re gonna stop that shadow with Yorna-chan! Taritta-chan’s power is also needed, that’s what Abel-chin said!”

Taritta: “…”

Wide-eyed, Taritta could not help, but be amazed at what she was told.

At the edge of her field of vision, she saw a black shadow about to cause such an insane amount of damage that even Taritta, shaken by her interaction with the delicate man, was forced to recognize the reality of the situation.

Neither stopping that thing nor challenging it were conceivable in Taritta’s mind.

And on top of that, she had been told that Abel was calling for her now—

Medium: “Taritta-chan, you’re not injured, right?! Can you still come? I’ll do my best, so can you do your best with me?!”

Taritta’s confusion was quickly dispelled by Medium’s unhesitating words.

Even if her stature had been reduced, the straightforward disposition she possessed suffered no reduction nor did it bend. As if guided by this, Taritta quietly nodded her head and said,

Taritta: “I, understand. —We’ll head there right away.”

Medium: “Mhm! Thank you!”

Taritta felt a pang deep in her chest due to the Medium’s relief and her big nod.

Anguish had been tormenting Taritta for a long, limitless amount of time. Forgotten by the immersion in battle, this anguish asserted its existence in anticipation of the great battle, the time for a resolution approaching.

Taritta: “—Commandment.”

Taritta also mumbled the words offered by the vanished delicate man, but only to herself.

Anguish seemed to bounce around in her chest, as if it relished being called by name.

3

—Time returned to the moment when the Crimson Lapis Castle was destroyed in a great flood of darkness.

Yorna: “Chil—”

Louis: “Uau!!”

In the nick of time, she pulled back the girl named Louis who tried to leap forward without hesitation.

Just like that, following the appeal of every nerve in her body towards that instinctive threat, unaware that the roof tiles of the castle tower would burst, she performed a mighty leap backwards.

Trampled by the heel of thick-soled shoes, the impact received by the tiles propagated to the surrounding tiles, spreading destruction.

However, the fact that the roof tiles were being shattered in this way was far too trivial in the face of the events that immediately followed.

Yorna: "…"

With a crash, the overflowing shadows, darkness, and deep blackness engulfed the keep, and the exploding roof tiles vanished.

—No, it was not only the keep that was swallowed.

Yorna's eyes caught the sight of the Crimson Lapis Castle's tower, plus its upper and middle levels, all being devoured by the deluge of darkness similar to a mud flow, disappearing from the world without a trace.

That was, a truly dark darkness which one must not be engulfed by.

A real darkness that could not be brightly illuminated, that allowed nothing to be saved once taken in, that obscured all hope by coating everything over and over with despair.

It could be judged instinctively. —That, was something that should not be.

Louis: "Uu!"

Restraining the struggling girl in her embrace, Yorna's eyes darted to the keep that was stained black.

The black-haired boy at the center of it and Olbart, who was touching the boy with his hand at the moment that the black shadow overflowed, were nowhere to be seen.

In that instant, she witnessed the arm Olbart had pulled back cease to exist.

That thing was so overwhelming that even Olbart, with his greed for life and keen sense for danger, could not avoid sacrificing his own arm.

Shortly after, she had given priority to leaping with Louis in her arms; because of that, whether Olbart was alive or not was unknown.

On one hand, she had believed that the monstrous old man would never die, while on the other hand, there was a cold voice within her mind, asking her if she could really have optimistic thoughts, looking at that jet-black thing.

Also, there was something aside from Olbart's life or death that gave birth to a distortion in Yorna's thoughts—

Yorna: "Child…"

That would be the boy who seemed to be at the heart of the sable shadow that had swallowed Olbart's arm, and his safety.

In Yorna's opinion, the boy had no abilities particularly out of the ordinary. His situational awareness was excellent, he made no mistakes as to when he should play his cards.

If she were forced to say something about it, those had been the primary factors in netting him the win in the confrontation with Olbart. However, the praise went to his decisiveness, not to his superior ability.

So she had to say that there was no possibility that the boy could have escaped at that moment.

Albeit, that would only apply if the boy were a victim.

Yorna: "If this is the deed of that child…"

Would this perhaps mean that the boy was lurking somewhere in that vast blackness?

Yorna realized then, that she did not want to believe that this had been something done intentionally by the boy. Acknowledging this, there was a decision that had to be made.

That was the duty that she must perform as Lord of the Demon City, the position that she must bear, the object of love that she must choose—

Yorna: "—Hk."

Just as she thought this, a change was produced in the darkness, before Yorna's eyes.

The shadow that had swallowed half of the Crimson Lapis Castle and was about to engulf the lower levels and walls of the castle in darkness, the portion of the shadow in control of the tower wriggled, extending "hands" towards Yorna and Louis in midair.

Yorna: "…"

Stretching out were literally "hands", which could not be compared to anything else.

Black hands stretched out towards Yorna and Louis, whom she was holding in her arms. The stunning aspect was that they numbered not one nor two, but ten or twenty or even more were extended at once.

The reason why the shadows stretching out did not have the idyllic calmness of silhouettes stretching longer and longer in the sunlight was that the arms, which should be devoid of expression, were overflowing with emotion.

The vast amount of shadows and black arms appealed to her with a single emotion, "hunger".

It was not simply "hunger" in the sense of being hungry.

It was an unfathomable "hunger", one that desired taking in just anything and everything possible.

Yorna: "Child, we're going to swing about. Be careful not to bite your tongue!”

Louis: “Uh, au—Hk.”

With the purpose of avoiding the growing shadow, Yorna made extraordinary maneuvers in midair.

She was unknowing of the nature of the shadows, and now that she had seen it doing damage to Olbart, she consciously established that touching it would be fatal, and so, she had no choice but to avoid it altogether.

Therefore, Yorna opened her eyes and, by pulling in the tiles that had burst out of their place due to her earlier leap and using them as her footholds, she created an escape route through the sky of the Demon City.

With a fluttering sound, Yorna’s figure soared high in the air, utilizing flying tiles as footing.

She attempted shooting a piece of tile into the shadow’s arm as to keep it in check, but, unable to pierce the shadow, it was engulfed into the part it was aimed at, disappearing into the void.

In accordance with the speculation that it should not be touched, Yorna followed the footholds to a higher altitude.

It would be best if the extending arms of the shadow were incapable of keeping up with the continuous ascent of Yorna’s tiles. Perhaps if the shadow’s range could be determined, it could be countered from there.

Although—

Yorna: “It’s awfully aggravating constantly being on the defensive.”

She was not being chased around.

While it was also humiliating of course, it went without saying that the Crimson Lapis Castle would take the most damage.

Crimson lapis was a beautiful and, above all, rare precious stone.

The mere thought of building a castle with it was the very essence of absurdity. It was not because of Yorna's wealth or power that the castle was built.

In the first place, it was not Yorna who had conceived the idea of building the Crimson Lapis Castle.

The ones to construct the castle of whirling red and blue, the Crimson Lapis Castle, had been the residents of the Demon City.

They decided that the castle of the ruler of the Demon City, Yorna, should not look shabby, so they each gathered precious stones and built that beautiful castle.

It was a rare, precious stone. It was difficult to handle, and one could not even imagine the amount of hardships that would go into building the castle. Same went for Yorna; she had never imagined such hardship.

Needless to say, Yorna watched the castle being built in its entirety.

Therefore—

Yorna: "You have swallowed my love, you ruffian—!!"

Yorna extended her long, slender fingers toward the shadow that engulfed the castle.

Nothing emanated from them, nor was it a necessary action. She just wished to confront the shadow, to remind it that this was a manifestation of her anger.

—A moment later, a ferocious strike came out from within the huge shadow engulfing the Crimson Lapis Castle.

Yorna: "…"

There was no way for Yorna to know whether the shadow had substance, much less intent.

However, Yorna was convinced that this had been a solid blow.

The shadow had swallowed the Crimson Lapis Castle—everything that composed it, down to each stone that formed its walls, the product of the residents' love for Yorna.

Why should she regard it as just a castle?

Why should she not love it?

The shock wave of the castle exploding from within the sable darkness drastically dampened its momentum.

As proof of this, every black arm hot on Yorna's tails dissipated, and so, with nothing able to catch up to her, she fled into the air.

Even Louis, who was writhing in her arms, widened her eyes in shock at the violent explosion of Yorna's love.

However, Yorna could not be pleased by the girl's reaction, which could be alternatively described as admiration.

Yorna: "After all, a castle's only a castle, and you may say it can be rebuilt. But…"

Louis: "Uu?"

Yorna: "No matter if I try to build a new castle, the castle I loved day after day was only this castle… Am I to think accursedly of my crumbling love, because my feelings weren't enough?"

Looking down at the Crimson Lapis Castle, more than half of it swallowed by the shadow, no longer remaining in its original form, Yorna's heart was struck with anguish.

But Yorna had no time to indulge herself in sentimentality.

Albeit the shadowy arms that pursued them may have disappeared, the great source of darkness was not gone.

To say nothing of—

Yorna: "My fair skin tells me that the threat isn't gone."

The impact of the explosion of the Crimson Lapis Castle was so powerful that it could have demolished the entire castle by itself. Nevertheless, even though the momentum had been lessened by the impact, the oppressive feeling given off from the black darkness did not waver in the slightest.

If the shadow was alive and well, then, of course, so was the threat.

In other words, she had to construct or find a way to dispel that jet-black thing at any cost, while the condition that it couldn't be touched remained the same.

???: "—Yorna-samaaa!"

As Yorna's nerves sharpened, a voice coming, from afar, from the ground, struck her eardrums.

Taking a glance at it, Yorna saw that the ones who had called her were the residents of the Demon City, attempting to gather at the collapsed Castle. They had been caught up in the collapse of the Castle, attempting to assist the rescuing of the Castle's soldiers, crawling out of the rubble.

From the perspective of the black shadow, they must have looked too much like coveted prey.

Yorna: "Everyone, run away—!"

Prompted by the signal of impending danger, Yorna called on the residents below to evacuate.

But she was far too high up in the sky to rush down towards them. The distance was too great, they were too far out of reach. And it was impossible to ask all of them to have the same sense of peril that Yorna had.

—As a result, Yorna could not do anything but powerlessly watch the shadows overflowing towards the residents who had gathered at the Castle out of concern for her, the Lord of the Demon City.

That—

???: “—Do not think I will make it effortless for you!!”

The residents stood stock still as a black shadowy arm reached out to each one of them, and just before they were swallowed up into the eternal void, their bodies were snatched from the side.

Dark green thorned vines, from afar they reached the residents to do so.

The vines, which Yorna had also witnessed before, stretched with furious energy, faster than the shadows. They caught the inhabitants’ bodies with their prickles, allowing them to escape.

Even in the Demon City, in which beings possessing exotic physiology had assembled, Yorna could only think of one person able to pull that off.

???: “Kafma Irulux, by decree of His Excellency the Emperor, I am at your service—!”

A man from whose outstretched arms thorned vines grew, flapping transparent wings from his back—Kafma Irulux, materialized at the center of the situation, causing Yorna to widen her eyes in surprise.

Not only was his peculiar appearance surprising, but it was also surprising that he had protected Yorna’s residents.

In the past, with the pretext of suppressing Yorna’s rebellion, Emperor Vincent had sent troops to gain full control of Chaosflame.

Kafma had been among those troops, and was one of those who had run rampant in Chaosflame.

So, for him to act to protect Yorna’s citizens was—

Kafma: “No matter who you serve, you are equally a subject of the Empire.”

Yorna: “…”

Kafma: “General First-Class Yorna! I know you and I have different ideas, but we must not let this stand! I will cooperate with you!”

Responding thus to Yorna's watchful eyes, the flapping Kafma soared furiously through the air.

Dancing freely in the air, drawing the attention of the shadows capturing Crimson Lapis Castle to himself, Kafma seemed intent on making full use of his mobility and control to buy time.

The question was, however; what to do with the time he had bought?

Louis: "Uh! Aauu!"

Yorna: "Child?"

Louis: "Uh!"

Yorna pondered her choice of action immediately afterwards, and Louis, still held in her arms, went berserk again. But the way she raged was not as impulsive and violent as before.

The girl spun herself around in Yorna's arms, pointing towards a spot on the ground while groaning.

Yorna looked at where Louis was pointing and guessed what she was trying to say.

And—

Yorna: "General Second-Class Kafma, I'll leave this place to you for a while."

Kafma: "If that is what you need, understood!"

Yorna: "And…"

Kafma: "What is it?!"

Kafma, who wished to avoid the growing shadows by circling about, and concentrate on confronting the strong enemy, raised his voice slightly at Yorna's words.

Yorna thought that it would be a mistake to fail to communicate this, even though she did not intend to hinder him,

Yorna: “For protecting my children earlier, I thank you.”

Kafma: “—. As a General, I did what I had to do!”

